TOME V.

CONTAINING

An Account of the LIVES and WRITINGS of the Primitive FATHERS, that Flourished in the Seventh and Eighth Centuries of Christianity, with Censures upon all their BOOKS, determining which are Genuine, and which Spurious.

S. ISIDORE of Sevil.

ST. Isidore, the Son of Severianus, and Grand-child of Theodorick, King of Italy, was born at Sevil: He succeeded his Brother S. Leander, in the Bishoprick of that City, about the Year 595. He held a Council in 623, and died in 636, having goverped the Church of Sevil forty Years. This Bishop was a Man of great Reading, and profound Learning, and has written upon divers Subjects. His Works may be divided into five Classes. The first comprehending those which concern Arts or Sciences. The second his Commentaries upon the Scripture. The third his Dogmatical Tracts. The fourth his Treatises of Church-Discipline. And the last his Works of Morality, or Piety.

The Book of Etymologies, or of Origins, is the largest of those of the first Class: He wrote it at the Request of Braulio, Bishop of * Saragosa; who divided it into Twenty Books, and made up what Isidore had not finish'd. This Work is an Epitome of all Arts and Sciences; he explains the Terms, lays down the Principles, and shews what is most in use in each of them. What relates to Ecclesiastical Matters, is as follows. In the sixth Book he maketh a Catalogue of the Books of the Old and New Testament: In which he places, in the fourth Classis of the (a) Canonical Books of the Old Testament, Ecclesi-

[(a) Canonical Books—Tobit, Ecclesiasticus.] As the Jews never acknowledged these Books to be Canonical, so neither did the Primitive Church of Christ. S. Cyprian, (or rather Rufinus) in his Tract De Expos. Symb. having reckon'd up the Books in Order, which made up the Canon in his Time, and omitting those which were accounted Apocryphal, says, Hæc sunt, &c. These are the Books which are received into the Canon by the Church; the other Books (meaning Tobit. &c.) are not Canonical. The same Catalogue of Canonical Writers, do Origen, in Eusebius Hist. Eccles. l. 6. c. 25. and the Council of Laodicea, c. 59. give us: So that there can be no doubt, but for the first Four hundred Years, and more, the Canon was exactly the same that we now have. Indeed, the Apocryphal Books were read in the Churches of the purer Ages, to the Novices and Catechumens (as were also Clemens and Ignatius's Epistles, and Hermes's Book called Pastor,) yea, and some of the later Fathers, as S. Jerom, Ausin, and Innocent, give them very honourable Titles, calling them Sacred, Divine, Canonical; but then they mean not by Canonical, as the Church of Rome doth, Canones Fidei, a perfect Rule, both for Faith and Manners, but Canones Morum in Macr. Hist. profitable to Instruction, and to inform Men in the History of the Jewish Church: And so far is this Doctrine of S. Isidore Orthodox, in the Judgment of the Church of England, our Mother, Art. 6.

S. Isidore of Sevil. asticus, the Book of Wisdom, Judith, Tobit, and the two Books of the Maccabees. He distinguisheth Three Sences of the Scripture, the Historical, Moral, and Allegorical. He speaks of the Authors of the Canonical Books, and of those that have composed Harmonies of the Gospels. He reckons up but four General Councils. He makes a Paschal Cycle. In fine, he treats of the principal Festivals of the Jews and Christians, and of the Administration of the Sacrament. He saith, it is called a Sacrifice, because it is made Sacred by a My-

Conc. Trid. sess. 7. c. 8. [(b) A Sacrament—communicating Holiness.] The Sacraments may in a pious and good sense be said to communicate sanctifying Grace, and Holiness; not Ex opere operato, as the Church of Rome teacheth; but Ex opere operantis, being Moral Instruments of conferring and conveying the Grace of God to the Souls of all worthy Partakers of them, God being pleased by and with them, to work spiritual Graces and Endowments in us: Non propter virtutem Sacramentorum quæsumus, sed propter vim fidei in Christo, qua illis Communicamus. Not through any Virtue in the Sacraments, which we receive, but through Faith in the Receiver.]

tical Prayer, in Remembrance of the Passion of our Lord. He defineth (b) a Sacrament, the Sign of an Holy Thing, communicating Holiness. He places in that Rank Baptism, Chrism, and the Eucharist, which are, saith he, Sacraments, because under the Veil of Corporeal Things, the Divine Vertue does secretly operate Salvation. To the Unction he joyns the Laying on of Hands, which brings down the Holy Ghost. He speaks of Exorcism. He makes the Apostles Authors of the Creed: Which he thinks to have been called a Symbol, because it is the Badge whereby Christians know one another. He speaks of Prayer, of Fasting, and of Penance; which, he says, is a voluntary Punishment for ones Sins. He defines Satisfaction, the Exclusion of the Causes and Occasions of Sin, and the Cessation of Sinning. He calls Reconciliation the End of Penance. He distinguisheth two sorts of Exomologesis, or Confession, the one of Praise, the other of Sins; and saith, both the one and the other are chiefly made to God. Lastly, He makes mention of the Rogations, or Litanies.

In the seventh Book he treats of the Names and Attributes of God: Chap. 1. Of the Son of God, of his Qualities, of his Metaphorical and Natural Names. Chap. 2. Of the Holy Ghost. Chap. 3. Of the Trinity, and of the Appellative and Relative Names of the Persons. Chap. 4. Of Angels, and their different Orders. Chap. 5. He explains also the Names of the Persons mention'd in the Bible; he gives the Definition of the Patriarchs, the Prophets, the Apostles, the Martyrs, the Clerks and Monks.

In the Eighth Book he speaks of the Church, of Heresie, of the Number of the Sybils, &c.

The Three Books of the Differences of Names, or of the proper Signification of Words, written by the same Author, are a Grammatical Work; and the Book of the Nature of Things, to [King] Sisibut, a Physical Treatise, of which we have nothing here to say.

*To this Classis of S. Isidore's Works, may be added his Historical Tracts; which are a Chronological Abridgment, from the beginning of the World, down to * Heraclius's Empire. An History of the Goths, from the 176th Year of Christ, to the Year 610. with an Epitomy of the History of the Vandals and Sueves. The Treatise of Ecclesiastical Writers, which we have defended in the Preface of the preceding Volume, and the Treatise of the Life and Death of certain Saints.*

The Treatises that S. Isidore writ upon the Bible, which may make up the Second Classis of his Works, are these: Some Prolegomena's, wherein he treats of the Authors of the Books of the Old and New Testament, some Annotations upon the Pentateuch, upon Joshua, upon the Books of Kings, and upon Ezra, wherein he maketh some Remarks Literal or Moral, which are often grounded upon Names, which he explains according to his Fancy, or upon Observations of little solidity; a Book of Allegories on the Ostateuch, which is a compendious Collection of Allegorical Expositions made by the Fathers before him; and a Commentary upon the Song of Solomon, which he expounds of the Church, and of Jesus Christ, with great perspicuity and brevity.

[Florentina, Dr. Cave.] Of the Dogmatical Tracts of S. Isidore, we have none remaining, but two Books against the Jews, written to his Sister * Florentia; in which he hath gathered some Passages of the Holy Scripture to prove our Religion. The first of these two Books is upon the Passion, the Resurrection, the Reign of Christ, and upon the Judgment. The second is upon the Calling of the Gentiles, and the establishing of the Church: The Proofs he brings are solid, and his Reflections judicious.*

Among his Books of Discipline, that of the [Ecclesiastical or Divine] Offices is the most considerable. It is divided into Two Books: In the first he treats of the Parts and Ceremonies of Divine Service; he confesses, in the Primitive Church, Prayers were read with a plain turn of the Voice, more like pronouncing than singing: He distinguisheth two sorts of Hymns, those of the Scripture, of which the Holy Ghost is the Author, and those of Mens Composition. He saith, S. Hilarius was the first that made any of them, and that after him S. Ambrose did also compose some, which have been recited in the Church of Milan, and from thence passed down to the other Western Churches. And further says, That S. Ambrose first establish'd the Use of Anthems; and that Responses were invented in Italy. He distinguisheth seven Parts in in the (c) Mass, or the Canon, which he believes was (d) establish'd by S. Peter. 1. The Admonition to the People, to stir them up to pray. 2. The Prayer to God, that he would receive the Prayers and Oblations of his People. 3. A Prayer for the Living, who offered the Sacrifice, and (e) for the Dead. 4. The Prayer for Peace. 5. The Prayer for the sanctifying of the Bread and Wine. 6. The Confirmation of the Sacrament. 7. The Lord's Prayer. The Nicene Creed was also recited, and at last they blessed the People. Then he observeth, That the Communion must be taken Fasting, and that the Sacrifice was offered for the Dead. He speaks of the Office of the third, the sixth, the ninth Hour; of Vespers, Compline, Vigils, Mattins, of the principal Festivals of the Year, of Lent-Fast, of the Fast on the Twenty-second of September, of the Fasts on November the first, and January the first; of the Fasts on Fridays and Saturdays in some Churches. He observes, That altho' the Custom of the Church was not to fast from Easter to Whitsunday, some Monks nevertheless did fast in that Interval out of Devotion. Lastly, he owns, That Churches have different Uses and Practices in many things.

S. Isidore of Sevil.

[(c) Mass, or Canon.] The Word Missæ, or Mass, is an old Latin Word, and signifies generally the whole Service of the Church, but more especially the Holy Sacrament of Christ's Body and Blood. It was called Missæ, or Demissio, because no Man was suffered to remain in the Church, that could not, or would not receive the Sacrament; and therefore such Persons as had a Mind to see and hear, but not receive, were all, without exception, dismissed by the Deacon, after the Sermon was ended, with these Words: Ite, missæ est: Go, ye are dismissed. And if any delayed, they were urged to depart, by the Deacons, and Exorcists, saying aloud, Si quis non communicet, det locum: Whosoever will not receive, let him go out. The Roman Church puts a different Sense upon this word Mass; understanding by it, That Solemn Service, wherein they do pretend to offer unto God the Body and Blood of his Son, as a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Sins both of the Quick and Dead. Isidore here takes it in the first Sense, calling it, Ordo Precum, i. e. The Form of Prayers: But M. Du Pin, by joyning it with the word Canon, (a word of a much later use, and which signifies in the Roman Church, the Rule, or Form, of celebrating their Mass) seems to bring it over to the latter; but against the Sense of S. Isidore of Sevil.

Ambr. lib. 5. Epist. 33. Hilar. in Psal. 65.

(d) Establish'd by S. Peter.] But erroneously; for in the Apostle's time the Holy Sacrament was celebrated without any Ceremonies, or Prayers, save that at the Consecration of the Elements, the Priest repeated the Lord's Prayer over them. And this S. Jerom says, was done by the Institution of Christ himself. Dominus docuit Apostolos ut Orationem Dominicam dicerent super Sacrificio Corporis. And Innocent III. himself tells us, That S. Peter celebrated the Sacrament at Antioch, with three Prayers only: Primus B. Petrus Apostolus Missam Antiochia dicitur celebrasse in qua tres tantum Orationes, in primordio nascentis Ecclesie dicebantur. So that it is absurd to think, S. Peter the Author of so long an Office.] Hieron. cont. Pelag. l. 3.

[(e) Prayers in the Sacrament--for the Dead.] It is evident from some very ancient Records of the Church, That it was a Custom among the Christians, Ab Antiquo, to pray for the Souls of the Faithful, departed in the dreadful Mysteries. Whether it were decreed by the Apostles themselves, as S. Chrysostom plainly tells us it was, in his Comment on the Philippians, may be a very great doubt; but it is certain it was in use about 200 Years after Christ. This is proved from Tertullian, De Monog. c. 10. who thus speaks, Let the faithful Widow pray for the Soul of her Husband, &c. And to the same Effect in Coron. Mil. c. 3. So also S. Cyprian, Ep. 66. Euseb. de Vit. Constant. l. 4. c. 7. And Epiphanius, Her. 3, &c. And this we find practised by many of the most eminent Fathers of the Church. Nazianzen prayed for his Brother Cæsarius, Ambrose for the Emperors Valentinian and Theodosius; and S. Austin for his Mother Monica. But all the Prayers made for the Dead, by the first Christians, contained no other Petitions for them, than what are very warrantable and pious, and which our Liturgy seems, in a great Measure, to Authorize, viz. That God would hasten his Kingdom, and speedily give them a Consummation of Bliss, not imputing to them their Sins in the Day of Judgment; to which they joyned a thankful Remembrance of their virtuous and holy Examples, which they begged Grace to imitate. These, with the Alms to the Poor, which generally accompanied them, were the Oblationes pro Mortuis, spoken of by the Fathers. The Romish Church hath abused this Custom, by praying for Persons who died in their Sins, whom they supposed to be detained in their feigned Purgatory; which is both contrary to the Doctrine and Practice of the Primitive Church: For they acknowledged no such place as Purgatory, nor Remission of Sins after Death.] Chrys. Hom. 3. in Epist. ad Philip. Nazianz. Orat. 7. in Cas. Ambr. de ob. Val. & Theod. Aug. Confes. l. 9. c. 13. Liturg. in Eur. of the Dead. S. Chrys. Hom. 32. Ephrem. lib. de pan. c. 2.

The Sacrament--a Sacrifice.] The Sacrament was called a Sacrifice by the Primitive Fathers, not because Christ is really sacrificed for the Sins of the Quick and Dead in those Mysteries, as the Romish Church now useth the Word; but because, 1. It is a Commemoration of Christ's Spiritual Sacrifice. Annunciantes mortem Filii Dei, celebramus. saith S. Chrysostom, in cruentum Sacrificium. 2. Because in the Sacrament we offer the Spiritual Sacrifices of Prayers and Praises. 3. Because the Faithful, at this Sacrament, offered their Souls and Bodies a living and acceptable Sacrifice to God. 4. Because, at these Mysteries, the richer Christians brought an Oblation of Bread and Wine, and other Gifts, which were partly spent in this Service, and partly distributed to the Poor for their Relief. Thus the Fathers used the word Sacrifice figuratively, which now is understood properly, but contrary to this place of Isidore.] S. Chrys. Hom. 17. in Epist. ad Hebr. Iren. l. 4. c. 33. Aug. de Civ. Dei, l. 10. Cyprian. Serm. 1. de Elem. Aug. Ep. 122.

The second Book of Offices is concerning Ecclesiastical Persons. He says, All that are Ordained to serve the Church, are called * Clerks, because S. Matthias, who was the first Ordained by the Apostles, was chosen by Lot; or because all Clerks are also called by Lot to the Lord's Inheritance: Or else, lastly, because the Lord is their Lot and Portion. He puts them in mind, That they ought to live retired from the World, to abstain from worldly Pleasures, not to go to the publick Shews, nor to publick Feasts; to follow their Employment without engaging themselves in Secular Affairs; nor to put Money to Usury; to take no Presents for performing the Functions of their Ministry; to be wife and modest in their Carriage, and reserved in their Talk; nor to keep Company with Women; to be sober, chaste, and constant in Prayer. He distinguisheth two sorts of Clerks; some living under the Governance of their Bishop; and others, called * Acephali, which can neither pais for Laicks, nor Ecclesiasticks. He taketh notice, That all Clerks had a (e) Tonsure, and that the Crown of their Head was all shaved, and had only a little Circle of Hair round about the Head, in form of a Crown. Having spoken of Clerks in general, he speaks of all the Orders in particular. As to the Bishops, which he calls Sacerdotes, he says, They are Ordained by the Laying on of Hands: That a Man must be 32 Years old to be a Bishop, and ought to have always lived single, or to have had but one Wife: That in their Ordination they give them a Staff and a Ring: That they ought to make choice of a Learned and Vertuous Man, and free from Crimes: That a Bishop ought to take Care of the Poor, and use Hospitality towards Strangers. He does not forget the Chorepiscopi, whom he calls the Bishops Deputies. He says, They may Ordain Readers, Exorcists, and Sub-Deacons; but that they cannot Ordain Presbyters nor Deacons. He extols the Dignity of Presbyters, by saying, They partake in the Dispensation of the Mysteries with the Bishops: That they preside over Churches as they do: That they consecrate the Body and Blood of Christ, and preach the Word of God, as they do; but that Ordination is reserved to the Bishops, to maintain the Authority and Splendour of the Priesthood, and to prevent Divisions. Deacons are the Dispensers of the Mysteries consecrated by the Presbyters; they give the Cup to the Laity, who may not take it from the Altar. Sub-Deacons do also handle the Sacred Vessels; also it was decreed, That they also should be bound to Continency. The other Persons of the Clergy are the Readers, the Singers, the Exorcists, the Door-keepers. There are many kinds of Monks. The Cenobites are they that live in common; the Hermites, they that withdraw into Deserts; the Anchorites they that shut up themselves in Cells: These are the several sorts of good Monks. S. Isidore describes and commends the Life of the Cenobites, then he speaks of Penitents; they cut their Hair, they wear Hair-cloth, they strew Ashes upon their Heads, to put them in Mind that they are but Dust, and shall return to Dust. By Penance, Remission of Sins committed after Baptism, tho' never so great, is obtained. Clerks do it before God, others before the Bishop. True Penance consists in the Amendment of Life. Afterwards he commends Virgins, and gives them some wholesome Advices; as also Widows, and those that are married, and likewise Catechumens. He gives an Account of the Exorcisms, and the Salt [used in them.]

[(e) Tonsure, and that the Crown of their Head was all shaved.] Tonsure, or cutting the Hair short, was in the purest times of the Church imposed upon the Clergy, as being indecent for them to wear their Hair long, according to the Fashion of those times. The fourth Council of Carthage, which was held, A. C. 398. decreed, Can. 44. That no Clergy-man should wear a long Hair, or Beard. Clericus nec comam nutriat, nec barbam; but on the other side, Rasure, or making the Crown of the Head bald, by Shaving, was accounted a detestable Ceremony, and much condemned by the Fathers, Clemens Alex. Optatus Mel. Jerom, Epiphanius, &c. in the Donatists, and other Hereticks, as being forbidden in the Law of God, Ezek. 44. 20. and an Heathenish Ceremony, derived from the Priests of Isis and Serapis, Jerom, in Ezek. 44. Wherefore, it ought to be looked upon as a corrupt Ceremony, first received by Hereticks, but after got into the Church, among other profane Usages, in this superstitious Age.]

Then he passed to other Points, and expounds the Creed, which he believes to have been composed by the Apostles in common, before they dispersed themselves to preach the Gospel. He treats of Baptism, and distinguisheth it into three sorts; the Baptism of Water, the Baptism of Blood, and the Baptism of Tears. He observes, That the Sacrament of Baptism, that it may be valid, must be conferred in the Name, and by the Invocation of the three Persons of the Trinity: That it is God that baptizeth, and not Man, and therefore that it matters not, whether it be conferred by an Heretic: That Original Sin in Infants is remitted in Baptism; so, that if they should die without it, they should be excluded from the Kingdom of Heaven: That Bishops and Presbyters are the Ministers of that Sacrament: That the Holy (f) Christ is given after

[[(f) Chrism.] Chrism, or Unction, was an ancient Rite used in the Jewish Church, to denote the conferring of Gifts and Graces on the Persons Anointed, and thence derived to the Christian Church. Our Saviour, and his Apostles, used it in working their miraculous Cures of the Sick, James 5. 14. Mar. 6. 14. And after Miracles ceased in the Church, it was continued in the Administration of Baptism, to signify (say the Fathers) that the Persons baptized are cut off from the wild Olive, and engrafted into Christ the true Olive-tree, and made Partakers of its Fruits and Benefits: Or to shew, that they were become Champions for Christ, and like the Heathen Athleta, were anointed for their Spiritual Warfare; or rather, to denote their Admission to the great Privileges of Christianity, to be a chosen Generation, a Royal Priesthood, an holy Nation (as the Apostle speaks, 1 Pet. 2. 9.) to which all Persons were designed by Chrism. The same Ceremony was used by the Church in Confirmation, and to the Sick in the beginning of their Sickness, to strengthen and recover them, but not as it is in the Church of Rome, as a Sacramental Viaticum for Persons dying.]

Baptism, to render the Persons baptized, the Anointed of Jesus Christ. And Lastly, That the Bishop lays his Hands upon them, that they may receive the Holy Ghost: That Men do not give it, but pray to God to give it; and that the Bishop only may administer that Sacrament.

We

We have a few Letters of S. Isidore; the first and second contain nothing remarkable: The third to Helladius, is concerning Discipline. There he shews, That a Presbyter fallen into the Sin of the Flesh, is to be deposted, and put to Penance, without any hope of being restored. He reaches the same Doctrine in his Book of Offices; which shews the falsity of another Letter fathered upon him, directed to Massanus, the Author whereof goes about to expound the Canon of the Council of Ancyra, about the Deposition of Clerks fallen into the Sin of the Flesh, and to prove it should be understood of those only who do not do Penance, pretending that those that do it, ought to be restored; which Doctrine is so contrary to that of Isidore, that there is no doubt, but that Letter is the Fiction of some Imposter, and perhaps of the famous Isidore Mercator.

I pass the same Judgment on the fourth Letter, directed to Claudius, wherein the Question of the Procession of the Holy Ghost is handled against the Greeks; on the fifth, directed to Redemptus, in which the Question of unleaven'd, and leaven'd Bread is debated, against the same Persons; and on the last to Eugenius of Toledo, about the Authority of the Pope. It is visible, these Letters were written in the time of the Quarrel between the Greeks and Latins, which was not begun in the Life of Isidore of Sevil.

Lastly, We will joyn to the Works of Discipline, the Rule of the Monks, composed by S. Isidore, accommodated to the use of his Country, and proportion'd to the Strength of the weaker sort.

S. Isidore's Learning did not hinder him from being eminent in Works of Piety, of which he hath left us these, viz. Two Books of Synonyma's, or Soliloquies, and a Treatise of the Contempt of the World, which are Discourses suppos'd to be had in a Man, between his Soul and his Reason, and contain Advices, Instructions, Christian Meditations, Prayers, and Sentences of Piety and Remorse. Some Body hath made a Collection of some of these Sentences, and entituled it, The Rule of good Living. To which is added, a Piece, entituled, The Lamentations of Repentance, with a long and good Prayer about Amendment of Life, and another shorter against Temptations.

But the most considerable of the Moral Works of S. Isidore, is his Collection of Sentences out of S. Gregory's [Morals], divided into three Books. The first contains some Christian Considerations about the Doctrine of the Creed. The second about Vertues. The third about Temptations, and the Remedies whereby we may be healed and sanctified.

The Book of the Combat between Vices and Vertues, attributed to S. Austin, to S. Leo, to S. Ambrose, and at last to S. Isidore, is none of theirs, but belongs to Ambrose Auspert, Abbot of S. Vincent of Benevent, as is observ'd in his Life, tho' Sigebert ascribeth to Isidore a Book bearing the same Title.

By what we have said of the Works of Isidore, it is plain enough, that this Bishop was well read; but he had not so much Fineness of Wit, and Elevation of Mind; there is nothing commendable in his Style, but the Clearness of it; he is neither Eloquent, nor Polite; his own Opinions are often false, and he does not always make a good choice, when he borrows of others. He contents himself with a superficial Knowledge, and does not search the bottom of Matters. His Remarks are but trivial, and often mistaken: Nevertheless, he was esteem'd, in his Age, a Prodigy of Learning, and an Oracle. The Fathers of the eighth Council of Toledo, gives this illustrious Testimony of his Knowledge: 'The excellent Doctor of our Age, Isidore, the greatest Ornament of the Catholick Church, the last of the Fathers, with regard to the Times, but such as may, for his Learning, be compar'd to the first, the most learned Man of past Ages. Altho' this Commendation be Hyperbolical, yet it must be confess'd, Isidore was a Man of Desert, and that Braulio was in the right, in saying: God seem'd to have given him to Spain, and rais'd him up in that time, to make the Monuments of the Ancients known, and to hinder Men from falling into extream Barbarity and Rusticity.

The Works of this Father have been printed at Madrid, in 1599; at Paris, by Sonnus, by the Care of La Bigne, in 1580; in 1601, by Father Du Breuil, a Benedictine Monk, of the Abby of S. German; who having Revised them, made a larger Edition of them, printed by Sonnus. That Edition was Re-printed at Antwerp, in 1617. [in Fol.] Besides that, there are many Tracts printed severally. The Origins have been printed at Basil, in 1577. [in Fol.] with some Annotations of Vulcanius, and in different Collections, [as at Venice, in 1483, in Fol. and at Paris, in 1509.] His Offices were printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, and in some Collections of Books of Ecclesiastical Rites, [at Rome, in 1591, in Fol. and at Paris, in 1610.] His Chronicle and Histories were printed at Frankfort, in 1605, and 1606; at Hamburg, in 1611; at Amsterdam, in 1596. [in Octavo] with Vulcanius's Notes. His Allegories at * Hagenau, in 1529. [Quarto.] [* Hagenau] His Books against the Jews, at Venice, in 1584. The three Books of Sentences, entituled, De Summo Bono: Of the Sovereign Good, at Paris in 1538. [at Turin, in 1593, Quarto, with Loaysa's Notes.] Father Labbe, in his Bibliotheca of MSS. hath published a History of the Goths and Vandals, larger than that printed among the Works of Isidore. The Book of the Ecclesiastical Writers was printed in divers Collections of Authors, which have treated of those Matters [at Antwerp, in 1639, Fol. at Frankfort in 1603; and with Notes at Colen, in 1580. B R A U L I O, Bishop of Saragosa.

Braulio,
Bishop of Saragosa.

Braulio, Bishop of Saragosa, Friend to Isidore of Sevil, wrote two Letters to him, and made an Encomium upon that Father, containing the Catalogue of his Works ; wherein he tells us, That he not only hath set in order, but finished his Treatise of Origins. He wrote also the Life of Emilianus, a Spanish Hermit, vulgarly called S. Milan. Moreover, the Life of S. Leocadia is attributed to him. He was present in the fourth, fifth, and sixth Councils of Toledo, and died in 646, after he had been Bishop 20 Years.

[His Epistles, and Encomium, are extant in S. Isidore's Works ; and his Life of Emilianus, in Mabillon's Sac. Ben. 1. page 205.]

banus.

ST. Columbanus, a Monk of the Monastery of Benchor, in Ireland, went into France, towards the Year 590, with twelve Monks of his Monastery, and withdrew himself into the Solitude of Vosge, near Besancon, where he founded the Monasteries of Luxeuil, and of Fontaines. After he had governed them twenty Years, he was banished by King Theodorick, upon the Motion of Queen Brunchaut. After which he retired into Switzerland, then belonging to the Kingdom of Theodebert ; where he preached the Gospel to some Pagans, remaining in that Country : But Theodebert being overcome, and taken Prisoner by Theodorick, Columbanus was forced to fly into Italy, in the Year 613 ; where he founded the Monastery of Bobio, and died there in 615.

The Author of this Saint's Life, and Sigebert of Gembours, say, he was a great Student, and a witty Man : That, in his Youth, he composed a Commentary on the Book of Psalms, which was elegantly written ; and that he had published many other Works, useful for Prayers and Instruction : They say, the Title of the Commentary on the Psalms, is found in an old Catalogue of the Library of S. Gal ; but the Work itself is not there. In the Monastery of Luxeuil, there is a Manuscript Commentary on the Psalms, the Author of which is not known. Some would have it pass for that of S. Columbanus ; but it hath not yet been printed, and we know nothing of it, but from him who hath collected the Works of that Father.

There are yet extant some of the Poetical Works of S. Columbanus, of which Sigebert maketh mention. The first of them is a Letter to Hunaldus, upon the Shortness of Life, and the Vanity of worldly Goods. The Preface of which begins with the Letters of the Name of S. Columbanus, and of him he writes to ; so that taking all the first Letters of each Verse, one finds Columbanus Hunaldo. The second is a Letter in short Verses, written to Sedolius ; in the end whereof he taketh notice, That he was come to the 18th Olympiad ; that is, that he was 72 Years old at least. The third is an Epigram upon Women. The fourth is a Poem in Hexameters, entituled, Monasticon, containing several Precepts of Morality. The last is in Prose, upon the Vanity and Misery of this Life.

But these Works are not comparable to his Rule, which is found in the Collection of Benedictus Anianus. It is full of Wisdom and Instruction : For there he does not content himself to prescribe Rules only, but shews the Excellency and Usefulness of them, and grounds them upon Testimonies of Scripture, or upon some Principle of Morality. He lays down, for the Foundation of his Rule, the Love of God, and of our Neighbour, as a general Precept, whereupon all the other are superstructed. Then he commends Obedience and Silence. He appoints, That Monks shall eat in the Evening, and shall feed on such plain Meat, as may sustain them, without hurt to their Health. He will have them to eat every Day, that they may be able to labour, to pray, and to read daily. He orders them to be content with things absolutely necessary, which are very few ; to flee from Wealth and Vanity ; to be chaste in their Thoughts, as well as in their Actions. That which he appoints concerning the Office which was then called the Course, is somewhat obscure. Yet this he seems to prescribe : That they shall meet together three times in the Night, and three times in the Day, to pray ; that in the Office of the Day, at each Hour they shall say three Psalms at each Office, and some other Prayers ; that the Night-Office is to be lengthened or shortened, according to the length or shortness of the Nights ; that from October to February, they must say in the ordinary Office of the Night, 36 Psalms, and 12 Anthems, at three several times, and in the rest of the Year 24 Psalms only, with 8 Anthems ; but for the Saturday and Sunday Night, the Office is made up of 75 Psalms, and 25 Anthems in Winter ; which number is to be augmented, or lessened, according as the Nights increase, or decrease. He observes, some other Monks perform the Night-Office at four times, and sing both in Winter and Summer, 12 Psalms in the usual Service, and 36 in the Service of the Saturday and Sunday Nights ; but he does not approve of that Practice, as being too tiresome in Summer, when the Nights are short. Then he recommends to his S. Columbanus Monks that Spirit of Discretion, that can discern betwixt Good and Evil ; and that Mortification of Spirit, consisting in doing nothing according to Self-will : These are all the Articles of that Rule which were found in the Collection of Benedictus Anianus. There is another added to it, of the Perfection of a Monk, from a Manuscript of the Monastery of Bobio ; but it is evident, that is not the same Author's, but is a Note of some other Monk. Some have thought that we had but one part of S. Columbanus's Rule, because that in the Harmony of the Rules there is one Article of it cited, which is said to be the 33d of that Abbot's Rule ; but this is an Error in the Quotation, and it must be taken out of some other Author. After this Rule, follows his Penitential, containing a Decree of what Penance is to be imposed on Monks taken in a Fault, how light soever it may be. It is there supposed, that they must confess it, and then are prescribed Penances for each of those Faults. Some very light ones are punished somewhat severely ; one may judge of it by the following Instances, He that shall not say (Amen) at Table, shall have six Lashes ; he that shall talk in the Refectory, as many ; he that shall not forbear Coughing at the beginning of a Psalm. shall also be treated after the same manner ; and he likewise that shall touch the Chalice with his Teeth, or shall smile in the time of Divine Service ; they that have spoken roughly, and frowardly, shall receive fifty Lashes, as well as they that have answered again to their Superiour. There are other Penances enjoyned besides Whipping ; as Fasting, Silence, Separation from the Table, Humiliation. These Penances seem to be more rational, and fitter to correct Men than Whipping ; and yet they are not the most common and usual.

There was found in the Manuscript of Bobio, with S. Columbanus's Rule and Penitential, some Spiritual Instructions fathered upon this Saint, agreeable enough to the Stile of his Rule. They contain some Exhortations to Piety, and a Spiritual Life, fit for Monks ; the Titles whereof are as follows : 1. Of the Trinity. 2. Of the Mortification of Vices, and the Acquisition of Vertues. 3. Of the Contempt of the World, and the Love of heavenly Things. 4. That we ought to work and labour in this Life. to rest in the next. 5. That this Life should not be called Vita, but Via. 6. That this Life is like a Shadow. 7. Of the Blindness of those who serve the Flesh, and neglect the Spirit. 8. That we ought to tend to our heavenly Country, the End of this present Life. 9. Of the last Judgment. 10. Of the Means of fleeing from the dreadful Wrath of him who is to judge us. 11. Of the Love of God, and of our Neighbour. 12. Of Remorse, and of the Vigilancy wherewith we ought to wait for the coming of the final Judgment. 13. That we must have recourse to Christ, the Fountain of Life. 14. Several Advices for the Spiritual Life. The 15th, which was not in the Bobio Manuscripts, is, Of the Fervency wherewith we ought to serve God. There is mention made there of Grace, according to S. Austin's Principles, but it does not seem to be of the same Stile with the rest. The 16th was not in the said Bobio Manuscript neither ; but it hath more of S. Columbanus's Stile. It is very short, and is entituled, What is that which is, and which shall be ? In it he compares this Life with that which is to come. The 17th Instruction, is, A Discourse of Faustus Bishop of Riez, to some Monks.

After the Thirteenth Instruction, in the Bobio Manuscript, there is a small Tract of the Eight principal Vices, which are, Gluttony, Fornication, Covetousness, Wrath, Sorrow, Idleness, Vain-glory, and Pride, and sets down, in a few Words, some Remedies against these Vices.

Some produce also some Letters of S. Columbanus, taken out of another Manuscript of Bobio, of the Truth of which Letters there can be no doubt. The first is directed to Boniface Bishop of Rome, the Third or Fourth of that Name. S. Columbanus says, in that Letter, he had already written to the Pope, S. Gregory, concerning the Difference between his own Church and that of Rome, about the Day on which Easter ought to be celebrated, and intreats Boniface, to let him keep to the Custom he had, of celebrating that Festival, as the Ancients of his Country did, tho' he now lived in France. He propounds the Example of S. Polycarp, and of Anicetus, to shew that Men may differ in their Practice about the keeping of Easter, without any Breach of Unity and Peace, and annexes the Canon of the first Council of Constantinople ; whereby it is order'd, That Christian People living among barbarous Nations, shall live after their Customs : Which is an Argument, that S. Columbanus was not unacquainted with Ecclesiastical History, and the Canons of the Church. The next Letter is to a Council of French Bishops, assembled upon his Account. It is written with a great deal of Wisdom and Elegancy, is very Witty, Judicious, and Learned. He thanks them, at first, for having met together about his Concerns, and intimates to them, That he could wish they would meet oftner ; and that, according to the Canons, they would hold Councils once or twice in the Year, to put a stop to the Divisions and Disorders of their Time. He prays to God, That their Meeting may be for the Church's Good ; and that they would not only treat of the Celebration of Easter, but moreover make all necessary Provisions to restore the Discipline to its former State. He does earnestly press their own Duty upon them, and gives them Lessons of Humility and Charitableness ; and then, coming to the Matter in Hand, he sets forth the Difference between the French and the English Bishops, about the Time of the Celebration of Easter. He observes, That the Western Churches were not agreed upon the Day of that Festival.

S. Columbanus.

Festival: That many always kept it from the Fourteenth Day of the Moon to the Twentieth; so that when the Fourteenth fell on a Saturday, they kept the Feast of the Resurrection on the very next Day; whereas the French and Italian Bishops, put off the Celebration of it to the Sunday following. He says, That he hath justified the ancient Custom of the Western Churches, in the Writing he sends them, in three other Tracts, directed to Pope Gregory, and in a Book sent to Arigius, one of the Bishops of the Council. But without engaging in that Dispute, he only prays the Bishops, to give him leave to observe a Custom, of which he is not the Author, and which is practised in the Country from whence he comes; and intreats them, that they would let him live in Peace, and in Silence, in his Solitude, near the Bones of Seventeen of his Brethren, as he hath lived these twelve Years, that he may continue praying for them. He tells them, That it were better done of them to comfort poor old Men and Strangers, than to trouble and molest them. He adds, That he durst not go to the Council, for fear he should be forced to engage in the Dispute; but that he cannot forbear declaring sincerely to them, That he gives more Credit to the Tradition of his Country, to the ancient Cycle of Fourcore and four Years, to that of Anatolius, to Eusebius, and S. Hierom, than to Victorius's Testimony, a new Author, who hath written very obscurely: Nevertheless, he would not have them to think, that he says this out of a contentious Spirit; he desires only, that every one might keep his own Custom, and follow his own Tradition. Then he exhorts them to the Practice of Humility and Charity. He makes a Comparison of the Monks and Bishops, and says, S. Hierom advises these to imitate the Apostles, and those to follow the Holy Fathers; because Clerks and Monks have very different Practices and Obligations: That every one is to follow his Calling, and perform his Duty. He prays to God, That through his free Grace he would cause his Commandments to be kept by all. In the end, he does beseech them to pray to God for him, and his Fellows, as they pray for them, and not to look upon them as Strangers, seeing all Christians are Members of one Body.

It is not known what this Council is, it must have been held towards the Year 600, because it is Twelve Years after S. Columbanus's coming into France, a little before S. Gregory's Death: Some believe it to be the Council held at Challon upon the River Soane, in the Year 603; in which Arigius Bishop of Lyons presided: But perhaps it might be some other Council: For this was assembled about the Business of Desiderius, Bishop of Vienna. This Letter is written before the foregoing.

S. Columbanus's Letter has lately been attributed to S. Gregory, who is mention'd in the two preceding Letters: There he does very confidently set down the Authorities he depends upon, to shew that Easter should always be celebrated by the Twentieth of the Moon in March, before the Equinox, and treats the Cycle of Victorius with a great deal of Contempt: And does also refute Pope Victor's Opinion, That Easter is not to be kept at the same Time with the Jews. He exhorts the Pope to alter his Opinion and Practice about that; and then asks him, Whether he should communicate with those who are ordain'd Bishops, contrary to the Constitution and Canons, by Simony, or having committed some Crimes in the Time they were Deacons? In fine, he consults him what is to be done with Monks, who depart from their Monasteries, without their Abbot's Leave, renouncing their Vows. He lets him know, he would gladly have come to Rome to see him. He commends his Pastoral, and prays him to send him some of his Works, and chiefly those upon Ezekiel. He acquaints him, That he hath perused the six Books of S. Hierom on that Prophet, but that that Father hath not explain'd half of it.

S. Columbanus's fourth Letter is written to Pope Boniface IV. of that Name, upon the Motion of Agilulphus King of Lombardy. By this Letter it appears, That that Prince assisted the Defenders of the Three Chapters, and that he had perswaded S. Columbanus, that there was some cause to suspect the Church of Rome of Error: That the Pope himself was consenting to it, or at least permitted it: That Vigilius died an Heretick: And that the Fifth Council ought to be rejected. S. Columbanus entertaining these Opinions, writes a vehement Letter to Boniface; wherein he exhorts him to watch over his Flock, and condemns Vigilius's want of Vigilancy. He saith, he died an Heretick, and wonders they should put his Name in the List of Catholic Bishops. He exhorts the Pope to clear both himself and his Church, from the Suspicion of Heresie, by calling a Council, to make an exact Exposition of the Catholic Faith, and to condemn all those that swerved from it. He believes, that the Fifth Council approved Eutyches's Error, and confounds the two Natures; and yet he says, at his coming into Italy, they wrote to him, That Communion with Rome ought to be shun'd, because they there held Nestorius's Heresie: Which shews, he was not rightly informed of the Fact he wrote of. It had been better for him to have only exhorted the Pope, as he does, to endeavour to suppress the Schism and Division in Italy, about the Business of the Three Chapters, by tolerating those that defended them.

'Tis said, that S. Columbanus had written some Letters to King Theodorick, but we have none of them. Jonas speaks also of a Letter directed to Clotharius; but it is lost, as well as his Book against the Arians, mention'd in the same Author, his great Treatise of Easter, Two Letters to S. Gregory, and his writing to Arigius upon the same Subject. They say, moreover, he had made a Commentary upon the Gospels; but it is not mention'd in ancient Authors. They ascribe yet to him a little Treatise of Penances for Monks, Clerks and Laicks; but but it does not seem to me to be his. Father Fleming, an Irish Franciscan, hath collected the Works of this Father, and printed them at Louvain, in the Year 1667. since which they have been printed in the last Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum at Lyons, with the Works of Two other Irish Writers.

S. Columbanus.

The First of which is a Tract of S. Aleran, or Ereran, containing a Mystical and Moral Interpretation of the Names recited in the Genealogy of Christ, which are applied to our Lord's Qualities or Precepts. This Aleran, surnamed the Wise, was a Presbyter; it is said, he also wrote the Life of S. Patrick. There is another Ereran, an Irish Abbot, who wrote a Monastical Rule.

The Second Tract added to S. Columbanus's Works in this Edition, is a very large Penitential of one Cumianus or Cuminus, an Abbot, in which there are several remarkable Things, and amongst others, That there are twelve principal Means of obtaining Pardon of our Sins grounded upon Testimonies of the Holy Scripture, viz. 1. Baptism, 2. Charity, 3. Almsgiving, 4. Tears, 5. Confession, 6. Mortification of the Flesh and Spirit, 7. Change of Manners, 8. Intercessions of the Just, 9. Faith, 10. Converting of others, 11. Forgiving of Enemies, and 12. Martyrdom. That (e) Confession of Secret Sins, and even of Thoughts and Desires, was in Use in that Time; that great Crimes were also subjected to long Penances, that lesser Faults were punished with many Days of Penance; that eating of strangled Beasts and of Blood, was as yet forbidden; that the Fast of Lent was commanded; that all kind of Pollutions were punish'd with Penances; that the (f) Celibacy of Superior Clerks, and of profess'd Monks, was commanded; that it was forbidden, to marry on Sunday; that it was wish'd, that married Persons would abstain from the Use of Marriage three Days before Receiving the Communion; that Men were put to Penance for Bigamy and Usury also; yea, and even those that did not use Hospitality, nor give Alms; that Clerks that did not give their Superfluities to the Poor were Excommunicated; that whosoever did Communicate with an Heretick was Excommunicated; that those that had been ordained by Hereticks were re-ordained; that those were re-baptiz'd that had been baptiz'd by such Hereticks as had erroneous Opinions about the Trinity; that they put those to Penance, that let the Sacramental Bread or the Cup fall to the Ground, or were guilty of any other Irreverence, at the Receiving of the Sacrament, out of Negligence or by Accident; that among the Greeks they received the Communion every Sunday, and that those that did not Receive for Three Sundays together were excommunicated; but that among the Latins every one had liberty to communicate or not to communicate; that the * Sacrifice of the Mass was offer'd for the Dead, and that they did even fast for them; that Women might receive the Sacrament with a Black Veil on; that Bishops were permitted to give Confirmation in a Campaign; that a Priest might in one Day say two Masses at the same Altar; that, in Case of Necessity, Confession may be made to God; that the most usual Penances were Fasting, Separation from the Church, entrance into Religious Orders.

[(e) Confession of secret Sins and Thoughts. — was in use.] Confession of Sins, private and publick, to God, is absolutely necessary to obtain Pardon of them, and where we have done any Wrongs or Injuries to Men, we must acknowledge them, and make Restitution, endeavour Reconciliation. And if still there remain any Doubts and Scruples in our Consciences, it is convenient to discover our Grievs, to the Ministers of God's Word, that we may receive from them Ghostly Counsel and Advice. In these Cases, no doubt, the Confession of Secret Sins, Thoughts and Desires was ever in use in the Church: But as to that Auricular and Sacramental Confession, which seems to be insinuated in the Words of this Father; as it was not in use in the First Ages of the Church, so can it pretend to no other Ground for the Use of it, than the Lateran Council under Innocent the Third, anno 1215. or the Council of Tyent, which is of much later date. Confession of secret Sins was ever approved and used, never generally imposed nor made necessary to Absolution till Popery prevailed.]

Cyprian, Serm. de laps. Terrul. de penitentia. Origen in Ps. 37.

[(f) Celibacy of Clerks — commanded.] Altho' the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament do no where disallow the Marriage of Priests, but give them an equal Liberty, in that kind, with the Laity, insomuch that all the Apostles (except S. John) were married Men, as also the greatest part of the Clergy of the first Times: eccles. l. 9. c. 38. But yet some there were of the most eminent Bishops and most zealous Christians, who having imbibed the Philosophers Opinions and Prejudices against Marriage, as an Estate in it self unclean, and so troublesome, that it was utterly inconsistent with an Holy and Speculative Life, did ever retain such an Antipathy against it, especially in the Clergy, that they were ever inveigh-ing against them that were marri'd, insomuch that they brought it into a general Dislike. At length a Decree was made against Priest's Marriage, in the Council of Eliberis, anno 305. Can. 33. And the like was attempted in the first Council of Nice, but was suppressed by the Authority of Papennutius: And not long after the Canon made at Eliberis was as it were reversed by the Council of Ancyra, Can. 9. Indeed Pope Syrictus, anno 380. and Innocent, enforced the same Prohibition in the West, and were seconded by the Second Council of Carthage, but were opposed by the Synods of Agatha and Tyron: So that tho' the Celibacy of the Clergy was commanded and practised in some Churches, especially in the West (to which this Author refers himself) yet it was never universally imposed nor received, especially in the East, till Gregory VII's Time, anno 1074. and then was thought to be establish'd by no Law Ecclesiastical or Divine, and was opposed by the Clergy, unanimously, as a Doctrine of Devils, as S. Paul, 1 Tim. 3. 4. and all good Men esteem it.]

CUMIANUS or CUMINUS.

Cumianus, or Cuminus
 [*Epistolarum Hibernicarum Sylloge.]
 THERE are many CUMINUS's in Ireland. This probably is he of whom there is still extant a Letter to Segenius, Abbot of Hi, publish'd by Bishop Usher, in his *Collection of Letters of Irish Men, wherein he would persuade the Irish, That they ought to leave their Custom of keeping Easter, and conform to that of the Roman Church. The Author of the Penitential is of the same Opinion; and therefore may be believed to be the same Man, but it is not known who nor whence he was. Some believe 'tis Cuminus, Abbot of Hi; but it is not likely, seeing the Letter is written to Segenius, who was Abbot of Hi, many Years before this Cuminus took Possession of it. I should rather think 'tis Cuminus, surnam'd Fada, that is, the long. Son to King Fiachma, who also is supposed to be Author of an Hymn, which begins with these Words; Celebra Jūda festa Christi gaudia. He was born, if one may believe the Annals of that Country, in the Year 592. and died 662. the Letter now mention'd was written about 634.

HESYCHIUS.

Hesy chius
 [*A City in Dalmatia.]
 AUTHORS are much divided about this Author's Age and Profession, whose chief Work is a Commentary upon Leviticus. Cardinal Perron ascribed it to Hesy chius, Bishop of Salone*, who lived under the Empire of Honorius, in the Time of Pope Zozimus, and of St. Austin, because there is a Letter of that Pope directed to this Hesy chius Bishop of Salone, and a Letter of that Bishop of S. Austin. Trithemius and Sixtus Senensis did believe, that this we now speak of, was a Disciple of S. Gregory Nazianzen. Bellarmin, Possevin and Muraus ascribe the Works, bearing Hesy chius's Name, to Hesy chius, Patriarch of Jerusalem, to whom the Fourth Letter of the First Book of St. Gregory's Letters is directed. The most common Opinion is, That this Hesy chius was a Priest only, and of Jerusalem (but some place him in the Fifth, others in the Seventh Century, which is plain) for, 1. The Author discovers himself to be so, in the Preface and Book which he wrote at Jerusalem(a). And, 2. In an old Manuscript of the King's Library, it is observed in the Title, that this Hesy chius was of Jerusalem; and the Title of the Letter, which is instead of a Preface, shews he was but a Priest. It is worded thus: To the Deacon Euty chius, Ily chius, a Sinner, Servant of Jesus Christ and Presbyter: Notwithstanding which, he might possibly have been afterwards raised to the dignity of Patriarch of Jerusalem; but there are no other Proofs of it, but the Authority of some Manuscripts, and some new Authors, in the Title of which he is called by the Name of Bishop; which is not very convincing: And Photius, who made some Extracts of this Author's Sermons, calls him no other than Presbyter. As for the Time in which he liv'd, there's no question but he is much later than the Bishop of Salone, seeing he writes against the Euty chius and Nestorians: Nay, he seems to have lived after S. Gregory, because he maketh use of S. Hierom's Translation; but he was before the Ninth Century, because his Commentary is quoted by Amalarinus, l. 14. of Divine Offices, c. 36. and by Rabanus, in his Preface upon Leviticus, as well as by Freculphus and Srabo; yea, and before the Eighth, if he be the same which Photius quoteth, as very likely he is: Which makes me think, he lived in the End of the Sixth or in the Beginning of the Seventh Century: It is true, there was one Hesy chius, Priest of Jerusalem, in the Fifth Century, in the Time of S. Cyril, mentioned in Euthymius's Life, and in Theophanes's Chronicle; but this does not seem to be so ancient, for in S. Cyril's Time, S. Hierom's Translation was not used in the Church. I know, it may be answer'd, that that Quotation is none of that Author's, but the Translator's, because we have not the Greek Original of that Work: But I am persuaded, it was written in Latin by its Author, who does carefully mark the Differences between the Vulgar Edition and that of the Septuagint, and likewise of the Translations of Aquila and Theodotion, and sometimes quotes the Greek Terms of those Translations, which he renders into Latin. This Commentary is clear and plain, he gives the literal Sense, adding now and then to that Explication, some short Allegorical or Moral Reflections. It is divided into Seven Books. It hath often been observ'd, That this Author speaks of a Practice of the Church of his Time: That they burnt the remainder of the Oblation after the Celebration of the Mysteries, and the Communion of the Faithful.

(a) Which he wrote at Jerusalem.] These are his Words in the Preface: Deprecare ut fiat oblatio verbi mei acceptabilis, non solum in Jerusalem, sed et in omni terra. And in the Sixth Book, Quod manifestat Templum, et civitas hac Jerusalem. And in the Seventh Book, Cognoscis autem ea quae ipsis Judaeis eveniunt, ex Josephi historia, quorum plurima etiam nunc nostris ad cernendum adjacent visibus.

In the Bibliotheca Patrum there are Two Homilies in Greek and Latin, upon the Virgin, bearing the Name of Hefychius, Presbyter of Jerusalem.

Hefychius.

Combefis attributes, moreover, to this Author, the second Sermon of S. Gregory of Nyssa, upon Christ's Resurrection; and he proves his Opinion, 1. By the Authority of a Manuscript of the King's Library, where this Sermon is found under Hefychius's Name, Priest of Jerusalem. 2. Because it seems to be of a meaner, more close and dogmatical Style than that of Gregory of Nyssa. Lastly, because it sets down an Opinion directly opposite to that which is brought in the first Sermon on the same subject, bearing also the Name of S. Gregory of Nyssa; for the Authors of this supposes, That Christ rose from the Dead on Saturday in the Evening, and gives that Sense to S. Matthew's Words, Vespere autem Sabbatis: Whereas the Author of the second Sermon supposes, That he rose on Sunday Morning, and shews these Words (Vespere autem, Sabbatis, or Sabbatum) are to be understood thus, When the Week was past. But if this Homily be Hefychius's, it is not his of whom we speak, but his who lived in the Beginning of the Fifth Century. To the End of that Homily Combefis hath added the Fragment of a Place of Hefychius's Harmony of the Gospels, touching the Hour of Christ's Death. Cotelerius hath made an Abridgment of it in the beginning of his Third Volume Of the Monuments of the Greek Church. This Work contains the solutions of several Difficulties about the seeming Contradictions of the Evangelists.

Hoeschelius hath published, with Adrian's Introduction, The Titles of the Chapters of the Twelve lesser Prophets, and of Isaiah, bearing the Name of Hefychius also. This Work might also be his, who lived in the Fifth Century.

The Treatise of Temperance and Vertue, dedicated to Theodulus, which contains Two hundred Maxims of the Spiritual Life, is the same Hefychius's, for in the Thirty first Maxim of the first hundred, it is observed, That the Author dwelt in a Monastery, and lived under the Conduct of a Superior.

It is probable likewise that Hefychius's Church-History, a Fragment whereof is quoted about Theodorus Mopsuestenus, in the Fifth Council, Collection V. p. 470. and in Justinian's Edict, belongs to the Monk of the Fifth Century.

Lastly, we may attribute to this in Two Sermons, of which Photius recites some Fragments in the 269th. and 275th. Volumes of his Bibliotheca: The one is taken out of a Sermon upon S. Andrew, and the other out of a Sermon upon S. James, the Lord's Brother: I say the first is taken out of a Sermon upon S. Andrew, tho' in Photius's Title there is the Name of S. Thomas, because the Extract contains really a Commendation of S. Andrew, and there is now extant a Latin Translation of that whole Discourse on S. Andrew, in which Photius's Extracts are found. He says, in that Sermon, that S. Andrew is the first of the Apostles, the first Pillar of the Church, even before S. Peter, the Foundation of the Foundation it self. In the Sermon upon S. James, he says also almost the same Things of that Apostle, calling him, The Prince of Bishops, the Head or Chief of the Apostles, the Top of the Heads themselves, the most shining Lamp, the brightest Star. Thus they alwas extol the Saints, of whom they speak, above the others. Cotelerius tells us, in his Notes, He had collected many other Manuscript Pieces of this Hefychius, which he would have publish'd, if he could have hoped for a Life long enough.

There was another Hefychius, Presbyter of Constantinople, mention'd also by Photius in the 51st. Volume of his Bibliotheca. 'I have read, says he, Four Discourses of Hefychius's, Presbyter of Constantinople, upon the Brazen Serpent; The Style of them is full of Ostentation, and calculated to stir up the Passions. He brings in the People of Israel speaking to Moses, and that Prophet making Speeches to the People. He relates also some Discourses of God to the People, and to Moses, and the Answers of Moses and the People, in the Form of Prayers or Excuses. These Speeches take up the greatest part of his Work, which maketh up a large Volume. That Author was Catholick, as far as one can judge by his Work.

We have none of those Discourses now nor any Tract of that Author, but the loss of these Declamations is not very considerable.

EUSEBIUS, Bishop of Thessalonica.

Eusebius of Thessalonica.
 [* Called Aphotarto-docta.]

THIS Bishop having sent to S. Gregory, his Reader Theodorus, with some Writings, he gave them to a Monk, named Andrew, whom he had formerly been acquainted with, who was shut up in a Monastery of Rome: This Monk who was of the * Sect of those who believed Christ's Flesh was always incorruptible, falsified them so, that it seemed as if this Bishop had advanced some heretical Propositions: But S. Gregory knowing the Genius of that Monk, because he had made some Greek Sermons under his Name, discover'd that Fraud, and wrote about it to Eusebius of Thessalonica, as it appears by the 69th Letter of the Ninth Book of that Pope's Letters. Photius tells us, That same Monk had written a Letter to Eusebius, and pray'd him, for God's sake, to read it; and that Eusebius having read it, wrote him an Answer, in which he shews him at first, That he knew not how to write, and that he continually committed many Faults; wherein he was so much the more to blame because he forsook his Profession, and disturbed the Privacy which he had embraced, to carry on a Business which he was not at all fit for: He then attacks his Error, and shews first, against him, That the Word Corruption is not only apply'd to Sin, but the Holy Fathers used it to signify the Dissolution of Bodies. 2. He reproved him, for having maintained, That Christ's Body became incorruptible at the Moment of its Union to the God-head, an Opinion which was indeed Julian's (Bishop of Halicarnassus, turn'd out of his See by Justinian, for rejecting the Council of Chalcedon) tho' Andrew pretended to write in that Letter against the Errors of Severus and Julian. The 3d. Error he charged that Monk with, was of having said, That Adam's Body, before his Fall, was not created mortal and corruptible, whereas he should have said, That Man in his Nature was mortal and subject to Pain, but should by Grace have been preserv'd from Death and Sickness, had he not fallen. The 4th. Proposition he found Fault with, in Andrew's Letter, was, That he had written, That the World was incorruptible: He did also confute some more of Andrew's Propositions in that Writing, and exhorted him to a retraction. But this Monk, instead of following that Advice, made presently another Book, to defend his Errors, against which Eusebius wrote ten Books; wherein he shew'd, That Andrew, out of an intolerable Boldness, had gone about to make a new Exposition of Faith, whereas he should have kept to those made by the Councils; and that he had adulterated and mis-quoted many Passages of the Fathers. Then he confuted the four principal Errors, he had condemn'd in his first Writing. He shewed the different Senses the Word Corruption is capable of, and how many ways it hath been taken. He cited several Places of the Fathers, for the confuting of those Errors, and laid open the Falsifications of the Places quoted by Andrew. He shewed, That Christ was subject to natural, tho' not to vicious Passions, during his abode on the Earth, and that after his Resurrection he is become immortal and impassible. He did not matter the Name of Phthartolatre, that is, worshipper of Corruption, which Andrew gave to the Catholics, and omitted nothing that was necessary to maintain the Doctrine of the Church, and to render that of his Adversary ridiculous. His Style was plain and clear, pure enough, and did not want Judgment. There is nothing of him now extant. This is gathered out of the 162d. Volume of Photius's Bibliotheca.

BONIFACE IV.

Boniface IV.
 [*Or Ethelbert.]

BONIFACE IV. held the Roman See from 607. to 614. Bede says, That in that Pope's Time, Mellitus Bishop of London came to Rome, in the Eighth Year of the Emperor Phocas, and that he was present at a Council, which this Pope held at Rome, in the Year 610. in February; in which they made some Constitutions for the Church of England. Hollstenius hath published a pretended Decree of this Council, wherein it declares, That Monks may be Bishops, and perform the Sacerdotal Functions; and a Letter of this Pope to * Athelbert a King of England, in which he declares all those excommunicated that shall hinder the Execution of the Decree now mention'd, even the King's, Athelbert's, Successors. These two Monuments seem very suspicious to me. The Style of them is altogether barbarous, and they are fill'd with impertinent and frivolous Reasons: For instance, he says, It is evident that the State and Profession of Monks maketh them fit to be Ministers of the Word of God, seeing they are call'd Angels, and Angels are Ministers; which Reasoning is frivolous: But the reason he gives why they are call'd Angels, is yet more ridiculous. Monks, saith he, are cover'd, like Cherubims, with six Wings, the Cowle that covers their Head, maketh two, the Tunick's Arms make other two, and we may confidently say, the two extreams of the Habit, which covers the Body, are two Wings more. Thus you have the Cherubim's six Wings: This is some Monk's Fancy, rather than the Work of a Council of Bishops or of a Patriarch.

The

The Letter of Pope Deusdedit, Boniface the IV's. Successor, directed to Gordian Bishop of Sevil, is a Monument evidently false. Isidore was Bishop of Sevil from the Year 600. to the Year 636 and Deusdedit held the Holy See in that interval. Thus the very Title does evince the Falsity of that Letter, it being evident that under Deusdedit's Pontificate, there was no Gordian Bishop of Sevil. The Author of the Letter declares, That according to the Decrees of the Holy See, married Persons, which accidentally stood together Sureties for their Children at the Font, ought to be put asunder, and may be married again; which is a gross Error, authorized by no ancient Constitution. In fine, the Style of this Letter is the same with the Pope's other Letters, forg'd by Isidore.

JOHN PHILOPONUS.

JOHN, surnam'd Philoponus, that is, Laborious, a Grammarian of Alexandria, of the Sect of the Trutheites, flourish'd in the beginning of the Seventh Century, and compos'd several loponus.

The first is a writting against Jamblichus the Philosopher's Treatise of Idols. That Philosopher had undertaken in that Treatise, to shew, That Idols had something heavenly in them, and that the Deity dwelt there; which he prov'd both from the wonderful Fabrick of Images, and the incredible things ascribed to them. Philoponus had refuted the two Parts of that Work with a great deal of Elegancy and Strength. Phorius speaks of that work in the 216th. Volume of his Bibliotheca.

He wrote moreover a Treatise of the six Days Work against Theodorus Mopsuestenus, dedicated to Sergius Patriarch of Constantinople; wherein he endeavours to demonstrate, That Moses hath related the History of the Creation of the World more plainly and conformably to the Phenomena of Nature than any thing Plato said of it. Phorius mentions that Treatise in the 43d. Volume of his Bibliotheca, and there is an Extract of it found in the 240th Volume. It is divided into four Books, publish'd by Corderius, and printed at Vienna, in the Year 1630. in Quarto, together with a Tract of the same Author about Easter, whereof there is no mention made in Phorius, who speaks of three Works more of the same Author. The first is a Treatise of the Resurrection, wherein he rejected the Resurrection of the Body. The second is a Writing against the * Fourth Council, divided into four Parts; in which he maintains, That the Bishops of that Assembly approv'd Nestorius's Doctrine. And another Treatise against the Catechetical Discourse of Joannes Scholasticus Bishop of Constantinople, concerning the Holy and Consubstantial Trinity, preach'd under the Empire of Justin junior. He hath also written several other Philosophical Treatises upon Aristotle's Books, printed in several Places, and a Treatise against Proclus's Opinion of the Eternity of the World.

[* The Council of Chalcedon.]
[† His Analytica, De generatione, De corruptione, De anima, De generatione animalium, De meteoris, Physicorum Acroamatica. Printed at Venice in Gr. in 1535, 1551.]

This Author was as pure, pleasing and elegant in his Style, as impious in his Doctrine, and weak in his Reasonings. One may see by his Treatise of Easter, that in his Time the Greeks used Leaven'd Bread in the Eucharist.

THEODOSIUS, CONON, EUGENIUS, THEMISTIUS and THEODORUS.

PHILOPONUS's Treatise of the Resurrection was confuted by Theodosius the Monk, by Conon, Eugenius and Themistius. These three last made a Book, entituled, An Invektive, in which they treated him as a Man unworthy the Name of a Christian, tho' they agreed with him in not receiving the Council of Chalcedon. This Themistius seems to be that Heretick whose Fragments are found quoted in the sixth Council, who was of the Sect of the Agnoetæ, and had written an Apology for S. Theophrastus; against which, another Monk, named Theodorus, of the Sect of * those, who said the Deity had suffer'd, writ a Book; in which he did refute the four Arguments urg'd by Themistius, to prove that Christ was subject to Ignorance. Themistius wrote an Answer to that Work to which Theodorus oppos'd three other Books. Phorius saith, They did both of them write indifferent, clear and strong. See the 23d, 24th, and 108th. Volumes of his Bibliotheca, for we have not now these Works.

Nicias. HERE is another Adversary of Philoponus; he was call'd Nicias, and was a Monk: He composed a Book against the Seven Articles of Philoponus, mention'd in his Book, entituled, The Arbitrator, or, Judge. His Style was plain and concise, his Answers satisfactory, and all to the purpose. He had also made a Treatise against Severus, and two Books against the Pagans. See Photius in the 50th. Antiochus. ANTIOCHUS, a Monk of the Monastery of S. Sabas in Palestina, liv'd in the beginning of the Seventh Century, when Jerusalem was taken by Chosroes King of Persia, and Palestine pillaged by the Saracens. He had made a Book, entitul'd, A Pandect of the Holy Scripture, because it is made up of 190 Moral Discourses; containing Precepts and Maxims upon the principal Duties of a Christian, grounded upon Places of the Holy Scripture. In the 130th. he maketh the Catalogue of Heresies related by S. Epiphanius, to which he adds the Names of the Authors of Heresies, who appeared since. In the End there is a long Prayer, entituled Exomologesis, to beg of God that he would turn away his Wrath from his People. The Preface speaks of the taking of Jerusalem, and with what Cruelties the Saracens used the Monks of Palestina. This Treatise is in Greek and Latin, in the first Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum, and in Latin alone, in the last Bibliotheca, in which they have put the 81st. Discourse, a second Time, under another Title.

J O H N, Bishop of Thessalonica.

John of Thessalonica. THIS Bishop, who is quoted in the 7th. Council, hath left us an Homily upon those Women that carried the Perfumes to imbalm Christ's Corpse. In that Homily he maketh divers Remarks, to set forth the Circumstances of our Lord's Resurrection: These are some of them. He saith, those Women came the night between the Saturday and Sunday to Christ's Tomb; That Mary the Mother of James, was the Mother of Christ, so called, because she was Mother-in-Law to James, the Lord's Brother, that is, Joseph's Son by a former Wife; That she that accompanied her, was Mary Magdalen; That they found Christ risen; That the hour of his Resurrection is uncertain; That Mary Magdalen went a second time to Christ's Tomb, with other Women, very early; That she returned thither twice more; That the four Evangelists speak of four different Journeys of the Women to the Tomb; That there are five or six Maries; Mary Magdalen, out of whom Christ had cast seven Devils; Mary, the Mother of James, which is the Virgin-Mother of God, Mother-in-Law to James the Greater; Mary the Mother of James the Lesser, and of Joses; Mary, the Wife of Cleophas, the Virgin's Sister; and Mary, Martha's and Lazarus's Sister. The distinction of these Maries may have some ground; but the four Journeys to Christ's Tomb, are a conjecture without probability. This Homily had already been published in Greek by Sir H. Savil, among the supposititious Homilies of S. Chrysostom; and Combes had published it with a Translation out of a Manuscript, in which it is attributed to John, Bishop of Thessalonica. He had found out one more, upon the Virgin's Assumption, little differing from the Writing attributed to Melito, but he did not judge it worth publishing. In the 7th. Council, A.D. 4. are found some Fragments of John of Thessalonica's Dialogues, the first whereof was between a Gentile and a Catholic, and a second between a Jew and a Christian. In the 1st. he proves against the Gentile, That Angels and Souls may be painted, as being corporeal; and in the 2d. he shews, That the (b) Pictures of Christ and of the Martyrs, which were in use among Christians, are not Idols.

[(b) Pictures of Christ and of the Martyrs, which were in use among Christians, are not Idols.] The Charge of Idolatry, being so great a Crime, so stupid a Sin,

Conc. Nic. 2. An. 788. and so strictly forbidden in Holy Scripture, hath always been denied by the rankest Image-worshippers among Christians, and that with such seeming detestation. The Fathers of the 2d. Council of Nice, Conc. Const. sub Copron. An. 754. who were strenuous Patrons of Image-worship against the Iconoclasts of that time, did yet disclaim that Charge lately laid upon them by a Council at Constantinople, tho' the Reasons brought to clear themselves of

of it are very weak and frivolous, as the most learned Bishop of Worcester hath sufficiently evinced. Nor doth the Church of Rome, tho' as gross Idolaters as the Heathens themselves, seem to bear any Impeachment more grievous than of Idolatry. And then 'tis no wonder, that this Writer, who perhaps was guilty of the same Sin, should assert, That the Pictures, then in use among Christians, were no Idols. And indeed, as they were used by the Church at first from the year 380, to S. Gregory the Great's time, viz. To represent the History of the Bible to the illiterate and ignorant Laity, or to adorn the Church withal, we do not account them Idols; tho' as the Christians for the first 300 years, and more, would not endure any Pictures in their Churches, witness that zealous Fact of Epiphanius in the Church of Antioch; so it may reasonably be thought, it was the Foundation of that Image-worship, which soon followed in the more superstitious Ages. And if the Christians, of whom this Bishop speaks, made no other use of them, we acknowledge, That they are not Idols. But if the Pictures of Christ and his Martyrs were worshipped by those Christians of whom he speaks, according to the custom of those times, it will be impossible to excuse them from Idolatry, notwithstanding the distinctions made by the Image-worshippers, between Image and an Idol; for in Holy Scripture, every Image being bowed down to and worshipped, tho' but with a relative Worship, is thereby made an Idol.]

GREGORY of ANTIOCH.

GREGORY Bishop of Antioch, who sat in that See from the year 572, to the year 608. made a Discourse upon the same Subject; but it is less Dogmatical, and contains nothing but Protopopœia's of Joseph to Pilate, and of Pilate to the Jews; some Reflections of Death speaking to her self, and Complaints of the Women upon Christ's death; some Discourses of the Angel with the Jews and Women, and of Jesus Christ with those Women.

JOHN, ARAUSIUS, HELLADIUS, JUSTUS, NONNITUS and CONANTIUS, Bishops of Spain.

JOHN, an Abbot, and afterwards Bishop of Saragosa, Braulio's Brother, flourished towards the year 620. Ildephonsus assures us, That he was well read in the Holy Scripture, and that he laboured to instruct by his Discourses more than by his Writings; That nevertheless he had elegantly written some Prayers to be sung in Divine Service, and also a Table to find out Easter-day every year. We have nothing now of this Author.

John, A-rausius, &c.
Bishops of Spain.

The same Ildephonsus ranks among Ecclesiastical Authors, Arausius Bishop of Toledo, and his Successor Helladius; but seeing he confesseth, they have writ nothing, it was needless to encrease the number of Authors with them. This last, had for his Disciple and Successor, one named Justus, a witty and worthy Man, who had written a Letter to Richilan, Abbot of the Monastery of Agali, in which he shewed him, That he ought not to leave his Flock. These three Bishops governed the Church of Toledo from the year 606, to 634, or 635. This last signed the Council of Toledo, held under Sisenand in the year 633. and was but 3 years Bishop.

S. Ildephonsus puts also in the rank of Ecclesiastical Authors Nonnitus, Bishop of Gironde, who lived in the same time, but he speaks of none of his Works.

He speaks, lastly, of Conantius, Bishop of Palenxo, as of a Man as Prudent and Grave, as Eloquent and Learned; and he saith, he applied himself to regulate the Order of Divine Service; That he had made Hymns to new Tunes, and a Book of Prayers taken out of the Psalms. We have not now those Works.

BONIFACE V.

Boniface V. BE D E mentions three Letters of this Pope about the Conversion of the English. The 1st. is directed to Justus, who from Bishop of Rochester became Arch bishop of Canterbury, wherein he grants him the Pall, and congratulates him for King Adelrad's Conversion. The 2^d. is directed to * Edwin an English King. wherein he exhorts him to leave Idolatry, to worship the true God, and embrace Christ's Religion. The 3^d. is to Queen † Edelburgh, whom he congratulateth upon her Conversion, and exhorts her to endeavour that of the King her Husband.

MODESTUS, Bishop of Jerusalem.

Modestus Bishop of Jerusalem. WE have no other Monument of this Author, who flourished towards the year 620. but an Extract of one of his Sermons mention'd by Photius in the 275th. Volume of his Bibliotheca. The first is taken out of a Sermon upon the Women of the Gospel, which carried Balm to anoint Christ. He tells us there, That Mary Magdalen, out of whom Christ cast seven Devils, was a Virgin, and that she suffered Martyrdom at Ephesus, whither she went to S. John the Evangelist, after the Virgin's death. Which shews how far they were then from the Opinion which hath obtained since, That Mary Magdalen is the same with the Woman that was a Sinner. [Luke, 7. 37.] The 2^d. Sermon of Modestus, mentioned in Photius, was a Sermon upon the death of the Virgin the Mother of God, which he calls, A Dormitory Sermon, after the manner of the Ancients. Photius speaks of no Extract of it; he only taketh notice, 'tis a long Discourse, containing nothing necessary, and nothing like the former. The 3^d. Sermon is upon the Festival of the meeting [of Christ and Simeon] or the presentation of Jesus Christ in the Temple. Photius sets down an Extract of it, in which, the Vertues of Anna, and the Virgin's Purification, are discoursed of Figuratively and Rhetorically.

GEORGE of Alexandria.

George of Alexandria. IT is thought, That George, the Author of S. Chrysostom's Life, was the Bishop of Alexandria, who succeeded S. John the Alms-giver in the year 620, and held that See till 630. This Life is a great deal larger than that of Palladius, but less faithful, and full of many Untruths. His Style, in the judgment of the learned Photius, is very plain, and somewhat flat. He offends against the Laws of Grammar, and is not exact in the construing of Words. It is needless to make the Extract of this Life, because what it contains more than is in Palladius, and the other ancient Historians, is either false or doubtful. He hath often misrepresented the Matters of Fact, which he relates upon trust from other Authors. He alledges many of them contrary to the Testimonies of S. Chrysostom, and the Authors of his time. He hath counterfeited many Letters, and falsely attributed them to the Emperors Arcadius and Honorius, and Pope Innocent. He confidently asserts, contrary to the truth of History, That this Pope excommunicated the Emperor Honorius and Empress Eudoxia. He hath reported an infinite number of things evidently false. Photius, who made a long Extract of this Life, confesses himself, That he hath said many things contrary to the Truth of History; but he thinks the Reader may pick out that which is true and useful, and pass by the rest. Methinks it were better and fitter to fetch things out of the Originals, than to mispend ones time to read them in those ill Copiers and Plagiaries. This Work was published in Greek by Sir H. Savil, in the last Volume of S. Chrysostom's Works, printed at Eaton; together with the Life of the same Father by other later Authors, who copied out this Man's Fictions, and added others to them, after the manner of the modern Greeks.

HONORIUS.

Pope Honorius, whose Name became so famous, by reason of his Condemnation in the sixth Council, was raised to the Pontificate the thirteenth of May, 626, and died October 11. 638. Besides the two Letters he hath written to Sergius, upon the Question of the two Wills in Christ, which will be spoken of in the Acts of the fifth Council, where they are inserted, we have some others upon particular Matters: The first is directed to the Exarch Isacius, to whom he complains, That certain Bishops advised a Lord to forsake Adaluade, the lawful King of the Lombards, to side with the Tyrant Arioualde; and he desires him, after having restored Adaluade, to send those Bishops to Rome to him, that he may punish them for their Disloyalty. We learn of Paul the Deacon, That Adaluade was turned out by the Lombards, because he had lost his Senses, and that Arioualde was put in his room.

Honorius.

The second Letter of Honorius, is directed to the Bishops of the Provinces of Venice, and Istria. He recommends to them Primogenius, whom he had Consecrated to be Arch-Bishop of Grado; and prays them, to admit him into the place of him who had been deprived of that Church.

The three next Letters are concerning the Question of the two Wills in Christ.

The fifth and sixth are taken out of Beda: Therein he congratulates Edwin King of Northumberland, for his Conversion; he exhorts him to Perseverance in the Faith, and Piety; he recommends S. Gregory's Works to him for his reading, and tells him, he sends two Palls to both the Metropolitans of his Kingdom.

The sixth ought to be directed to those two Metropolitans, named Honorius, and Paulinus, the one Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, the other of York. He exhorts them to discharge the Duties of their Ministry worthily, and grants to them, That when either of the Bishops of those two Sees shall happen to die, the Survivor may Ordain another in his room.

Honorius's two last Letters are taken out of the Collection of Canons of Cardinal Deusdedit. In the first directed to the Bishops of Epirus, he tells them, That he sends them the Pall for Hypatius, whom they had Ordained Bishop of Nicopolis; but because he had been suspected of having had a hand in his Predecessor, Sotericus's Death, his Will is, That when the Time of Peace shall give him leave, he should come to Rome to clear himself by (1) Oath, before S. Peter's Tomb, from having been any ways accessary to it; and he says, That Sotericus had thus cleared himself from some Suspicious against him. The second is directed to Sergius, Sub-Deacon, about a Business concerning the Bishop of Cagliari. That Bishop was at variance with certain of his Clerks; the Parties had been cited to Rome; the Bishop had appeared there, and his Clerks being not come thither, the Pope had sent an Advocate from Rome to bring them; but the Governour of Sardinia detained them in Africk, to keep them out of the Pope's Jurisdiction, which obliged him to intreat Sergius to sue to the Præfatus Prætorio, to do him Justice, by ordering that Governour to send those Clerks to Rome. He transmitted to him, at the same time, a Copy of Valentinian and Theodosius's Law, to support his Pretension.

[(1) Oath before S. Peter's Tomb.]
This Action, tho' but a Ceremony in Swearing, yet being intended as a piece of Divine Honour to S. Peter, was an Idolatrous and Sinful Custom, which crept in with Saint-Worship.

SOPHRONIUS.

Sophronius, of Damascus, Elected Patriarch of Jerusalem, in the Year 629, was one of the great Opposers of the * Monothelites; when he was but a Monk he opposed that Error springing up at Alexandria, and did his Endeavours to hinder Cyrus from entertaining it. He was the first Patriarch that condemned it; and before he died, he sent a Bishop to Rome, to demand the solemn Condemnation of it. Photius in the 231st Volume of his Bibliotheca, says, He had perused a Synodal Letter of that Patriarch, directed to Honorius, then Governing the Church of Rome, in which he did exactly explain and defend the Doctrine of the Will in Jesus Christ: That he observed there, that Magnus had been Excommunicated, together with Christ after Apollinarius; and that Theodoret had not been banished out of the Church, tho' he did not agree with S. Cyril: That he distinguished there two Origen's; the one Elder, the other Sir-named Adamantius, altho' they be really the same: That he mention'd one James of Syria, Author of the Sect of the Acephali: That he prayed Honorius, that, in case he had forgotten in his Letter something which he should have said, he would supply it, and amend what he should think amiss in it: That he cited the Testimonies of several Fathers, whereof Photius

Sophronius.
[* A Self that held, that there was but one the Union of the two Natures.]

Sophronius. maketh the Catalogue, to confute those Mens Opinions, who pretended, there was but one Operation in Christ. This is the sum of that Letter, as it is reported by Photius.

This Patriarch of Jerusalem wrote also another Synodal Letter on the same Subject, directed to Sergius, Patriarch of Constantinople, mentioned in the 11th Act of the 6th Council. It contains a long Profession of Faith, in which, after a large Dissertation upon the Mystery of the Incarnation, and having encountered the Heresies and Errors opposite to the Faith of the Church, he concludes, That the two Natures in Jesus Christ, have each their distinct Operations. He names and condemns an infinite Number of Hereticks. He asserts, The Souls to be created when our Bodies are formed, and that we shall rise with the very same Bodies we have. He attributes the contrary Opinion to Origen, against whom he proves the Eternity of Pains.

Besides these two Dogmatical Monuments, we have four Sermons fathered upon Sophronius; the first is on our Saviour's Birth, wherein the Cruelties of the Saracens, who had invaded the Town of Bethlehem, are mentioned. The second is a Panegyrick of the Angels, full of Praises and Prayers, as also the other two (k) Sermons of the Praises of the Cross. Photius found out the true Style of that Author, when he observed, That he uses extraordinary Terms, and goes skipping along. By this Character it is plain enough, that it is another Sophronius, spoken of by the same Photius, in the fifth Volume of his Bibliotheca, in these words: 'I have read a Book of Sophronius's for S. Basil, against Eunomius; he is more learned and short than Theodorus; he does not keep close to all that Eunomius hath said, but undertakes to oppose and confute the principal Points of Eunomius's Heresie, his Character is to be peremptory and decisive, his Style is free and plain; yet not tedious, altho' he be full of Logical Arguments.'

[(k) Sermons of the Praises of the Cross.] The Cross of Christ was at first a Stumbling-Block to the Jews, Foolishness to the Gentiles, and a Reproach to the Christians themselves, who were in derision called the Disciples of a crucified God. To shew therefore their Constancy, and Love to their Profession, they did frequently cross themselves on their Breasts and Foreheads, to testify their sincere Belief, That Jesus who was crucified was their Saviour, and that they were not ashamed of his Cross. These were the only Crosses, (or Crossings rather) that were used by the Christians for 300 Years, and more, after Christ: For

Eucl. de vit. Const. lib. 1. Arnobius says, Crucis nec habemus, nec optamus: We neither have Crosses, nor desire any. But after it pleased God to promise Constantine the Great, Victory over his Competitors in the Empire, by making the Sign of the Cross to appear to him in the Air, with this Inscription, In hoc signo vinces; which he therefore put immediately into the Imperial Standard, to be adored by all his Soldiers, according to the

Aug. in Joan. Tract. 118. Custom, and was always Victorious with it, it ever after came to be in very great Esteem and Honour among the Christians: Wooden Crosses were made and placed in the publick Markets, the Sign of the Cross was used in celebrating the Sacraments; honourable Titles were given to it by the Fathers; who called it, Signum Fidei, Trophæum Dominicum, Signum Christi, &c. At last, in this Superstitious and Idolatrous Age, it was admitted into the Church, together with the Images of Christ, and his Saints, excessive Praises bestowed upon it by this, and other Bishops, in their Sermons, who were zealous for Image-Worship, and became an Object of Adoration together with them.

There is a bad piece, entituled, S. Peter's, and S. Paul's Journeys, tho' S. Peter's only be mentioned, attributed to Sophronius of Jerusalem; but 'tis a ridiculous Forgery, not worth mentioning.

We may more justly attribute to Sophronius of Jerusalem, S. Mary the Ægyptian's Life, quoted in the 7th Council, Act 4. by S. John Damascene, in his

[(l) S. J. Damascene's Book of Images.] This Writer, who is reckoned among the Fathers of the Church, and much quoted by Romish Authors, in their Controversie with Protestants, was a credulous and superstitious Person, a great Patron of Images, and a zealous Defender of Image-Worship, and the other Errors which sprang up about his time. Infomuch, that it is no wonder that we meet with Books of such Titles as this under his Name, better becoming an Heathen than a Christian; for which Reason his Writings are of small Joannes Moschus.

JOANNES MOSCHUS.

[* Sirnam'd Eviphronius.] THE Author of The Spiritual Meadow, is called *Joannes Moschus, Presbyter and Monk, who having run through the Monasteries of the East, came to Rome with his Scholar Sophronius, believed to be him we have now spoken of, tho' without any certain proof. He gathered gathered into that Book what he had learned of the Life, Actions, Sentences, and Miracles of the Monks of divers Countries. There he relates many strange Stories and Miracles, that deserve little Credit. We shall not stand to relate them, but shall only remark what may be useful to clear the Church-Discipline. He observes in the third Chapter, There was a Presbyter who did Baptize, and Anoint the Baptized with the Holy Chrism; but that he would have left that Function, because that when he baptized Women, he felt some Motions troublesome to him. In the 25th he says, That a Friar having pronounced the Words of Consecration upon some Loaves he had brought to offer upon the Altar, when the Priest offered them, he did not see the Holy Ghost coming down, as it used to do; and that he was warned by an Angel, that those Loaves had been consecrated before, because that Friar had pronounced in the way the words of Consecration; and that this Priest forbade them afterwards to suffer any other to learn them, but such as were to offer the holy Sacrifice, and that no Body should pronounce them, but in the time of the Consecration. In the 26th he reports, That a Monk, to prove there was no Salvation to be had out of the Church, had shewed to one of his Brethren engaged in Nestorius's Error, Hereticks in a place full of Fire and Filth. In the 27th he says, A Priest would not say Mass, unless he saw the Holy Ghost descending upon the Altar, tho' the Hour of the Celebration of it ought always to be the same. In the 29th he relates, That a Stylite Monk, of the Communion of the Catholicks, sent to another Stylite of the Sect of the Severians, for a share of his Communion-Bread, and that having thrown it into boiling Water, it was presently dissolved, but that having afterwards thrown a particle of the Eucharist of the Catholicks into it, the Water cooled, and the Eucharist remained entire, without moistening it. In the 30th he relates another (m) Miracle of the Eucharist, That a Severian having forced his Wife, a Catholick, to throw the Communion-Bread away, he did see it shining in the Mire; and that two Days after, he had seen an Ethiopian, saying to him, We are both condemned to the same Torment. In the 44th he says, That a Friar who had been negligent during his Life, was after his Death seen by an Old Man in a great Fire up to the Neck, and telling the Old Man, he was beholden to his Prayers for the favour he enjoyed, of not having his Head also in the Fire. In the 45th he says, A Recluse promised the Devil, he would (n) adore the Virgin's Image no more, to be delivered from his Temptation; and that he was reproved by his Elder for doing so. In the 47th he relates, That the Virgin having appeared twice to a Jester, uttering impious Speeches against her, and having warned him to do so no more, but to no purpose, she appeared to him the third time, and that having signed his Hands and Feet with the Sign of the Cross, he found himself, when he awoke, without Hands and Feet. In the 79th he observeth, It was the Custom in Constantinople, to keep the Eucharist they received on Holy Thursday, to the Holy Thursday of the next Year; and that a Catholick being Servant to a Severian, having left with his Master the Key of his Chest, where he had laid up the Eucharist in a Linnen-Cloth, the Master having designed to burn it, because his Servant did not come back, found that the Particles of the Eucharist had brought forth Ears of Corn. He relates in the 176th Chapter,

Joannes

[(m) Miracle of the Eucharist, &c.]

It is really very strange to meet with so many Miracles in this Age in the Writers of it, whereas in the three precedent Centuries we find little or no mention of any. Yea, S. Chrysostom says, Nos Miraculis nequaquam indigemus quæ nunc non habemus, &c. As we have no Miracles, so we want none. The Faith having been sufficiently confirmed by Christ and his Apostles, Miracles afterwards became useless, and therefore ceased. But when the Church began to preach Alterum Evangelium, another Gospel, and such Doctrines were imposed and taught, as neither Christ, nor his Apostles, had ever wrought any one Miracle in Confirmation of, it was thought the readiest way to gain Credit to the Imposture, either to feign or outwardly do some Miracles, which might extort Belief from the Vulgar. To this end did not only Men, but Devils conspire together, in working lying Wonders, to confirm the Adoration of Images, the Sacrament, Saints Relicks, and the like. Strange things were done through the Artifices of Satan, by the Martyrs Bones, stranger related by the Preachers in their Sermons, and by Historians in their Legends: Many wholly feigned, others in part, or in shew only acted, 'till Superstition and Idolatry at last was fully established, and by these Delusions are still upheld in the Church of Rome. Indeed, S. Austin says, That several Miracles were done in his time at the Martyrs Tombs, and by their Relicks; but as he something scrupled the Truth of them, so he was willing to let them pass as such, because the Faith was confirmed by them, and there appeared no other end of them, but to advance the same Worship that the Church professed. Had they been made a Foundation of Saint-Worship, as afterward they were, he would certainly have rejected them as forged, or wrought for a false End and Intention, as it is commanded.]

[(n) Adore the Virgins Image.] Among the Images of Saints which were admitted into the Church in this Age, and became Objects of Divine Worship, the Image of the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God, had a chief place. And tho' this Story were true, That the Devil did tempt a Monk to abjure the Worship of the Virgin's Image, which is really a Doctrine of Devils; yet the Artifice of Satan in this Temptation could be no other than this, to establish that Doctrine as Divine, which he had secretly first brought into Practice, by endeavouring openly to extort it from the more zealous Practicers of it; and so make his Diabolical Delusion pass for Sacred and Divine Truths.]

Joannes
Mofchus.

That a young Jew finding himself in great Extremity in a Defart, without Water, and having called for Baptifm on thofe that accompanied him, one of them Baptized him, by throwing Sand on his Head three times, and faying the uſual Words, Such an one is Baptized in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt: That preſently after, that Jew found himſelf better; that afterwards it was debated, Whether that Baptifm was good and valid? And that at laſt he was ſent to Jordan to be Baptized there, and he that Baptized him was Ordained Deacon. In the 196th he relates, That ſome Children of the Province of Apamea, would needs repreſent the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries, and that having choſen one of themſelves to perform the Office of a Prieſt, and two others of Deacons, they ſet ſome Bread upon a Stone, and that he that acted the Prieſt did pronounce the Words of Oblation, which he had gotten by Heart, becauſe it was the Cuſtom of his Church, that Children ſhould receive the Communion next after the Clerks, and being for that pretty near the Altar, they over-heard the Words of the Holy Sacrifice, which the Prieſts in ſome places uſed to utter aloud; that having thus performed all the Ceremonies, before they brake the Bread, to give the Communion, Fire came down from Heaven, which conſumed the Oblation, and the whole Stone whereon it was laid: That the Biſhop of the place hearing of it, built a Monaftery in that place, and made all thoſe Children Monks. To this Example, he adds that reported by Ruffinus, of the Baptifm adminiſtered by S. Athanaſius, who was then but a Child, to ſome other Children, and ſays, That S. Athanaſius believed, thoſe that receive Baptifm out of Fear, and without Faith, are nevertheleſs baptized, tho' Baptifm does them no good. In the 207th, there is mention made of two Angels, who ſtood Sureties for a Girl which had a mind to be baptized. In the 214th, it is obſerved, They baptized in the Eaſt on the Day of Epiphany, as well as on Eaſter-Day, and Whiſunday.

Such Things as theſe are in that Book, which may be of ſome uſe for the Church-Diſcipline. It is moreover full of an infinite Number of Relations, and miraculous ſtrange Stories, of Apparitions, Revelations, Viſions, and Miracles, wrought by thoſe Hermits, whether by foretelling Things to come, by diſcovering Mens Thoughts, healing the Sick, commanding Lions and wild Beaſts, or working extraordinary Feats. Death itſelf did not hinder them from working Miracles, from the Grave they did ſpeak to the Living, and wrought Miracles in their behalf. Among thoſe wonderful Stories, of little Credit for the moſt part, there be found inimitable Examples of Vertue, extraordinary Auſterities, exceſſive Faſts, wonderful Poverty, and ſuch a Simplicity, and Humility, as would ſometimes paſs for Sottiſhneſs; an immoderate Zeal againſt Hereticks, fierce Conflicts with Devils, and ſome witty and holy Anſwers. The Style of that Work is low and coarſe. It was tranſlated into Latin by Ambroſius Camaldulenſis, and printed in Greek in the Bibliotheca Patrum, 1624. Cotelerius published at laſt the Greek of ſome Chapters, which were before wanting, in his ſecond Volume of Eccleſiaſtical Monuments.

G E O R G I U S, Sir-named Pifides.

Georgius Piſides.
meron.]

Georgius, Deacon, and Library-Keeper of the Church of Conſtantinople, Sir-named Piſides, wrote a Book in Iambick Verſe, upon the Creation of the World, which the Ancients calls, * The Six Days Work. He writ alſo the Life of the Emperor Heraclius, the Persian War, a Panegyrick upon the Martyr Anaſtaſius; and another Work entituled Abarica, [or Avarica, being an Hiſtory of the Avarae].

We have the firſt Work of this Author, which is dedicated to Sergius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and another Poem of the Vanity of this Life, together with ſome Fragments taken out of Suidas. He is a better Poet than Divine.

This is probably the ſame Georgius, who made ſome Sermons in the praiſe of the Virgin, publiſhed by R. Combeſis, whereof ſome are upon the Virgin's Conception, and his Mother's; others upon the Virgin's Birth, her Preſentation in the Temple, her aſſiſting at the Croſs, and at the Sepulchre; they are full of Fables, (taken out of the Apocryphal Book of the Virgin's Birth, falſly fathered upon S. James), and of extraordinary Commendations of the Virgin, and her Parents. They are Declamations full of Deſcriptions, Exclamations, Rhetorical Figures, and Emphatical Terms; but void of Senſe and Reaſon, and ſuiter for Sport than Inſtruction. The laſt of theſe Sermons is upon S. Coſmus, and S. Damian.

EUGENIUS, Bishop of Toledo.

Eugenius having lived in Solitude, and in the Practice of the Monastical Life, near the City of Saragosa, was forced to be Bishop of Toledo, by Order from the Prince. Ildephonsus, who succeeded him in that See, tells us, he wrote a Book of the Trinity, and two little Books, whereof the one was in Verse of divers Measures, the other in Prose; that he had also Revised Dracontius's Work on the Creation of the World, and had made it a great deal better than it was, and had added to it the Work of the Seventh Day.

Eugenius,
Bishop of Toledo.

Sirmondus hath published Eugenius's Poems, containing several Pieces on different Subjects. The Style of them is not very polite, but the Fancies are very exact and judicious, and he is full of very Christian Sentiments. Cardinal Aguirre, in his Notitia of the Councils of Spain, promises a Letter of this Eugenius to Protasius, and a new Book of Epigrams, that has never been published.

He had a Predecessor named Eugenius, whom Ildephonsus ranks also among the Ecclesiastical Writers; but he speaks of none of his Works in particular; nay, he does not say he had written any: Wherefore we shall say nothing of his Life.

APOLLONIUS, Presbyter of Novara.

This Presbyter hath composed a Poem of the Destruction and Ruin of Jerusalem by Vespasian. His Expressions are Noble, his Terms Poetical, and his Verses have a very sweet Cadence. This Work is divided into four Books. He is one of the best Christian Poets we have. He makes no difficulty of calling upon the Muses, and to use the Names of profane Gods.

Apollonius.

JOHN IV.

This Pope did not enjoy the Roman See long; for he was raised to it in 640, and died in 641. Anastasius hath preserved, in his Collections, an Apology which he made for his Predecessor Honorius, in which he pretends, That the Pope was not in the Error of the Monothelites, who acknowledged but one Will in Jesus Christ; and that when he said, there was not two Wills in Christ, he understood it of two contrary Wills, or of the inferior and superior part; that is, of Concupiscence, which is contrary to the Rational Will; but he never meant, that there was but one Will only in Christ, consisting of the Divine and the Human Will united in one.

John IV.

We have yet two Letters of this Pope; the first is written to the Irish Abbots, in the Name of Hilarius, Arch-Priest of the Church of Rome, holding the See, during the vacancy, in the place of John, who was Elected, but not Consecrated yet; and of two other Officers of the Roman Church, the one having the Title of Secretary of State, the other of Counsellor. They reprove them for not keeping Easter at the same time with other Churches, and for retaining some Relicks of Pelagianism among them.

The second Letter is to Isaac of Syracuse. He declares therein, That Monks ought to be permitted to chuse, and put into the Churches given them, such Priests as they will, yet with this proviso, That if they do any thing against the Bishop, they shall be punished by the Synod.

T H E O D O R U S I.

Theodorus I. After John the Fourth's Death, Theodorus was chosen in his room, in November, the Year 641. He wrote two Letters, and a Memoir, against Pyrrhus, Patriarch of Constantinople, who had been depriv'd, and Paul put in his room. 'Tis to this last, Theodorus's first Letter is directed. He sends him word, That Pyrrhus ought to be condemned and deposed in a Synod, for commending Heraclius, and going about to make a new Profession of Faith. He tells him, That in case he could not get him condemned in his Country, he must only pray the Emperor to cause him to be brought to Rome, and that he will get him judg'd in a Council. The second Letter is directed to the Bishops who had ordain'd Paul. He finds fault with them for Ordaining him before they had deposed Pyrrhus, and for giving him the Title of Most Holy. He takes notice of the Reasons why he should be condemned: 1. Because he had condemned Heraclius. And, 2. Because he had made a new Profession of Faith, contrary to the Apostolick Doctrine, against the Prohibition of the Councils of Ephesus, and Chalcedon. In the Memoir, he exhorts the Eastern Bishops, to preserve the ancient Faith of the Church, and to reject the Novelties brought in by Pyrrhus, and his Confession of Faith.

M A R T I N I.

Martin I. Martin I. being ordain'd Bishop of Rome, in July 649, held, in October following, a Council of 105 Bishops, against the Monothelites; in which he condemned Sergius and Pyrrhus, who had been formerly Bishops of Constantinople, and Paul, then in possession of it. At that time the Emperor Constans sent the Exarch Olympius into Italy, with an Order to force the Bishops of Italy to receive the * Type published by him. Olympius found the Pope, and the Bishops, and the Clergy of Italy, in a very contrary Disposition, and was forc'd to enter into Agreement with Martin; but this Exarch being dead, a while after, in Sicily, where he had the Command of an Army against the Saracens, the Emperor sent Theodorus, Sir-named Calliopas; who caused Pope Martin to be taken away by force, in July 653. He remained a whole Year in the Isle of Naxos, and came not to Constantinople 'till towards the end of 654; from whence he was banish'd into Chersona, where he died in 656, in June.

[* An E-did put out by the Emperor Constans, at the desire of Paulus, Bishop of Constantinople, a Monothelite; whereby it was prohibited to dispute about the Operations and Wills of Christ.]

We have seventeen Letters of his. The first is a Circular Letter, to all Bishops, to let them know, he had condemned the Error of the Monothelites.

The second is directed to Amandus, Bishop of Utrecht, who had written to him, That he was so much grieved to see the Disorder of certain Clergy-men, who committed the Sin of the Flesh after their Ordination, that he had a mind to leave his Bishoprick, to live in Peace and Quietness. He dissuades him from that Design, and advises him to deal with those Sinners with all the Severity that the Canons allow; declaring, That all those that are fallen after their Ordination, shall remain suspended for ever, and be for ever disabled from performing any Sacerdotal Function: That they shall pass their whole Life in Penance, for the Expiation of their Fault: For, saith he, if we chuse Persons of innocent Life, to be promoted to Orders, with how much greater Reason should we hinder those who are fallen after their Ordination, from meddling with the holy Mysteries with defiled Hands, and polluted with Crimes? Let them therefore be deposed for ever, according to the Decrees of the Councils; to the end that the Searcher of Hearts, who will not suffer any of his Sheep to perish, seeing the sincerity of their Repentance, may forgive them at the Day of Judgment. Then he exhorts that Bishop to undergo any manner of Pains, Torments and Toil, for the Salvation of his Sheep, and the Service of God. Lastly, he gives him notice, That he hath condemned the Monothelites, in a General Council of his Brethren, and sends him the Acts themselves, to the end he may publish them, and cause them to be received in his Country. He prays him to perswade King Sigebert, to send some Bishops to the holy See, that they may carry home the Acts of that Council, and joyn with him in the Defence of the Faith.

The third is directed to the Emperor Constans, in the Name of the whole Synod. He acquaints him, That he hath condemned the Error of the Monothelites, in a Synod, of which he sends him the Acts.

The fourth is to the Bishop of Carrhage, and to all the Bishops of Africa. He approves the Confession of Faith they had sent him, and sends them the Acts of the Council.

In the fifth he makes John Bishop of Philadelphia, to whom he writes, his Vicar in all the East, giving him Power to make Bishops and Priests in the Churches of the Patriarchates of Jerusalem and Antioch, to receive those that will renounce their Error, and to confirm them in their Churches, provided there be no other Canonical Impediment: For, saith he, we ought ought to be the Defenders, and not the Betrayers of the Canons. Thus he will not have him to confirm them who have chosen themselves, nor those whose Election was not Canonical. He mentions particularly the Election of Macedonius Bishop of Antioch, who was made Bishop in a strange Country, without the Consent of the People, and without a Decree of Election, as well as that of Peter Bishop of Alexandria. He will have them that shall be admitted, not only to abjure the Error of the Monothelites, but moreover to condemn Theodorus, Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul, and all of the same Opinion with them ; to reject the Type, and to make a clear Profession, That they believe two Wills in Christ. He appoints two Bishops, named Theodorus and Antony, with an Abbot to help him in that Function ; to them he directs the three next Letters, to exhort them to joyn themselves with that Bishop, for the Defence of the Faith. In the last he speaks of Stephen, an Eastern Bishop, whom he had also made his Vicar. He explains that Matter in the next Letter, directed to Pantaleo, in which he complains, That they had accused that Bishop, and bindred him from receiving the Letter which he had sent him, to Ordain Priests and Bishops. He repeats also here, That those Bishops ought not to be confirm'd, who have been elected in another Town than that whereof they are Priests or Bishops, and without the Consent of the Bishop, or the Metropolitan : Thus he declares void all the Ordinations made in Sophronius's Patriarchate, which had not been done by his Authority.

In the tenth he recommends his Vicar to a great Lord, named Peter.

In the eleventh, to the Church of Jerusalem, he acquaints them with the Condemnation of the Error of the Monothelites, and declares void the Ordinations of Macedonius, Patriarch of Antioch, and Peter Bishop of Alexandria.

In the twelfth he declares to Paul of Thessalonica, That he hath excommunicated and deposed him for his Errors.

In the thirteenth he acquaints the Church of Thessalonica with Paul's Condemnation, and exhorts them to avoid his Hereſie.

In the fourteenth to Theodorus, he relates what pass'd, when he was violently taken away from Rome. He says, That he coming out of the Constantinian Church, encompassed with Guards, they said in the presence of the Exarch : Anathema to him that believes, that Martin did change, or will change the least Word in the Faith : Anathema to them that shall not persevere in the Orthodox Faith unto Death. That Calliopas hearing this, said, He had no other Faith ; that he answered him, He would defend that Faith unto Death ; and as for the other things charged on him, he was altogether innocent of them ; that he had never writ to the Saracens ; that he sent them no Money neither, only that he had given some Alms to some Servants of God coming to Rome ; that it was false that he had utter'd any thing against the Respect due to the Virgin, and that he pronounced Anathema to whosoever did not reverence and adore her. These are the Terms used by him, Non honorat atque adorat : But the Term of Adoring is not to be taken strictly ; for in the next Letter they make Calliopas say, He was come to adore the Pope ; that is, to pay his Respects to him.

He relates yet the same Story more at large in the fifteenth Letter, directed to the same Theodorus ; where he says, That foreseeing what was to come, he had withdrawn himself, and all his Clergy into the Constantinian Church, thus named, because it was the first that Constantine had built, near the Bishop's Palace ; that he was there the Saturday, 13th of June, in the Year 653, when Calliopas came to Rome with an Army ; that he sent some of his Clergy to meet him ; that Calliopas told them, That he was come to adore the Pope ; that is, to pay him his Respects ; that, notwithstanding, the next Day, being Sunday, he sent Word, That he was too much tired to come to him ; that on Monday he sent Word to the Pope, by his Secretary, He ought not to call Men together, nor prepare Arms and Stones to defend himself ; that Martin shewed to them he had sent, that that was false ; that he lay sick ever since October, and had set his Bed before the Altar ; that about Noon a multitude of armed Men entred into the Church with a great deal of Tumult, and that they broke, at their entring, all the (a) Tapers in the Church. Then Calliopas shewed an Order from the Emperor, declaring, That Martin was to be turned out of the Holy See, and to be sent to Constantinople, and another Bishop be put in his room. Which, says he, was never done ; for in the Bishop of Rome's Absence, the Arch-Deacon, the Arch-Priest, and the principal Secretary, do occupy his place. Martin, unwilling that any Body should be kill'd for him, yielded himself presently to them, and begg'd only some of his Clerks to accompany him. Calliopas finding no Resistance, bad

At first they were indeed lighted only at the keeping of their Vigils, to which not Religion, but Necessity obliged them ; but afterward, in Jerom's time, they were lighted up upon the Tombs of the Martyrs, in Honour to them, and in the Eastern Church, were always lighted up at the Reading of the Gospel, and in some places at the Interpreting of it, and that at Noon-Day. At last it was imposed by Gregory the Great, and confirmed by Sabinian, Anno 606. Many of the Fathers inveighed fiercely against this Custom, in the Messalians, or Euchita, Cur diem Lucernis infringimus, says Tertullian, Quis Lucernas vanas proferre compellit ? And so Lactantius, Num mentis compos putandus est, qui datori luminis Candelarum lumen offert pro munere ? But Superstition prevailing in the Church brought in this with other Ceremonies ; which, if the most noxious, had been more tolerable.]

Martin

Martin I.

Martin come along with them to his Palace, which he obey'd; all his Clergy came to him the next Day, and many were ready to go along with him; but that same Night, he was violently carried away, without suffering any Body to accompany him, but six Men Servants, and a Cook: From thence he was carried away to the Isle of Naxos, where he staid one Year at the end of which he was brought to Constantinople. This is the Abridgment of what is contained in that Letter.

The Particulars of his Usage in Constantinople, are related in a Letter, or Memoir, written under the Name of a good Christian to the Bishops of the West. He says, That Martin being come up to that Haven, nigh the Church of S. Euphemia, the 17th of December, he was left all the Day long in the Ship; that towards the Evening they took him into a Boat, and carried him to the Prison of the Court of Guard; wherein he was shut up Fourscore and thirteen Days, no Body being suffered to speak to him: That after that space of time, he was brought into the Council-Chamber of the Emperor, where the Accusers, and Witnesses, prepared against him, were ordered to appear; they were Soldiers, or armed Men, who accused him of conspiring with Olympius. Martin refused, and excepted against the Witnesses they brought against him; and maintained, he was more innocent by far than those Witnesses themselves, and all the rest that sided with Olympius; that he came to Rome in quality of Exarch, that he had the Authority and Power in his Hands, and that they were forced to obey him. After this Tumultuary Information, they carried him to a Terraſs, where they stripped him, and loaded him with Chains, dragged him thro' the Town, and put him into the Prison of the Pretorium, loaden with the Burden of his Chains, and brought to the last Extremity. The next Day, the Emperor coming to visit Paul of Constantinople, who was ready to die, and acquainting him with what was done, that Bishop touched with a Remorse of Conscience, fetch'd a deep Sigh, and turning him aside, said: Alas! 'tis to add to the Account I am to give to God. The Emperor asking him, why he said so? Is it not great pity, answered he, Bishops should be thus abused? And he earnestly besought the Emperor, to suffer it no longer. After Paul's Death, Pyrrhus sought to be restored; but many oppos'd it, because of the Retraction he had made at Rome. They sent to Pope Martin, to ask him about the Passages of that Affair: He answered, That Pyrrhus came voluntarily to Rome; that his Predecessor Theodorus made him welcome; that he was entertained at the Cost of the Roman Church; the Custom whereof was, to find with Victuals all the Strangers who fled thither. They would have forced him to say, That Pyrrhus had signed his Retraction by force; but he declared, he would always speak the Truth. After having staid 85 Days in that Prison, they fetch'd him out of it, to banish him to Chersona, where he died the 16th of September, in the Year 656, having suffered much. He wrote two Letters from that place of his Exile, which are the two last, in which he represents his Wants, and the Poverty he suffered in that Country. He prays his Friends to send him some Relief from Rome: For, saith he, if S. Peter feed so many Pilgrims at Rome, it is very meet he should assist us, who are his Ministers, and suffer so much for the Truth and Religion.

This Pope's Constancy and Firmness appears in his Letters. They are well written, with Strength and Wisdom; the Style of them is Great and Noble, and worthy of the Majesty of the Holy See. The third, and the ten next, are found in Greek and Latin; either he wrote them himself in those two Languages, or they have been translated by some Body of that time.

S. MAXIMUS.

S. Maximus.

Maximus, descended of a Noble Family of Constantinople, having been a while chief Secretary of State to the Emperor Heracius, withdrew himself into the Monastery of Chrysopolis, of which he was Abbot. The fear of the Barbarians Incurſions, and the Errors spreading at Constantinople, forced him to fly into Africa, after Heracius's Death, in the Year 641, of the vulgar Era. There he stoutly oppos'd the Error of the Monothelites, and prevail'd with the Africans, to joyn themselves with John Bishop of Rome, to condemn their Opinions. It fell out, that Pyrrhus Patriarch of Constantinople, and Head of that Party, who was banished out of Constantinople, because he was accus'd of having poison'd the Emperor Constantine, fled into Africa, where he met with Maximus, with whom he fell into Discourse, and yielded, or feigned to yield to his Reasons; and hoping to be restored by the Pope's help, he resolv'd to go to Rome with Maximus. Being arriv'd there, he presented an Orthodox Confession of Faith to Pope Theodorus. But hearing afterwards from the Exarch of Ravenna, that the Court was of the Party of the Monothelites, and that he could not be restored, unless he alter'd his Mind, he retract'd his Opinions, and embraced again his first Teners; which forced Pope Theodorus to condemn him in a Council, in which his Condemnation was signed with Ink, mixed with some of our Lord's Blood.

Maximus

Maximus was the Man that did thus stir up the Romans against the Monothelites, and there is no doubt but he had a good share in the Council Pope Martin held at Rome against them; and therefore the Emperor Constantine's Anger did equally break out against him, and Pope Martin. They were brought to Constantinople: Maximus appeared often before the Judges, and was condemned to Banishment in the year 655. He was sent into a small Town of Thrace, named Byzias, whither Theodorus, Bishop of Casarea, went to see him, to oblige him to yield to their Opinion; but when he could not prevail with him, they brought him back to Constantinople; and by a strange Cruelty, after he had suffered much, they cut off the Hand and Tongue of him, and his Disciple Anastasius; then he was sent into Prison in a Castle, called Schemre, where he died, August 13. 662.

This Father wrote a great many Works. Some of them have been published in divers Collections; but Combes hath published a good number of them in Greek and Latin in two Volumes, printed at Paris, 1675. At the beginning of these two Volumes is found S. Maximus's Life, written by a Greek, younger than he, but pretty well acquainted with the Affairs of his time, and the Authentick Acts of this holy Man's Persecutions.

The first part of those Acts contains the verbal Process of what pass'd at Constantinople in the Emperor's Council, when Maximus was brought thither from Italy. In the first Interrogatory we find the Depositions of Witnesses accusing him of injurious Speeches to the Emperors. He defends himself against them, and maintains against the 4th. Witness, that he was in the right, when he said, That the Emperors, tho' Christians, were not Prelates. 'For, saith he, he who does not offer upon the Altars, does not Baptize, does not give the sacred Unction, does not lay on Hands, does not create Bishops, Priests and Deacons, does not consecrate Altars, does not wear the Sacramental Marks nor Habits, cannot be called a Prelate among Christians; therefore, in the Oblation at the Altar, the Emperor is named after the Bishops, the Priests, the Deacons, and the Clerks, in the rank of the Laity. Then they brought in his Disciple, who was accused of being an Origenist; but he purged himself from that Charge, by saying, Anathema to Origen. The same day, towards Evening, two of the Emperor's Officers, examined Maximus about the Conference he had with Pyrrhus in Africa. He related to them what was said in that Conference, and declared to them, he would not communicate with the Church of Constantinople, nor receive the * Eucharist nor the Type; and tho' they urged him to communicate [* A Confession with the Bishop of Constantinople, he said, he would not. He was brought again the Saturday session following to the Palace of Constantinople, and declared a new, that he did Anathematize the Faith of the Type, and would not communicate with the Church of Constantinople that received it. He said in that Interrogatory, he was 75 years old, and his Disciple 37. Next after these first Acts, there betwixt Letters, the one Greek and Latin, written by Maximus to his Disciple; the other Latin, which is Anastasius's to the Monks of Cagliari. S. Maximus relates, in the first, that they would have forced him to say, That there are two operations in Christ, but that they make but one, because of the Union, which he would not do. In the second, Anastasius does also reject that Opinion, and protests against the Violence used against them. The second part of the Acts contains the Conference which Theodosius, Bishop of Casarea, had with Maximus at Byzias, in the Presence of the Emperor's Commissioners; in which Maximus declares to him that he could not communicate with the Church of Constantinople, in regard, she received the Novelties of the Monothelites; Theodosius promised him, That, if he would communicate with the Bishop of Constantinople, they would reject the Type. He maintained, That that was not enough, and that they ought first to receive the Condemnation made by the Synod of Rome, held under Martin. Theodosius reply'd, That that Council was not valid, as having been assembled without the Emperor's Order. Maximus answered, There were many Synods assembled by the Emperors Orders, which he did not receive; as those held by Constantius against the Faith of the Nicene Council, and that they did receive that which had deposed Paulus Samosatenus, notwithstanding it was held without the Emperor's Order; that it was ordered by the Nicene Council, That every year, two Councils should be held in the Provinces, without speaking of the Emperors Orders; and lastly, That which moved them to approve and receive Councils, was the Truth of the Doctrine they established. This brought the Dispute to the Doctrine of the one Operation only. Theodosius undertook to prove it by supposititious Passages of Pope Julius, of S. Athanasius, and of Gregory Thaumaturgus; but Maximus having answered him, they were Apollinarian's; he produced two more, under S. Chrysostom's name, which Maximus maintained to be Nestorian's, and proved it immediately. Then he explain'd a Passage of S. Cyril, after which it came again to be disputed whether they should say, One or Two Operations; and at last Theodosius said, he was ready to sign, That there were Two Natures, Two Wills, and Two Operations in Christ. Maximus reply'd, It did not belong to him, who was but a Monk, to exact Professions of Faith from Bishops; but that, if they were really of that Mind, they might write about it to the Bishop of Rome; and that though they were agreed in the Doctrine, he could not communicate with them, till they had blotted out of * the Sacred Tables, which they recited at the Altar, the Names of those who had been anathematized in the Council of Rome; notwithstanding that he did advise them, That the Emperor should send an Address to the Bishop of Rome, and the Patriarch a Synodical Decree, agreeable to the Orthodox Doctrine, Theodosius promised him, that it should be done; yea, and engaged gaged him, in case he were sent thither, to go along with him. Being agreed about that, they went to Prayers, and (p) kissed the holy Gospel, the Cross, and the Virgin's Image and touched them, to confirm their mutual Promises. After that having discoursed about some Points of Morality, Theodosius ask'd Maximus, whether they could not say, in a good Sense, That there was but one only Will in Christ, by reason of the Union of the two Wills? Maximus affirmed, That they could not. Theodosius, and they that were present, seem'd to approve his Sentiment, and the Reasons he gave for it. Having parted good Friends in appearance, the Emperor Constantine sent an Order to the Proconsul, Paul, to remove the Abbot Maximus from Byzias, and to bring him to the Monastery of S. Theodorus, near Rhégium. The next day Theodosius came to him; accompanied with two Noblemen, Epiphanius and Troilus. This last asked him, whether he would do what the Emperor should command him? He answered, he would obey his Orders, in all things concerning secular Affairs; but when they told him, it was the Emperor's Will, That he should approve the Type, and if he did do it, they would lead him to the great Church of Constantinople, and receive the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ with him, and own him for their Father. He complain'd to Theodosius, That they did not make good what they had promised. Theodosius answering, That the Emperor was against it; Maximus declared, That the very invisible Powers could not force him to do what they required of him. This Answer provoked the fury of the Company against him, so that they abused him. But at last Theodosius having appeas'd the Tumult, Epiphanius asked Maximus, why he dealt with his Prince and Church as Hereticks, seeing, they owned two Wills, and two Operations in Christ? Maximus reply'd, That, if it was so, they should not urge him to sign the Type. Epiphanius answered, That that was done by a kind of Condescension. Maximus maintain'd stoutly, That they ought to declare aloud and firmly, the Orthodox Faith. Epiphanius asked him, whether he had subscribed a Profession of Faith against them? He said, he had. Hereupon Epiphanius threatned him, which he did not seem to matter much. The next day the Consul Theodosius deliver'd him into the Hands of the Soldiers, which brought him to Salembria, and then to Perbera, till at last he was condemn'd to have his Tongue cut out. Combesis hath added to these Acts, some pieces collected by Anastasius, relating to the Life and Actions of S. Maximus. An Inveective made by a certain Monk against the Cruelty us'd against him, and some Extracts of S. Maximus's Offices, taken out of the Books of the Greek Church.

[(p) Kissing the Gospels, Cross—to confirm their mutual Promises.] These Ceremonies are also the product of the superstitious Worship which was established in this Age. For the Christians in the purer Ages confirmed their Oaths and Promises, by kissing the Gospels, testifying not only their belief of them, but their fear of falsifying their Words, least they offended the God therein revealed, and incurred the Punishments threatned to falsehood and Perjury. But when the Christians did as it were desile the Martyrs, Cross and Images, they used the same Ceremony towards the Cross, as having an equal Fear and Reverence for that as for God himself and his Holy Gospel.]

The first of S. Maximus's Works is entituled, Questions upon the Holy Scripture dedicated to Thalassius Presbyter and Abbot. He shews, in the Preface of his Work, That Evil is not an Entity, nor a real Quality, but a defect of the Creature, whereby it swerveth from its ultimate end, that is, from God; from whence he concludes, That all Evil comes from the want of the Knowledge and Love of God, because the only means of Salvation, is to know him, to love and serve him, renouncing the love of the Creatures, the Passions, the Lusts, and the vain Pleasures of this World. This Work contains Answers to 65 Questions. The 1st, is about the nature and use of Passions; the rest about some places of the Scripture. We must not look there for literal Explications of the difficulties that might occur about those places of the Scripture; they are allegorical Explications and mystical Observations upon places of the Scripture, or Questions of Divinity, which he takes an occasion to handle from those places. He made himself some Scholies or Glosses upon his own Work, where he explains some Terms us'd, and establisheth or clears some Rules and Principles propounded by himself.

Phoebus did rightly observe, That this Work is very obscure and tedious to read; That he does so often wander from the Letter and the History, that one cannot keep pace with him; and those only who love Allegories and mystical Speculations, do relish him, and take pleasure in the reading of him.

The 79 Answers to some other Questions, are shorter, and less obscure than the former, but they are not less stuffed with Explications not at all pertinent to the Letter of the Scripture, and with mystical and moral Thoughts.

He follows the same Method in the Exposition of the 59th Psalm, as well as in that of the Lord's Prayer, where he loseth himself in his Mystical Speculations.

The Alerick Discourse is more plain, 'tis a Dialogue between a Monk and an Abbot, in which the Abbot does instruct the simple Monk in the principal Rules of a Spiritual Life. He shews him, That the Love of God, and the Renouncing of the Creatures, are the Foundation of it; That the Love of our Neighbour is the effect of the Love of God; That Jesus Christ gave us a perfect Example of that Love; That we ought continually to fight against the Temptations of the Flesh and the Devil, mortifie our Passions, resist the Motions of Lust, reject Idle or Impure Thoughts, be constant in Prayer, have always the Fear of God before our Eyes. He complains, That the greatest part of Monks lived disorderly, and that their seeming Vertue was but Hypocritie. He maketh an excellent Prayer to God for their Conversion. And adds, We ought to trust in his Goodness and Mercy, hoping for Salvation from him, which we cannot obtain by our selves. Photius speaking of this Work, says, It is useful for all Men, and chiefly for them that lead an Ascetic Life, because there he lays down the means how to become a Citizen of Heaven, by teaching Charitableness, and works of Piety. It must also be confessed, that this Treatise is of the Ascetic Books the most useful, not only for Monks, but all Christians likewise, because it does very well explain the Principles and Fundamentals of the Spiritual Life.

Maximus added to this Work 400 Spiritual Maxims, which he intituled, Of Charity, because there is many of them about Charity towards God and our Neighbour, in which that Holy Man places the whole Spiritual Life, as being perswaded, all other Virtues and Duties are but Branches and Parts of it. There be sundry of those Maxims containing Precepts and Rules touching the Actions of Life, and those are the most useful; but some of the other contain nothing but Spiritual and Mystical Thoughts. Photius takes notice, that the Style of these Two Works is clearer and more elaborate than any of the rest, and that they cannot be found fault with, unless it be because he did not always make use of the purest terms.

The Two Hundred Theological and Oeconomical Maxims, contain not only Principles of Divinity, but also Maxims of Morality, and they would deserve, says Photius, to be compared with the Four Hundred Maxims above mentioned, if the great number of Allegories that they are filled with, did not render them more like the Questions to Thalassius. To these Chapters is annexed a Writing to Theopemptus, upon Three Texts of the Gospel, entirely agreeing with the Answers to Thalassius.

Lastly, That Volume ends with 243 Moral Maxims, taken out of a Manuscript of the Vatican, where they are found under Maximus's Name, they are indeed like enough to the 400 Moral Maxims for Style and Matter.

The fragment drawn out of a Book, intituled, A Resolution of Sixty Three Doubts, Dedicated to the King of Achrida, now L' Ochrida, by S. Maximus, seems doubtful, because in Maximus's time there was no King at Achrida, which maketh it credible, 'tis the Work of some later Grecian, who wrote that Work when there were Kings in Bulgaria.

The Second Volume of S. Maximus's Works comprehends his Theological and Polemical Tracts, with his Letters. The Twenty Five first Tracts are divers Writings, or Answers, all tending to the same end, to shew that there be Two perfect Natures, Two Wills, and Two Operations, in Jesus Christ; in them he handles that matter Scholastically and Acutely. Among those Tracts there is one, in which he defends that which he had said, That the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son.

The Conference with Pyrrhus is clearer, less cumber'd with Scholastical Terms and Reasonings. Therein he relates what was said between them on both sides. The issue was, That Pyrrhus perswaded by his Reasons, that we ought to acknowledge Two Wills, and Two Operations in Christ, went to Rome with him and retracted his Error.

The Treatise of the Soul is upon another Subject. Therein he Treats of many Questions touching the nature of the Soul; he asserts it to be a Spiritual Substance, distinct from the Body, simple, immortal, and intelligent. These points are handled there in a very dry manner, as a Logician rather than Divine.

Maximus's Letters are upon divers Subjects. The Five first are upon Moral Points. Therein he does chiefly recommend the Love of God, and of our Neighbour, tho' renouncing Secular Desires, Alms-giving, Retiredness, and Repentance.

In the 6th he shews the Soul to be Spiritual; And the 7th, That after Death it keeps its Intellectual and other Faculties.

The Three next contain some Allegorical and Moral Observations.

In the 11th. He Exhorts a Superior to deal Charitably with a Nun, which having left the Nunnery, had returned thither to do Penance.

The 12th, Is a Writing against Severus, in which he Establisheth the distinction of the Two Natures in Christ. He complains in the beginning, that the Emperors had written some Letters into Africa favouring the Severians. He enquireth into the bottom of the Question of the Two Natures in this Writing. He explains a passage in S. Cyril, and refutes Severus's Error, That the Two Natures became one in Christ. The same Subject is also handled in the next Writing directed to a Lord, named Peter.

The 14th, Letter, which is the 41st. piece of this Volume, is also on the Mystery of the Incarnation; but in the end of it he speaks of the Incurfions of the Arabians, which spoiled the Frontiers of the Empire.

The 15th, is a Scholastical Tract of the Union and Distinction of the Two Natures in Christ, directed to Conon, a Deacon of Alexandria. To it is joined a Letter directed to the same Deacon, to exhort him to stand up in the defence of the Truth, without being dismayed at the sufferings attending the defence of it.

The 17th, is directed to Julian. It is also about the distinction of the Two Natures.

The 18th. is written in the Name of George, a Noble-Man of Africa, to some Nuns of Alexandria, engaged in the Error of the Monothelites, to dissuade them from it.

The 19th. is written to Pyrrhus, before he was Patriarch, and had declared himself openly against the Church. Maximus asks him, how his saying is to be understood, that there was but one Virtue or Operation in Christ.

The following Letters, to divers private Persons, are shorter than the former, and contain nothing but some Moral or Mytical Discourses.

The Five Dialogues upon the Trinity, which were Published under Athanasius's Name, are here restored to S. Maximus, upon the Authority of the Greek Manuscripts and Authors, which have Quoted them under this Father's Name. We have shewed already, that Combesis was in the right, to put them under Maximus's Name, and that they are none of Theodore's, as F. Garner pretended. After so many Writings of the Ancients upon the Trinity, there is no need to make an Extract of this, where that Mystery is handled after Maximus's Genius Scholastically, and in the form of a Conference.

[* Or an Exposition of the Publick Liturgy of the Church.]

Maximus's * Mystagogy, an Considerations of the Church-Ceremonies. He says there, That the Church is the Figure and Image of God, the World, Man, and the Soul. That the Intritus of the Mass, is a representation of Christ's entrance into our Souls. That the Lotions figure the Faith of Christians. That the Songs are signs of the Spiritual Joy, That the Gospel figures the Consummation of the World, and the Perfection of Christians. That when the Bishop descends from his Chair, he represents Christ descending from Heaven in the Day of Judgment. That the going out of Catechumens teaches us, that those that have not Faith shall be rejected. That the Doors shut, the Kiss of Peace, the saying of the Creed, are the figures of the perfect Union of Christians. That the Trisagion and the Santus are Types of our future Glory, and present Adoption. This whole Book is full of such Allegories.

Lastly, The last of Maximus's his Works is a Collection of sundry passages of Ecclesiastical and Prophane Authors, set down under different Titles, concerning Virtues, Vices, Women's Duties, Moral Precepts, and Maxims.

We have moreover a Comment, or Scholia of Maximus's upon the Books ascribed to the Areopagite, which is Printed with Dionysius's Works. He writ also some Scholia upon S. Gregory Nazianzen, which were Printed at Oxford in 1681. Petavius hath Published a Kalender for Easter, ending in the Year 641, ascribed to Maximus.

Photius saith, This Author hath extraordinary well turned Periods, but that he often useth Hyperboles and Transpositions, and is not careful at all to speak properly, which renders his Writings obscure and difficult; That he affecteth a kind of harshness of swelling Style, which renders his Discourse unpleasing and ungrateful to the Ear; That in his Rhetorical Figures, he does not make choice of that which is neat and handsome; That he tires out his Reader with his Allegorical and Mytical Explications, so far distant from the Letter, and the truth of History, that one cannot see any coherence between his Answer and the Question; That yet he excels in the Allegorical and Mytical way; and that they who take delight in it, can meet with nothing more accomplished. That his very Letters are not without obliquity, which is the only Epistoler Character he hath kept to. That he is plainer and clearer in his Treatise of Charity, and in his Maxims merely Moral; Lastly, That the Conferences with Pyrrhus is of a Style somewhat low, and that he hath not kept the Laws of Logic.

One may add to this Judgment of Photius, That Maximus handles matters after a meer Scholastical manner; That he Speaks and Reasons as a Logician; That he gives his Definition, Terms and Arguments in form; That he maketh use of great big Words, signifying no more than what might be expressed in other terms; That he is acute and close, striketh his Adversaries home, and stands firm to his own Principles; That he was very quick of Apprehension, of Reasoning and Disputing, very free of Speech, Stiff and Firm. He was of the Opinion of the Latins about the procession of the Holy Ghost, Original Sin, Christ's Grace, and the Celibacy of Bishops, and the Greatness and Power of the Roman Church. He had the Monastick life in high esteem, and was much given to Mytical Thoughts. In a word, He was a Scholastical, Mytical, and Speculative Man.

ANASTASIUS, Disciple of Maximus.

[Anastasi.]

ANASTASIUS, Disciple of Maximus, who suffered so much with him for the same cause, wrote a Letter to the Monks of Cagliari against the Monothelites, wherein he refutes those that said, That in Christ there was One and Two Wills, from whence he concluded that they admitted Three. It is in the Collections of Anastasius Bibliothecarius, [Published by Sirmondus at Paris 1620,] and among Maximus's Works. He Died in Exile at Lazica.

ANASTASIUS, Apocrisiarius of Rome.

THIS * Aprocrisiarius of Rome suffered also the same Persecutions for the same cause. He wrote a Letter to Theodosius, Presbyter of Gangra, upon S. Maximus's Death. There he Quotes some fragments of the Writings of Hippolytus Bishop of Porto. It is in Anastasius's Collections, and among Maximus's Works.

THEODORUS.

THEODORUS, Presbyter and Abbot of Raithu, to whom Maximus directed his Treatise of the Essence, and Nature, wrote a Tract upon the Incarnation. There he sets down at first the Errors of Manes, Paulus Samosatenus, Apollinarius, Theodorus of Mopsuestia, Nestorius, and Eutyches, about that Mystery. Then he Expounds the Faith of the Church, opposite to those Errors. He shews, How they have been revived by Julian of Halicarnassus, and Severus, to whom he opposed the Fathers Testimonies, but we have not now this last part. This Work was Published in Greek and Latin by Beza, and Printed at Geneva in 1576, [Quarto.] Since that time it was inserted with Turrianus's Version in the First Volume of the Auctuarium Biblioth. Patrum. [Tom. I. p. 319]

DONATUS.

Donatus.

DONATUS, the Son of Valdeleuus, Duke of the Country between Mount S. Claude and the Alpes, was brought up in a Religious Life by Columbanus, and was afterwards made Bishop of Besancon, towards the Year 630. where he founded two Monasteries, the one for Men, the other for Virgins. He made Rules for both.

That which he made for Monks is in the second part of S. Benedict of Aniana's Rules, and is entituled, Capitula, to serve instead of Advertisements to the Priars of S. Paul and S. Stephen; that is, to the Monks of the Monastery of S. Paul (for the Monastery founded by him, at Besancon, was called so) and to the Canons Regular of the Cathedral Church, which had S. Stephen for its Patron. This Rule contains nothing in it but some particular Advices.

The other Rules of Donatus, for the Monastery of Nuns founded by his Mother Flavia, is larger, well-penned, and contains very wise Constitutions, taken out of the Rules of S. Casarius, S. Columbanus and S. Benedict. It is found in the third Part of the Rules of Benedict of Aniana, that Bishop was present at the Council of Challon, upon the River Saone, in the Year 650.

VITALIANUS.

Vitalianus.

VITALIANUS was chosen Bishop of Rome, August 29th. 656. and governed that Church fourteen Years and six Months. He hath left us some Letters.

The 1st. is directed to the Archbishop of Crete, upon the Bishop of Lappa's Complaint against the Judgment which that Bishop had given against him. Vitalianus saith, He hath examined that Matter in a Council, where the Acts of that Process were exhibited, and that the Bishops acknowledged the Cause had been illegally managed, and that the Bishop of Lappa had been wrongfully condemned: That they were greatly troubled that he had put that Bishop into Prison and bindred him from coming to Rome, to clear himself: Therefore he declareth null and void all the Proceedings of the Council of the Arch-bishop of Crete against John Bishop of Lappa: And at the same Time pronounceth that Bishop to be innocent, and, as such, absolveth him. In the 2d. he intreats Vaanus, the Emperor's Officer, to procure that Bishop's Restauration. In the 3d. he orders Paul, Arch-bishop of Crete, to cause his Churches to be given him again. He complains, That a Deacon had married a Wife, since the Time of his being in Orders; and that he did minister in two Churches: He prays him to put a stop to that Disorder, and to follow no longer Eulampius's Counsel, he being a wicked Man, sowing Divisions among them for his own Profit. In the 4th. Letter he desires George, Bishop of Syracuse, to be favourable to John of Lappa, and to endeavour his re-establishment.

The 5th. Letter, alledged by Bede, is directed to the King of Northumberland in England. He commends his Zeal, and answers him about the Time of keeping Easter. He promises him to send him a Bishop, when he had met with one fit for it, and willing to go over into England. He thanks him for his Prayers, and sends him some Relicks.

The 6th. is directed to the Benedictine Monks of Sicily: He acquaints them how grievous it is to him, that their Monasteries and Estates have been spoiled by the Incursions of the Barbarians. He tells them, He sends them some Monks of the Congregation of Mount-cassin, and exhorts them to obey them, and to labour with them for the resetting of their Monasteries and Lands.

S. ELIGIUS.

S. ELIGIUS.

S. ELIGIUS, born near the City of Limoges, a Goldsmith, and Friend of King Dagobert, was ordained Bishop of * Noyon in 646, and died in 663. S. Owen, who wrote his Life, tells us, he made Exhortations to his People every Day, with unwearied Labor; that his Sermons were very short, but they contained important Instructions and wholesome Advices: That Author collected them into one Discourse, containing the most usual Instructions, which Eligius gave to his People: They are for the most part drawn out of S. Casarius's Sermons, which Bishops did then make use of to preach to their People. This Discourse was printed among S. Augustin's Works, and now is in the end of the sixth Volume: 'Tis an Abridgment of the principal Duties of a Christian. In the first place he shews the Obligation laid upon Pastors, to instruct their People. He exhorts them to remember often their baptismal Vows, and to meditate on the last Judgment. He shews them, that it is not enough to bear the Name of a Christian, but that we ought to act and live suitable to it. He endeavours to create in them an Abhorrence of profane Superstitions, and the Relicks of Idolatry. Then he gives them sundry wholesome Advices to honour God, to love Enemies, to give Alms, to frequent Divine Service, and Sunday-Sermons, to (g) cross themselves often with the sign of the Cross, to give to the Church the Tenth of their Gain or Possessions, to avoid (r) Mortal Sins, to watch over their Actions and Words, to despise the World, to repent continually, and never to despair of Salvation, &c. It is observed in this Treatise, that every Christian hath a good Angel to assist him; and when he sins he drives away his good Angel to take a Devil.

ven to the Christians, than to cross themselves often with the Sign of the Cross, that they might thereby be shielded and defended from all Evils, and sanctified throughout, though the Effect proved it to be but an idle Conceit.

[(r) Mortal Sins.] i. e. More heinous and notorious Guilt; for tho' no Sin be so venial and trivial, as the Romanists teach with one Consent, as neither to offend God nor deserve Damnation in its own Nature, and so only subject them to temporal Punishments; yet all Protestants disallow a Stoical Parity, and equality of Sins, and hold that some are greater, others less, some unto, others not unto Death: And though every the least Sin be offensive to God, and deserving Damnation in its own Nature, yet they say, some are mortal, others venial. 1. Comparitively, and by God's Favour, as the Sins of the Elect, being committed with Reluctancy, and, without consent, are more pardonable than the Sins of wilful Offenders. 2. Because some Sins exclude not Grace the root of Remission and Pardon out of the Soul, but others cannot stand with Grace, and so leave the Persons in a state of Wrath and Damnation who are guilty of them.]

There are Sixteen Homilies more, bearing Eligius's Name; but it is doubted whether they be really his, because they are made up of Passages and Quorations of the Fathers, as of S. Augustin, S. Leo, S. Ambrose, Casarius of Arles, and S. Gregory. These Fathers are likewise cited there, under the Name of Saints and Blessed; S. Benedict is there called most Blessed and most Holy Father: They say that these Citations are affected; they added, That there be even some Passages of Authors, who wrote since Eligius's Time, as of S. Isidore of Sevil, of Alcuin, of Haimo, of Halberstat: From whence they conclude, That these Sermons are the Work of an Author of the Ninth Century: Yet methinks he that composed them first was older than that Time, and many things may easily have been added to them since.

However, there are yet found in them some remainders of the Ancient Discipline, not to be slighted. This is an Extract of them.

In the First Sermon, for Christmasday, he shews the Happiness of the Peace, which Christ brought to the Earth, and exhorts his Hearers in the end to Almsgiving. He relates the Story of a Gardner, who being used to bestow what he earned upon the Poor, was tempted to keep back part of it, in case he should fall sick; that having thus gathered many Crown-pieces, he got a running Sore in his Foot which fell into a Gangreen, so that the Surgeon appointed a Day to cut off his Leg, seeing there was no other Remedy; but in the Night, the Gardner coming to himself, and having begg'd God's Forgiveness, for his not having continued in his Almsgiving, and promised to continue it hereafter, he was miraculously cured, and the Surgeon coming the next Day to cut off his Leg, found him gone abroad.

The Second Sermon is upon the Purification: After having uttered some Allegories upon that Ceremony of the Jews, he speaks of the use of the Church, to have on that Festi-

[(s) Tapers light during the Mafs, upon the Feast of the Purification.] This Ceremony, tho' not taken from the Sacrifices called Lustrum, as this Author imagines, being offered in the end of February, yet was certainly instituted in imitation of a Festival, celebrated at Rome, either in remembrance of Ceres's search after Proserpina, or in honour of Februa, the Mother of Mars, which were both solemniz'd with Tapers burning in their Hands, by the Romans. These Superstitions the Bishops of the Church very much abhorred, yet because it conduced greatly to the Conversion of the Gentiles, to make as little Alterations in their Ceremonies as possible, therefore did the Heads of the Church institute the same Ceremonies to be used by the Christians on the Feast of the Purification, as had been used upon the Calends of February at Rome: And this the learned and judicious Rhenanus on Tertullian confidently asserts. Negari non potest Ardentium Cereorum, quos hodie Christiani dei Purificata Maria ex more circumferunt a Februalibus Romanorum sacris Originem sumpsisse. Pertinaci paganismo mutatione subventum est, quem rei in totum sublatio potius irritasset.

The Third Sermon is upon the Fast of Lent; therein he enlargeth upon the good Effects of Fasting.

The Fourth is on Holy Thursday: He observeth, That on that Day was made the Reconciliation of Publick Penitents, guilty of Crimes, which deterred that the Bishop should separate them from the Altar, and then reconcile them: Then he addresseth his Speech to those Penitents, and exhorts them to examine themselves whether they be reconcil'd to God or not, because it may happen, that although they be reconciled by the Ministry of the Bishop, yet they be not so with God, who alone grants the true Reconciliation: He shews them, that to be truly reconciled, they ought to be, according to the Apostle, new Creatures, purged from the Crimes of the Old Man; That they who continue in their sinful Habits, should not imagine

[(t) Made a Satisfaction proportionable to the greatness of their Sins.] Tho' these Words seem to come up to the Doctrine of Satisfaction, held in the Church of Rome, yet it does not appear that the Fathers of this Age had any other Notion of Satisfaction, than that which was received in the Ages before, which is much different from, and much more Orthodox, than the Popish. We have a Definition of it, p. 2. given by Isidore of Sevil, to this effect: 'Satisfaction is an Exclusion of the Causes and Occasions of Sin, and a Cessation from Sinning; which is almost the same

Aug. de dog. Eccles. c. 4. with S. Austin's Satisfactio est peccatorum causas excindere, & eorum suggestionibus nullum aditum indulgere. This is the Nature of true Repentance, which being proportion'd in some measure to the greatness of our Guilts, the more penitive and hearty, by how much our Sins are more heinous and aggravating, is all the Satisfaction that God expects of us, besides a firm Faith and Dependence on the Merits of Jesus Christ. The popish

Greg. de Val. to 4. d. 7. q. 14. So. Drid. Tapper, &c. Satisfaction is a clear different thing, as they define it, thus: It is an equivalent Compensation made to the offended Justice of God for the Injury done unto him by Sin, partly by our Actions, and partly by our Sufferings, whereby we deliver our selves from Divine Vengeance, and save our selves from Punishment. A Doctrine unknown to Antiquity! Of Tears I read, of Satisfaction I read not, saith S. Ambrose: Yea, Aquinas himself says, To pretend to make a Satisfaction for Sin, is an Injury to Christ's Death; And that this Father was of the same Judgment with Antiquity, the following Words shew, If ye repent after a godly sort, and be sincerely desirous to sin no more, ye shall be reconciled by Jesus Christ, and by us his Ministers.]

The Fifth Homily is upon the Sacrifice of Isaac, it is very short, and hath nothing remarkable in it. The

that they can thoroughly be reconcil'd, before they have made (t) Satisfaction proportionable to the greatness of their Sins. 'If saith he, ye repent after a godly sort, and ye be stedfastly purposed and sincerely desirous to sin no more, ye shall be truly reconciled by Jesus Christ and by us, to whom he hath committed the Ministry of Reconciliation. But if you be not in that Disposition, do not flatter your selves; don't deceive your selves, for ye cannot deceive God as ye deceive Men; and he who by offending him is become his Enemy, can no otherwise be Friends again with him than by making him Satisfaction. Do not look upon Bishops as the Authors of your Reconciliation, but meely as the Ministers of it: It is Jesus Christ who does invisibly absolve and reconcile Men: As for us, we discharge our Ministry, when we do outwardly and visibly perform the Ceremonies of Reconciliation: Nevertheless, he does comfort those who have not repented thoroughly, giving them Hope, that provided they forsake their Sins heartily, they may obtain Forgiveness, and be truly reconciled. He adds, That there be several means of expiating our Sins, and obtaining the Remission of them, and he instances in these, a charitable Disposition, Alms-giving, Sorrow, Confession of Sins, Mortifying of the Flesh and Spirit, amendment of Life, the Intercession of Holy and Just Men, and the forgiving of Enemies.

The Sixth is also upon Holy Thursday. Therein he exhorts all Christians to Repentance, and to expiate their lighter Faults with Fastings, Watchings, Alms-giving, and other Works of Charity. He warns them not to put off their Repentance till the Hour of Death, which often surprizes us, when we least think of it, without giving us one Moment to bethink our selves.

The Seventh is a short Exhortation to the Penitents and Faithful, to give God Thanks for graciously granting them the favour of Reconciliation.

The Eighth is a long Discourse to the Clergy; the People and the publick Penitents. He exhorts Presbyters, who govern Parishes, to be an Example to the People under their Charge. He recommends to all the Faithful the love of their Neighbour, and the forgiving of Enemies; and exhorts them to purifie themselves from light Sins, that they may escape not only the Fire that shall burn the Ungodly for ever; but (u) that Fire also, through which the Righteous who are not wholly purged from their Sins, shall pass in the day of Judgment. He exhorts also great Sinners to Repent, covering themselves with Hair-cloth, and lifting up their Hands to Heaven, that they may be reconciled by the imposition of the Bishop's hands; and he warns them not to relapse into Sin after Reconciliation. Lastly, he treats of the Ceremonies used by the Church on Holy Thursday, which are, besides the reconciliation of Penitents, (v) the Blessing of the Holy Oyls, the consecrating of the Chrism, the Washing of Feet, of Altars, of Sacred Vessels, of the Floor and the Walls of Churches. He speaks clearly of the real Presence of Christ's Body and Blood in the Eucharist; and says, That, as Christ was really and substantially born of the Virgin; so likewise (w) Christians do truly receive under the Mysteries, the Lord's Body and Blood, tho' the ap-

[(u) That Fire, through which the Righteous, who are not wholly purged from their Sins shall pass in the day of Judgment. The Doctrine of Purgatory which M. Du Pin would seem to build upon this Expression, and another of like Importance, p. 59. taken out of the Works of Julian of Toledo, is not the same with that which is meant by their words, which is no other than what the Fathers before them had held, tho' perhaps not so firmly, as it was believed in these latter Ages. Tertullian, Cyprian and Origen, were of Opinion, That after the Resurrection, before the Saints entered into Glory, they should pass through a Purging Fire, to refine their Souls from their Dross, their Wood, Hay and Stubble before they can become Vessels of Honour fit to obtain a place in the

Mansions of Bliss. This seems to be S. Eligius's Opinion here, because he says, That the Righteous shall pass through a Purging Fire in the day of Judgment. From these Elder Fathers, it passed to S. Jerom Hieron. in and S. Austin, who speak of it as a Conjecture not altogether improbable, but yet very uncertain. I think, says S. Jerom, That there is a moderate and gentle Sentence of the Judge concerning the Burning away the Sins of Christians. And S. Austin, if betwixt Death and Judgment the Souls of the Departed be said to suffer a Fire of Transitory Tribulation burning up worldly smaller Faults, I reprove it not, because perhaps 'tis true. So feeble was the Belief of a Purgatory among the Ancients for some hundred Years. And as it was only a probable Opinion at most, so it was never looked upon as a separate State, but only as it were a Purgation in their Passage to Glory; for it was a settled Doctrine in the Primitive Church, that there is no middle Place; That a Man can be any where, but either with the Devil or Christ, in Hell or in Heaven. There are but two Places after this Life, one for the Elect, another for the Reprobate. So that the Popish Purgatory, which is a place of Torment, wherein they that have not perfected their Obedience here, stay to make Satisfaction for their Sins, and then enter into Heaven, was altogether unknown to the Ancients. And indeed this Pol. Virgil and Rossensis acknowledge. Nemo, saith the latter, nunc Orthodoxus dubitat an Purgatorium sit, &c. No true Catholic nowadays believes a Purgatory, altho' there is little or no mention of it in Antiquity; and the Greek Church believes it not to this day. In reality, Purgatory is a Novel Invention as it is now taught, a perfect contrivance for the Churches advantage, never received for a Doctrine till the Council of Florence, Anno 1448.]

[(v) Blessing the Holy Oyl, Consecrating the Chrism.] It was a Custom among the Bishops, upon some great Festival, with solemn Prayers and Ceremonies, to consecrate that Oyl which the Presbyters used in the Baptism and Confirmation of Children and Others. In some Churches they did it at Easter, and in others, particularly in the French Church, where Eligius was Bishop, upon Holy Thursday; and from the Bishops, the Priests fetched it themselves, or in case of necessity, sent for it for the Service of their Churches.]

[(w) Christians do truly receive under the Mysteries, the Lord's Body and Blood. — De veritate Carnis & Sanguinis, tho' the appearance of the Bread and Wine remain.] This, and such like Expressions, which might be produced in great Numbers from the Books of the Ancients, who unanimously teach, that in the Sacrament is the Body and Blood of Christ. And tho' before the Consecration it is αὐτὸς ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ὄινος, meer Bread and Wine, yet afterward 'tis verily the Body of Christ. Truly his Flesh, truly his Blood, are really no more than the very words of Christ, This is my Body, This is my Blood, and are only true in a figurative Sense, i. e. by a Change of Condition, Sanctification and Usage. In which Sense, the Church of England thus delivers her self in the Catechize, That the Body and Blood of Christ is verily and indeed taken, and received by the Faithful in the Lord's Supper. For we are so certain, That to eat Christ's Body Spiritually, is to eat him Really, that there is no other way to eat him Really, but by Spiritual Manducation. Christ is as really present Spiritually as Corporeally, and we receive it as well by Faith as by Bodily Eating. There can, therefore, be no Grounds from the Words of this Father to infer a Transubstantiation in the Sacrament, since they may be better understood of the Spiritual Presence. Nay, these Expressions, The appearance of Bread and Wine remain under the Mysteries, plainly shews this to be the Sense. They are to the Sences, Bread and Wine; to the Soul, they are really the Body and Blood of Christ; on them we feed by Faith. And thus we must understand the Expression of the same Father, p. 37. seq. ad (w).] pearance of the Bread and Wine remain, because Men would abhor drinking Blood and eating Flesh; but there can be no doubt, but it is verily received. De veritate Carnis & Sanguinis ejus nullus relatus est ambigendi locus. He confesseth, the Apostles did not receive it Fastling; but he says, That for all that, they ought not to find Fault with the Custom of the Universal Church, which requires, That it be always received Fastling; because the Holy Spirit, whereby the is governed, in Honour of so great a Sacrament, would have Christ's Body to enter into the Christian's Mouths, before any other Meat was received in; and it is upon that Account, that this Practice is observed every where. Lastly, he treats of the Question of frequent Communion, and enquires whether it be good to Communicate every day. Thereupon he says, That there be some Persons, who wish, That they would make choice of those days, in which Men live more Soberly and Godly; but others think, That if they be not guilty of any Sin that deserveth being debarred from the Altar, put to Penance, and then reconciled by the Bishop's Authority, they may come very often to the Sacrament. He leaves every one at his Liberty to do as he shall think best, according to his Godly Motions; and propounds, after S. Austin, the Examples of Zacchæus and the Centurion. He warns Christians, that, if they exclude themselves from the Eucharist, they shall perish with Hunger; but yet, if they come to it unworthily, they shall Eat and Drink their own Damnation. Lastly, he does vehemently urge great Sinners to Repentance, and to procure their own Separation, from the Altar, by the Judgment of the Bishop; and prays them to consider, That that State of Separation is an Image of the final Judgment, when they see the Just coming to the Eucharist, whilst themselves are excluded from it. In the beginning of that Homily there are some Periods taken out of a Sermon of Casarius of Arles, but in that time they commonly used that Bishop's Sermons.

In the Ninth Homily, he exhorts Sinners to cure themselves of their Sins by Repentance.

In the Tenth, he speaks also of the Ceremonies of the Thursday before Easter, that on that day they set some Prisoners at Liberty.

The Eleventh Homily is also upon the Thursday before Easter; he speaks to the Faithful and the Penitents. To the first he recommends, Faith and Charity towards God and their Neighbours; on which Vertue he bestows a large Encomium, and recommends the forgiving of Enemies. He speaks of the Practice of the Church, to say every day (x) the Canonical Hours. He stirs up all Christians to Prayer, Fasting and Repentance; he prescribes to Sinners the Confession of their Sins, in order to doing Penance for them; and at last directs his Speech to Penitents, after this manner. 'To those Persons, saith he, who stand here in a Penitential Habit, with a soul mournful Countenance, their Hair torn and flying abroad, testifying, as far as we can judge by their Actions, That they have lamented their Sins, and mortified in themselves the Vices of the Flesh. He lets them know, they are to understand, That altho' they be desirous to receive the Imposition of Hands, nevertheless they ought to be persuaded, they shall not receive the absolution of their Crimes, if the divine Goodness do not pardon them, giving them the Grace of Contrition; because, as S. Gregory saith, the Bishop's Absolution is then only true, when it is agreeable with the Judgment of him, who judges the Secrets of the Hearts, which is figured by the Resurrection of Lazarus, whom Christ raised to Life first, before he ordered his Disciples to loose him; and thus all Pastors must have a care, to loose and absolve none, but such whose Souls Christ hath quickened again by his Grace. After these words, he invites them to shew some Marks of their Conversion; which they having done, by lifting up their Handsto Heaven, he went on in his Discourse, setting forth the effects of true Repentance, which are, to satisfy God, to lament their Sins past, and to commit them no more.

[(x) Canonical Hours.] The Ancients had their several Hours for Prayer and Devotion both by Day and Night, in imitation of the Apostles. This must be acknowledged on all hands. Tertullian mentions them as of common use among the Christians in his time. Quamvis semper & ubique & omni tempore orandum est, tamen tres horæ, ut insigniores in rebus humanis, ita solenniores sunt in precibus Divinis, quod suadet Danielis argumentum ver dei Orantis. As Daniel prayed three times a day, so did the Christians in the first devout times.

The same also doth *S. That is was an Ecclesiastical Tradition to be observed by the Christians in imitation of the Apostles, to Pray at the Third, Sixth and Ninth Hours. And so also the same Father prescribes Hours of Prayers in the Night, and particularly enjoyns Mid-night so to be observed. But as their Hours for Prayers were but Three by Day, and Two or Three by Night, so they were for private, not publick Devotion, freely and voluntarily performed, not imposed, and being thus used are highly to be approved. But as they have since degenerated into Ceremony and Superstition, and have not only received an Addition of four Hours more to make them up seven; but are imposed on the Priests only in the Romish Church, and by them are made a Burden or a Task, rather than a Duty, they have been justly abolished by our Reformers; not but that 'tis lawful and commendable, for any pious Persons, to follow the old Apostolick Custom, if they see it helpful to Devotion.] of the Seventh Century of Christianity.

The 12th Homily is upon Charity on Holy Thursday.

The 13th for the same Day. He exhorts all Christians to purge themselves from their daily Sins, by Prayer and Alms-giving; and he advertiseth them in the end, That they should not abhor publick Penitents, as being great Sinners, because among those that are not doing Penance, there may be some guilty of more grievous Sins. He deplores the Misery of those who do not confess them, nor do Penance for them.

S. Eligius.

In the 14th he exhorts Christians diligently to prepare themselves for the worthy Receiving of the Eucharist at Easter.

In the 15th he speaks again very earnestly of the real Presence: Know ye, my dear Brethren, says he, and firmly believe, That as the * Flesh which Jesus Christ took in the Virgins Womb, is his true Body, which was offered up for our Salvation; so likewise the Bread which he gave to his Disciples, and which the Priests consecrate daily in the Church, is the true Body of Christ. They are not two Bodies, 'tis the same Body, which is broken and sacrificed. This is Jesus Christ, which is broken and sacrificed, tho' he remains sound and whole. Then he exhorts all Christians, Clerks, Laicks, and Religious, who perceive themselves guilty of the Sins of Envy, Calumny, Hatred, Fornication, and Perjury, to purifie themselves on this Day, confessing their Iniquity to God. And as to those that have committed greater Crimes, and are doing Penance publicly, he warns them to fall no more into those Sins. He adds, That there be grievous Offenders, whose Crimes are so secret, that they cannot be admitted to do publick Penance: That those Offenders are to be excluded from the Church for a while, because that altho' they be not reconciled by the Imposition of Hands, and receive not Absolution, they ought to mortifie their Bodies by Works of Repentance, and heal their Souls by good Deeds.

[* Vid. Note (w).]

This would make one think, That publick Offences only were then liable to publick Penance, and as to them whose Crimes were altogether secret and hidden, they did only advise them to separate themselves from the Church-Assemblies, and to do Penance secretly and privately.

This appears yet by the 16th Homily; for having exhorted all Christians generally to repent, and to abstain from grievous Crimes for the future, he directs his Speech to two Persons, whom a publick Offence had obliged to do publick Penance. He exhorts them, sincerely to lament their Sins and to commit them no more. In that Homily there is an unwarrantable Proposition, related, under the Name of the Wise Man: That it is as great a Crime for a Man to lie with his Wife, as to eat Flesh in Lent. Besides these Homilies, we have a Letter of S. Eligius's, among those of Desiderius, Bishop of * Cahors.

[* Of Cadurcum.]

S. Eligius was an able and learned Man for his time; he had read S. Cyprian, S. Austin, S. Gregory, and some other Latin Fathers, and imitated them. He was a Lover of Ecclesiastical Discipline, and a Follower of the Tradition of those Fathers, as near as the Age, he lived in, could permit. His Sermons are better than those of several other Latin Preachers, both for Matter and Style.

A G A T H O.

POPE Agatho may deservedly be rank'd among Ecclesiastical Authors, because of the long Letter he writ to the Emperor Constantine, inserted in the Acts of the sixth Council; in which he does largely confute the Error of the Monothelites: But we ought not to value much another Letter, ascribed to this Pope, directed to Ethelred, King of the Mercians, to Theodorus of Canterbury, and to the Abbot Sexulphus; which seems to be a supposititious Piece, made by some English Monk, and contains nothing remarkable. We shall speak of this Pope's first Letter, when we come to treat of the Acts of the sixth Council, and of another Letter written upon the same Subject and the same Occasion, by Darian Bishop of Pavia, in the Name of Mansuetus, Bishop of Milan, which is also among the Acts of this Council. This Pope died the 10th of January, in 682, after he had governed the Church of Rome three Years, six Months, and Twenty-five Days.

Agatho.

Leo II.

AFTER Agatho's Death, Leo II. was chosen in his room. Constantine the Emperor, hearing of his Election, did immediately write a Letter to him, set down in the end of the sixth Council; but Leo was not Ordained 'till August, in the Year 682. After the return of John, Bishop of Porto, one of the Legates, whom Agatho had sent to the Council. And some believe, his Ordination was put off 'till August, in the Year following: But it is not likely: for in May of this Year, he did examine and approve in a Synod, the Acts of the sixth Council; and in the end of the same Year, sent them into Spain. He died the Year after, viz. June 28. 684.

The Emperor's Letter directed to Leo, wherein he acquaints him, That the Council hath confirmed Pope Agatho's Doctrine, and what was done in the sixth Council, is in the Acts of that Council. Baronius pretends, That these two Letters are Suppositions; but his Conjectures are grounded only upon false Dates (a), added by some Latin Author, and wanting in the Greek Original, or upon Anastasius's false Chronology.

Besides these two Letters of Leo II. there are four more that were sent into Spain about the Affair of the sixth Council, the Definition whereof was sent into that Kingdom by Peter, Notary of the Church of Rome. The first is directed to all the Spanish Bishops. He acquaints them with what was defined in the General Council, and exhorts them to receive its Definitions. He recommends the same thing in particular, to a certain Bishop called Quiricus, in the second Letter. In the third, he exhorts an Earl, named Simplicius, to endeavour the maintaining of that Doctrine. And in the fourth he relates to King Ervigius, how the Faith of the Church was confirmed and explained in the sixth Council, and the Hereticks condemned; and exhorts him to cause all the Bishops of his Kingdom to receive and subscribe the Definition of that Council. Baronius would bring these Letters also into doubt, because Honorius's Name is found therein among the Bishops condemned; but these Conjectures are so weak (b), that it is not worth the while to answer them.

(a) False Dates.] In the Title of the first Letter, it is said, That it was sent in December, Indict. X. Agatho was then living; but they must set down some other Month, for it was delivered in June, Indict. X. it is known, That these Titles, before the true Inscriptions are added. The second Letter hath no Date in the Greek, and the Date in the Latin is visibly false. In the Body there is mention made of the X. Indict. of June before; which agreeth very well with our Hypothesis. Leo was chosen in the beginning of 682. Indict. X. In June he receiveth the Acts of the Council, and the Emperor's Letter; he was Ordained in August following, and he writes an Answer in the beginning of the next Year, Indict. XI. Anastasius hath turned all topy-turvy. He says, Agatho was yet living in March 682, that the holy See was vacant one Year, seven Months. If that be true, Leo was not Ordain'd Bishop 'till October, 683, which cannot be made out. Baronius endeavours moreover to bring into suspicion of Falshood, Constantine's Letter to Leo, because he says, That he had written of that Matter to Agatho; which is not true, says Baronius, because the Emperor's Letter was not directed to Agatho, but to Donus. But it is very easie to answer, That this Letter was written to Agatho, because it was he that received it, and answered it. That which troubles Baronius most of all, is, That Honorius is Anathematized in Leo's Letter; but there is no reason for it.

(b) Conjectures are so weak.] There is but one of any difficulty, namely, that it is said in these Letters, That the sixth Council was finished in the IX. Indiction. But the words of the Letter are not to be understood thus; it is merely said there, That the Question about the Monothelites was ended in a Council held at Constantinople in the 9th Indict.

B E N E D I C T II.

Benedict II.

BENEDICT II. finished what his Predecessor had begun, by writing to the Notary Peter, who was sent into Spain, to cause the Definition of the sixth Council to be subscribed to, and sent him a Copy of the Letter written to King Ervigius, by his Predecessor. Leo's Letters, and the Definition of the sixth Council, came too late to be delivered to the 13th Council of Toledo; so that the Business was terminated but in the 14th Council, held in that City, in 684, in November, where the Faith established by the sixth Council was confirmed. The Authentick Acts of this Council, are an invincible proof of the truth of Leo II.'s, and Benedict's Letters, against Cardinal Baronius's frivolous Conjectures.

Drepanius Florus.

DREPANIUS, a French Poet, flourished towards the middle of the seventh Century. We have some Poems of his; the 22d, 26th, and 27th Psalms put into Verse; the Song of Ananias, Azarias, Azarias, and Misael, in the Furnace; an Hymn to S. Michael, an Hymn upon the Paschal Taper; a Letter to Moduin, Bishop of * Autun, upon the reading of the Holy Scripture; a Thanksgiving to one of his Friends, who stood up in his Defence; and a Letter to a Grammarian, to desire him to send him an Answer. His Style is pretty Poetical, he does not use many barbarous Terms, but he does not place them in an Order Poetical enough, and uses sometimes Words fit only for Prose.

Ildephonsus, Bishop of Toledo.

Ildephonsus, a Monk, and afterwards Abbot of the Monastery of Agali, was elected Bishop of Toledo, in 658, which was the ninth Year of the Reign of King * Recefuinth, and governed that Church nine Years, and two Months. He made a Book of the Ecclesiastical Writers, for a continuation of Isidorus's, to the end whereof Julian, his Successor, added the Catalogue of his Works, after he had made an Encomium upon him, and taken Notice of the principal Circumstances of his Life. He hath composed, says he, several Books very well written, and much to be valued. He divided them himself thus: The first part comprehends the following Tracts: A Writing of his own Weakness, by way of a Protopopæia; a Tract of the Virgin Mary's perpetual Virginity, against three Infidels; a small Tract upon the Proprieties of the Three Divine Persons; another Tract, containing Reflections upon his daily Actions; another of Reflections upon Sacred Things; a Book of the Knowledge of Baptism; a Treatise of the Advancement of the Spiritual Solitaries, which he joyned to the first part of his Works. The second comprehends several Letters, written to several Persons, and sometimes under different Names, in which there be many large Answers. The third part were made up of Matties, Hymns, and Sermons. The fourth contained many small Works in Prose and Verse; among which there be some Epitaphs and Epigrams. He had moreover begun several other Tracts, which he left imperfect.

Ildephonsus Bishop of Toledo.

* Recefuinth.

Of all these Tracts there is none left to us, but that of Mary's perpetual Virginity, wherein he asserts, against Jovinian, That she kept her Virginity, in her bringing forth; against Elvidius, That she remained a Virgin after she had brought forth Jesus Christ; and against the Jews, That she conceived without the loss of her Virginity. He enlargeth upon the Mystery of the Incarnation, and the Godhead of Christ. This Treatise is full of devout Considerations, with a Preface to it, containing many pious Thoughts. The Style is sententious and concise.

Some ascribe moreover to Ildephonsus of Toledo, another Treatise of Mary's perpetual Virginity, and * Twelve Sermons on the Purification, the Birth, and Assumption of the Virgin; but the Style of these Works, which are not mention'd by Julian, is so different from that of Ildephonsus, that we may be assured they belong to another Author. They are written in a more Dogmatical way, and are full of Citations from the Fathers, and of Reasonings. Nay, and there are found in them some Passages of Authors that lived after Ildephonsus, as of S. Bernard, of the Author of the Commentary upon the Seven Penitential Psalms, which is under the Name of S. Gregory, of Rarum, and Paschasius.

This Author teaches, That (y) the Virgin was [(y) The Virgin Mary was sanctified in her Mother's Womb, and was born without Original Sin.]

It is very probable, that this Work, which is falsely attributed to Ildephonsus, in Monsieur Du Pin's Judgment, was forged by an Author of a much later Date, since it was the constant Opinion of the Church for above 1100 Years after Christ, that the Virgin Mary was not only born in Original Sin, as all other Women are, but was also guilty of many Actual Sins. Austin imputes to her Original Sin, Virginis caro, etiamsi de peccati propagine venit, non tamen de peccati propagine concepit: Altho' she was born in Sin; yet she did not conceive in Sin. And to the same purpose do Ambrose, Chrysostom, and others, speak of her. And in like manner of Actual Sin, many of the Fathers in their Comments upon Jo. 2. 3. think her guilty; for it is certain, that our Saviour did reprove some Fault or Error in her. This Maldonate, on John II. part II. acknowledges, tho' not of their Mind. And indeed the Holy Spirit, by her own Mouth, gives us an invincible Proof of her Sinfulness, inspiring her to rejoice in God her Saviour, as standing in need of him to save her from her Sins, as well as other Women. But in these last Ages of the Church, the immoderate Veneration given to the Virgin Mary, hath produced an Opinion, that Mary was by a singular and extraordinary Privilege preserved from Original Sin. Scotus was the first School-man that held it, and maintained it in his Disputes; but met with great opposition in this point, both in the Schools and Church; and tho' it got Ground a little by time, yet it was a Subject of Contest among the Learned, 'till it was fully determined in the Council of Basil, Anno 1439, in which it was decreed thus: Hitherto a difficult Question hath been made touching the Conception of the glorious Virgin; We having seen, and diligently examined the Reasons, do define and declare, That the Doctrine which teaches her never to have been Actually subject to Original Sin, but always free from it, and from all Actual Sin, is to be received and approved, as the most Catholick Doctrine, and it shall not be lawful for any to teach the contrary. This Decree hath been confirmed by Pope Sixtus IV. and since by the Council of Trent; so that it is now become an Article of Faith in the Roman Church, unless it be with the Dominicans, who are Hereticks in this point. And from the Roman Forge it may be reasonably supposed, that this Book came; and perhaps from the Franciscans, who are the most zealous Patrons of her immaculate Conception.]

sanctified in her Mother's Womb, and was born without Original Sin. He believes, 'tis upon that account, the Feast of her Nativity is kept; but he does not speak of the Conception. He asserts, That she suffered no Pain in her bringing forth. He says, That Jesus Christ came out of the Virgin by penetrating through her Bowels, after the same manner that he came forth out of the Grave, by Penetration; and charges the opposite Opinion with Heresie. He affirms, That she committed no Sin in her Life. He commends her highly, and looks upon her as the most excellent of all Creatures. He describes her Assumption in a stately manner; but yet he dares not affirm, she ascended into Heaven in Soul and Body; because, tho' that Opinion, says he, be pious, yet it cannot be affirmed as a Certainty, lest we should deliver doubtful things for unquestionable Truths. Quod licet pium sit credere à nobis tamen non debet affirmari, ne videamus dubia pro certis recipere. This is what this Author says, whom I believe to be much later than Ildephonsus of Toledo, and to belong to the Ninth Century of the Church. This Opinion is suitable to that of Usuardus, that lived in the same time, who speaking in his Martyrology of the Virgin's Body, says, The Church had rather confess, that she knows not where it is, than teach any thing Apocryphal and Frivolous about it, Plus elegit Sobrietas Ecclesie cum pietate nescire, quam aliquid frivolum huc Apocryphum docere.

The Works, bearing Ildephonsus's Name, have been published by Feuardentius, [at Paris, in 1576,] and are extant in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 12.] except the Treatise of Illustrious Men; which was printed together with those of *S. Taio.

Taio, Bishop of Saragosa, flourished about the middle of the 7th Century. He reduced into five Books, under certain Titles, all that he found in S. Gregory's Works about Divinity, without mixing with it any Arguments, or Testimonies of the other Fathers, save only of S. Augustin. The first Book of that Collection, treats of God and his Attributes. The second, of the Incarnation, and the preaching of the Gospel, of Pastors, and their Flocks. The third, of the divers Orders of the Church, of Vertues and Vices. The fourth, of the Judgments of God, of Temptations, and of Sins. And the fifth, of Reprobates, of the final Judgment, and the Resurrection. This Collection is * not printed, and it does not seem very necessary to publish it. Mabillon, from whom we have learn'd what we have now said of it, hath published this Author's Letter to Quiricus. The Cardinal of Aguirre promised another Letter of Taio to Eugenius of Toledo.

Leontius, Bishop of a Town formerly called Naples, now Lemonee, in the Isle of Cyprus, is honourably quoted in the 7th Council, Act 4. They produce a long Fragment, which it's said is taken out of the fifth Book of his Apology for the Christians against the Jews. He maintains there, That neither Crosses, nor Images, are worshipped, but only have outward Respects paid them, terminating in God and Jesus Christ. It is observed in the same place, that he is the Author of the Life of S. John the Alms-giver, of S. Simeon the Simple, and of some other Works, and that he lived under Maurice the Emperor. Combes hath * published two Homilies of that Author, the one upon the blessed Simeon, when he received Christ into his Arms, and the other upon the Feast-Day kept between Easter and Whitsunday, on the Wednesday of the fourth Week after Easter.

M A R C U L P H U S.

THIS Author's Preface, to his Two Books of * Forms, shews, that he was a French Monk, and that he made that Work after he was 70 Years old, and Dedicated it to a Bishop Named Landericus, but seeing he does not say, of what place he was Bishop, some have thought, it was Landericus of Paris (a), who was famous in the Reign of Clouis the Son of Dagobert, towards the Year 660. Others pretend that it is a Bishop of Meaux, who lived in the time of Perpin and Charles the Great, towards the Year 780.

Marculphus.
[* Formulæ Ecclesiasticarum.]

However, these Forms are of the time of the Second Race of our Kings, for Marculphus having written them about the 70th Year of his Age, and having gathered the Forms in use in the time of his Ancestors, and those but in small number, there can be no doubt, but the most part of them are very Ancient.

We shall speak here but of those concerning Ecclesiastical Matters.

The First is the Form of a Privilege granted by a Bishop to a Monastery. It is directed to the Abbot, and the whole Society of the Monastery. Therein he says, That being willing to provide for their Quiet, and conform himself to the Custom, according to which the Monasteries of Lerins, Againe, Luxeuil, and a great number more, enjoy the privilege of Liberty, he made the following Constitutions, to be observed by the Monks, and the Bishops his Successors; That the Monks shall receive Orders from the Bishop; That he shall Bless the Altars in their Church gratis; That he shall every Year give them the Holy Chrism, if they demand it of him; That he shall make him their Abbot that shall be chosen out of themselves, by the unanimous consent of the Society; That he shall in no wise meddle with the Affairs, Persons, or the Revenues, present or to come, belonging to the Monastery; That he shall take nothing of what shall be bestowed upon them, nor of their Offerings made upon their Altars; That he shall not come into their Monastery unless he be called into it; And when he shall be desired to go thither, after the Celebration of the Mysteries, he shall withdraw, to leave them in Peace; That the Abbot shall correct his Monks, and that the Bishop shall not suffer them to be in the City.

In the Second Form, The King confirms the Exemption granted by the Bishop, particularly as to what concerns the Revenues, and extends the prohibition of Invading them to all sorts of Persons.

The 3d is a Form, Whereby the King Exempts the Bishop's Lands from the Secular Jurisdiction.

The 4th is the Confirmation of an Exemption already granted.

The 5th is a Form directed by the Prince to the Bishops, whereby he enjoins them to Ordain such a Person, chosen by him, with the Bishops and Lords of his Realm, to be Bishop in the room of a Bishop deceased.

The 6th is an Order of the Prince to a Bishop, to Ordain him whom he hath chosen.

The 7th is a Request of the Inhabitants of a Town to the King, to beseech him to Elect such an one Bishop of their Town. At the foot whereof is the Prince's Order. These Forms do shew, That from that time the Kings of France enjoyed the Nominations to Bishopricks, and that Bishops were Ordained by the Metropolitans, without any need to go to Rome.

The 14th, 15th, and 16th, are Forms of Donations made to some Churches by their Princes.

The 19th is a Permission of the Prince to make a Man Clerk for the Service of a Church, or a Monastery, and to cut off his Hair.

The 26th is an Order of the Prince to the Bishop, to give again to a private Man a Farm belonging to him, if not, to send one in his Name into his Court, to give an account of that business.

The 27th is an Order to the Bishop to reprove an Abbot, or another Clerk, guilty of some Injustice.

(a) Some have thought it was Landericus of Paris. M. Bignon is of that mind, but M. Launoy believes, it is the Bishop of Meaux, and he proves it, 1. Because Marculphus says in his Forms, that in his time there was an infinite number of Monasteries in France; which he pretends cannot agree with Clouis and Dagobert's time, and proves it by Eligius's Life written by S. Owen, l. 1. c. 21. where it is observed, There was not then such a great number of Monasteries in France, and that those that were there, were not very regular. 2. Because in Marculphus there be several manners of Speech, which he pretends were not in use but since Clouis and Dagobert's time. F. Lubbe is of Mr. Bignon's Mind, and pretends even to shew who that Marculphus is, because in the Life of S. Austrogefilus, Arch-Bishop of Bourges, there is mention made of one Marculphus by Name, who was a Reader during the Life of Austrogefilus, and was afterwards Abbot of that Saint's Monastery, in the Suburbs of Bourges. What is said of Marculphus in that place, happen'd in the time of Etherius of Lyons, who was Dead in 601. Marculphus might then be Fifteen, or Twenty Years old, he wrote his Forms being above Seventy Years of Age, which comes up to 560.

Marcul-
phus.

The 35th is a Confirmation of the Privileges of a Monastery.

The Six first Forms of the Second Book, are Forms of a Donation, or Abandoning of Goods to an Hospital, Monastery, or Church.

The 30th is the Form of a Private Separation between the Husband and the Wife.

The 39th is a Form whereby Two Persons give to a Church the propriety of Two Inheritances, belonging to each of them, upon condition, that they shall have the use of them during their Life, and that the Survivor shall enjoy them both.

The 40th is the Bishop's Consenting to that Deed of Use.

The 42^d is a Form of a Letter of one Bishop to another, when he sends him * the Eulogies at Easter.

The 43^d is the Bishop's Answer upon the receiving of them.

The 44th and 45th are forms of Letters of a Bishop to the King, or Queen, or to another Bishop, about Christmas-Day.

The 46th, 47th, 48th, 49th. are Forms of Commendatory Letters. The first to recommend one to a Bishop, known. The second to recommend him to an Abbot. The third to recommend to an Abbot a Person desirous to enter into a Monastery. The last to recommend one willing to go in (z) Pilgrimages to the Tombs of S. Peter and S. Paul the Apostles.

[(z) To go in Pilgrimage to the Tombs of S. Peter and S. Paul the Apostles.] Soon after that Peace was settled in the Church by Constantine, the first Christian Emperor, and sacred Learning and Knowledge began to flourish, several inquisitive Persons, that they might gain a more lively and thorough Knowledge of the historical Parts of the Old and New Testament, travelled into the Holy Land, to see the Places so frequently spoken of in the Holy Scriptures, where most of the Matters were transacted. Upon which account it is that S. Jerom, who travelled thither for the same Reason, saith, That it is a Confirmation of our Faith to see the Ground on which Christ's Feet did tread. In imitation of these Men's practices did others travel to Jerusalem out of Devotion soon after, placing much Religion in visiting and worshipping the Places of Christ's bodily Presence. But the Fathers of these Ages sharply reproved this growing Superstition. Heaven (saith S. Jerom) is as near thee at home as at Jerusalem, and why wilt thou travel thither, as if Christ were only to be found there. Some make it a part of Religion (saith S. Cyril) to have been at Jerusalem, but Christ never commanded it, and what can justify us, to make that a part of Religion which Christ doth not? All this did not yet so repress it, but after that Image and Saint-worship was brought into the Church, Pilgrimages to the Tombs of Saints and Martyrs became more frequent, and at length were imposed, and encouraged as Meritorious, and procuring Pardon of Sins. Innocent III. granted Pardon of all Sins, to all that went in Pilgrimage to the Holy Land; and Boniface VIII. to all that went to Rome to visit S. Peter and S. Paul's Tomb. Clement VI. granted these Pilgrims to Rome a Power to free the Souls of four of their Relations or Friends out of Purgatory, and gave commandment to all the Angels in Heaven, to carry the Souls of such as dyed in Pilgrimage, to Heaven immediately. Thus Pilgrimages became a necessary part of Religion; and because very gainful to the Popes and their Metropolis, were much encouraged and practised, till the Truth recovered strength again by the Reformation, and by enlightning Men's Minds, put out the Superstitious Conceits of the Flames of Purgatory.]

[* At Paris in 1613. octavo, and 1666. quarto.]

Among the other ancient Forms of France, which M. Bignon hath published *, together with those of Marculphus, there are some more found concerning the Church, as the 11th, which is a Cession made to a Church; the 12th, which is a Form of a Commendatory Letter given to Clerks; the 26th, 27th, and 28th. which are Donations to Churches; the 44th. which is a Form of Exemption given by the King to a Monastery of Virgins; the 45th. is a Confirmation of that Privilege.

Among those which are according to the Roman Law, there are Forms of Donation to a Church, N. 1, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38. and lastly, in the last Forms, published by M. Bignon, there are also found Forms of Donations to Churches, and Commendatory Letters of Clerks.

SUIDAS says, That in S. John Damascene's Time flourish'd C O S M A of Jerusalem, a witty, ingenious Man, very skilful in making Hymns and Spiritual Songs, elegantly and learnedly; and that they surpassed all that ever was done or shall be done in that kind. We have yet Thirteen of those Hymns upon the principal Festivals of the Year, which are so much the better, because the Sense of them is taken out of the Holy Scripture, and is nobly express'd. In imitation of him one Mark made one upon Holy Saturday, and Theophanes another on the Annunciation of the Virgin.

THE Name of Pantaleo, a Deacon, and afterwards Presbyter of the Church of Constantinople, is found at the head of four Sermons. The first of the Epiphany. The second of the (aa) Exaltation of the Cross, and the other two upon the Transfiguration.

[(aa) A Sermon upon the Exaltation of the Cross.] Although it be very uncertain whether this Sermon do belong to Pantaleo.

leo, tho' it bears his Name; yet it is probable that the Feast of the Exaltation of the Cross had been instituted some Time before, by the Emperor Heraclius I. anno 630. and so 'tis likely enough such a Sermon might be made upon this Feast, by this or some other Father of this Age and Time, as well as others; which were the common Subject of these Centuries.]

The first is in the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Colen. The second was published by Gretser, and the other two by Combesis, who durst not affirm them to be the same Author's. There is nothing remarkable in those Monuments. Possevin says, there were at Constantinople some Sermon of this Author for the whole Year.

S. JULIAN of Toledo.

S. JULIAN, Disciple of Eugenius, chosen Arch-bishop of Toledo in the Year 680. was President in several Councils held in that City, and died in 690. His Successor Felix, having praised his Vertues, sets down the Catalogue of his Books. 'He wrote, saith he, a Book of the Prognosticks of another Life, directed to the Bishop Idatius; in the beginning of which there is a Letter to that Bishop, and a Prayer. This Work is divided into three Books, the first is of the Original of Man's Death. The second of the State of the Souls of the Dead until the Resurrection. The third is of the last Resurrection. He made moreover a Book of Answers, dedicated to the same Person; in which he maintains the Canons and Laws, whereby Christian Slaves are forbidden to serve Infidels. We have also an Apology for the Faith, dedicated to Pope Benedict, and another Apology for three Articles, about which the Bishop of Rome seemed to have had some Doubts; a little Tract of the Remedies against Blasphemies, with a Letter to Adrian the Abbot; a Treatise of the Proof of the sixth Age, [or of the coming of Christ] at the beginning thereof there is a Letter to King Ervigius, with a Prayer. This Work is divided into three Books; the first contains the Texts of the Old Testament, shewing, without any need of supputation of Years, that the Messias is come: The second Books shews, by the Apottle's Doctrine, that Christ came in the fulness of Time: The third proves, that the sixth Age, in which the Messias was to come, is come; There he distinguisheth the five Ages which went before, not by the Years but by the Generations. We have moreover a Collection of his Poetry, containing Hymns, Epitaphs and Epigrams in great number; a Book of Letters; a Collection of Sermons, among which is found a little Writing of the Protection of the House of God, and of those that retire into it; a Book intitled, Of the Contraries of the Scripture, divided into two Parts, the first whereof comprehends what relates to the Old Testament, and the second to the New; a Book of History of what happen'd in France in the Time of King Wamba; a Collection of Sentences, taken out of S. Austin, upon the Psalms; some Extracts of the same Father's Books against Julian; a Treatise of Divine Judgments, taken out of the Scripture, with a Letter to King Ervigius; a Treatise against the Persecutors of those who fly into Churches; a Book of the Masses for the whole Year, divided into four Parts, in which he corrected some which were either corrupted or imperfect, and made new ones; a Book of Prayers for the Festivals of the Church of Toledo, either reformed or newly made.

Of all those Works these only remain:

The Treatise of the Prognosticks, directed to Idatius Bishop of Barcelona, with the Letter, and the Prayer: The three Books, to shew the sixth Age against the Jews: And the History of the Acts of Wamba in France.

In the first Book of the Treatise of Prognosticks, he treats of Men's Death; He shews it is Sin that subjected them to Death, and affirms it is called Mors a Morfu, because the first Man became Mortal, by eating of the Forbidden Fruit. He believes, that, altho' Death be not good, yet it is useful to the Just, and that a sharp Death remits Sins. He examines why Baptism remitting Original Sin, does not free Men from the Law of Death; and he gives two Reasons for it, taken out of S. Austin, and of Julian Pomerius, He believes Angels assist the Just at their Death, and that Devils do then lie in wait for them. He commends the

Toledo.*

Piety of the Faithful, who take care to do the last Office to their Parents; hereupon he produces some passages out of S. Austin, about the Sacrifices offered for the Dead, and the Suffrages of Martyrs.

In the Second, which is of the State of Souls after Death, he says, Those of perfect Christians are immediately carried into a Paradise, where they remain, joyfully waiting for the Resurrection of their Bodies: And that they enjoy in that place the Happiness and the Knowledge of God. He believes those of them who have some Sins to blot out, are detain'd for a while; but neither the one nor the other do enjoy as perfect a Vision of the Divine Substance, as they shall do after the Resurrection, tho' they do already see God, and reign with Christ: That the Wicked, immediately after Death, are precipitated into Hell, where they undergo endless Torments. He establisheth * Purgatory, which he believes to be a real Fire, wherewith Sins remaining at ones Death are expiated in the other World; and that the time of the Soul's abiding there, is proportion'd to the Number, or the Grievousness of Sins committed by them. He affirms, That the Souls of the Dead may know one another. He says, The Dead pray for the Living, but not for the Damned; that they know what is done here below; that they pity those they have been acquainted with; that they are earnestly desirous of Mens Salvation; that sometimes they appear to the Living; that the Damned see only some of the Blessed, &c.

The third Book is of the Judgment and Resurrection: These are his Opinions: Neither the Time, nor the Place of the Final Judgment can be known, nor how long it will last. Jesus Christ shall appear descending from Heaven with Angels, carrying his Crois: At the sight of him the very Elect shall tremble for fear, and that fear shall purifie them from their Sins; but the Ungodly shall be in a strange Confusion. All the Saints shall judge the World, together with Christ. All Men shall rise in a Mement, and shall put on again a true Body and Flesh, but uncorruptible, without Defect, Imperfection, or Mutilation, in a perfect Age, and perfect Beauty. The Difference of Sexes shall remain, but without Lust, without any need of Food or Raiment. All Children, who had any Life in their Mothers Womb, shall rise again. Angels shall separate the Good from the Bad; the Consciences of both shall be laid open, the Ungodly shall be cast down head-long into real Fires, in which their Bodies shall burn without being consumed; there shall be different Torments, according to the Difference of Crimes; and the Children guilty of Original Sin only, shall suffer the easiest Pain of all: It is needless to ask, Where that Fire shall be; after the Condemnation, the Recompence of the Just shall follow, and then the Heaven and the Earth shall be set on fire; there will be a new Heaven, and a new Earth, where the Saints may dwell, tho' they may also ascend up into the Heavens; they shall then see God as the Angels do see him now; they shall enjoy a Liberty so much the more perfect, as they shall no more be obnoxious to Sin; they shall all be happy, tho' in different Degrees of Happiness; they shall be wholly employed in praising God; they shall place all their Felicity in the perpetual Contemplation and Love of him. These are the Points of Doctrine which Julian gathereth from the Fathers of the Church: For, properly, this Work is nothing else but a Collection of Passages of the Fathers, chiefly of S. Augustin, S. Gregory, and Julian Pomerius.

The Treatise against the Jews is more of Julian's Composition. He proves in the first Book, That the Signs of the Messias's coming, pointed at in the Old Testament, are come to pass: That the time set down by Daniel, agrees with the coming of Christ; and that after Jerusalem's Destruction, the Jews can expect no other Messias. In the second he shews, by the History of the New Testament, That Jesus Christ is the Messias, and that the Apostles did convince the Jews of it. In the last he distinguisheth the Ages of the World by the Generations, and shews we are in the sixth Age: The first is from Adam to the Flood; the second from the Flood to Abraham; the third from Abraham to David; the fourth from David until the carrying away into Babylon; the fifth from the carrying away into Babylon to Jesus Christ. He compares the Account of the Years of the Hebrew Text, and of the Septuagint, and prefers the latter, because it was more suitable to his Design, finding by this means 5000 Years run out, from the beginning of the World to Christ's Birth. He extols the Authority of the Version of the Septuagint, and affirms, that the Jews have corrupted the Hebrew Text. He adds, That altho' it were not so, yet the Distinction of the Generations, shews, the fifth Age of the World was run out, when Christ came into the World.

The History of the Acts of Wamba, in Gallia, being no Ecclesiastical Work, we will make no Extract of it here, contenting our selves in observing, that it is found in the first Volume of the Historiographers of France, put out by Du Chesne.

In the Bibliotheca Patrum, of Colen, [in 1618] they have attributed to Julian of Toledo, a Book

[*At Basil of *Antilogies, or seeming Contrarieties of the Scripture, which had been already printed within 1530, at out the Author's Name; but it was found to be Berthorius's, Abbot of Mount Cassin.

Avvo.]

There was also part of a Commentary upon the Prophet Nahum, published under Julian's Name: But besides that, there is nothing said of it in Felix's Catalogue, the Title and the Manner of the Writing of it, shews plainly enough it belongs to another Author, tho' bearing Julian's Name in the Manuscript, upon which Canisius publish'd it.

THEODORUS of Canterbury.

THEODORUS, bred a Monk of Tarsus, was ordained Bishop by Pope Vitalian, and sent in 658. into England, to govern the Church of Canterbury. He arrived there Two Years after his departure [tarrying long in France as he went] and was well entertained by King Egbert, who had sent to Rome to desire a Bishop to be sent to him. He laboured much in the establishing of the Faith and the Church-discipline in England. He held several Councils, made Bishops, founded Monasteries, made Peace between Princes, kept the People in their Duty; and having thus performed all the parts of a good Pastor, during the space of 20 years, he died in 690. being 88 years old.

Theodorus of Canterbury.

He is the First that composed a Penitential among the Latins, made up of Canons, taken out of the Councils of the Greek and Latin Church. This Book was soon spread all over the West, and many undertook to make such like Works, which in process of time became very common and very bad, because every one making Collections of Canons, according to his Fancy; nay, and some inventing them, this kind of Work soon grew full of Absurdities, Contradictions and Errors, favouring Men's Lusts, and authorizing Looseness and Remissness in Discipline. We have not now Theodorus's Penitential whole and in its Purity. M. Dacherius published some Fragments of it; and since that Mr. Perit published part of it [at Paris in 1677.] under the name of Theodorus's Penitential; but he confesses, in his Preface, 'tis not the whole Penitential of this Author; and it is credible, that this very part of it was altered, and mingled with several other Canons; for it is not without Errors; Theodorus is cited there as a Third Person, and things are met with there contrary to Theodorus himself (a).

However, these are the Contents of the First Part, under Fourteen Titles or Chapters.

The First is of the Church. There it is forbidden to celebrate the Sacrifice in a place, where Infidels have been buried. It is declared, There ought to be no Steps to the Altars, where there be Relicks of Saints; That there ought to be a Lamp burning before them every Night, unless the Church be Poor; That (bb) Frankincense is to be offered on the Festivals of Saints; That it is not lawful for the Laity to recite the Lessons in the Church, nor to say Alleluiah; but only to Sing the Psalms and Responses, without Alleluiah.

[(bb) Frankincense.] This Custom of burning Candles, and offering Incense to the Saints-Images, was derived from the Heathen-Romans, who as Polyd. Virgil tells us, Solebant ad Statuas, thias, & cereos accendere, as Cicero speaks of the Images set up in Honour of Caïus Marius. Pol. Virg. l. 2. c. 23. Cicer. Offic. l. 3. Lib. Pontif. Bal. in vit. Leontia.

This Ceremony did Pope Leo III. about the year 794. bring into the Church; and commanded, That the Priests should burn Incense at the Altars of the Saints. So great Promoters of Superstition were the Bishops of Rome in those Ages, and so careful Nurses of it have they been ever since, that the same Custom is retained to this day in their Image-worship.]

The Second is of the Churches Rights: It shews, That the Bishop may confirm in the Fields; That the Presbyter may consecrate there; That the Bishop cannot force an Abbot to come to the Synod, without a rational Cause; That the Bishop may judge poor Men's Causes, not exceeding fifty Pence; but if the Sum exceed that, the cognizance of it belongs to the King; That the Bishop may dispense with a Vow, if he judges it fit; That Presbyters only can say Mass, bless the People, and consecrate Crosses; That Presbyters are not bound to pay Tenths; That they ought not to discover their Bishop's Faults; That Men ought not to take the Sacrament from the hand of a Priest, that is not able to read the Lessons and to perform the Ceremonies; That the Presbyters, singing at the Mass, ought not to put off their † Chasuble; That Persons baptized by a Presbyter, that is a Fornicator, are to be re-baptized; That a Presbyter who hath been ordained without being baptized, is to be baptized and re-ordained; and those are to be re-baptized that have been baptized by him (which is a very extraordinary Practice, and contrary to the use of the Latin Church of that time;) That Deacons are not to break the Bread of the Oblation, nor to say the Collect, nor the Dominus Vobiscum, nor the last Prayer; That they cannot impose Penance on a Lay-man, but

[(a) To Theodorus himself.] 'Tis not so much a Penitential as a Ritual, composed of several Canons. In the 11th. Chap. it is said, Ergo unam licentiam dedit Theodorus; which shews it is a Compiler that speaks; and having set down a Canon of Theodorus's, draws a Conclusion from it. It cannot be said, 'tis Theodorus himself. He might well say, the Ancients prescribed such a time of Penance; but Theodorus did much retrench it. But after having made a Constitution, he would not say; Ergo Theodorus, &c. There are Errors in this Chapter contrary to the Constitutions he made in the Council of Hereford, which are certainly his. What is said in the end, That there is no Reconciliation in his Country, because there is no publick Penance, does not agree to the Age Theodorus lived in, nor to the Practice of his Church, and several Canons of his Penitential prove the contrary.

they may baptize, bless Meat and Drink; That Monks also, and other Clerks, may bless bury.

The Third Title is of Ordinations. It shows, That in a Bishop's Ordination, Mass is to be sung by the Bishop who performs the Ordination; and so likewise in the Ordination of Presbyters and Deacons; but for the Benediction of Monks, it is enough, That the Abbot say Mass; That the Monk is from that time to keep his Head covered with his Cowle during the space of eleven days; That in the Eighth, the Abbot shall take it away, as the Presbyter takes away the Veil of Persons newly baptized; That a Presbyter may consecrate an Abbot; but an Abbot ought to be consecrated by a Bishop; That the Greeks do Bless the Virgins and Widows after the same manner; but the Latins do not give the Veil to Widows; That among the Greeks a Presbyter may consecrate a Virgin, reconcile Penitents, consecrate the Oil for Exorcisms, and the Crium for the Sick, if need be; but at Rome, the Bishop only may do it.

The Fourth Title is of Baptism. It imports, That Baptism remits Sins; but according to Pope Innocent, it does not wash away the stain of Bigamy [or second Marriages]; That besides Baptism, Confirmation is necessary to Perfection; That he does not deny, but that Confirmation belongs to the Bishop; but yet that the Chrism was established in the Nicene Council (which is a false Supposition). That the same Linen Clothes in which the baptized are anointed, may be used many times; That the same Person who was Godfather at Baptism, may be Godfather at the Confirmation, but that it is not the Custom; That a Man unbaptized, cannot be a Godfather; That a Man may stand Surety for a Girl, and a Woman for a Boy; That the baptized may not eat with the Catechumens, much less with the Gentiles.

The Fifth is of the Mass for the Dead. It imports, That among the Latins, the Monks use to carry the Corps to Church, to anoint their Breast with the holy Communion, to say Mass upon them, and then to carry them out to the Grave, and to say a Prayer over them after they are interred, to say Masses for them the 1st, the 3d, and the 30th, day, and at the years end, if they will; That for the Laity, they say Masses the 3d, the 7th, and the 30th, day; That they ought to Fast 7 days for them; That Masses are not to be said for Children, unless they be 7 years old; That tho' S. Denis says, 'Tis a Blasphemy to pray for a wicked Man, yet S. Austin says, The Sacrifice is to be offered for all those that are dead in the Communion of the Church; That Presbyters and Deacons that will not, or ought not to communicate, are not to celebrate.

The Sixth Chapter is of Abbots, Monks and Monasteries. It is to this effect: The Abbot may withdraw himself with the Bishop's leave; the Abbot's Election belongs to the Monks; the Abbot cannot change his place, without the Bishop's consent, and without leaving a Priest in the Church, where he was, for the Ecclesiastical Ministry. Monks ought to have no Women with them, and Nuns to have no Men among them. A Monk cannot make a Vow without his Abbot's consent; if he make any, it is null. A Monk, chosen by his Society to be a Presbyter, ought not to leave his Rule; if he grows Proud, he shall be deposed, and become the last. It is at the liberty of Monasteries to receive infirm and weak Persons. It is also free for Monks to wash Lay-men's Feet, unless it be on Holy Thursday. It does not belong to Monks, to impose Penances on the Laity.

The Seventh Chapter is of Womens Functions in the Church or Monastery. They are forbidden covering the Altar with the Corporal, laying the Oblations or the Chalice upon the Altar, standing among the Clerks in the Church, sitting at Meat with Presbyters, imposing Penance: But they are permitted to receive the Eucharist upon a black Veil, according to the use of the Greeks; they may make the Oblations (that is, the Loaves offered upon the Altar) but not according to the practice of the Romans.

The Eighth Chapter is of the Customs of the Greeks and Latins. These are observed there: On Sunday the Greeks and the Romans do not ride on Horse-back nor in a Coach, unless in be to go to Church; they bake no Bread, and do not go to the Bath; The Greeks write no publick Acts; they both set their Slaves to work on Sunday. The Greek Monks have Servants waiting on them; The Latins have none. The Latins eat on Christmas-Eve, after having said Mass at the 9th Hour. The Greeks do all sup the Evening after the Mass. Both the Greeks and the Latins say, they ought to assist the Sick of the Plague. The Greeks do not give to Swine the Meat of strangled Beasts; the Skin, the Wool and the Horns of them may be taken. One may wash his Head and Feet on Sunday; but the Romans do not follow that practice.

The Ninth Chapter is of the Irish and Britains, who differ from the Church about the keeping of Easter and their Tonsure. It is said there, That their Bishops shall be confirmed by the laying on of the hands of a Catholic Bishop; That the Chrism or the Eucharist cannot be given them, except they make Profession to re-unite themselves to the Church; and that those are to be baptized who doubt of their Baptism.

The Tenth is of those who are possessed with the Devil, or kill themselves. If they were godly Men, before they came to be possessed, they may be pray'd for; but if this Possession happened to them, after a Despair or some other Passion, they are not to be prayed for. Masses cannot be said for Self-murderers, but they may Pray and give Alms for them: Nevertheless some say Mass for them that kill'd themselves, being out of their Wits, and having no use of their Reason.

*Theodorus

The Eleventh contains many Questions about married Persons. It is said there, they ought to abstain from the use of Matrimony three days before the Communion, forty days before Easter, forty days before and after Child-bearing; That a Man may leave his Wife guilty of Adultery, and Marry another; and that she may Marry again after two Years Penance: But the Wife cannot leave her Husband, tho' an Adulterer; That a lawful (*) Marriage cannot be dissolved, but with the Consent of both Parties; but either of them may give his consent, that the other withdraw into a Monastery, and then that the other may Marry again, if he had not been married before. If a Husband is made a Slave, the Wife may Marry at the years end; That a Deacon's Wife, forsaken by him, is not permitted to Marry; That a Man may Marry again, within one Month after his Wife's death, and a Woman within one year after her Husband's Decease; That a Woman, that hath vowed Widowhood, cannot Marry again; notwithstanding if she should Marry again, it shall be free for the Husband to let her fulfil her Vow or not; That the Bishop may dispense with Vows: That it is free for one baptized to keep or to put away his Wife, being a Pagan. If a Woman forsake her Husband, within five years after he may take another Wife. If she be carried away Captive, he may Marry another, one year after; but if she cometh again, he shall leave this last; That it is lawful among the Greeks to Marry in the Third Degree, and among the Romans in the Fifth only; but Marriages contracted by Persons within the Third or the Fourth degree of Consanguinity, are not disannulled. Parents are bound to bestow their Daughter on him, to whom they have betrothed her, except she be unwilling. Children are in the Power of their Father, till they be 16 years old; but that time being past, they may enter into a Religious Order, and the Father cannot Marry them against their Will. I leave out some other Constitutions less important; as also the 12th Chapter of Slaves, as being now out of date.

[(*) Marriage--- dissolved by the consent of both Parties, or of one to withdraw into a Monastery.] The great Veneration and Honour which the Fathers of these Ages had for a single and a Monastick Life, made them not only to have a mean Opinion of that sacred Institution of God, Marriage, but also approve of very slight Reasons of dissolving it. So apt are Men to make void the Law of God to maintain their own Traditions, whereas neither Celibacy it self is absolutely necessary for a Monastick Life, many of the Monks in the more pure Ages being married; nor, if it were, could the consent of one or both Parties dissolve the Bonds of it upon that account, For what God hath so joined together, no Man can put asunder, unless it be for the only Cause allowed by God for Divorce, Adultery.]

Mat. 15.6.

Athan. Ep. ad Drac.

Mat. 19.6.

The 13th Chapter is upon different Customs. It is observed therein, that there are Three solemn Fasts in the Year, that is, besides the ordinary Lent, Forty Days before Christmas, and Forty Days after Whitsunday. It is said there, That the Laity are bound to perform their Vows; That Friars may not bear Arms; That one Child may be given in exchange for another to a Monastery; That the Church ought to pay Tribute, if it be the custom; That Tythes are to be given only to the Poor, and Strangers; That he that Fasts for the Dead, does good to himself; but that God alone knows, how it goes with the Dead; That infirm Folks may Eat and Drink at any Hour.

The 14th Chapter is about the Reconciliation of Penitents. It imports, that the Romans do Reconcile them, intra absidem, (that is to say, near the Altar, in the place which is Rail'd in,) but that the Greeks do not do so; That the Bishop only maketh the Reconciliation, on Holy-Thurs'day; but if the Bishop cannot well do it, he may empower a Presbyter to do it. He adds, That in his Province there is no Reconciliation, because there is no Publick Penance.

M. Petit hath joined to this Work some other Collections of Canons, bearing Theodorus's Name. The 1st might be entituled a Penitential, rather than that before mentioned. It is discoursed there first of all, what they ought to do who are enjoind a Penance of One, Two, or Three Years Fasting. 2. What they may do to redeem those Penances, whether by reciting Psalms, or giving Money to the Poor; what number of Psalms they ought to say, or what Sums they ought to bestow. 3. After what manner Penitents are to come before the Bishop to receive Penance. 4. Of the different Penances to be imposed for different Crimes. There one may see some remainders of the Ancient Penance. Penitents did come in the beginning of Lent to the Door of the Metropolitan Church bare-footed, covered with Sack-Cloth, and did cast themselves on the ground. The Arch-Priests, or the Ministers of Parishes, did receive them there, and enjoined them Penances; then they brought them into the Church, they sung the Seven Psalms, the Bishop laid hands on them, threw Ashes and (cc) Holy Water on them, covered them with Hair-Cloth, and

[(cc) Holy Water.] This Heathen Rite of sprinkling Consecrated Water for the Purging and Purifying of Men, which may seem to have had its Original from the Jewish Law, which prescribes a Water made with the Ashes of an Heifer to purifie the Unclean, by sprinkling them there- with, was so far from being used or approved by the Christians for many Ages, that they abhorred the use of it as a Diabolical Superstition. Theodoret commends a Fact of Valentinian, when Tribune, after Theod. lib. Emperor, as most suitable to the Christian practice; That going before the Emperor Julian the Apostate into the Temple of Fortune, the Priests sprinkled him as the rest of the Company with Holy Water, which when he espied upon his Garment, he immediately not only cut off that part where it was, but also smote the Priest with his Fist in Anger, saying, He was a Christian, and therefore was defiled, not cleansed by their Holy Water, which shews, that it was not then used among the Christians; but in this superstitious Age it crept into the Church among other Ceremonies, and is still in use in the Church, as a Purgative from Sin.] Roman in Numb. 19. turned Theodorus of Canterbury. turned them out of the Church. On Holy Thursday they came again, and having confessed their Sins again, the Bishop Prayed to God to forgive them their Sins, and said some Prayers over them. It was not lawful to receive a Penitent of another Diocels, or Parish, without the leave of the Bishop, or the Ministers. Men were yet put to Penance for Eating things strangled, or Blood of Beasts. Penances were shorter than in former times, but then they were enjoined for very light faults. All others, but Bishops, and Presbyters, were forbidden hearing Confessions, or imposing Penances. The Author of this Collection is different from the former, the Constitutions themselves are different from those in the former Collection. There be some of them which seem to be made since Theodorus's time.

The Ten Capitules proposed to the Council of Hereford by Theodorus, related by Beda, do certainly belong to this Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, tho' they be not taken out of his Penitential, but out of a Collection of Canons. It is decreed in the first, That Easter shall be kept the Sunday after the 14th Moon in March. In the 2d, Bishops are forbidden to encroach upon the Bishopricks of their Brethren. In the 3d, They are forbidden to molest Monasteries, or to take their Goods from them. The 4th, Is against those Friars who go from one Monastery to another, without their Abbot's leave. The 5th, Against the Clerks, who leave their Bishop. Other Bishops are forbidden to entertain them. The 6th imports, That foreign Bishops and Clerks shall content themselves with the Hospitality used towards them, and shall not perform any Function of their Ministry, without permission from the Bishop of the place. The 7th, Appoints Councils to be kept Twice a Year. The 8th, Forbids Bishops to prefer themselves before others out of Ambition, and enjoins them to follow the time and order of their Ordination. The 9th declares, That it is fit to encrease the number of Bishops, according as Believers encrease in number. The last Prohibits unlawful Marriages. It forbids Husbands leaving their Wives, except for the cause of Adultery; and orders those that shall leave them to remain unmarried. By this decision it appears, that the former Collection is not wholly Theodorus's, because the 10th Chapter contains decisions contrary to this.

The Capitules Published by M. Dacharius, in the 9th Vol. of his Spicilegium, are the greatest part of them in M. Petit's first Collection: But this Collection is more Faithful and Genuine; for tho' some places thereof may be corrected by the Manuscripts of the first Collection, it must be confessed, that in this Theodorus's Canons are set down in the order observed by Theodorus, and that they are not mixed with so many strange Canons. These are the most remarkable things contained in them. In the 12th it is said, That among the Greeks, the Clergy and the Laity communicate every Sunday: But that among the Latins, it is left to Men's liberty, to communicate, or not; and that those that do not communicate, are not Excommunicated for that. The 35th, Is that famous Article of the Confession. It imports, That it is lawful, in case of necessity, to confess to God alone. Gratian, Burchard, and Ivo Carnutenfis, do quote this passage otherwise. Theodorus says in his Penitential, That some say, with the Greeks, Men ought to confess their Sins to God alone: Others believe, they ought to confess them to the Priests; and almost the whole Church is of that Mind: That Confession which is made to God blots out Sins, and that which is made to Men teaches us, how they are blotted out. God oftentimes does invisibly heal our Evils, and sometimes he uses the help of Physicians. This differs much from the very words of Theodorus's Penitential, if they be faithfully related in F. Dacharius's Collection.

M. Petit hath also carefully gathered the Canons cited under Theodorus's Name, in a Collection of the Councils of Spain, in the Penitentials of Egbert of York, and of Beda in the Roman Penitential, and in that of Rabanus, by Regino, Burchard, Ivo Carnutenfis, Gratian, and several other Collectors of Canons: But all those Authors have many false Quotations, and so their Authority is not much to be relied upon.

All this shews, that we have not the true Penitential of Theodorus in its Integrity and Purity; That what M. Petit Published under the Title of a Penitential, is nothing less than that; That the Capitules, which he Published also from a Manuscript, which Mr. Faber communicated to him, are not Theodorus's neither; and all the rest of his Collections is taken out of suspicious Monuments. Nevertheless he is to be commended for his diligence and labour, and we are beholden to him, for having gathered together all that bore Theodorus's Name. Spleman found in Cambridge Library a great Penitential ascribed to Theodorus, of which he gives us the Titles. It's to be wished it were Published, that we might see whether it be Theodorus's own Original, or another Collection of Canons.

Mr. Petit joined to Theodorus's Penitential, an old complement of Canons, a Collection of divers Monuments about Church Rites, and chiefly about Penance, taken out of several Manuscripts, and a Collection of several Papers Constitutions, Bulls, Edicts, Declarations, Privileges, Letters, Confessions, and other pieces, which he hath Published. These Monuments are accompanied with Two Dissertations, the one upon Theodorus's Pastoral Vigilancy, to shew that all Bishops are bound not only to take Care of their own Church, but moreover to watch over all the other, to help them in their need; The other upon Penance, in which he pretends to defend Theodorus's Opinion, and to prove against F. Morinus, that in the Ancient Church, there was no Penance for secret Sins, tho' never so grievous. Yea, and he brings brings in Proofs, tending to shew, That there lay no Obligation to confess them to Men, nor to submit them to the Ministry of the Church-Keys, and that inward Repentance was sufficient to obtain the Remission of them. Lastly, he adds some Notes upon his pretended Penitential; wherein he shews a great deal of Learning and Reading. These are the Contents of the Two Volumes in Quarto, Printed at Paris, by Dezallier, in 1679, under the Title of Theodori Penitentialis. Theodorus of Canterbury.

FRUCTUOSUS.

Fructuosus, the Founder of several Monasteries in Spain, translated from the Bishoprick of Dumes, to the Arch-Bishoprick of Toledo, by the Decree of the 10th Council of that City, composed two Rules, the one for the Monastery of Complutum, and the other common for all Monasteries, which is as a Supplement to the former; they are both found one after another in the second part of the Rules of Benedictus Anianus, [Printed by Holstenius, at Paris, 1663.] Fructuosus.

CEOLFRIDE.

Ceolfride, Abbot of * Farrow, in England, Beda's Tutor, wrote a Letter upon Easter, to Naito, King of the Picts, which his Disciple preserved us. He flourished toward the end of the seventh Century, and died in 720. In that Letter he treats of the several sorts of the Clerks Tonfure, and of the Celebration of Easter, and confesseth those Differences are of small consequence, and that they should not trouble the Peace. Ceolfride.

ADELMOUS.

Adelmus, Abbot of Malmesbury, in England, wrote also a Book concerning Easter, against the Custom of the Britains; and a Book of Virginity, in Prose and Verse. We have yet this last Work. That in Prose was Printed by Sonnus, in 1576, and inserted in the Bibl. Patrum; that in Verse was published by Canisius, in 1608. In this Tract he gives an Encomium of many holy Persons, whose Life he describeth. Adelmus, or Aldhelmus.

This Saint is believed to be he, who was Bishop of Sherburn, who had made a Book of Problems in Verse, in imitation of Symposius, of about a thousand Verses. But Sigebert, who speaks of these two Authors, in two different Chapters, seems to distinguish them. One must not look for Politeness in the Works of this Englishman.

ADAMAN.

Adaman, Abbot of Huy, wrote a Treatise of the places in the Holy Land, taken * out of the Memoirs of Arculphus, a French Bishop, who had travelled into Palastine. He wrote also the Life of S. Columbus, his Predecessor. F. Mabillon hath published those two Tracts more entire and correct, [in Sac. Benedicti. III. p. 2.] Adaman.

Although it be not precisely known in what time this Author lived, it is probable, he lived about the end of the Seventh Century. He made a Commentary upon the Song of Songs; in which, what is said of the Bride and the Bridegroom, he applied to Christ and Aponius.

and his Church. We have Six Books of that Work in the Biblioth. Patr. It is pretty well written, full of Wit and Learning, and one of the best that was made upon that Subject. We have an Abridgment of the rest of that Commentary, made by a Benedictine Abbot: And Angelomus, who lived above 700 Years ago, copied out several places of it in his Commentary upon the Song of Songs, [Printed by it self at Friburg, 1538.]

CRESCONIUS, an African Bishop, flourished towards the end of the 7th Century. He made a Collection of Canons, in Two parts. The First entituled, An Abridgment of the Canon-Law, Contains the Titles pointing to the matters, together with the Citation of the Canons where they are found. The Second contains the Canons themselves, set down in their full length, in the same order that they are Cited in the Abridgment. This is entituled, An Harmony of the Canons, or, A Book of Canons. The Abridgment was Published [at Paris] in 1588, by M. Pitthaw, from a Manuscript of the Church of Troyes, and since that by M. Alcasararius [at Poitou] in 1630, and by F. Chifflet in 1649. M. Justel and Voellus inserted it also with the whole Harmony, in their Bibliotheca Juris Canonici, [or, A Compleat Body of the Canon Law.]

NO Authors did ever carry the Virgin Mary's Praises farther, than the Greeks of these latter Ages. We have already spoken of Eight Sermons of George Pisides upon that Subject. Here is a Monk, who is probably of the same time, not at all inferior to him in the Declamation, which he made upon the Birth of the Mother of God. He mingles with the Virgin's Commendations some Speeches, which he applies sometimes to S. Anne, sometimes to the Virgin. He brings in the Patriarchs, the Prophets, and the Righteous. Yea, and Adam himself acts his part there. If any Body liketh those kind of Discourses, he may consult the Originals; for we are not willing to make Extracts of them. Allatus thinks, this John was Arch-bishop of Bulgaria. It is not known when he lived.

[*] Syr. Rex.

WE have, under this Bishop's Name, a little Writing of the Original and Errors of the Jacobites, in which he says, That the Author of that Sect was a Monk of Syria, named James, surnamed Tzantzale, who had embraced Eutyches's Error, and Dioscorus's Party; That since the Council of Chalcedon, those among the Syrians, who sided with the Emperor, had been called Melchites, that is to say, Royalists, because Melchi* in Syriack signifieth King; and those who followed Eutyches's Opinion, took the Name of Jacobites. That these acknowledge, there were Two Natures in Christ before the Union, but they hold there is but one after the Union; and so they suppose either the confusion, or the mixture of the Two Natures, and are condemned as Theopaschitæ, because they believe the God-head did suffer; That they own the Three first Synods only; That when they cross their Foreheads they do it with one Finger only, to signify the Unity of Nature; That because of that they do not cross themselves from the right hand to the left, as others do, but from the left to the right; That they mingle the Oblation with Oil, and matter not much Communicating; That they put no Water into the Cup; That they care very little, whether they do Worship Images, or not, and look upon that as an indifferent thing; That they Eat Flesh in Lent; That they have their peculiar Offices, and have added these words to the Trisagion, Thou that art Crucified for us. There be some among them, who call themselves Chatzizarys. They Worship Crosses, and put Nails into them, to signify that the God-head suffered: But they differ from the true Jacobites, in that they own Two Natures in Christ, and seem to fall into Nestorius's Error, by saying, That during the Passion there were Two Persons in Christ, the one suffering, and the other beholding the sufferings. They Fast some Days before the time that they leave Eating Flesh. In Lent they Eat Eggs, Milk, and Butter; they offered unleavened Bread; They put no Water into the Cup; They Baptized their Crosses. I have made an exact Extract, or Abridgment, of that small Writing, because it contains some particulars pretty remarkable. It is not known when the Author of it lived. Yet in all probability he is of the 7th or 8th Century. Demetrius Cizicenus.

Upon what he says. That the Jacobites had their peculiar Offices, it may be observed, that in the Bibliotheca Patrum there is an Order of the Prayers and Ceremonies of the Baptism, and Mass, with some other Prayers for the use of the Syrian Jacobites, which are said to have been prescribed by Severus the Patriarch; that Work is probably of the same time.

Memoirs of the Schism of the Armenians.

THE Author of these Memoirs relates the Origin of the Schism of the Armenians, how they embraced the Error of the Eutychians, the different Parties that rose up among them, the Councils held among them, the Catholick and Heretick Bishops they had, and several other Particulars relating to them. The Author of these Memoirs belongs to the Eighth Century. Memoirs.

JOHANNES NICÆNUS's Memoirs upon Christ's Birth, directed to Zachary, a Christian of Armenia.

THIS Author handles this Question; Why the Festival of Christ's Birth is kept on the 25th. day of December; tho' the Constitutions of S. James and the Apostles, appointed that Feast-day on January the 6th, upon which day Christ's Baptism is celebrated. He pretends, that the custom of keeping that Festival on the 6th. of January, came from this, That John Baptist's Disciples, seeing Christ baptized on that day, and having heard, he was then 30 years old, they imagined it was also his Birth-day; That S. Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, did write of it to Pope Julius, who, grounded upon some of Joseph's Memoirs, in which it was observed, That in the 7th. Month of the Jews, in the Feast of Tabernacles, the Angel had appeared to the High-priest and stricken him dumb, until that Elizabeth had brought forth a Son; having cast up the Days, and Months, he found that Christ's Birth-day fell on the 25th. of December, and established that custom in Rome. That St. Basil was of the same Mind, and wrote to S. Gregory Nazianzen, to procure the approbation of that practice in the Council of Constantinople, but that many would not receive it; That Honorius the Emperor persuaded his Brother to follow the use of Rome in that; That S. Chrysostom had approved it, and with S. Epiphanius had appointed Christmas to be kept on the 25th. of December; That afterwards, this was confirmed into a Synod held in Constantinople, which writ of it to all the Patriarchs, who did all embrace this Practice. Much might be said against this Historian's Observations, which are almost all false. But we must not seek for Exactness nor Truth in the Memoirs of these modern Greeks. Johan. COUNCILS

Seventh Century.

A Conference held in 601. in England, in Worcestershire, between Augustine the Monk, and the British Bishops.

A Conference held in 601.

AUGUSTINE the Monk, had instructed the English, and converted their King Ethelbert; and having a mind to unite the Britains to the Roman Church, he invited their Bishops and Doctors to a Conference. When they were come to it, he exhorted them to endeavour unanimously the establishment of Religion. These Britains did not keep Easter at the same day with other Churches, and had several practices differing from them. They stood in the defence of them stoutly; and Augustine, seeing he could not prevail with them to leave them, they say, he proposed to them, to bring a sick Man in, and on either side to pray for his Health, and to follow the Usages and Doctrines of those that should heal him. They brought in a blind Man, and the Britains having tried in vain to restore him to his Sight, they affirm, that Augustine restored him by his Prayers. This Miracle did shake the Britains: But they said, they could regulate nothing, without being acquainted with their Brethren's mind, and they required a Synod might be kept, which was granted to them. Seven British Bishops met there, and the ablest Monks of their Monastery of Bangor. Augustine propounded three things to them: 1. To keep Easter the same day with the Roman Church. 2. To baptize according to the practice of the same Church. 3. To Preach the Gospel to the English, promising them the toleration of their other Practices, if they would yield these three Points. They would not, and went away very much offended, for that he did not come to meet them, when they came to him. Upon that refusal, Augustine told them, That since they would not have Peace, they should have War; and that they should be slain by those to whom they would not Preach Life. That was executed accordingly. The King of the English declared War against them, and defeated them in a bloody Fight, in which he put to the Sword above 1200 Monks of the Monastery of Bangor, who were come to the Army of the Britains, to pray for God's assistance upon them. This relation is taken out of the second Book of Beda's Church-history, chap. 2. Sigebert marks the same Facts in his Chronicle; and some Historians do accuse Augustine the Monk of having had a hand in the Massacre of those poor Britains, who did not deserve such hard usage, by reason they maintained their ancient Customs, and the Liberties of their Churches, without deviating from the Catholick Faith.

A Council of Toledo, held under King Gondemare, in 610.

THIS Council was made up of Fifteen Bishops of the Carthaginian Province, who owned the Arch-bishop of Toledo for their Metropolitan, and promised subjection to him. King Gondemare caused this Constitution to be put in execution, and gave out a Declaration, which was subscribed by the Bishops of the other Provinces of Spain, wherein he decreed, That the Bishop of Toledo shall be acknowledged Primate or Metropolitan of the whole Carthaginian Province, and enjoins all the Bishops of this Province to obey him. He observeth there, That the Country of Carpetania is not a Province, but part of the Carthaginian Province; and that as the other Provinces of his Kingdom, viz. Lusitania, Bætica and Tarraconensis, have each of them but one Primate, the Carthaginian likewise must have but one; according to the Canons and the ancient Usage.

Council of Toledo.

Council of Egara, under King Sisebut, held in the year 614.

THE Bishops of the Province of Tarraco, confirmed in this Council the Decree made in that of Huesca, concerning the Celebacy of the Clergy. The Town, where it was kept, was in the Province of Tarraco, but it is unknown, at present, under the name of Egara. M. Barluzim hath made a short Dissertation, in which he asserts, That Egara was in the Place, where is now a little Town, named, Terrasse in Catalonia, within 4 or 5 Leagues of Barcelona, in the Bishoprick whereof it is found. He proves it, 1. by the Situation of that Castle, which agreeth to that of Egara, which stood between Barcelona and Girona. 2. Because in the ancient Terriers or Maps, Egara and Terracia are spoken of, as standing in the same place. 3. Because in a Letter of Raimondus of Barcelona, of the year 1112. it is observed, That the Parish of Terrasse stands in the place, where the Church of Egara formerly stood.

Council of Egara.

Council V. of Paris.

THIS Council met in 615. called by Clotharius the second, then in Possession of the Kingdoms, which did belong to Theodebert and Theoderick; therefore it was made up of a great number of Bishops. It is observed in the end of the Canons of this Council, That they had been subscribed by 79 Bishops; but we have not their Names, neither is it certain, whether they were present in it. If this number of Bishops met there, it was the most numerous Council that ever was held in France. It made 15 Canons of great importance.

Council V. of Paris.

By the 1st. it is ordered. That the ancient Canons shall be kept; That for the future, a Bishop being dead, he that shall be chosen by the Metropolitan, who is to ordain him, by the Bishops of the Province, and by the Clergy and the People of the City, shall succeed him; and that Ordinations made either by Force, Faction or Bribery, or without the approbation of the Metropolitan, and the consent of the Clergy and the People, shall be declared null.

The 2^d. Canon forbids Bishops to chuse their Successors. It forbids also providing them Successors, unless they be altogether unable to govern their Church and Clergy.

The 3^d. imports, That if a Clerk, of what Quality soever he be, despising his Bishop, have Recourse unto Princes, great Lords, or to some other Protectors, no Body shall receive him before he obtains his Bishop's Pardon: And that if any Body keeps him, after Warning given him from the Bishop, he shall be punished according to the Ecclesiastical Laws.

The 4th. declares that no (dd) Secular Judge shall judge or condemn any Presbyter, Deacon or Clerk, nor any of those that belong to the Church, without acquainting the Bishop with it; and that if an Body attempts to do it, he shall be separated from the Church, till he amends and acknowledges his Fault.

[(dd) No Secular Judge shall Judge, &c.] The Devotion of the Emperors, in the more serene Times of the Church, when Kings became nursing Fathers to Christianity, granted several Immunities and Privileges to the Clergy. Constantine the Great freed the Church of Carthage from the paying Taxes, lest it being im-verish'd thereby, God's Worship should be interrupted or hindered. And afterward, about the Year 536. Justinian ordained, That in causes merely Civil, the Bishops should hear and determine of the Causes of the Monks and Nuns, as also of their Clergy, unless the Matters under decision were too difficult for the Bishop: In which case they were commanded to go to the Civil Judges. These Imperial Grants did the Bishops (as Patrons of the Ecclesiastical Franchises) confirm and establish by several Canons in this and several other Councils; and that the Secular Judges might not dare to break in upon these Privileges, they back'd them with Anathema's and Excommunications, and so might warrantably enough do, so long as the Laws of the Empire stood in Force: But for the Clergy to stand upon such Exemptions as these, and claim them upon the Account of their Order, as the Clergy of the Romish Community now doth, is both contrary to Scripture and the Practice of the purer Times of Christianity: For before Justinian's Time, the Bishop's ordinary Jurisdiction was but a Power of Enquiry and Restraint, for violating and corrupting the Ecclesiastical Discipline.]

The 5th. puts the Franchisements of the Church under the Bishop's Protection, and forbids under the Pain of Excommunication, to constrain any belonging to the Church to serve the Publick (ee).
[(ee) Not constrain any churchmen to serve the Publick.] It hath been the Wisdom of all Ages and Nations, but principally of the Christian Church, to exempt their Clergy from Publick and Civil Employments and Offices, that they might with the greater Care and Diligence attend the Service of God, which this Council endeavours to preserve.]

The 6th. orders, That the Revenues given to maintain the Church Fabricks, shall be managed by the Bishops, Presbyters and other Clerks, serving those Churches according to the Intention of the Donor; and that, whosoever shall take away any part of them, he shall be cut off from the Church, till he hath made Restitution.

By the 7th. all sorts of Persons are forbidden to seize, either by an Order from the Prince, or by Authority from a Judge, or in any other manner whatsoever, on the Estate left by the Bishops, or other Clerks, whether they belong to the Church, or be their own. It is ordered, That they shall be kept and preserved by the Arch deacon and the Clergy: They are excommunicated that shall seize on them; and it is said, They are to be looked upon as Murderers of the Poor.

The 8th. forbids Arch-deacons, yea, and the Bishops themselves, to appropriate to themselves, after the Death of Abbots, Presbyters and other Clerks, ministering in the Churches, the Moveables belonging to them, under pretence of taking them for the Bishop or the Church.

The 9th. forbids Bishops to challenge to themselves the Goods, Churches or Clerks of other Bishops, although the Kingdom or Province had been divided; and those that shall do so, it deprives them of those charitable Duties which their Brethren use to pay them, till they have restored what they have taken, and made Restitution of the Fruits.

The 10th. renews the Constitution made in the second Council of Lyons, held in 570. whereby it was ordered, That the last Wills of Bishops Presbyters and other Clerks, who bequeath Legacies to Churches, shall be executed, tho' their Testament were not in due Form.

The 11th. Canon renews the Constitution, whereby a Bishop, being at Variance with another Bishop, is bound to apply himself to the Metropolitan; and he that applieth himself to a Secular Judge, is deprived of Communion with the Metropolitan, until he give an account of his Proceeding in the next Synod.

The 12th. separateth from the Communion, until the Point of Death, such Monks and Nuns as go out of the Monastery, which they had chosen for their Abode, if, being warned of it, they refuse to return: But if they return to it, and make an humble Satisfaction, the Eucharist may be given them.

The 13th. Canon excommunicates the Virgins or Widows, who do marry, after having put off the Secular Habit, to lead a Religious Life at home.

The 14th. prohibits Marriage with the Brother's Widow, the Wife's Sister, the Daughters of two Sisters, the Uncle's Widow by the Father's and Mother's Side, and with a Maiden that hath taken a Religious Habit. It excommunicates those that contract such Marriages, till they separate themselves.

The 15th. imports, That the Jews are not to sue for the Costs of Recovery of Money from Christians; and if any of them should obtain them, he ought to be baptized, with all his Family.

To this Council is annexed Clotharius's Edict, containing the Confirmation of the foregoing Canons. Nevertheless, there be some of them, to which he hath subjoyned Modifications and particular Conditions. To the Canon concerning Bishop's Ordinations, it adds, that if the Person elected be found worthy of it, he shall be confirmed by Order from the Prince; and that a Court-Officer may be chosen, if he be a deserving and learned Man. To the Canon forbidding Bishops to go to Court, it adds, They may go thither, to obtain some Favour, and upon what account soever they shall go thither, if they return with the Prince's Letters, they are to be excused. As for the Inhibition of Clerks applying themselves to Secular Judges, it excepts from it Criminal Matters, into which Secular Judges are appointed to enquire, calling the Bishops to them. It excepts likewise Matters concerning the Publick, which the Bishop and the Secular Magistrate are appointed Judges of. It adds some other Ordinances about Civil Matters.

Council held in France, about the same Time as the former, of which the Place is unknown.

THE same Manuscript, where this Council of Paris is found, contained the Canons of another Council, of which we know neither the Place nor the Year.

The 1st. orders the Execution of the Canons of the Council of Paris.

The 2^d prohibits consecrating Altars in the Places where Corps are buried.

The 3^d. orders, That Monks shall observe their Rule, and live in common, under the Government of an Abbot or a Superior.

The 4th. prohibits baptizing in Monasteries, celebrating Masses for Secular Persons deceased, and burying the Dead, without the Bishop's Leave.

The following Canons to the 8th. are wanting, the Manuscript being defective in that Place.

The 8th. forbids Clerks to have Women in their Houses, excepting their Sister or Aunt.

The 9th. confirms the Right of Sanctuaries for Churches, and prohibits taking away by force those that fly into Churches.

The 10th. Canon is wanting.

The 11th. prohibits depriving Abbots or Arch-priests of their Ecclesiastical Function, unless they be guilty of some Fault, that deserveth it, as also advancing them to those Dignities, with the Prospect of some Reward: It prohibits, moreover, making a Layman Arch-priest.

The 12th. forbids Presbyters and Deacons to marry, upon pain of being turned out of the Church.

The 13th. prohibits entertaining those that are excommunicated by their Bishop; and that they may be known, it orders the Bishops, that excommunicated them, to acquaint the neighbouring Towns and Churches with it.

The 14th. decrees, That Freemen, having sold or engaged themselves, out of necessity, shall be restored again to their former state, giving back the Price they had taken for their Engagement.

The 15th. Canon is imperfect: The next are lost; nay, it is not known how many there were of them.

Council in France, &c.

Council II. of Sevil.

THIS Council was held under King Sisebut*, in November 619. and made up of seven Bishops of the Province of Batrica, the president whereof was Isidore Bishop of Sevil. Several Ecclesiastical Affairs were treated of there, which are related in the Acts of this Council.

Council II. of Sevil.

In the 1st. Action was received the Petition presented by Theodulphus, Bishop of Malaga; wherein he complain'd, That his Diocess, having been spoiled by the Wars, was become a Prey to the neighbouring Bishops, who had invaded it. It is ordered, That all the Churches formerly belonging to him, shall be restored to him, all Right of Prescription notwithstanding, because none such is to be alledged when Hostilities are the Ground of the Possession.

[* Al. Sisebutus, a King of Spain, of the Gothic Race.]

In the 2^d. Action they named Deputies to compose the Difference between the Bishop of Astigi and that of Corduba, about a Church which they both claimed to belong to their Jurisdiction, and to be within the Limits of their Diocess. The Council orders, That Deputies shall first of all examine the Limits of the Diocess, and then the Possession; and that if it be of thirty Years standing, the Prescription shall take place in the behalf of the Possessor.

The 3^d. Business debated in this Council, is concerning a Clerk of Italica, who having left his own Church, went to that of Corduba. They took from thence the Opportunity to renew the Canons, forbidding Clerks to leave their own Churches to go to others.

The 4th. Constitution is against the unlawful Ordinations, made at Astigi, where some persons that had married Widows had been ordained Clerks, their Ordinations are declared null, and they are forbidden to be raised to the Order of Deacons.

Council II. of Sevil. In the 5th. place they depose a Presbyter and two Clerks, of the Church of Egabrò, who had been irregularly ordain'd, the Bishop having sore Eyes, had only laid his Hands on them, whilst that a Presbyter did bless them. They declare they would have punished that Presbyter for his boldness, if he had been alive still.

The 6th. Deliberation is, Concerning a Presbyter of Corduba, unjustly condemned by his Bishop: He is restored again, and Bishops are generally forbidden to depose a Priest or a Deacon, unless their Cause was examined in a Council. They are excommunicated, That condemn them without Examination, by a Tyrannical Power, and not by Canonical Authority; or that advance some out of Favour, and debase others out of Hatred or Envy, and condemn them upon light Suspitions. They add, That a Bishop alone may indeed confer the Dignity of a Presbyter or a Deacon but he alone cannot take it away from them to whom he hath given it. This is an excellent Instruction for Bishops.

The 7th. Constitution is made about the Permission which Agapius, Bishop of Corduba, had given to some Presbyters, to set up Altars and consecrate Churches, in the Bishop's Absence. The Bishops say, They do not wonder that such a Bishop had granted such Licences, because he was ignorant of the Church Discipline, having been raised all on a sudden to the Sacerdotal Dignity: But they prohibit that Practice for the future, declaring, That altho' Presbyters have several Functions common with the Bishops, there be some forbidden them by the Ecclesiastical Laws, such as the Consecration of Priests, Deacons and Virgins, the erection of an Altar, the Blessing of the Unction: That they cannot consecrate an Altar or a Church, nor confer the Holy Ghost by the Impositions of Hands on the baptiz'd, or on Heretick Converts, nor consecrate the Holy Chrism, nor anoint the Fore head of the baptiz'd therewith, nor so much as reconcile a Penitent in a publick Mass, nor send Circular Letters: That all these things are forbidden to Presbyters, because they have not the supreme Degree of the Sacerdotal Dignity, which by the Authority of the Canons is appropriated to Bishops only. They add, That Presbyters are not permitted to enter into the Baptistry, nor to baptize before the Bishop, nor to reconcile Penitents without his Order, nor to Consecrate the Body and Blood of Christ, to Preach, to Bless or Salute the People, in the presence of the Bishop.

The 8th. Decision is against such a Man of a Church, as having been set at Liberty by his Bishop, became disobedient. It is ordered, He shall be deprived of his Liberty, by reason of his Disobedience.

The 9th. Constitution imports, That the Stewards of Churches ought not to be chosen out of the Laity, but the Clergy; and that the Bishops shall not manage Church Revenues without the assistance of the Steward.

The 10th. Constitution confirms the Monasteries founded in the Province of Batica, and forbids Bishops, upon pain of Excommunication, to seize on their Possessions, and to spoil them.

The 11th. grants to the Monks the Management of the Estate, belonging to Monasteries, of Religious Women, upon condition that they shall dwell severally; and shall have no familiarity with them, they shall not see them, they shall speak with the Superiour only, and that in the Presence of Witnesses.

The 12th. Business was, The Conversion of a Bishop of Syria, of the Sect of the Acephali, who coming into the Council and denying there were two Natures in Christ, and maintaining the Godhead was passible in him, was convinc'd of the Truth, and converted by the Arguments of the Bishops of this Assembly.

In the last definition of this Council, it is proved, That there are two Natures in Christ, united in one only Person.

These Constitutions are subscribed by Isidore Bishop of Sevil, and by the Bishops of Elvira, Asidonia, Astigi, Italica, Tuca, Malaga and Corduba. This last, who was charged with Ignorance in the Council, was not Agapius but Honorius, who probably did succeed him.

Council of Rheims, under Sonnatius.

Council of Rheims. FLodoard relates, That Sonnatus, Bishop of Rheims, held a Council of about forty Bishops, which made several Constitutions, whereof he inserted the Extract in his History.

By the 1st. it is order'd, that no Body shall appropriate to himself what the Church hath invested him in as Tenant or Trustee, how long soever his Possession be.

The 2d. forbids the Cabals of Presbyters and Clerks against their Bishops.

The 3d. confirms the Canons of the Council of Paris, held under Clotharius.

The 4th. orders, That the Pastors of Churches shall carefully seek out Hereticks, to convert them.

The 5th. prohibits rash Excommunications, and gives to the Provincial Council Authority to judge of the Validity of the Excommunication.

The 6th. forbids Secular Judges to impose upon Clerks publick Taxes, or to lay any Penalty upon them, without the Bishop's Consent. Bishops are enjoined to correct Clerks, and forbid den to admit into the Clergy, without the Prince's or the Judge's Leave, those that are entrusted with the Care of the Revenue of the King's Lands.

The 7th. threatens to excommunicate those that shall violently take from the Church the Criminals fled into it (ff). It orders, That before they be delivered, they shall take an Oath from them, into whose Hands they are delivered; That they shall not put them to Death, nor maim them, nor rack them; and that none shall be suffered to go out, before he hath promised to do Penance for his Crime.

[(ff) The 7th. threatens to excommunicate those that shall violently take from the Church the Criminals fled into it.] The Original of this Privilege, allowed by the Heathens, and afterward by the Christians, to their Temples or Churches, was certainly taken from the Divine Constitution, given to Moses, to erect six Cities of Refuge in the Jewish Nation, though not altogether conformable to it, nor of so beneficial an use; for Moses made the Cities only a Refuge, and that for such Man-slayers alone as had killed their Neighbours unawares; but the Heathens made their Temples, and that for all manner of Wickednesses, for so Livy says of the Asylum erected by Romulus at Rome: Asylum aperuit, quo quisque perfugerit ab omni noxa liberatus esset: And so Herodotus speaks of Hercules's Asylum at Athens. These Refuge-Temples were afterward much increased among the Heathen, and at length, about the Year 300. came to be in use among the Christians; for they thought it a shame that the Temples of the Heathen Gods should enjoy so great a Privilege, as to be Refuges for the Oppressed, and the Christian Temples should be destitute of it: Whereupon they were made such by the Edict of Theodosius and Valentinian, and also by the Canons of the Councils. But although such Grants might be of very good Advantage among Christians, being kept within the Bounds of the first Institution, to be a Protection for the Innocent and Oppressed; yet as they have been, and still are, abused in the Roman and other Churches, being made a Refuge for Murderers, Rebels, and other enormous Criminals, they are grievous both to the Church and all Civil Societies, and have been complain'd of, as such, by many eminent Lights of the Church, in the several Ages of it.]

The 9th. declareth, That Men ought to have no Converse with one guilty of wilful Murder, unless he committed it in his own Defence, and does not grant him the Viaticum, that is to say, the Absolution, but only at the Point of Death.

The 10th. condemns those that keep to themselves the Goods given by their Parents to Churches or Monasteries.

The 24th. excommunicates Judges, that shall despise the Canons, or violate the Prince's Edict given at Paris.

The 25th. imports, That he that is ordain'd Bishop ought to be a Native, and chosen by the Votes of the People and the Bishops of the Province, and approved by the whole Council; that those that shall not be thus ordained, shall be turned out of their See; and the Bishops that have ordained them, shall be suspended ab Officio, for three Years.

These are all the Canons of this Council, which was held about 630. There are 21 more attributed to this Council; but it is evident they are much posterior to it: They are not related by Fleobard.

Council IV. of Toledo.

THIS Council was assembled in 633, by King * Sisenand. The Arch-bishops of Sevil, Narbon, Merida, Braga, Toledo, and Tarragona were present in it, together with 53. of their Suffragan Bishops, and 7 Presbyters, Bishop's Deputies. The Assembly was held in the Church of Leocadia.

The Council begins with a larger Confession of Faith than the ordinary Creeds, chiefly about the Incarnation. The Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son is established there.

Then the Bishops declare, That as they have but one Faith, so they judge it fit, that they should have but one Discipline, and observe the same things in the Celebration of Divine Service.

The 3d. Constitution is concerning Provincial Councils: It decrees, That seeing they cannot easily be assembled twice in the Year, they shall hold one every Year, the 16th of May, in what Town the Metropolitan shall please to appoint; that all those that have any Matters against the Bishops or the Magistrates, and great Lords, shall bring them to that Tribunal, and what shall be adjudged by the Synod shall be executed by the King's Officer: That in case there be any Matter of Faith, or any affair concerning the Good of the whole Church, they shall call a general Synod of the Provinces of Spain and France.

In the 4th. Canon they settle the Form or Order of keeping the Council. In the Morning, the Porters having turned the People out of the Church, must stand at the Door, they are to come in at; that the Bishops are to enter in first, and then the Presbyters, and at last the Deacons they shall stand in need of: That the Bishops shall sit down in the Form of a Circle, and the Presbyters behind them: That the Deacons ought to stand up before the Bishops: That they shall also bring in some Notaries to read or to write. Then the Doors being shut, the Arch-deacon shall say aloud, Pray ye: That one of the eldest Bishops shall pray aloud, the rest being prostrate: This Prayer being ended, the Arch-deacon shall say. Rise up: Then he shall read the Canons, ordering the holding of Provincial Councils; and the Metropolitan shall invite all them that have any Matter, to propound it: That they shall end that which is propounded before they begin another: That if any of them that are without hath any thing to propound, he shall acquaint the Metropolitan with it, who shall relate it to the Council; that he shall be brought in, freely to propose what he hath to say. That the Council shall not end till all Matters be dispatch'd, and that none of the Bishops shall go away, before it be finished.

The 5th. Decrees, That the Metropolitans shall write to one another three Months before the Epiphany, to agree together about the Day on which Easter is to be kept; and then they shall acquaint the Bishops of their Provinces with it, to avoid the Differences which happen'd in Spain about Easter-day, because of the several Tables.

The 6th. Canon contains a large Passage of S. Gregory, touching the Liberty of Baptizing with one or three Immersions, according to the Use of the Place.

The 7th. Canon determines. That the Passion shall be preached on Good-Friday, and the People shall beg aloud the Pardon of their Sins, that the Faithful being purified by the Communion of Repentance, may celebrate the Resurrection-Sunday, and receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ with a clean and pure Heart.

The 8th. prohibits breaking the Fast of Good-Friday before Sun-set, excepting only Children, Aged and Sick Folks.

The 9th. orders, That on Easter-eve they shall bless the Lamp and the Taper. Some Churches of France did not observe this Practice, wherefore they are enjoined to observe it for the future.

In the 10th. they are reprov'd, who never said the Lord's Prayer but on Sunday. They prove by the Testimonies of S. Cyprian, S. Hilary and S. Augustin, that this Prayer is to be said every day; and judg'd this Practice so necessary, that they threaten to depose the Clerks, that shall omit saying that Prayer every Day in their Publick or Private Office. This shews, that Clerks did even then recite their Office in private.

The 11th. Canon prohibits singing Hallelujah during the whole Lent, because it is a Time of Mourning, as well as the Kalends of January, in which they abstain from Flesh, as in Lent to feed only on Fish and Herbs. It is observ'd, That some did likewise abstain from Drinking Wine: In former Time, Abstinence from Wine was as strictly commanded as Abstinence from Flesh.

The 12th. Constitution decrees, That the Laudes shall not be said after the Epistle, but after the Gospel. These Laudes are some Verses which they recited before the Offertory.

The 13th. rejects the Opinion of those who believed, That the Hymns of Humane Composition, made in the Praise of the Apostles and Martyrs were not to be recited, as not being drawn out of the Canonical Scriptures, nor authorized by Tradition. They observe, That if it were not lawful to recite any thing in the Divine Service, but what is from the

Scripture,

Scripture, they should retrench the most part of the Masses, Prayers, Collects, Recommendations, and most of the Prayers said in the Confirmation.

The 14th. orders, That the Song of the three Children in the Furnace shall be sung in the Pulpit, at the Mass, on Sundays and Holy Days.

The 15th. orders, That in the end of the Psalms they shall not only say, Glory be to the Father, but Glory and Honour be to the Father.

In the 16th. it is observed, that some do not say the Gloria after the Responses, because it agrees not with what was said. Gloria is to be said when the Subject is joyful and cheerful, and the beginning of the Response to be repeated when it is sad and mournful.

The 17th. Canon pronounces Excommunication against them that will not receive the Revelation of S. John as a Divine Book, or that will not read it in their Churches from Easter till Whitsunday, in the time of Divine Service.

The 18th. orders, That after the reciting of the Lords Prayer, and the mingling of the Bread with the Wine in the Cup, they shall bless the People before the Distribution of the Sacrament of Christ's Body and Blood. It says also, That Priests and Deacons ought to receive the Communion at the Altar, the rest of the Clergy in the Quire, and the People without the Quire.

The 19th. forbids advancing to the Priesthood the following Persons; them that have been convicted of any Crimes, or that having confessed them, have done Penance publicly.

Them that have been Hereticks, or Baptized in an Heresy, or rebaptized.

Them that have made themselves Eunuchs, or have lost some of their Limbs.

Those of a servile Condition.

Neophytes, Laymen, or those that are entangled in Businesses.

The Ignorant and Unlearned; those that are not yet thirty Years old, and have not passed through the Ecclesiastical Degrees.

Them that seek to be ordained by Bribery, or to buy that Dignity.

Those that are chosen by their Predecessors.

Those that have not been chosen by the People and the Clergy, nor approved by the Metropolitan and the Provincial Synod.

That he that hath all these Qualifications, is to be consecrated on a Sunday, by all the Bishops of the Province, or at least by three Bishops, with the Consent of the others, in the Presence and by the Authority of the Metropolitan and in the Place which he shall chuse.

The 20th. forbids making any Persons Deacons before twenty-five Years of Age, and Presbyters before thirty.

The 21st. recommends to the Bishop a chaste and innocent Life, that they may offer the Sacrifice with Purity, and pray to God for others.

The 22d. exhorts them, not only to keep a pure Conscience, but moreover, to have a care of their Reputation, and to have always in their Chambers some Persons of probity with them, which may bear Witness of it.

The 23d. enjoins the same thing to the Presbyters and Deacons, that do not live with the Bishop.

The 24th. commands, That young Clerks shall dwell all together in the same Hall, under the Conduct of an Elder.

The 25th. recommends to Bishops the Knowledge of the Holy Scripture and the Canons.

The 26th. shews, That the Presbyters put into Parishes, ought to receive from the Bishop a Book, containing the Service of the Church, and instructing them in the manner of administering the Sacraments; and when they come to the Council or in his Visitation, they ought to give an account to the Bishop, how they celebrate Service and administer Baptism.

The 27th. That the Presbyters and Deacons put into Parishes, are to promise to their Bishop, that they will live regularly and orderly.

The 28th. That if a Bishop, a Presbyter, or a Deacon, have been unjustly Condemned, and their Innocency be acknowledged in a second Synod, they cannot be what they were before, till they have received before the Altar, and from the Bishops Hands, the Degrees which they were fallen from. If it be a Bishop, he shall receive the Stole, the Ring and the Staff: If a Priest, the Stole and the Chasuble: If a Deacon, the Stole and the Albe: If a Subdeacon, the Chalice and the Patine, or Cover of it; and so of the other Degrees, which shall receive again what was given them at their Ordination.

The 29th. is against the Clerks who consult Diviners, or use Sorcery. It is ordered they shall be deposed, and shut up in Monasteries, to do Penance the rest of their Life.

The 30th. forbids Bishops bordering upon the Enemies of the State, to receive any order from Strangers.

The 31st. forbids Bishops to be Judges between Princes and their Subjects, who are accused of High-Treason, till they have promised to pardon the Guilty.

Council IV. of Toledo. The 32d. warns the Bishops not to suffer the Magistrates and Men of Power to do unjustly, and oppress the Poor, to reprove them, if they perceive them to do so; and when they will not amend, to complain to the King.

The 33d. forbids Bishops to take to themselves above the Third part of the Revenues of Churches Founded in their Diocels, though it leave them the whole Administration thereof.

The 39th. forbids Deacons to take place of the Priests, and to place themselves in the highest place of the Quire, whilst the Presbyters stand below.

The 40th. forbids Deacons having two Stoles; yea, and having one of divers Colours, or Embroidered with Gold.

The 41st. enjoins all Clerks to shave the whole crown of their Heads, leaving but a small Tuft of their Hair in the form of a round Circle, or a Crown.

The 42d. and 43d. forbids Clerks to dwell with Women not related to them, and only permit them to live with their Mother, Sister, Daughter, and Aunt.

The 44th. appoints, That Clerks Marrying Widows, Divorced or Debauched Women, shall be separated from them by their Bishop.

The 46th. That a Clerk found Robbing Sepulchres, shall be Expelled out of the Clergy, and put to Penance for Three Years.

The 47th. declares, That agreeably to King Sisenand's Order, the Council decrees, That Clerks shall be free from all publick Offices.

The 48th. orders, That all Bishops shall have Stewards to manage their Churches Revenue.

The 49th. imports, That a Monk may be made so by the Devotion of Parents, or his own Profession; That all they that are made Monks by either of these two ways, shall be obliged to continue Monks, and that they are not permitted to return to the World.

The 50th. gives Clerks leave to become Monks.

The 51st. forbids Bishops abusing Monks, but it preserveth them the Right which the Canons give them, to exhort Monks to a good Life, to instruct Abbots, and other Officers; and to correct what is done amiss, contrary to the Rule.

The 52d. orders, That Monks leaving their Monastery, to return into the World, shall be Reproved, and put to Penance.

The 53d. prohibits that sort of Religious Persons, which are neither Clerks nor Monks; and enjoins Bishops to put them to the choice of either of those Professions.

The 54th. declares, That they who being in danger of Death, undergo Penance without confessing any particular Sin, but saying only in general, That they are Sinners, may be preferred to the Ecclesiastical State; but it is not so with them who have confessed some grievous Crime.

The 55th. commands, That those that yielded to undergo Penance, and prepared themselves to do it, shall be obliged to finish it, and shall be constrained by the Bishop to it. But if they leave it, and refuse to take it again, they shall be condemned as Apostates, as also the Virgins of Widows which have put on the Religious Habit, if they return to the World and Marry.

The 56th. Distinguisheth Two sorts of Widows, some Secular, who do not leave the Secular Habit, and other Religious which take a Religious Habit, and declares, it is not lawful for these to Marry.

The 57th. forbids to constrain the Jews to turn, because Conversion ought to be wholly free; yet as for those who were forced to turn under King Sisebur, they will have them bound to continue Christians, because they have received Baptism, the Holy Chrism, and Christ's Body and Blood.

The following Canons to the 75th. contain some other Constitutions concerning Slaves and Free-Men, which are now out of date.

The 75th. and last Canon, is concerning the Fealty due to Kings, and the security of their Persons. The Bishops detest there the Crime of those that violate the Faith they owe to their Prince, and make a long Discourse to create an abhorrence of it. And to prevent any such thing in Spain. they pronounce a solemn Anathema against all those that shall Conspire against Kings, that shall Attempt against their Life, or Usurp their Authority: After having repeated that Anathema thrice, with terrible Execrations, they promise Loyalty and Fidelity to King Sisenand, and his Successors, and at the same time they beseech him to Govern his People with Justice and Piety; not to Judge alone in Criminal Causes, but to cause them to be examined and judged by the ordinary Judges, reserving to himself the Right of Pardoning. They pronounce Anathema against the Kings that should abuse their Authority to do Evil, and exercise a Tyrannical Power. And they do particularly declare, That by the consent of the whole Nation, King * Suintila, who deprived himself of the Kingdom, and laid down his Authority, by confessing his Crimes, is fallen from his Dignity, his Honour, and his Lands, as well as his Wife, his Children, and his Brother.

Council VII. of Toledo.

Council
VII. of Toledo.

[* Vidifur-indus.]

THIS Council was held in 646, under King * Chisdavind, and composed of Twenty Five Bishops.

The 1st Constitution is against Perfidious and Disloyal Clerks.

By the 2^d. A Bishop, or a Presbyter, is permitted to finish the Celebration of a Mass begun, if he that is Officiating falls ill, and is not able to hold out to the end; but it forbids Presbyters, upon pain of Excommunication, to leave the Holy Mysteries imperfect, or to Celebrate after having taken the least Food.

The 3^d. Renews the Canon of the Council of Valentia, about the Bishops Funerals.

The 4th. Is against the greediness of some Bishops of Gallicia, oppressing the Parsons of their Dioceses. They are forbidden by that Canon to take above two Pence per Annum of each Church in their Dioceses; to bring along with them in their Visitations more than Five Persons, and to stay above a Day in any Church.

The 5th Canon appoints, That Hermits, or Recluses, that are ignorant, or whose Life is not Vertuous enough, shall be shut up in Monasteries; that those only shall be let alone, who are commendable for their Holiness, and that for the future, none shall not be admitted to that Profession, but such as have learned the Religious Life in Monasteries.

Council of Lateran against the Monothelites under Martin I.

THE Mystery of Christ's Incarnation, which since Nestorius's Quarrel, had always afforded matter of Dispute between the Bishops, produced a new one in this 7th. Century, which for a time divided the Eastern and Western Churches. The Business was no more about the Question of the Two Natures and One Person in Christ, the Authority of the Councils of Ephesus and Chalcedon, which had decided those Two Points, was received by all the Patriarchs; and they that would not agree upon those Truths, were look'd upon as Hereticks, both in the East and West. But about the Year 620, they stirred up another Question, whether they should say, That there were Two Operations, and Two Wills in Christ, as Two Natures are said to be in him. Theodorus, Bishop of * Pharan was the first, who expressing himself upon that Question, maintained, That the Manhood in Christ was so united to the Word, that, though it had its Faculties, it did not Act by its self, but the whole Act was to be ascribed to the Word, which gave it the motion. Cyrus, Bishop of Phasis, embraced that Opinion, and expressed himself about it in the same manner, denying there were Two Operations in Christ, and affirming, That they were reduced to One principal Operation. Not that they denied, That Humane Actions and Passions were in Christ; but they affirmed, That they were to be attributed to the Word, as to the principal Mover, whose Instrument only the Man was. As for instance, they confessed, It was the Manhood of Christ that suffered Hunger, and Thirst, and Pain; but they asserted, that Hunger, Thirst, and Pain, were to be ascribed to the Person of the Word. In a word, that the Word was the Author and Mover of all the Operations and Wills of Christ. Sergius, Patriarch of Constantinople, was of the same mind; and the Emperor Heraclius embraced that Party so much the more willingly, because he believed it to be a means to bring the Jacobites, Severians and Acephali, back again to the Unity of the Church, by yielding to them part of what they contended for, and to oppose them more easily, by overthrowing the Foundation of one of their strongest Objections. And indeed, having had a Conference in the Year 622 with a Severian Bishop of Armenia, named Paul, he maintained against him, that there were Two Natures in Christ: But he confessed, that they should acknowledge but One Operation only in him; and the better to confirm that Question, he made a Declaration, directed to Arcadius, Arch-Bishop of Cyprus, against this Paul, and the rest of the Acephali, whereby he did forbid them to say, That there were Two Operations, or Two Wills in Christ.

In another Conference, which Heraclius had with Athanasius, the Universal Patriarch of the Jacobites in 629. He promised him to make him Patriarch of Antioch, if he would receive the Synod of Chalcedon, and own Two Natures in Christ. But he asked the Emperor, whether they should say, that the Operations of Christ were double, or simple. Hereupon Heraclius consulted Sergius of Constantinople, and Cyrus, who did both agree, that they should own in Christ but one only Deivirile Operation.

Cyrus having thus declared himself Head of a Party, was soon transferred from his small Bishoprick to the Patriarchate of Alexandria. Being raised up to that See, he reunited the Theodosians, or Jacobites, by publishing some Articles, among which there was one that asserted only Operation, Theandrick, or Deivirile, in Christ's Person; that reunion being made in June, 633. Cyrus acquainted Sergius with it. Sophronius, who was afterwards Patriarch of Jerusalem, opposed it stoutly, and going away from Alexandria, came to Constantinople, to Expostulate the Matter with Sergius, whom he found in the same Opinion with Cyrus. But this latter feigning himself to be a Peace-maker, writ to Cyrus to forbear saying, There was One or Two Wills in Jesus Christ; and enjoined the same thing to Sophronius, seeking thus to extinguish that Dispute. Sophronius requested a Writing from Sergius upon that Subject, and Sergius gave him a Letter, a Copy whereof he sent to Honorius Bishop of Rome, together with the Letter he writ to him about that Question, in which he related to him that Dispute, set him down the state of the Question, let him know how he did think fit to proceed in it, to stifle it in its Cradle, and desired him to write to him what he thought of it.

Honorius answered him, That he did approve of the Caution he used in it, and the suppressing of the terms of One or of Two Operations, declaring he did own Two Natures in Christ, and yet that he confessed but One Will in him.

In the mean while, Sophronius being advanced to the See of Jerusalem, notwithstanding the Consent of the other Patriarchs, wrote a long Synodical Letter to Sergius, to maintain the Doctrine of the Two Wills, and before he died he sent Stephen, Bishop of Dora, to Rome, vigorously to defend this Opinion, and to get the contrary Opinion condemned.

After Honorius's Death, Heraclius the Emperor published a Declaration, Intituled Ecthesis, or, An Exposition of the Faith, in which he enjoined Silence about that Question. Sergius, the true Author of that Exposition, approved it, and Died soon after in 639, leaving Pyrrhus for his Successor, who was of the same Opinion.

It was not so with Honorius's Successors. Severian, who sat but a little while upon the Roman See, refused to approve the Ecthesis, and John IV. did plainly condemn it. At last Heraclius died in March 641. his Son Constantine lived but four Months, and Constans succeeded him him the same Year. Then Pyrrhus was expelled, as we have said, out of Constantinople, and Paul put in his place, who was not less Zealous for the Party of the Monothelites than Pyrrhus. Pope Theodorus endeavoured to re-establish him, because he had feigned that his Mind was altered, and demanded that the Ecthesis should be abolished: But Constans set out a Declaration [which he called The Type] like that of Heraclius, whereby he did command silence about the Question of the Two Operations and the Two Wills in Christ. This was published at Constantinople in 648. and in the beginning of the next Year Pope Theodorus died.

Martin I. of that Name succeeded him, and was ordained in July: He called a Council at Rome presently, about the Question of the Two Operations and the Two Wills. It was held in Constantine's Church: 105 Bishops of Italy were present at it, among whom were Maximus, Patriarch of Aquileia, Deusdedit, Bishop of Calarus, and a Bishop and a Presbyter, Deputies of the Arch-Bishop of Ravenna.

It was finished in five Actions, Sessions or Conferences.

Act. I.

The 1st was held October 5th. 649. Theophylact, the first of the Notaries, having desired Pope Martin, to tell the Assembly the occasion of his calling this Synod, and what the Matter was, he said, it was to oppose the Novelties and Errors published by Cyrus, Bishop of Alexandria, and Sergius, Bishop of Constantinople, and defended by Pyrrhus and Paul, Successors of Sergius: That 18 Years ago Cyrus had published nine Articles in Alexandria, pronouncing Anathema against those that should not hold him; wherein he asserted One Operation only in Christ, as well of his Godhead as of his Manhood: That Sergius had approved this Doctrine in a Letter to Cyrus, and had confirmed it since, by making, under the Emperor Heraclius's Name, an Heretical Exposition of Faith. He adds, that it follows from this Doctrine, That there is but One Will and One Nature in Jesus Christ; because the Holy Fathers have acknowledged, that when there was but One Operation, there was also but One Nature. Hereupon he cites the Testimonies of S. Basil, S. Cyril, and S. Leo, proving that the Two Natures in Jesus Christ have each of them their several Operations. He charges Sergius with having opposed this Doctrine, by setting out Heraclius's Exposition of the Faith, and confirming it by his Approbation, and that of other Bishops. As for Pyrrhus and Paul, he says, they have made things worse; the first, by obtruding that Exposition of Faith upon many, whom he drew into his Opinion by Fear or Kindness: That he had indeed renounced that Error, and presented a Retraction to the Holy See; but he soon relapsed into his Heresie. In fine, That Paul had not only maintained this Error in a Letter written to the Holy See, but had also opposed the sound Doctrine by Writing; and that after Sergius's Example, he had moved the Emperor to make a new Exposition of Faith, called the Type, which did overthrow the Doctrine of all the Fathers, by forbidding to profess One or Two Wills in Jesus Christ: That he had even ventured to take away the Altar consecrated in the Church of S. Placidia, and hindered the Apocrisarii of the Roman Church to offer thereon, or to receive the Sacraments: That he had persecuted them and several Bishops, Defenders of the Orthodox Faith, causing some to be banished, others imprisoned, and some abused: That Complaints of these things having been made at several times to the Holy See, and to his Predecessors, they used Letters, Advertisements, Threatnings, Protestations, to repress those Novelties, and re-establish the sound Doctrine; but all these means having proved in vain, he did think it necessary to call them together, to the end, that having produced and examined the Writings of those Hereticks, and heard the Charges brought against them, they might pass their Judgment for the Confirmation of the Faith, and rejecting of Error. Maurus, Bishop of Cesena, and Deusdedit, Deacon of Ravenna, told them, in the Archbishop of Ravenna's Name, That having heard the same things from his Apocrisarii, he designed to come to the Council; but being hindered from coming he had sent them, as his Representatives, and had given them a Letter, which they required to have read, and inserted in the Acts. It is directed to Martin, to whom he gives the Title of (gg) Universal Bishop: After having excused himself for not coming in Person to the Council, he declareth, That he rejects the Exposition of Faith, defended by Pyrrhus, and all that was done in confirmation of it; and professeth to believe Two Operations and Two Wills in Jesus Christ.

[(gg) Universal Bishop.] This Title which is here given to Martin, Bishop of Rome, doth not import, as is pretended by the Church of Rome, the absolute Supremacy of that Bishop over the whole Church, but only the large extent of his Jurisdiction above all other Bishops, as a great Patriarch. For we find the like Titles given to the other Patriarchs, not only by private Persons and Councils, but even by the Bishops of Rome themselves. For thus the 5th. Council of Constantinople salutes Mennas, and John their Patriarch; Oecumenico Patriarchæ, Joanni—Menna, To the Universal Patriarch, John—Mennas. So Nicephorus calls the Patriarch of Alexandria, Judex Universi Orbis, the Judge of the whole World. And the Emperor Justinian writing to Epiphanius Patriarch of Constantinople, thus supercribes, Epiphanio Oecumenico Patriarchæ, To Epiphanius the Universal Patriarch. Nor doth the Bishop of Rome himself look upon it so much his own peculiar Title, but that he thinks it due to Therasius, Bishop of Constantinople, writing thus to him; Therasio Generali Patriarchæ, Adrianus servus servorum Dei, To Therasius the general Patriarch, Adrian the meanest of God's Servants. So evident is it, that this great Title of Universal Bishop imports no such Pre-eminence as is pretended; and tho' the Title was commonly used, yet it was thought an Antichristian Usurpation in John, Bishop of Constantinople, to assume such a Power and Prerogative to himself.]

Maximus,

Maximus, Bishop of Aquileia, said, he was also of the same Mind, and believed Two Operations in Christ. Deusdedit, Bishop of Calariis, requested that this Matter might be searched to the bottom, and all the Bishops were of that Mind.

This Examination was begun in the second Action, which is of the 8th. of October. Stephen Bishop of Dora, of the Patriarchate of Jerusalem, presented a Petition, in which he sets forth, That Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, and Paul, have published a new Heresie, teaching, That there was but One Operation and One Will in Christ, both of the Godhead and Manhood; That Sophronius, of blessed Memory, Patriarch of Jerusalem, opposed that Error vigorously, and had made a Writing, in which he alledged an infinite number of the Holy Fathers Testimonies, to convince them of Impiety, and to establish the Truth; That before he died he had made him to promise him upon the Calvary, that he would go to Rome to sollicite the Condemnation of this Error; That he had performed his Promise, notwithstanding all their Endeavours to hinder him from it; That he had already demanded it of Theodorus, and did renew his Request to the Council.

Some Greek Presbyters and Monks, who had been a while at Rome, presented also a Petition against Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, and Paul, against the Ekthesis, the Type and the Doctrine of One Operation only, and desired the Council carefully to examine that Question, and to determine it according to the Doctrine of the Church. Then Sergius's Letter to Theodorus was read, written in 643. wherein this Patriarch, having extolled the Authority of the Holy See, declares, That he follows Pope S. Leo's Doctrine, who taught; That the Two Natures do operate in Jesus Christ, but in conjunction one with another; That he does Anathematize and Condemn all those that do not hold this Doctrine. The rest of this Action was spent in reading Four Synodical Letters sent by the African Bishops, against the Monothelite's Exposition of Faith; one whereof is directed to Pope Theodorus, the other to the Emperor, the third to Paul of Constantinople. They alledge in this last, the Testimonies of S. Austin and S. Ambrose, to prove the Two Wills. The last Letter is Victor's, Bishop of Carthage, to Theodorus, upon the same Subject.

In the third Action of the 16th. of October, they produced the Extracts of the Works of those who were accused of Error. They begin with those of Theodorus, Bishop of Pharan, who owns many sorts of Operations in Christ, but affirms, They all proceed from the Word, which gives Motion to the Body, Soul, and the other Faculties of the Humane Nature, as an Instrument which he maketh use of. Martin the First confutes his Opinion, to which he opposes some Testimonies of S. Cyril, S. Gregory Nazianzen, S. Basil, and the Council of Chalcedon. Cyrus succeeds Theodorus. They read his Seventh Article, wherein he own Two Natures in Jesus Christ, but united in one Christ, who doth that which is Divine, and that which is Humane, by one Theandrick or Dei virile Action, according to *S. * Denys*. They join to this Article Sergius's Letter to Cyrus, wherein he approves this Doctrine, and congratulates with him, for the reunion of the Theodosians with him. Upon occasion of S. Denys's Citation, they consulted the Original, and they found that Cyrus and Sergius had changed the Terms of  New Will Theandrick*, into that of One Will Theandrick. They compared their Expression with Nemestius's, and they proved by some Passages of that Heretick, That Severus and he were the first that said, There was but one Dei virile Operation in Jesus Christ. They explain the meaning of Dei virile Operation, and they say 'tis nothing else but two sorts of Operations of the same Person, which yet proceed from two different Natures (viz. God and Man.)

This being examined, they read the Emperor Heraclius's Exposition of the Faith, known by the Name of Ekthesis, in which he forbids this Expression, That there is One or Two Operations in Christ, and commands them to say, That 'tis the same Son that operates in Christ the divine and humane Operation; that although some of the Fathers have said, There is but one Operation, it is better to forbear that Expression, lest it be thought that they would deny the Existence of the two Natures; and that it must not be said neither, That there are two Operations in Christ, because this Expression, being not used by the Fathers, does offend many, who think they admit two contrary Wills in Christ. To this Ekthesis they add the Acts of Approbation given by Paul and Pyrrhus, and the Letter of Cyrus of Alexandria to Sergius, wherein he commends the Emperor for making that Exposition of Faith.

In the Fourth Action, held the 19th. of October, Martin gave a short Account of what Cyrus, Sergius, and Paul had done against the Doctrine of the Church; and that he might fully convince Paul, their Successor, of the same Impiety, he caused his Letter to Pope Theodorus to be read, wherein, delivering his Opinion, he says, That he owns One Will in Jesus Christ, only to take away the contrariety of Wills, but does not intend to confound the Two Natures: That Christ's Soul, endowed with its Intellect and Faculties, is led and moved by the Will of the Word, which causes it to act and to will as he pleases. He adds, That S. Cyril did deliver this Doctrine, and that Sergius and Honorius did newly teach it; that he stands to their decision, and is wholly of their Mind. Then was read the Emperor's Type, forbidding to speak or dispute about the Question of one or two Operations, or of two Wills, that he might secure the Peace of the Church. The Council commends the Emperor's intention, but disproves part of his Edict.

After they had read over all the Monuments they intended to condemn, they caused the Creeds of the Councils of Nice and Constantinople, and the Definitions of Faith of the Councils of Ephesus, Lateran, Chalcedon, and of the Fifth Council to be recited.

In the Fifth Action, held the last day of October, they read the Testimonies of the Greek and Latin Fathers, proving either directly or by Consequence, That there are in Christ two Wills and two Operations; and, on the other side, they produced some Passages of several Hereticks, who had taught but one Will in Christ.

After that, Maximus of Aquileia, Deusdedit of Calaris, and Martin deliver'd their Judgments, alledging many Reasons against the Opinion of the Monothelites; the whole Council approved it, acknowledging two Operations and two Wills, and made 20 Articles against the Error of the Monothelites, in the 18th. whereof it does anathematize Theodorus, Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul, and all them that are or shall be of their Opinion.

Pope Martin published these Decrees by a circular Letter directed to all the Bishops, Prefbyters, Deacons, Abbots, Monks, and to the whole Church; and wrote of it particularly to several Bishops, as it may be seen in the Extract of his Letters.

This Council of Rome provoked Constans against Pope Martin, because this Emperor look'd upon this Attempt, and the Condemnation of his Type, as a kind of Rebellion, and an Encroachment upon his Authority. He caused this Pope to be violently carried away from Rome in 653. and after most cruel Usage banished him to Chersona. After his departure the Romans chose Eugenius in his room, in September 653. who did not openly consent to the Error of the Monothelites: But his Apocrisarii were forced to unite themselves with the Monothelites, who altering their Carriage and Expressions, said, That there was in Christ one and two Wills. At first they did say, that there was in Christ but one Operation and one Will; afterwards they would not have Men to speak of one or two Operations, and approved one only Will. The Type imposed silence about that Question, both as to the Operations and to the Wills. At last, to comply with all, they would have it free for Men to say, That there was in Christ one and two Wills. Peter, who was chosen Patriarch of Constantinople in Pyrrhus's room, who got up again to that See after Paul's Death, was of this Judgment, and many followed that Opinion. But, although these were different Expressions, yet they came up to the same thing, and did all tend to the same end, which was to tolerate the Doctrine of one Operation and one Will, and to make it run equal with that of the two Operations and the two Wills, so that every one might follow that which he liked best.

Yet all this condescension did not procure the re-union of the Eastern and Western Churches; for from Pope Theodosius's time they continued divided, and the Popes sent no more Letters of Communion to the Patriarchs of the East, nor the Patriarchs of the East to the Pope. It was to take away this kind of Schism that the Emperor Constantinus Pogonatus appointed the third Council of Constantinople, which is reckoned the sixth General, of which we are going to write the History.

Council III. of Constantinople, 6th. General.

Constantinus Pogonatus appointed this Council, for the re-uniting of the Churches of the East and the West, and the final Determination of the Question of the two Operations, and the two Wills in Christ. He wrote to the Pope a Letter, dated the 12th of August, 678. directed to Donus, whom he supposed still living, and it was delivered to his Successor Agatho. This Pope having received the Emperor's Letter, held a Council at Rome, of 125 Bishops of the West, which determined the Doctrine of the two Wills, and confirmed what was done under Martin. There were at this Council, besides the Bishops of Italy, some Deputies of the Churches of France and England. After the holding of this Council, the Deputies of the Holy See, and the Council departed, to go to Constantinople, to carry their Decision. After they were come, the Emperor gave order to the Patriarchs to come to the Council, and also to bring the Bishops of their Patriarchate thither. It begun the thirteenth Year of the Empire of Constantine, in the Year 680. Indiction 9th. in November, and was ended after Eighteen Meetings or Sessions, the 16th. of September of the next Year, Indiction 10th. The Emperor had the first Place there, and was present at the Eleven first Sessions, and at the last: He was accompanied by the Consuls and Officers. The Patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch were there in Person; those of Rome, Alexandria and Jerusalem by their Deputies, and all the Western Bishops by three Bishops sent by the Council of Rome, with several Bishops of the East, whereof the number encreased by little and little, as they came to Constantinople: For in the beginning they were but between 30 and 40, and in the end there were found above 160 of them.

The Acts of the Council began with the Emperor's Letter to Pope Donus; in which he represents to him his Sorrow to see the Eastern Church divided from the Western: That Theodorus, Patriarch of Constantinople, of blessed Memory, would not send a Synodical Letter to the Holy Holy See, according to the Custom, for fear it should be received; and that he contented himself to direct a Letter to him, in the Form of an Exhortation: That the Patriarch and Macarius Council Patriarch of Antioch, being consulted, why the Church was thus divided, seeing all the Bishops III. of Constantinople. received the Definitions of the five General Councils, and the Doctrine of the Fathers, and rejected all Heresies: They answered, the Contest came from some new Expressions, brought in, either out of Ignorance, or out of a Desire of piercing too deep into the unsearchable Works of the Lord: That the Sees of Rome and Constantinople disagreeing about this, they remained divided. He exhorts the Pope not to suffer this Division, about inconsiderable Points, to continue for ever; and invites him to send some able Legates to the Synod, with necessary Instructions and Books, promising he would cause them to be received, and be equally favourable to both Parties. He tells them, he thinks three Men will be enough to hold his Place, with twelve Arch-bishops or Bishops, in the Name of his Council. He adds, That he had been desired by the Patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch, to give them Leave to take Vitalian's Name out of the Dypicks, and to leave none but that of Honorius, because the Bishops of Rome, his Successors, had differed from the Eastern Churches; but that he would not suffer them to do it: And that he could assure him, that the Names of Honorius and Vitalian were left in the Dypicks.

There is a second Letter of the Emperor, dated September 10th. 680. directed to George of Constantinople; wherein he orders him, immediately to bring the Bishops and Arch-bishops to Constantinople, and to send Word to Macarius, to bring likewise those of his Synod.

The third Piece is a Latin Letter of Mansuetus, Bishop of Milan, which he wrote to the Emperor, in the Name of the Synod held at Milan; in which he exhorts him to imitate the Zeal of Constantine the Great, for the Faith; and beginning with Arius's Heresy, and the Nicene Council, he maketh a compendious History of the other Errors, condemned in the five first Councils, held by the Authority of the Christian Emperors: He assures him, that they do hold and maintain the Definitions of those Councils, and the Doctrine of the Holy Orthodox Fathers. To this Letter is annexed their Confession of Faith; in which, having asserted two Natures in Christ, they add, That there be also two natural Wills and two Operations. With these Letters they sent some Deputies from the Pope and the Synod: The Pope sent two Presbyters, named Theodorus and George, and a Deacon named John; and the Bishops of the Council sent three Bishops in their Name to the Synod of Constantinople. When these Deputies were arrived at Constantinople, and had saluted the Emperor, September 10th. 680. he gave an order, directed to George of Constantinople, whom he styles O Ecumenical Patriarch (as he had styled the Pope O Ecumenical Pope) wherein he commands him immediately to bring the Arch-bishops and Bishops to Constantinople, and to send Word to Macarius of Antioch, to bring those of his Synod.

The first Action of the Council began the 7th of November 680. in the Emperor's Palace. A.C. i. It is said, he presided in the Assembly, that his Counsellors or Officers were present at it, and that the Synod was called by the Emperor's Order. The three Legates of the Pope held the first Place among the Bishops of the Council, George Patriarch of Constantinople the second, the Deputy of the Church of Alexandria the third, Macarius of Antioch the fourth, the Deputy of the Patriarch of Jerusalem the fifth, the Bishops Deputies of the Synod of Rome the sixth; next after them were the Deputies of the Church of Ravenna, and about 32. Bishops, with some Abbots.

After they were set down, the Legates of the Pope, and of the Synod of the West said, That they were sent by the Pope and the Council of Rome, and that they brought two Letters with them, which they had delivered to the Emperor: That seeing the Difference came from this, That the Patriarchs of Constantinople had invented and maintained Novelties, by teaching, That there was but one Will and one Operation in Christ, those of their Party ought to shew the Grounds of this new Doctrine. Macarius answered in the Name of the Churches of Constantinople and Antioch, That they had invented no Novelties, and did teach nothing but what they had learn'd from the Holy Fathers, as they are expounded by Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul and Peter their Patriarchs, by Honorius Pope of Rome, and by Cyrus Patriarch of Alexandria; That they were ready to defend this Doctrine by the general Synods and the Fathers, whose Authority was owned. The Emperor commanded them to do so, and the Acts of the O Ecumenical Councils to be brought. Those of the Council of Ephesus were read, and Macarius thinking to have found there a Place favouring his Opinion in S. Cyril's Letter to Theodosius, where Christ's Will is said to be Omnipotent; he would have inferred from thence, that there was but one Will in Christ. But the Western Deputies, some Bishops, and the Judges themselves took notice, That the Will of the Word only was spoken of there, and not the Divine and Human Will in Christ; then they read over the Acts of the Council of Ephesus.

In the second Session, held the 10th. of November, the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon A.C. ii. were read, and when they came to S. Leo's Letter, the Pope's Legat maintained, That there was a Place where that Pope established two Wills and two Operations. Macarius contrariwise affirmed, That the Passage of S. Leo proved only, That there was in Christ one Operation Theandrick.

Council III. of Constantinople. In the third, of the 13th. of the same Month, they began to read the Acts of the fifth Council : At the Head of which there was a Discourse written under the Name of Mennas, to Vigilius. The Pope's Legates maintained it to be supposititious, and to have been added a little while ago to the Acts of the fifth Council; which they proved, because Mennas dyed the 21st. Year of Justinian, and the fifth Council was not held till in the 27th. Year of the same Emperor:

Act. iii. And indeed the Judges and the Bishops examining the Sheets which they were reading, they found three prefixed to the beginning without Cyphers and written by a different Hand. Whereupon they left out that Discourse of Mennas, and set themselves to the reading of the Acts of the fifth Council. In them they found a Letter of Vigilius, in which he asserted one only Operation in Christ; but the Legates denied it to be his, and when they went on in the reading of the Council, they found that in the Definition there was no mention of one Operation. The reading of the Acts of the Council being finished, the Bishops and the Judges declared, That they had not found it defined, that there was but one Operation and one Will in Christ.

Act. iv. The fourth Action was held the 15th. of the same Month: In it the Letters of Agatho, and of the Council of Rome, to the Emperors Constantine, Heraclius and Tiberius, were read. The first contains very large Proofs of the Doctrine of the two Wills, taken out of the Holy Scripture and the Fathers: He does plainly condemn the Monothelites, and particularly Theodorus, Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul and Peter: He speaks very respectfully of the Emperors, and very advantageously of his own See: He says, The Apostlick Church of Rome never fell into Error, that it never was depraved by Heresy: That the Fathers and Synods have followed her Decisions, and that his Predecessors have always confirmed their Brethren in the Faith. They might have opposed to him the late Instance of Honorius, who seemed to be as guilty as those he did so severely condemn, and who was not spared in the Council of Constantinople. The Letter of the Roman Council contains a Confession of Faith, in which they acknowledge two Operations and two Wills in Christ: After that they condemn the Doctrine of the Monothelites, and the Bishops condemn'd in Agatho's Letter; and they approve what was done in the Synod held under Martin I. This Letter is subscribed by 25 Bishops, most of them of Italy; there be some of France also, and Wilfride subscribes in the Name of the Bishops of England. They tell us, That they hoped that Theodorus of Canturbury and several other Bishops, would have come thither, but could not; and that they might be assured that all the Bishops of the West and the North were in the same Opinion, and held the same Faith.

Act. v. The fifth Action was held the 7th. of December. Macarius presented two Sheets of Quotations of the Fathers, which were read in the Council.

Act. vi. He presented also a third in the next Action, which was held the 12th. of February. The Emperor ordered all the three Sheets to be sealed with the Seals of the Judges of the Church of Rome, and the Church of Constantinople. The Pope's Deputies maintained, That none of those Testimonies proved one Will or one Operation in Christ; that they had falsified most of them; and that some of them were only to be understood of the Will of the three Persons in the Trinity. They required them to produce the Authentick Books out of which those Passages were taken, that they might lay open the Cheat; and that they might be permitted to peruse the Collection of the Passages they had made, to prove two Wills and two Operations in Christ.

Act. vii. In the seventh Action of the 13th of February, of the Year 681. Agatho's Deputies presented a Sheet, containing the Testimonies of the Fathers, confirming the Doctrine of the two Wills. They asked Macarius if he received Agatho's Letter, and the Definition of the Council of Rome. Macarius and George required the Sheet, containing the Passages of the Fathers, might be communicated to them, to compare them with the Originals, which were in the Patriarch of Constantinople's Library.

Act. viii. In the eighth Action, of the 7th. of March, the Bishop of Constantinople having examined Agatho's Letter, and the Passages of the Fathers, declared that he was of the same Mind with the Pope, and the other Bishops of the West. All the Bishops of his Patriarchate made the same Declarations, except Theodorus Bishop of Melitina; who presented a Memoir in the Name of himself and three Bishops more, of some Officers of the Church of Constantinople, and of Steven a Presbyter and Monk of Antioch; wherein he requested, That neither Party might be condemned, seeing the general Councils had pronounced nothing hitherto about the two Wills. This Memoir was disowned by those in whose Name it was presented, excepting Stephen, the Monk of Antioch. Nevertheless, Constantine told them, That for the full Satisfaction of the Council, they ought to bring a Profession of Faith in the next Action. Hereupon George came near the Emperor, and prayed him, to order Vitalian's Name to be put into the Dypticks again, which had been crossed out, only by reason of the Delay of the Apostolical of Rome, sent to Constantinople. The Emperor ordered it to be done forthwith, and his Order was approved by the Exclamations of the Bishops, who wished him a long Life, as also to Pope Agatho, and to George Patriarch of Constantinople. There remained none but Macarius and those of his Patriarchate, who had not declared themselves: The Council having obliged this Patriarch to deliver his Opinion, he declared, That he did not own two Wills nor two Operations in Christ, but one only Operation and one Will Dei veritatis. After that Declaration, he was ordered to rise up out of his Place to make answer: Four Bishops of his Patriarchate archate forsook him, and received Agatho's Letter and Doctrine. They produced two Professions of Faith of Macarius. In the latter, which is the longer, after having explained himself very clearly, about the distinction of the two Natures, he says, it is the same Person that acts and suffers; that it is God that acts and suffers by the Manhood, and according to his divine Will, which only acts in Jesus Christ, it being impossible there should be in him two contrary or like Wills. He adds, for a Proof of his Assertion, that in the celebration of the unbloody Mysteries, in our Churches, we are made Partakers of Christ's Body and Blood, which is not a Man's Flesh, but the quickning Flesh of the Word. He condemns all Hereticks till Honorius, Sergius and Paul; which he commends as Teachers of the Truth. Macarius owns in the Council these Professions of Faith, and protests he will suffer himself to be torn in pieces, or thrown into the Sea, rather than own two Wills and two natural Operations in Christ: Then they examined all the Testimonies, which he had alledged, and it was found that he had falsified them; which provoked the Bishop's Indignation against him, insomuch that they deposed him.

III. of Con-
stantinople.

In the next Action, held the eighth of March, they went on in the Examination of the Quorations alledged by Macarius, and received the Declaration of Theodorus of Melitina, and of the Bishops and Clerks that had approved his Memoir, wherein they promised to give a Profession of Faith in the next Action. Act. ix.

In the tenth Action was held the 18th. of March: They read the Fathers Testimonies, alledged by Pope Agatho, which were found right quoted. They received also the Profession of Faith of the four Bishops suspected of favouring Macarius's Party. Act. x.

In the eleventh Action, which was more numerous than the former, the Deputy of the Church of Jerusalem required, That the Synodical Letter of Sophronius, Bishop of Jerusalem, might be read; which was read: And after that the Writing which Macarius had directed to the Emperor, although, contrary to the Custom, he had lent it to Rome and to Sardinia, before it was read in the Senate. At the end of this Session the Emperor declared, That being called out by State Affairs, he had ordered two Noblemen and two * Exconsuls to be present in his stead at the following Sessions, at which he was not in Person, except the last. Act. xi.

[* Persons who had been formerly Consul.]

In the twelfth Action, held the 20th. of March, they read a long Memoir of Macarius's, containing the Letters of the Bishops of his Party. The first is a Letter of Sergius to Cyrus, in which he consults him about the Emperor's Prohibition of admitting two Wills in Christ. He answers him, That Question was not decided by any Council; That S. Cyril and Vigilius own but one Will, yet that the two Wills ought not to be condemned, if it was found that some of the Fathers had spoken of them. Act. xii.

The second is a Letter of Sergius to Pope Honorius, in which he maintains, That they ought to forbear speaking of one or two Wills.

The third is Honorius's Answer to the former Letter, which approveth the Suppressing of those Expressions, which he thinks to be new, nothing of them being found in the Scripture, in the Councils, nor in the Fathers. These Letters were examined from the Originals kept at Constantinople, and being found true and genuine, it was ordered that they should be examined in the following Actions. The Judges asked the Emperor, Whether Macarius might be restored, in case he should repent and alter his Mind. The Council required, That by reason of the heady Zeal which he had shewed, he should remain deposed, without Hope of Restauration, and be banished; and the Clergy of Antioch desired another Bishop might be put in his room.

In the thirteenth Session, of the 28th. of March, Sergius and Honorius's Letters were read over again. They declared, That this last had wholly followed Sergius's impious Doctrine, and they anathematized him. The Judges asking, Why they did also condemn Cyrus, Pyrrhus, Peter and Paul: The Council answered immediately, That their Heresy was manifest, and that Pope Agatho did sufficiently discover it. Nevertheless it was agreed upon, That their Writings should be examined: Therefore they immediately read two Letters of Cyrus to Sergius, the Capitula he had got the Theodosians to subscribe, some Extracts of his Sermons and of Theodorus's, a Writing of Pyrrhus's, some Letters of Peter and Paul of Constantinople, proving that those Bishops admitted but one Will and one Operation in Jesus Christ; hereupon the Council declared, That Agatho had justly condemned them, that they also did condemn them, and reject their Errors, and would have their Names blotted out of the Dyptick. As for the Successors of Paul, Thomas, John and Constantine, they read their synodical Letters, and nothing was found in them contrary to the Faith. George, Library-keeper of Constantinople, swore, That they had not put Men to subscribe, that there was but one Operation in Christ, therefore they were absolved. This Action ended with the Reading of the second Letter, directed to Sergius and Cyrus; in which he does equally reject the Opinions of one or of two Wills in Jesus Christ; and intimateth, That Sophronius, Patriarch of Jerusalem, promised him to speak no more of two Wills, provided that Cyrus, Patriarch of Alexandria, would speak no more of one Will. Act. xiii.

In the next place they read three Writings, the one, under the Name of Mennas, to Vigilius, and the other under the Name of Vigilius, to the Emperor Justinian, and the Empress Theodora, which they maintained to be supposititious. George, the keeper of the Rolls, or Library-keeper, brought out a Copy of the fifth Council, in which they were not found. Act. xiv.

Council III. of Constantinople. It was made appear, That the Monosheles had added those Writings, which were not subscribed, as the rest of the Acts of the Council were, and George, a Monk of the Patriarchate of Antioch, who had written them, having owned his own Hand, declared that Stephen, Macarius's Disciple, had got him to transcribe those three Writings; telling him, That the Copies of the fifth Council, where they were not found, were defective. Paul of Constantinople had caused the same Addition to be made to the Latin Copy of the fifth Council; which was acknowledged by Constantine, a Presbyter, who transcribed it: These Writings were condemned and the Compilers of them. Afterward they examined a long Passage of a Sermon of S. Athanasius upon these Words; Nunc anima mea turbata est valde; in which the Doctrine of the two Wills is strongly maintained.

Act. xv. In the fifteenth Action, of the 26th of April, Polychronius, a Presbyter and Monk, presented a Confession of Faith, signed by him; wherein he owned but one Will in Christ. He said, That he had been confirmed in this Opinion in a Vision, by a tall Man, clad in white, full of Brightness and Majesty, who told him, 'Twas an unchristian thing to think otherwise: He had seduced several Persons, and was so zealous in his Opinion, that he promised to raise a dead Man to life again, to prove the Truth of his Doctrine; notwithstanding he attempted it in vain, and made himself to be laughed at and to be anathematized by the Council, which disposed him.

Act. xvi. In the sixteenth Session, held the 9th. of August, Constantine, a Presbyter of Apamea, the Metropolis of the second Syria, being come to give an account of his Faith, said, That he did confess two Natures in Jesus Christ, and the Properties of both his Natures; that he did not question so much as the two Operations, but he could own but one Will of the Word. They asked him, Whether he would not admit an human Will also. He confessed, That Jesus Christ had a natural human Will till he was crucified, but since his Resurrection he had it no more; and as he put off his Mortal Flesh, his Blood, and the Weakness of the Humane Nature, by the same Reason, he had no more a Humane Will, according to Flesh and Blood. He declared, That Macarius was of this Opinion, and persisting in it himself, he was condemned by the Council, as an Apolinarist. George, Patriarch of Constantinople, did then require, in his own Name, and in the Name of the Bishops of his Patriarchate, That they would spare, if it were possible, the Names of his Predecessors, and not comprehend them in the Anathemas: But the Council declared, That since they had been blotted out of the Dyptricks, they ought also to be anathematized every one by Name.

Act. xvii. In the seventeenth Action they propounded the Definition of Faith, which was read over again, approved and signed in the eighteenth, held the 16th of September, 681. Indict X. at which the Emperor was present in Person. They received the Definitions of the five first General Councils, and particularly that of the fifth Council against Origen, against Theodorus of Mopsuestia, and against Theodoret's Writings, and Ibas's Letter. They recite the Creeds of Nice and Constantinople, and the Council approving the Definition of the Council, held at Rome, and Agatho's Letter, adds, That there are two Natural Wills and two Operations in Jesus Christ, in one Person, without Division, without Mixture, and without Change. That these two Wills are not contrary, but the Humane Will follows the Divine Will, and is entirely subject to it. It prohibits teaching any other Doctrine, under Pain of Deposition to Bishops and Clerks, and of Excommunication to the Laity.

This Definition is signed by the three Legates of Pope Agatho, by George, Patriarch of Constantinople, by the Legate of Peter, of Alexandria, by Theophanes, the new Patriarch of Antioch, by the Legate of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, by the Legates of the Arch-bishops of Theffalonica, Cyprus and Ravenna, by the Deputies of the Council of Rome, and by 160 Bishops. The Emperor asked the Bishops, if this Definition was made and published by the Consent of all. They answered, They were all of this Judgment, that it was the Faith of the Apostles, the Fathers, and the Orthodox. Then they put up many Desires for the Preservation of their Prince, and pronounced Anathema against the ancient and modern Hereticks, and among the rest, against Honorius, who is always named with the Patriarch-Monosheles.

The Emperor protested, That he had no other Design, in calling this Council, than the Confirmation of the Orthodox Faith. He exhorted them, That if any of them had any thing to add to the Definition, which was newly published, they should alledge it. Then all the Bishops having approved it again, they read a Discourse, addressed to the Emperor, in the Name of the Council, signed by all the Bishops, containing many Praises of his Piety and Religion. Then they prayed him to subscribe the Definition of Faith; he promised to do it, desired the Council to receive a Bishop of Sardinia, called Citonatus, who had been accused of attempting something against his Prince and the State, but was found innocent: The Council did it willingly. This is the Abridgment of the Acts of the sixth Council, of which the Emperor caused five Copies to be made, for the five Patriarchal Churches.

The Bishops of this Council, before their Departure, sent a Letter to Pope Agatho, in which they tell him; That being, as he was, the first Bishop of the Universal Church, they rely upon him for what remains to be done; that they have received and approved his Letter; that they made use of it to overthrow the Foundations of the new Herey; that they have anathematized, as Hereticks Theodorus of Pharan, Sergius, Honorius, Cyrus, Paul, Pyrrhus and Peter; and have condemned and deposed Macarius, late Patriarch of Antioch, as also his Disciple Disciple Stephin, and Polychronius, who maintained the same Impieties. They all shew their grief, that they have been forced to come to this. Lastly, They say, that he will learn more at large by the Acts of the Council, and from his Legates, in what manner they have defended the Faith, which he had established in his Letter. This Letter is Signed by Four Patriarchs, or their Deputies, by the Bishop of Theſſalonica, by the Deputy of the Metropolitan of Cyprus, by the Metropolitan of Cesarea in Cappadocia, Primate of Pontus, by Ciconatus, Bishop of Cagliari, by the Deputy of the Council of Rome, by Thirty One Metropolitans in their own Name, and in the Name of the Bishops of their Province, and by Thirteen Bishops.

Coun. I
III. of Con-
stantinople.

The Emperor, presently after the Council, set out an Edict against the Monothelites, wherein he maketh a Confession of Faith agreeable to that of the Council; he condemns Honorius, as having supported Cyrus and Sergius's Heresie in every thing, and he appoints divers punishments against those that shall be found maintaining this Error, Deposition, or rather Suspension, against Clerks and Monks; Proscription, and Deprivation of Employments, against Persons constituted in Charge and Dignity, and Banishment from all the Towns of the Empire, against private Persons.

Agatho being Dead in 682, Constantine writ to Leo the Second his Successor. In this Letter he commends Agatho's; he tells him, That Macarius was the only Man that would not yield to the Decision of the Council, notwithstanding all his endeavours to recover him from his Error. He exhorts him to Excommunicate all those that shall be found in the Error of the Monothelites, and prays him to send some Apocrisarii to Constantinople, to be his Representatives there, and to act in his stead in all Ecclesiastical Affairs, both concerning the Discipline, and the Faith. He wrote also a Letter to the Bishops that had been present at the Council of Rome, where he speaks of the Union of the Bishops of the Council about the Faith, and the condemnation of Macarius. Leo confirmed by his Answer the Definition of the Council, and condemned Honorius by Name. Lastly, Justinian confirmed this Sixth Council by a Letter written to Pope John in 687, and caused the Acts of it to be Sealed in the presence of a great number of Clerks and Lay-Men, that there might be no alteration made in it.

I need not enlarge here on the defence of the Acts of the Council, from the injurious Aspersions of Piggius, and the groundless Suspensions of Baronius. These Writers, devoted to the Court of Rome, could not endure to see Pope Honorius's Name among the Hereticks condemned in this Council; and that was the cause, that moved the one openly to attack the Acts of the Council very rudely, and the other to charge them with Corruption. But the former says nothing against this Council, but what might be said against the first Nicene Council, and that of Chalcedon; all his Objections being grounded upon the Emperor's being present in this Council, with his Officers, and his appointing the order and manner of proceeding. It cannot be denied, but Constantine the First did the same in the Nicene Council; and in that of Chalcedon, the Emperor's Commissioners took more Authority upon themselves, and concern'd themselves more in the doings of that Council, than the Emperor himself had done in this. And so he cannot touch and blemish this Council, without Aspersing the other Councils at the same time; and would utterly overthrow the most solid grounds of our Faith, that he may support a pretended Infallibility in Honorius's Person.

As to Baronius's Fancy, it is founded upon such frivolous Conjectures, confuted by so Authentical proofs, that it hath been abandoned by all those that have not blindly followed that Author. He supposes. That Theodorus, George's Predecessor in the Patriarchate of Constantinople, having been condemned and deposed by the Council, and razed his own Name out of all the Acts of that Council, to put in Honorius's. But there can be nothing worse contrived than this Hypothesis.

For First of all, 'tis a groundless supposition, That Theodorus was Anathematized or Deposed for Monothelism in the Council. It is evident, that he was not Bishop of Constantinople, when the Council began; no Author says, He was Deposed or Expelled for that Heresie; neither is it probable, that it was the cause of his leaving his See, seeing George, who was put in his room, was also a Monothelite.

Secondly, Put the case Theodorus had been condemned by the Council, how it is likely, that he durst have ventured to falsifie the Acts of the Council it self? And tho' he durst do it, it had been enough for him to cross out his own Name, without substituting that of Honorius; and put even the case he could have taken that resolution, can it be thought, that he could have brought it about? How could he falsifie all the Copies of the Acts of this Council, sent out to all the Patriarchal Sees? How could he bring the Emperor, the other Patriarchs, and all the Bishops, to consent to this Cheat? Why did not the Legates and the Popes complain of this falsification? Why did they acknowledge after, that Honorius was condemned in the 6th Council? Why did they not discover this Imposture by the Copy of the Acts of the Council, which the Deputy of the Holy See brought, and which the Popes, Agatho's Successors, communicated to the Western Bishops, and which he sent into Spain? If they were corrupted, when he brought them, why did he suffer that Corruption? And why did the Popes use them? If they were not corrupted, why did they not use them, to discover the Fraud of the Enemies of the Holy See?

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Honorius is found condemned in some places, where they could not have spoken of Council Theodorus. In the 13th Action, his Letter to Sergius is particularly censured, as contrary to the III. of Con-Apostolick Doctrine and the Definitions of the Councils. It cannot be said, this was spoken of Constantinople. Theodorus. In the 14th Action, his Letter to Sergius is again condemned, as perfectly agreeable to the Doctrines of the Hereticks. In the 18th Action, his Letter is condemned to be burnt, as containing the same Heresie, and Impieties, as the other Writings of the Monothelites. In the same Session, he is condemned together with Sergius. Anathema to Sergius and Honorius; and after, Anathema to Pyrrhus and Paul. If Theodorus's Name had been put in the room of Honorius's, they would not have placed him before Pyrrhus and Paul, but after them; Lastly, He is almost every where called Bishop of Rome. All this shews, there is nothing more unwarrantable than Baronius's conjecture.

Fourthly, 'Tis a plain matter of Fact, that Honorius was condemned in the 6th Council. And of this we have proofs more than sufficient. The Council it self owns it in its Letter to the Pope; the Emperor in his Edict declares it. Agatho, who was one of the Notaries testifieth it in a relation which is in the end of a Manuscript of the 6th Council. Leo the Second, Agatho's Successor, asserts it in Three of his Letters; the whole Church of Rome acknowledges it in the forms of the Oath, which the Popes newly Elected are to take, and in her Ancient Liturgy, the Two General Councils following look upon this condemnation as true. Lastly, No Body ever questioned it, and consequently, Baronius's fancy must pass for a matchless piece of rashness. You will yet be more sensible of it, when you shall see the weakness of the proofs, whereon he founds his bold conjecture. The first is a place of Pope Agatho's Letter, which says, the Apostolick Church of Rome did never swerve from the way of the Truth, and that his Predecessors did always confirm the Faith of their Brethren. This Letter, says he, having been read and approved in the Council, how is it likely, that after this they durst have condemned one of Agatho's Predecessors, as an Heretick, or favourer of Heresie? If this Popes Letter had contained but that one point, or it had been read in the Council to justify Honorius, this Objection might have some strength. But this being said, but by the by in Agatho's Letter, containing a long Exposition of the Faith of the Catholick Church, and a very great number of the Fathers Testimonies and Reasons against the Error of the Monothelites; and the Council having caused it to be read, on purpose only, to know the Doctrine of the Holy See, and the Western Churches: It is evident, their approbation does not fall upon this particular place of his Letter, but upon the Exposition of Faith, and the Doctrine it contained. And tho' we should suppose that the Council had taken notice of the Commendation which Agatho maketh of his Church, and his Predecessors, and had perceived that it was not absolutely and strictly true, they ought not upon this account to have refused their approbation of his Letter, nor excepted against this place of it. It were a silly thing to imagine, that a Council, called to decide a Question of Faith, should busy it self to wrangle about a Commendation slipped in by the Pope in his Letter in behalf of his Predecessors. But Pope Agatho's praises of his Predecessors in general ought not to be taken in a strict sense; for if we understand them so, all the World will see that they cannot be true; because it cannot be denied, but Liberius and Honorius did but weakly defend the Faith, as well as tolerate Error; they must then be understood in general of almost all Agatho's Predecessors, and not of all in particular, so that no exception could be made to it.

Besides, it were an easie thing to retort Baronius's Argument upon himself. For if the commendations of Agatho's Letter ought to be taken strictly, as also the Council's approbation of it, so that it was not Lawful for them to condemn those whose Religion and Piety he commends: How durst Baronius charge the Emperor Justinian with Heresie, Perfidiousness, and Impiety, since he is commended in Agatho's Letter, as a most Religious, Orthodox, and Godly Prince, whose Memory is had in Veneration among all Nations?

But I stand too long upon so weak an Objection. He makes one more, which is not harder to solve. How is it possible, saith he, that the Pope's Legates who were present in this Council, should say nothing to vindicate Honorius? But, why would he have them, to engage in a bad cause? Honorius had approved Sergius's Letter, had consented, that they should speak neither of One nor of Two Operations, had asserted but One Will in Christ, had silenced Sophronius, who would have defended the Faith. These Facts were evident by the very reading of his Letter; there is enough for his condemnation; and they could not stand up in his defence without furnishing their Adversaries with Arms. The same Reasons which they should have used to justify him, might have been urged also to justify Sergius and the rest; therefore in forsaking Honorius, they took the right course; they did the same thing in the Roman Council under Martin the 1st, for when they read Paul's Synodical Letter who defends his own Error, by the Authority of Honorius, neither the Pope, nor any of the Bishops, did think of vindicating him, nor of maintaining him to have been of another mind. But if he thinks it strange, that the Legates should suffer Honorius's Memory to be condemned; how much more strange must it seem to be, that they should have suffered the Acts of the Council to be falsified, to insert his condemnation in it? Tho' Honorius had been excusable, they may have had reasons not to oppose his condemnation; the advantage of Peace, and the fear to cause some trouble might have prevailed with them to acquiesce in the Judgment ment of the Council : But no reason can be found to excuse their Treachery, if they had corrupted the Acts of the Council to insert Honorius's condemnation there.

I do not trouble my self to confute Baronius's other Reasons, which are a mere begging of the Question, having already said over-much on that Subject ; because now his Opinion of the corruption of the Acts of the 6th Council is wholly forsaken, and it goes now for current, that Honorius was condemned in the 6th Council. This being supposed, there remains Two Questions to be examined, whether he was justly condemned, or not ; and for what reason he was condemned.

To decide these Questions, there needs no more than to read Sergius and Honorius's Letter's, and to remember the circumstances of the Fact. Cyrus Patriarch of Alexandria, that he might reunite the Theodosians, approved this expression, that there was but one Operation in Christ ; Sophronius opposed this Doctrine ; Sergius approved the Conduct and Doctrine of Cyrus ; but for Peace sake, he did think it better, not to debate this Question, and neither to affirm One nor Two Operations in Christ, and only to say, that the same person performed, Divine and Humane Actions ; because they that use the expression of One Operation only, seem to confound the Two Natures ; and when they say Two Operations, they seem to assert Two contrary Wills in Christ ; which cannot be maintained, by reason the Soul of Christ never had any motion of it's own from it self, or contrary to those of the Word, but such as the Word pleased, and when he pleased. In a word, that, as our Body is governed and moved by our Soul, so the Soul of Jesus Christ was led and governed by his Divinity. Thus Sergius explains himself in his Letter to Honorius, and asks him what was his Opinion about it.

What does this Pope answer to this ? He approves of Sergius's proceeding, he commends his Letter, he follows his Opinion, he forbids speaking any more of One or Two Operations of Christ, and orders that this Question be left to the Grammarians to be discussed ; yea, and he declares, that there is but One Will in Christ. Then he writes to Eulogius, that he should maintain no longer Two Operations in Christ. He writes moreover a Second Letter to Sergius, to command silence about that Question. What did Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul, and the other Monothelites, who were condemned in this Council, do more ? They were in Two Errors, 1. That we ought not to assert, that there was One or Two Operations in Christ, and that we should forbear debating that Question. 2. That we should say, that there is but One Will in Christ, by reason the Soul of Christ was governed and led by his Divinity. Honorius does plainly establish those Two Points ; therefore he cannot be excused, without excusing also the Patriarchs of Constantinople. You will say, That when he said there was but One Will in Christ, he said said it to exclude the contrariety of Wills ; and that the reason he gives of it, does evidently shew it. We own, saith he, there is but One Will in Christ, because he took upon him our Nature, and our Sin ; and he had no other Law in his Members, nor any contrary Will. But if this reason may serve for the vindication of Honorius, Sergius ought to be vindicated likewise, as rendering the same reason, and confessing in his Letter, that the Soul of Christ had its proper motions, directed and led by the Divinity. Paul, his Successor, may with much more reason be excused ; for in his Letter to Theodorus, he says, That the only reason why he acknowledges but One Will in Christ, is out of fear, lest he should admit a contrariety of Wills in Christ, or should say, That there be Two Persons with Two different Wills ; That he did admit but One Will, not to annihilate the Humane Nature, or any part of his Soul, but to shew that Christ's Soul was filled with the gifts of the Deity, and had no Will contrary to that of the Word. By the same reason one may justify the Ecthesis, and the Type, and all the Monothelites : For they did not deny, that the Body and Soul of Christ had all their Properties, their Faculties, and Motions ; but they affirmed, they were so governed and led by the Will of the Word, as to follow his direction and impression in all things. And the only reason they gave, why they would not have Men to say, that there were Two Wills in Christ, was for fear this expression should intimate Two contrary Wills in him. Honorius therefore is no more excusable than Sergius, Paul, and the other Monothelites, who did act and speak as he did ; and if they condemned these as Hereticks, they might condemn Honorius likewise. Wherefore not only the 6th Council always joined him with the other Monothelites, and comprehended him in the same Anathema ; which they would not have done, had they believed, there was any difference to be made between him and the rest ; for it is expressly said, ' They condemned him, for delivering in ' his Letter things contrary to the Doctrine of the Apostles, the Definitions of the Councils, and ' the Judgment of all the Fathers, and for following the false Doctrine of Hereticks, for approving in every thing the Impious Opinions of Sergius, for writing a Letter tending to the same ' Impiety, for Preaching, Teaching, and Spreading the Heresie of One Operation, and One ' Will.

In fine the Council having pronounced Anathema's against Theodorus, Sergius, Honorius, Pyrrhus, Paul, Macarius, and Stephen, Polychronius adds, Anathema to all these Hereticks. They did then believe Honorius to be an Heretick, as well as the rest, and condemned him as such.

But, say they, in the Emperor's Edict, he is called only a Favourer, Helper, and Confirmer of Heresie. Pope Leo the Second, in his Three Letters, charges him only with Fav-youring the Error of the Monothelites, and not suppressing it with a vigilancy becoming S. Peter's Successor. But what maketh most for Honorius's vindication, is, that the Abbot John, who writ his Letter, S. Maximus, and John IV. do defend him, and say, that when he asserted but One Will in Christ, he meant it of the Humane Will; but he did not mean, that there was but One Will of the Man-hood, and God-head. That's the most plausible thing can be said in the behalf of Honorius; but all this doth not prove, that he was not condemned as an Heretick, and Favourer of Heresie. Honorius was a Favourer of Heresie, because he forbade speaking both of One, and Two Operations in Jesus Christ. He was an Heretick, because he owned but One Will in Jesus Christ.

vouring

Besides, one is often a favourer of Heresie, by teaching it; and that Name is given to those who maintain an Heresie invented by others. 'Tis in this sense, Constantine says, Honorius was a favourer of Heresie. Sergius was the Author of this Doctrine, but Honorius approved, confirmed and embraced it; wherefore he calls him (ὁ ἡντιμὸς τῆς αἰρέσεως αὐτοῦ) the proper Terms not only for him who neglects to stifle a new springing Heresie, but for him also who does formally approve, embrace and teach it. Tho' Leo II. was concerned to be tender of his Predecessor's reputation, and for that reason he expressed, in more gentle Terms, the cause of Honorius's condemnation, yet he confesseth, That Honorius did not only favour the new Heresie by his Silence and Negligence, but moreover, that he did suffer the Apostolick Tradition to be sullied and defiled by a contrary Doctrine. Qui Apostolicum Ecclesiam non Apostolicæ Traditionis doctrina illustravit; sed profana prodizione immaculatam maculari permisit: And in another Letter, Maculari consensit. And the Roman Church hath so plainly acknowledged, That Pope Honorius did advance the Error of the Monothelites, that in her ancient Breviary, she declares, That he was condemned with the other Monothelites, for maintaining the Doctrine of One Will.

Lastly, Adrian II. taketh notice, That he was condemned by the Synod, because he was charged with Heresie, which he affirms to be the only cause for which he believeth a Council may judge the Pope. It cannot be doubted then, but that Honorius was condemned by the 6th. Council, as an Heretick, yea, and that the Council had as much reason to censure him, as Sergius, Paul, Peter, and the other Patriarchs of Constantinople; and that his Letter was as fit to be condemned, as the Ectesis and the Type. It's true, John the Abbot, who wrote it, and John IV. defend Honorius's Letter, and endeavoured to put a good Interpretation upon it; but this was before the Council had condemned it, and they were concerned then in the defence of it. The Greek Church did more than this in favour of Sergius; for notwithstanding the condemnation of the 6th. Council, she put into the office of a Festival, kept in Lent, a Story, in which this Patriarch is mentioned as a Saint. But we see, its more just and rational, to give credit to the judgment of a general Council, where Matters are examined to the bottom, than to the Sentiments of some private Men, who judge of this Fact, according to their own Interest or Prejudices. This will stand for certain then, That Honorius was condemned and justly too, as an Heretick, by the 6th. Council.

The 14th. provides a remedy against an Abuse which was grown common. The Lords of the places, where there were Chapels, sought to hinder the Arch-deacons and Bishops from the cognizance of what concerned the Clerks, that ministred in those Chappels. This Council decrees, That the Ordination of the Clerks, and the disposal of the Revenues of those Chapels shall belong to the Bishop, that divine Service may be regularly performed there.

The 15th. prohibits Abbots and Friars making use of the Protection of the Seculars, and going to the Prince, without their Bishop's leave.

The 20th. degrades Agapius and Bobon, Bishops of Digne, for having done many things contrary to the Canons.

The Bishops of this Council wrote a Letter to Theodosius or Theodorick Bishop of Arles, in which they acquaint him, That having met together by King Clevis's order, in the Town of Chalton, they did stay for him, hearing he was got near the Town; That the only thing that hindered his appearing, was, that he heard himself to be accused of living dishonestly, and doing several things contrary to the Canons; That they had also seen a Writing signed with his own Hand, and by the Bishops of his Province, wherein it appeared, That he had submitted himself to Penance; That he knew, that those that were come so far, cannot keep nor govern a Bishoprick any longer. Wherefore, they declare to him, That he must abstain from doing any Episcopal Function in Arles, and from receiving the Church Revenues, till he receive his trial before the Bishops.

Council VIII. of Toledo.

THIS Council of 52 Bishops of Spain, was called by an order from King * Receswintbe, in the year 653. Its Constitutions are in the form of Acts, very obscure, written in a barbarous Style, and full of false Notions. They begin with King Receswintbe's Letter to the Bishops of the Synod, wherein he exhorts them to follow the Faith of the first 4 general Councils; to provide against the Disorders that would happen, if they should execute the Oath they had taken, of putting all those to death that should be found to be concerned in any Conspiracy, against the Prince or State; to re-establish the discipline of the ancient Canons: And to regulate those Matters that shall be brought before them. The Bishops obeying the King's Order, professed themselves to hold the Decisions of the Councils and the Fathers; they read the Creed, which was then recited in the solemn Service of the Churches of Spain, which is that of the Council of Constantinople, to which they had super-added, That the Holy Ghost proceeded from the Father and the Son. Then they made a long Discourse upon Oaths, and cited many Places of the Scripture and the Fathers, to shew, that Men ought not to keep nor execute the Oaths, wherewith they have sworn to commit wicked Actions, and prejudicial to the State. The third Canon is against those that use Intreaties and Prayers, to obtain the Priesthood. They are declared Excommunicate, and those that do confer or receive Orders thus, are deprived of their Dignity; these last are likewise put to Penance in a Monastery. The three next Canons are made to keep the Clergy pure and chaste. The 7th is against an Abuse, by which some Persons ordained Bishops or Presbyters, did think themselves free to leave the Priesthood, under pretence, that in their receiving it, they had said that they would not receive it: The Council declares, That this cannot be done; and that, as Baptism conferred on Persons unwilling to receive it, and on Children who know nothing of it, is valid; so likewise Ordination ought to subsist, being as indelible as Baptism, the Holy Christ and the Consecration of the Altars: So they decree, That they, who after their Ordination, shall return to the World and marry, shall be banished out of the Church, and shut up in a Monastery, to do Penance there all their Life. The 8th. Constitution prohibits ordaining, hereafter, any Clerk that knows not the Psalter, the Anthems, the Hymns in use, and the Ceremonies of Baptism; and that if any of them that are ordained, be ignorant of these things, they shall be constrained to learn them. The 9th forbids eating Flesh in Lent, and orders, that those that have need of eating of it shall ask the Bishop's Leave. The 10th. Constitution is concerning the Election of Kings, and the Qualifications they ought to have. The 11th confirms the ancient Canons of Councils. The 12th confirms the Decree of the Council of Toledo, held under King Sisenand, about the security of Kings. They conclude with pious Wishes for King Receswinthe, and with a general Confirmation of the preceding Constitutions. The Acts are subscribed not only by 52 Bishops, but by 9 Abbots besides, and 10. Presbyters or Deacons, Deputies of Bishops, and 16 Lords. Moreover, there is another Decree of this Council, about the disposing of Kings Revenues, which is confirm'd by an Edict of King Receswinthe. The Jewish Converts presented a Petition to this Council, wherein they bound themselves, sincerely to renounce the Jewish Doctrine and Ceremonies.

Council IX. of Toledo.

Council
IX of Toledo.

TWO Years after, the same King Receswinthe called a Provincial Council, the Bishops whereof willing to renew the ancient Discipline, and to publish the Canons of the Councils, thought they ought to begin by making Laws to reform themselves: For, say they, in the Preface, It would not become Superiors to go about to judge their Inferiors, before they have judged themselves by the Laws of Justice it self. Judgments are more just by far, when the Life of the Judges is well ordered; and when their Virtue is known, their Judgment is better submitted to.

Therefore, they 1st. forbid the Bishops, and others of the Clergy, to appropriate to themselves the Lands given to Churches; and give leave to the Relations and Heirs of the Legatees, to apply themselves to the Bishop or Metropolitan, to hinder the Lands given by their Relations from being converted to private uses.

Secondly, to prevent the ruine of Parish-Churches and Monasteries, they give leave to those that built them, to take care of them, and to recommend to the Bishops some Persons to govern them, whom he shall be bound to ordain, if he finds them capable of that Office. This was one beginning of Lay-Patrons.

Thirdly, It is ordered, That if the Bishop, or any other of the Clergy (to pay the Churches Debts) alienates some part of his Church-Lands under the Titles of Patrimony, he shall be bound to set down in the Deed the cause of his doing so, to the end, that it may appear, whether it be done justly or fraudulently.

Fourthly, they decree, That if Bishops have but a small Patrimony, the Purchases they make ought to be for the Profit of the Church; but if the Revenue of their own Patrimony be found to be as great as that of their Bishoprick, their Heirs shall divide their Estate in half, or according to the proportion of their own and the Church Patrimony. Lastly, that they may, during their Life, dispose of what falls to them by Donation; but if they do not dispose of it, after their Decease, those Donations shall belong to the Church.

In the Fifth they declare, That the Bishop that will build a Monastery in his Diocese, shall endow it only with the fiftieth part of the Revenue of his Bishoprick, and with the hundredth if it be but a Church only.

In the Sixth, That he may forgive Parochial Churches the third part of the Revenues which they owe him, and that such Release shall be perpetual and irrevocable.

For the more punctual execution of these Canons, by the Seventh Constitution, they forbid the Heirs of the Bishop to enter upon their Inheritance, without the Consent of the Metropolitan, or, If he be a Metropolitan, before he hath a Successor, or there be a Council assembled. And likewise they forbid the Heirs of Presbyters and Deacons, to take possession of their Inheritance, without the Cognizance of the Bishop.

In the Eighth Canon they declare, That the Prescription of thirty Years shall not be reckoned against the Church, as to the Lands alienated by any Bishop, but from the Day of that Bishop's Death, and not from the day of the Date of the Deed.

In the Ninth they forbid a Bishop, who cometh to bury his Brother, to take above the value of a Pound of Gold, if the Church be rich, or of half a Pound if she be poor; and orders him to send the Inventory which he shall make, to the Metropolitan.

In the Tenth they declare the Sons of Clergymen, who were obliged to Celibacy, incapable of Inheriting.

The six following Canons are concerning Ecclesiastical Persons, or such as are made free by the Churches, and are not now in use.

The

The Seventeenth and last lays an Obligation upon the Jews, who are newly converted, to be present on their ancient Feast-days, in the Towns and Assemblies of Christians, kept by the Bishop.

Council
IX. of Toledo.

They conclude with making pious Wishes for King Receswinthe. They appoint the next Council on the 1st of November following. This Council is signed by Eugenius of Toledo, and 15 Bishops, by 3 Abbots, by the Deputy of a Bishop and 4 Lords.

Therefore we ought not to wonder that these Councils should make Laws about Political Matters, because they are properly Assemblies of the States, authorized by the Prince; in which the Civil Authority was joyned to the Ecclesiastical Power.

Council X. of Toledo, in 656.

THIS Council was held a Month later than it had been appointed: It made seven Canons.

Council
X. of Toledo.

In the 1st. the Festival of the Virgin was appointed to be kept eight Days before Christmas.

By the 2d. the Clerks or Monks, which shall be found to have violated the Oaths taken to the King and the State, are deprived of their Dignity, yet so as that it shall be free for the Prince to restore them to it, if he thinks fit.

By the 3d. Bishops are forbidden to give Parochial Churches or Monasteries to their Kindred or Friends, to enjoy the Revenues of them.

In the 4th. it is ordered, That Women who have embraced the state of Widowhood, ought to make Profession of it, in Writing, before the Bishop or the Presbyter, to take the Habit of it, to keep it on always, and to wear a Veil of a Black or Violet Colour.

The 5th. decrees, that those who leave the Habit of Widowhood, after they have worn it, shall be excommunicated, and shut up in Monasteries.

The 6th. orders, That those Children, whom their Parents caused to take the Tonsure, or the Religious Habit, shall be obliged to lead a Religious Life: That, nevertheless, Parents cannot offer their Children, before they be ten Years old, and after that Age the Children's Consent is necessary.

The last Canon contains an Advertisement, to dissuade Christians from selling their Slaves to the Jews.

There was presented to this Council a Confession in Writing from Potamius Bishop of Braga, who was accused of many Crimes. They brought him before the Council; he owned that Writing, declared himself deeply guilty of those Faults; and said, that nine Months since he had relinquished the Government of his Church, and shut himself up in a Prison, to do Penance. The Council being informed that he had had the carnal Knowledge of a Woman, they declared, That although, according to the Ancient Rules, he was to be wholly degraded, and deprived of his Dignity, yet, out of compassion, they left him the Title and the degree of a Bishop, but they would have him to do Penance all his Life-time, and they did chuse Fruetusus, Bishop of Dumes, to govern the Church of Braga in his room. This Decree is put after the Canons of the Council; and to it is annexed another Decree, disannulling the Bequests of a Will, made by Recimer Bishop of Dumes, to the Prejudice of his Church.

This Council is subscribed by 3 Metropolitans, Eugenius of Toledo, Fugitinus of Sevil, Fruetusus of Braga, by 17 Bishops, and 5 Bishops Deputies.

A Conference held in Northumberland, in 664.

A Conference in Northumberland. THE chief occasion of this Conference, related by Beda, l. 3. c. 25. of his History, was the Dispute about Easterday. Colman maintained the Practice of the Britains, and Wilfride that of the Romans. King Oswi was present at it. Wilfride founded his Practice upon the universal Custom of the Church, which kept Easter on the same Day, excepting the Pis and the Britains. Colman would have defended their Practice by the Authority of S. John. But Wilfride shewed him, that he did not agree with this Apostle, who kept Easter without staying for the Sunday, which they did not follow, seeing they staid till the Sunday next after the fourteenth Moon. They that did not agree with S. Peter neither, for this Holy Apostle kept Easter between the 15th and the 21st Moon, whereas they would keep it from the 14th to the 20th so that they did sometimes begin this Feast at the end of the thirteenth Moon. Colman alledged, for his Defence, the Authority of Anatolius, Columba and the Ancients of his Country. Wilfride answered, That they did not agree with Anatolius, who made use of the Cycle of nineteen Years, which they were strangers to, because that Author's Opinion was not that Easter was necessarily to be kept before the 21st Moon, but that he had mistaken the fourteenth Moon for the fifteenth, and the twentieth for the twenty first. As to Columba and his Successors, he would not condemn them; that he was persuaded they might be excused for their Simplicity, in a Time when no Body was able to instruct them: But, as for them, they could have no Excuse, if they refused the Instructions given them. However, that Columba's Authority was not to be preferred before S. Peter's, to whom Christ gave the Keys of the Church, and said, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church.

The King struck with these last Words, ask'd Colman if it was true, that Christ said so to S. Peter? Colman having confessed it was true, the King said; That, seeing S. Peter was the Door-keeper of Heaven, he would not contradict him, but would obey his Statutes.

This Decision was approved by the Company: Colman and his Men withdrew, refusing to yield to the Practice of the Romans, about the keeping of Easter and the Tonnage, about which there was also a Contest: Men take such delight in Disputes about small Things.

[* Concilium Emmeritense.]

Council of Merida.

Council of Merida *.

THIS Council, made up of the Bishops of the Province of Portugal, was assembled by the Order of King Receswinthe, in the Year 666. After having prayed for the King, they recited the Creed, with the addition, of the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son. Then they decree, That on Holy Days they shall say Vespers in their Churches, before they sing what they call the Sound, that is, the Venite exultemus, which is thus called, because it was sung with a loud sounding Voice.

In the third Chapter they ordain, That whenever the King shall go to the Army, the Bishops shall offer every Day the Sacrifice, and put up prayers for him and his till his Return.

They decree in the fourth, That Bishops, after their Ordination, shall give a Writing, whereby they shall bind themselves to a chaste, sober and honest Life. The Metropolitans were to send this Writing to the Bishops of their Province, and the Bishops to the Metropolitan.

By the fifth, Bishops are enjoined to come to the Synod, at the Time appointed by the Metropolitan's Letters, and the King's Order. If any of them be detained by Sickness, he is permitted to send a Presbyter for his Representative, but they will not have him to depute a Deacon.

Moreover it is decreed by the sixth, That the Suffragan Bishops, which shall be sent for by the Metropolitan, to come and keep Christmas and Easter with him, shall be bound to obey his Orders.

The seventh renews the Law of holding every Year a Council, and the Penalties laid upon the Bishops that do not come to it.

In the eighth it is mentioned, That King Receswinthe hath re-established the Rights of the Province of Portugal and its Metropolis: And then it says, That Selva Bishop of Ingidane had made his Complaint, that Justus Bishop of Salamanca had invaded his Diocese, and demanded Restitution of what belonged to him. It was ordained, That Surveyors shall be sent to compose this Difference, because there had not been thirty Years possession. In the end Bishops are warned to look well to the Preservation of what belongs to their Diocese; and it is decreed, That 30 Years Possession shall go for a Title.

By the ninth Canon, he to whom the Holy Chrisme is sent, is forbidden to take any thing for his Distribution of it; and Presbyters are forbidden exacting any thing for Baptizing; but they are permitted to take what shall be freely given to them.

The tenth enjoyns every Bishop to have an Arch-priest, an Arch-deacon and a Secretary; and these Officers are enjoyn'd to be subject to their Bishops, to pay them their Dues, to entertain them in their Visitation, and to undertake no Business without their Consent. Council of Merida.

By the twelfth a Bishop is permitted to take Parish Priests and Clerks into his Cathedral Church, yet so that they shall not lose their Title, nor the Revenue of their Livings, provided that another Priest or Clerk shall be put in their room, with a competent Maintenance.

The thirteenth impowers the Bishop to Prefer the Clerks, who discharge their Duty well, and to deprive them of this Advantage, if they abuse it.

The fourteenth decrees, That all the Money offered on Holy Days, in Churches, shall be gathered together and put into the Bishop's Hands; who shall divide it into three parts, the one for himself, the other for the Priests and Deacons, and the rest for the other Clerks.

The fifteenth orders the manner of punishing Church-Servants, that it be done agreeably to the Ecclesiastical Gentleness and Lenity.

By the sixteenth, the Bishops of the Province of Portugal are forbidden to appropriate to themselves the third part of the Church's Revenue, and are ordered to employ it in the Repairing of the Churches.

The seventeenth appoints Penalties for those who speak ill of their Bishops after his Death.

By the eighteenth Parsons are enjoyn'd to have Clerks.

The nineteenth enjoyns Presbyters, charged with the Care of several Churches, to say Mass in every one of them every Sunday; and to recite the Names of those that built them, whether they be alive or dead.

The twentieth contains some Constitutions about the bestowing Freedom on the Slaves of the Church.

The twenty first decrees, That the Donations, made by a Bishop, shall stand, when the Church is found to have got more by his Estate, than he gave by his Will.

By the twenty second it is decreed, That those that will not observe these Decrees, shall be excommunicated.

This Council ended, as all the preceding Councils of Spain, with Wishes and Prayers for King Receswintke. It is subscribed by the Arch-bishop of Merida, and 11 Suffragan Bishops; which are the Bishops of Indane, of Pace, now Bece, of Avila, of Lisbon, of Lamega, of Salamanca, of Coimbra, of Cauria, of Oxonobe, now Istombar, of Elbora, now Talaverre, and of Caliabria, now Setuval; which we do now take notice of, because there was some Difference since between the Metropolitan of Braga and that of Merida, about 3 of those Churches, viz. Coimbra, Lamega and Indane.

Council of Autun.

S. Leger, Bishop of Autun, held a Council in this City, in which he made some Constitutions for Monks; wherein they are ordered, To appropriate nothing to themselves, nor to be seen in Towns, To obey their Abbots, To let no Woman come into their Monasteries, To suffer no Vagabon Friars, To keep S. Benedict's Rules, and exactly to discharge their Duty: It appoints different Penalties against Transgressors, among which is reckoned the Bastinado for simple Friars. Some place this Council in 663, others in 670. and some others in 666, because in his last Will it is said, that in the 7th Year of his Pontificate, which answers the 666th Year of Christ, he was present at a Council of 54 Bishops: But those 54 Bishops did not meet at Autun, but in a Place named Christiac; and the Constitutions abovemention'd, are intituled, in the old Collection of the Church of Angers, Canons of the Council of Autun. Council IV. of Braga.

IV. of Braga.

THE same Year, and under the same King, was held a Council in Braga. The Bishops having recited the Nicene Creed, with the Addition of the Holy Ghost's proceeding from the Father and the Son, do condemn some Abuses which had crept into the Celebration of the Holy Mysteries: Some offered Milk, others Grapes instead of Wine; some gave to the People the Eucharist dip't in Wine: Some Priests would make use of the Sacred Vessels to eat and drink in; others said Mass without a Stole on: Some hung about their Necks Relicks of Martyrs,

tyrs, and then made themselves to be carried about by Deacons, with their Albes on. Several Bishops accompanied with Women, and some misused their Clerks; Simony was a common thing. They made Canons against all those Disorders.

The 7th. prohibits Simony, and for that purpose renews the Canon of the Council of Chalcedon.

The last forbids Bishops to take more Care of their own Patrimony than of the Church's; and if this happens to be embelz'd by their Negligence, whilst the other is improved, they shall be bound to make up the Loss out of their own.

This Council is signed by 8 Bishops.

Council
IV. of Braga.

Council XII. of Toledo.

THIS Council was held in 681, under King * Ervigius. The Metropolitans of Toledo, Sevil, Braga, and Merida, were present in it, together with Thirty Bishops, Four Abbots, Three Bishop's Deputies, and several Lords. King Ervigius came to it at the beginning of it, and withdrew after having made a short Speech to the Council. He left them a Memoir, wherein he exhorted them to absolve the Guilty, to reform Manners, to re-establish Discipline, to renew the Laws made against the Jews, to procure the Restoration of those who had been Degraded, by virtue of a Law of his Predecessor, for not bearing Arms, or for laying them down. He directs his Speech to the Bishops and the Lords, that these Laws being made by the unanimous consent of both Spiritual and Temporal Authority, they may stand firm, and be put in execution.

The Council, having, according to the custom, made a protestation, that they did receive the Faith of the first Four Councils, and recited the Creed, approves Ervigius's Elevation to the Throne, and Wamba's Deposition, who had withdrawn himself by taking a Religious Habit, shaving his Head, and chusing King Ervigius to Reign in his stead, and causing him to be Consecrated by the Sacerdotal Uncction. It is very remarkable, that the Fathers of this Council do not depose King Wamba, nor chuse Ervigius of their own accord. But after having seen the Declaration, which that Prince had made in Writing, and Signed in the presence of the Lords, whereby he had made profession of the Religious Life, and got his Hair cut; and that whereby he desired, Ervigius might be chosen King; and the order he had given to the Bishop of Toledo, to Consecrate Ervigius with the usual Ceremonies; and the Verbal Process of that Consecration, Signed by Wamba, they join their consent to Wamba's, and approve of what he had done, and consequently declare, that Ervigius ought to be owned for their lawful King, and in that Quality to be Obeyed, upon pain of Anathema.

The 2^d. Canon binds those, who receive Penance in the extremity of Sickness, and when they are not Sensible, to lead a Penitent Life, if they recover. Yet they will have the Priest to give Penance to those only that desire it; they give the instance of Children's Baptism, to shew that Penance may be given to those who are not sensible.

The 3^d. ordains, That those that have been Excommunicated for some Crime against the State, shall be restored when the Prince taketh them into his favour again, or they have the Honour to Eat at his Table.

In the 4th. The Bishop of Merida having represented, that King Wamba had constrained him to Ordain a Bishop in a Country-Town, and essayed to do the same thing in other places. They recited the Canons forbidding to Ordain Bishops in Burroughs, or to put Two in the same City; by virtue whereof they declared, that the Ordination of him, whom Wamba caused to be Ordained, was irregular: But seeing it was not out of Ambition that he had been Ordained, but by the Prince's express Orders, they out of mere favour granted him the next vacant Bishoprick; and they make a general Inhibition, to Ordain Bishops in places where there were none before.

The 5th. Forbids Priests to Offer the Holy Sacrifice without Communicating, because some of those who Offered it many times in one Day, would not Communicate but at their last Mass.

Council
XII. of Toledo.

The 6th. to prevent the long vacancy of Churches, permits the Arch-Bishop of Toledo to Ordain him whom the King shall chuse, yet without any prejudice to the Rights of Provinces; and upon condition, that within Three Months after his Ordination he shall present himself before his Metropolitan.

The 7th. declares, That whereas King Erwigius intends to moderate the Law made by his Predecessor Wamba, against them that had not taken Arms; it was their Opinion, that such persons had a Right to bear Witness, and were not to be rejected as infamous.

By the 8th. Husbands are forbidden to leave their Wives, except for Adultery.

The 9th. renews several Constitutions against the Jews.

The 10th grants the Right of the Sanctuary to those who escape into Churches, or within Thirty Yards about, provided nevertheless, that they shall be delivered back into their Hands, who shall promise with an Oath not to hurt them.

The 11th. Canon does severely punish Superstitions and Idolatry.

The 12th. renews the Law for holding a Council every Year.

The 13th. contains Wishes and Prayers for the Prince.

These Canons are confirmed by a Declaration of King Erwigius.

Council XIII. of Toledo.

XIII. of
Toledo.

THIS Council was also holden under King Erwigius, (An, 683.) The same Metropolitans assisted at it together with Forty Four Bishops, Twenty Four Deputies of other Bishops, Eight Abbots, and Twenty Six Lords. They read the Mandement to them by King Erwigius, containing the Heads of such matters as he would have to be regulated by them. Then they made a Confession of Faith, and recited the Creed, according to the custom. The Three first Canons respect Secular Affairs, and confirm what the Prince had done.

The 1st. is a Pardon in favour of those who had formerly conspired with Paul against the State.

The 2^d. is a determination of the manner how to proceed against the Lords of the Court, accused of Capital Matters, and how to judge them.

And the 3^d. is about the remitting of the extraordinary Taxes granted to Erwigius. These Three Canons are all of the First Day.

The next Day the Bishops being desirous to shew their gratitude to their Prince for the favours he had bestowed upon them, provided for the Security of his Children and Family.

By the 4th. Canon, and by the 5th, They forbid any person Marrying his Widow.

The 6th. prohibits advancing to the Offices of the Court Slaves, or Free-Men, unless they belong to the Exchequer.

The 7th. forbids to uncloath the Altars, take away the Wax-Candles, Adorn the Church in a Mourning manner, or to cease to Offer the Sacrifice, without great necessity.

The 8th. orders Bishops to come, when sent for by their Metropolitan, to be present at some Festival.

The 9th. confirms and repeats compendiously the Canons of the 12th Council of Toledo.

The 10th. made in the 3^d Meeting of the Council, is concerning a difficult case proposed by Gaudentius Bishop of Valeria, or Villareo, who being fallen Sick, had subjected himself to the Laws of Penance. He desired to know, whether, in case he recovered, he might Execute his Function, and Celebrate the Holy Mysteries. The Council ordains, That he may, after he is reconciled; because the Canons permit those who being at the point of Death, have indeed received Penance, but yet have confessed no Crimes, to be admitted into the Clergy. Upon this Principle, they make a general Law, that the Bishops, who have received Penance, without confessing any Mortal Sins, being reconciled by their Metropolitan, may return to their Functions. Notwithstanding, if they had been convicted of any Crimes, before they were put to Penance, or if they have confessed some capital Sins upon their receiving of it, they shall abstain from their Functions, as long as the Metropolitan shall think fit. But if in submitting themselves to Penance they confessed no Mortal Sin, tho' they have committed some, which they conceal in their own Conscience, they have the liberty to examine themselves in their own Conscience, whether they should offer the Sacrifice, or not: But this depends upon their own Will, and not upon Men's Judgment.

The 11th. Canon prohibits keeping or entertaining another Bishop's Clerk, or helping his escape, or affording him means of hiding himself. It is observed there, that those ought not to be reckoned among Fugitives, who go to their Metropolitan about their own business.

It is ordained contrary-wise by the 12th Canon, That a Clerk, who having some business with his Bishop, betakes himself to the Metropolitan, ought not to be Excommunicated by his Bishop, before the Metropolitan hath judged whether he deserve Excommunication. Likewise, of the Seventh Century of Christianity.

wife, If a Clerk pretending himself to be wrong'd by his Metropolitan, betaketh himself to another Metropolitan; or if, both the Metropolitans refusing to do him Justice, he hath recourse to the Prince, he shall not be Excommunicated before his Cause be Judged. Yet, if he who Appeals to the Synod, to the next Metropolitan, or to the King, be found to have been Excommunicated before he brought his Matters before them, he shall remain Excommunicate till he hath cleared himself.

XIII. of
Toledo.

The 13th. contains Thanksgiving to King Ervigius, and some Petitions to Heaven for him. This Prince set out an Edict, whereby he confirmed these Canons, after the recitation of them.

Council XIV. of Toledo.

THIS Council was called by King Ervigius, (Anno 684.) to approve what had been done against the Error of the Monothelites, which they call the Doctrine of Apollinaris. He intended to call a General Council of his whole Kingdom for this purpose; but time not permitting it, the Bishop of Toledo assembled his Suffragans; and the Metropolitans of Tarragona, Narbonne, Merida, Braga, and Sevil, sent their Deputies thither. In this Council they approved the Acts of that of Constantinople, and added an Exposition of Faith, wherein they did acknowledge two Wills in Jesus Christ.

XIV. of Toledo.

Council XV. of Toledo.

THIS Council was held under King* Egica, Ervigius's Successor, and Son-in-Law, (Anno 688.) and composed of Sixty Bishops. In this Council they justify themselves about some Articles of the Exposition of Faith, which the Spanish Bishops had sent to Rome by Peter a Prefbyter, which Articles Pope Benedict had found fault with.

Council
XV. of Toledo.

The First is about their saying, That the Will had begotten a Will. They defend this Expression, because the Eternal Will of God is common to the Three Persons, as well as Wisdom, and other Divine Attributes; so that as Wisdom may be said to have begotten Wisdom, the Will likewise may be said to have begotten a Will; they also defend this Expression by some testimonies of S. Athanasius, and S. Austin.

Egypta.

The Second is about their saying, That there were Three Substances in Jesus Christ. They maintain, that Jesus Christ being composed of a Body, a Soul, and the Godhead, he may be said to be of Three Substances in this sense, though the Body and the Humane Soul being taken but for One Nature, and One Substance, Two Natures, and Two Substances, only may be said to be in him. They shew, that S. Cyril, and S. Austin, did speak as they did. They do not enlarge upon the other two Articles, thinking it sufficient to observe, that they are taken out of S. Ambrose, and S. Fulgentius. Afterwards they treat of the Oaths taken by King Egica. He had made one to King Ervigius, to defend and protect his Children against all Persons whatsoever; and another at his Consecration, to administer Justice to his People. It was demanded, that in case these two Oaths should be found to interfere with one another, and that Ervigius's Children were to be protected against Right and Justice, and to be rescued from the Punishment due to them for Wrongs done by them, whether the King be bound to keep the first, or the last Oath. The Council Answers, He is more strictly bound to keep the last, as being more just, more solemn and necessary. This Council is Signed by the Metropolitans of Toledo, Narbonne, Sevil, Braga, and Merida, by Fifty-six of their Suffragans in Person, by the Deputies of Six, among whom was Ioa the Arch-Bishop of Terragona, by Eleven Abbots, by Seventeen Lords, and confirmed by the King's Declaration.

Council of Saragosa.

THIS Council was assembled under King Egica, Anno 691: It made five Canons.

By the 1st. Bishops are forbidden to Consecrate Churches but on Sundays.

The 2^d. orders the Bishops to enquire of their Metropolitan, or Primate, about Easter-Day, and to keep it upon the day he shall appoint.

The Council ends with Thankſgiving to, and Prayers for the King.

Council XVI. of Toledo.

Council XVI. of Toledo. THIS Council was kept in 693, under the ſame King Egica. After the reading of the Memoir, containing the Propoſal of what was to be treated in the Council, the Biſhops made a long Expoſition of Faith, which is followed with Twelve Canons.

The 1^{ſt}. is in the behalf of the Jewiſh Converts, to exempt them from the Tribute which they paid to the Exchequer.

The 2^d. is againſt the Remainders of Idolatry.

The 3^d. appoints very ſevere Punishments againſt the Sodomites, and excludes them from the Communion until the time of Death, when they have not done Penance being in Health.

The 5th. forbids Biſhops to take above the third part of the Churches Revenues, and orders them to lay it out in Repairs. It prohibits alſo giving the Government of many Churches to one Prieſt ; and ordains, That ſmall Churches ſhall be united to greater ones.

The 6th. forbids an Abule crept in among ſome Spaniſh Prietts, who at the Sacrifice upon the Altar did not Offer clean and decent Loaves, nor prepare them carefully ; but did only Conſecrate a Cruſt of their own Bread cut round. The Council to ſtop this Abule, ordains, That the Bread to be Conſecrated upon the Altar ſhall be whole, decent, made on purpoſe, that it ſhall not be a very great Loaf, but of a reaſonable bigneſs, Modica oblata, the remainders of which may eaſily be preſerved, and which may not load the Stomach.

The 7th. commands, That Biſhops ſhall call their Clergy and the People together for the promulgation of the Canons of Councils within ſix Months after the holding of the Councils.

The 8th. contains ſeveral Conſtitutions for the ſafety of the King's Children, and Ordains, That every Day Sacrifices ſhall be Offered up for the Health and Proſperity of the King and the Royal Family, except the Day of the Paſſion, when Altars are uncovered, and no Body is permitted to ſay Maſs.

The 9th. is againſt Sübert, Biſhop of Toledo, who had broken his Oath to King Egica, by Conſpiring againſt his Perſon and Family : They Depoſe and Excommunicate him for his whole Life ; they declare his Goods to be confiscated to the Prince, and condemn him to perpetual Imprifonment. They Decree the ſame Punishment againſt all that are Guilty of the ſame Crime.

The 10th. pronounces three times Anathema againſt them that attempt againſt the Life of Kings, and Plot againſt them and the State, and reduces them and their Poſterity to the condition of Slaves.

The 11th. contains ſome Prayers for King Egica's Proſperity.

By the 12th. they put Felix, Biſhop of Sevil, into the room of Sübert newly Depoſed, and Fauſtin, Biſhop of Braga, into Felix's room and to Fauſtin they ſubſtitute another Biſhop.

The 13th. ordains, That a Council ſhall be held at Narbone, to approve the Canons of this ; becauſe the Biſhops of this Province could not come to it by reaſon of a Sickneſs. This Council is confirmed by the Prince's Edict, and ſigned by Five Metropolitans, viz. thoſe of Toledo, Sevil, Merida, Tarragona, and Braga, by Fifty-two Biſhops, Three Biſhops Deputies, Five Abbots, and Sixteen Counts, or Lords.

Council XVII. of Toledo, held in 694.

Council XVII. of Toledo. THIS Council hath the ſame Form with the preceding. King Egica preſented a Memoir, which the Biſhops of the Council having read, they recited the Creed, and made the following Canons.

1^{ſt}. That they ſhall Faſt three Days, in Honour of the Holy Trinity, before they begin any Conference in Councils.

2^{dly}, That

2dly, That in the beginning of Lent the Bishop shall shut the Font, and Seal it up with his Ring till Holy Thursday, to let People know, that no Body ought to be Baptized during that time, but in case of extream Necessity.

Toledo.

Lastly, They return their Thanks to King Egica, who confirms their Canons by his Edict.

Council held at Constantinople, Anno 692, called Quini-Sextum, or In Trullo.

THE Fifth and Sixth General Councils having made no Canons about Discipline, Justinian the Second thought fit to call a Council, to renew the old Canons, and to make a kind of a Body of the Canon-Law, for the Clergy of all the East.

Council of
nople.

This Council was held in 692, at Constantinople, in the Tower of the Emperor's Palace, called Trullus. The Four Patriarchs of the East were present at it, together with 108 Bishops of their Patriarchates. This Council was called Quini-Sextum, because it was look'd upon as a Supplement to the Fifth and Sixth Council. It took the Name of General Council, and the Greeks owned it for such, but the Latins rejected it. It made 102 Canons.

In the 1st. it approves all that was done in the first Six General Councils, condemns the Errors and the Persons they had condemn'd, and pronounces Anathema to those that hold any other Doctrine, than that they have established.

In the 2^d. the Bishops of this Council deliver the number of Canons which they received, which are the Constitutions attributed to Clemens, the Canons of the Councils of Nice, Ancyra, Neo-Cæsarea, Gangra, Antioch, Laodicea, Constantinople, Ephesus, Chalcedon, Sardica, and Cartbage. The Canons made in the time of Nectarius at Constantinople, and in the time of Theophilus at Alexandria; the Canons of Denys, and Peter of Alexandria, of Gregory Thaumaturgus, of S. Athanasius, S. Basil, S. Gregory Nyssen, S. Gregory Nazianzen, of Amphilachius, Timothy, and Theophilus of Alexandria, S. Cyril, Gennadius of Constantinople, and the Canon of S. Cyprian, and his Council, which is only observed in Africk, according to their Custom.

The 3^d. Canon is concerning those of the Clergy, Presbyters, or Deacons, that had Married two Wives. They declare, That those that would not leave that Custom shall be Deposed; but as to those, whose second Wives are dead, or who have left them, they shall keep the Honour and Place of their Dignity, being forbidden only to perform the Functions of it; it being not fitting, say they, that he that ought to heal his own Wounds, should Bless others: As for them who had Married Widows, or had Married, being Priests, Deacons, or Sub-deacons, they Ordain, they shall for a time be suspended from their Functions; but they grant them the power of being restored, when they leave their Wives, upon condition, that they shall not be raised to a Superior Order. And lastly, they Ordain, That, for the future, all those that have been Married twice after Baptism, or have had Concubines, shall not be made Bishops, Priests, Deacons, or Clergy-Men; as also those that have Married, Divorced or Prostituted Women, or Slaves, or Stage-Players.

~~~~~ The 16th. declares, That the Seven Deacons spoken of in the Acts of the Apostles, were but Ministers of common Tables, and not of Altars; and thereby rejects the Canon of the Council of Neo-caesarea, which by the Authority of this Place had ordained, that there should be but Seven Deacons in every Church.

The 94th. is against those that use the Oath of Pagans.

The 95th. is of the Reception of Hereticks. It ordains, That the Arians, Macedonians, Novatians, Continents, Tesseradecatites, and Apollinarists, shall be received after they have made Abjuration in Writing, by anointing their Forehead, Eyes, Nostrils, Mouth and Ears with the Holy Chrism, pronouncing these Words; This is the Seal of the Holy Ghost. That the Eunomians, Montanists and Sabellians shall be re-baptized. That the Manichees, Valentinians, Marcionites, and other Hereticks, are also to abjure their Errors, anathematizing all Hereticks by Name, and making Profession of the true Faith.

Bede.

BEDE, surnamed the Venerable^a, was born in England in the Year * 672 [in the County * Others Palatine of Durham, within the Precincts of the Monastery of Girwy] not far from [the 673. place where now stands a little Village called] Farrow, [which lies near the Mouth of the River Tine.] At seven Years of Age his Relations presented him to S. Benedict of Bisep, then Abbot of the Monastery [of S. Peter] at Weremouth, and Founder [of that of S. Paul's] at Farrow [to be Educated and Instructed.] In these Monasteries, which were not above five Miles distant from each other, did he spend his whole Life under the Government [of S. Bene-

Age he was ordained Deacon, and Eleven Years after Priest, by John [of Beverly] Bishop of a surnamed the Venerable.] Upon what account he had this Name given him, is not known. Several Reasons are alledged, but the most probable is this, That those that read his Books while he was alive, not daring to give him the Title of Saint, contented themselves to call him Venerable; Nevertheless we do not find that he was called so by any Contemporary with him. He is also called, Saint, Blessed, English Doctor, the Most Illustrious Master and Reader by way of Excellence.

b Having Read and Collected much. As long as he lived he never gave over Reading, Writing and Teaching.

c It appears by his Writings, that he never was at Rome.] He never speaks of this pretended Voyage to Italy, but when he mentions the Pope's Letters, which he hath inserted in his History. He says, he had them from Nothelmus, a London Minister, who brought him them from London. In his Letter to Egbert, speaking of the Customs used at Rome, he doth not alledge his own Practice for Confirmation of them, but refers us to the Testimony of Egbert. He tells us, that he understood by some Monks that had been at Rome, that they put the date of the Year from the Passion of Jesus Christ upon their christmas Tapers.

Bede. eight Tomes, which were Printed at Basil by Hervagius in 1563. and at Colen in 1612. [They had been Printed in three Tomes at Paris in 1545, but not so correct.] The two first Tomes contain such Works only, as concern Humane Arts and Sciences, viz. of Grammar, Arithmetick, Astronomy, Physick, Chronology, and Morality. Those which have nearest Relation to Ecclesiastical Matters are two Treatises about the Tropes and Figures of Holy Scripture, his Writings about the Lunar Cycles to find Easter-day every Year, and a Treatise of Times, in which he defends the Computation of the Years of the World according to the Hebrew Text, against the Calculation of the Seventy, and divides the duration of the World into six Ages, of which he gives us the History and Chronology in a small Treatise by it self. [which hath also been Printed alone at Paris in 1507, 4to. and with the Scholiast of J. Bronchorstius at Colen in 1537.]

The third Tome contains his Historical Books. The first and most considerable is his Ecclesiastical History of England, divided into Five Books. The first contains the most remarkable things that happened in Great Britain, from Cæsar to the Death of S. Gregory [Anno 604.] The other four relate at large what passed in the Church of England from that time [to the Year 731.] At the end he hath annexed an Abridgment of this History in the form of a Chronicle, to which are joined the Lives of S. Cuthbert, Arch-Bishop of York; S. Felix, Bishop of Nola; the Bishop of Arras, S. Columbanus; the Abbot S. Vedastus; S. Attalas, the Abbot; S. Patrick, the Apostle of Great Britain; S. Eustatius, Scholar of S. Columbanus; S. Bertolfus, Abbot of Bobio; S. Arnolphus, Bishop of Metz; and S. Burgondosora, an Abbess; with a Relation of the Travels and Martyrdom of S. Justin a Youth, in Verle, who was Beheaded at the Louvre in the time of Dioclesian's Persecution.

The Life of S. Patrick is not Bede's, but Probus's, of S. Columbanus, Jonas's, and of S. Arnoldus, Paul the Deacon's.

The Martyrology of Bede, as we now have it, is not in the same Purity in which he Composed it, but several things have been added since, as is usual in Works of that nature. Bollandus and his Followers do likewise assert, That it is not of Bede's Writing, but Florus's a Deacon of Lyons, under whose Name it is found in several Manuscripts.

The Treatise of Holy Places is made up of several large Relations, and particularly from those of Arculphus, a Bishop of France, written in three Books by Adamannus.

To this small Tract is annexed a large Collection of Hebrew Names, both Proper and Appellative, and others, put in an Alphabetical Order, and Explained.

This Tome ends with a Book entitled, Collections taken out of the Fathers, containing Sentences, Questions, and Parables. This Treatise is a Miscellaneous Rapsody, without either Order or Method, and unworthy of the Name of Bede.

The fourth Tome of Bede's Works, contains his Commentaries upon some part of the Books of the Old Testament, of which the Catalogue followeth.

An Explication of the three first Chapters of Genesis, taken out of S. Basil, S. Ambrose, and all S. Austin.

A Literal and Allegorical Commentary upon the Pentateuch.

Four Books containing an Allegorical Explication of the Books of Samuel, i. e. of the First and Second Book of the Kings.

Thirty Questions upon the Books of Kings.

Three Books of Allegorical Explications of the two Books of Esdra.

A short Allegorical Exposition of the History of Tobit.

An Allegorical Exposition of the Book of Job, divided into three Books. This Work is not Bede's, but some other Authors; and he himself cites it in his Book of * Ounces under the Name of Philip of Syda.

A Commentary upon the Proverbs of Solomon, in three Books.

Seven Books upon the Canticles. The first contains an Extract of S. Austin's Books against Julian, a Summary of all the Chapters applying them to the Church, and the Text of the Canticles. The five following Books contain a Commentary upon the Text taken out of the ancient Commentaries. The last is made up of Collections of Passages out of S. Gregory upon the Canticles.

This Tome concludes with three Books, wherein he Explains Allegorically the Relation which Moses gives in Exodus of the Building of the Ark, the Tabernacle, and Priest's Garments. Thrithemus makes mention of a Commentary of Bede's upon the Proverbs, and he himself speaks of another upon Ecclesiastes; but these Works are not published, no more than his Explication of all the Prophets.

The fifth Tome contains his Commentaries upon the New Testament, viz.

Four Book upon the Gospel of S. Matthew.

Four Books upon S. Mark.

Six Books upon S. Luke.

A long Comment upon the Acts of the Apostles, at the end of which is a small Treatise of the Names, Places and Cities, spoken of in that History.

A Commentary upon the Catholick Epistles. Bede made a Preface to this Commentary, giving an Account of the Order and Inscription of those Epistles; but it never was Printed with his other Works; but being lately found in a MS. belonging to Caius College in Cambridge, it hath been Printed in Dr. Cave's Historiâ Literariâ among Bede's Works.

A Commentary upon the Revelations.

The Commentaries upon all S. Paul's Epistles, which are taken out of S. Austin's Works, are reserved for the Sixth Tome. There are several Opinions about the Author of this Commentary. Some attribute it to Peter, an Abbot of the Province of Tripolis, others to Florus, a Deacon of Lyons, and others continue them to Bede. It is certain, that all these three did make Comments upon these Epistles, taken out of S. Austin. Cassiodorus assures of the first, Wandlebert of the second, and Bede says it of himself in the Catalogue of his Works, at the end of his Church-History of England; and after him Hincmarus, and Lupus Ferrariensis testify the same to us. But to which of these they ought to be attributed, it would be hard to know, unless it were discovered by the Antient MSS. in which this Commentary, Printed under the name of Bede is attributed to Florus; and where we find the true Commentary of Bede, bearing his own Name, as F. Mabillon hath observed in the first Tome of his Analecâ.

This Tome contains also some Retractions and Additions, to some places of his Commentary upon the Acts; Six new Questions, and the Translation of S. Chrysostom's Sermons in praise of S. Paul, made by Anianus.

The Seventh Tome contains 33 Homilies fitted for the Summer. 32 for the Summer-Festivals of the Saints. 15 for the Winter. 22 for Lent. 16 for the Winter-Festivals of the Saints, and several Sermons attributed to Bede.

Common places upon several Moral Points taken out of the Holy Scripture and Fathers.

An Allegorical Treatise of the Valiant Woman, by which he understands the Church.

A small Tract of the Offices of the Church, and some Fragments of an Allegorical Exposition upon the Proverbs.

The Eighth Tome contains divers Treatises omitted in the former Tomes.

An Allegorical Explication of the Temple of Solomon, with reference to the Church, of which it was a Figure.

Another Exposition upon the three first Chapters of Genesis.

Several Questions upon Genesis with Answers to them, taken out of S. Ambrose, S. Austin, S. Isidore, but more especially out of S. Jerom.

The same sort of Questions upon Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, the Books of Joshua, Judges, and Kings.

Divers Questions upon the Scripture.

A Commentary upon all the Psalms.

A small Treatise upon these Words of Psalm the 52. The Lord looked down from Heaven to see, if there were any upon Earth that would understand, and seek after God.

Some Notes upon Boetius's Treatise about the Trinity.

Meditations [upon the Passion of Christ] for the seven hours of the day.

Bede's Penitential, Entituled, Remedies against Sin.

Dacherius hath Printed in the Tenth Tome of his Spicilegium, a Martyrology, which sets down in Heroick Verses the chief Festivals of the Saints through the Year. It bears Bede's Name, and the Author was certainly an English-Man, a Monk of the Monastery of Jarrow, and Contemporary with Bede, and indeed is much like the Style and Genius of this Author.

There were also published in England in the year 1664, some Letters of Bede; Together with the Lives of the Abbots of Weremouth and Jarrow: F. Mabillon in his first Tome of his Analecâ hath published a short Letter of Bede to Albinus, but it contains nothing remarkable in it.

Besides the Works afore-mentioned, there hath been lately Published out of the Antient MSS. by the Reverend and Learned Mr. Henry Wharton, Arch-Deacon of Canterbury, a Commentary of Bede's upon the first One and Twenty Chapters of Genesis; His Exposition of the Song of the Prophet Habacuc; as also two Epistles, the one containing an Apology for himself against such as accused him of some Erroneous Opinions, the other to Egbert, Arch-Bishop of York; together with a more correct Edition of his History of the Lives of the Abbots of Weremouth and Giry. Printed at London, in 1693.

Bede's style is clear and easie, but is neither Pure, Elegant, Lofly, nor Polite. He wrote with wonderful readines, but without Art or Consideration. He had much Reading and Learning, but wanted Judgment and Critical Exactness. He Collected indifferently all he found, without Picking and Choosing. His Commentaries upon Holy Scripture, as we have observed, are nothing but Extracts of the Commentaries of the Fathers, Collected and put together by him. He had set down the Authors out of which he took every passage, by putting into the Margin the first Letter of their Names; but by the Negligence of such as copied them, they are lost. His History is exact enough as to the things that passed in his time, or a little time before him, but as to the other parts of it we cannot safely credit it, because he often made use of false Memoirs. His Compoſures upon the Prophane Sciences, are neither very deep nor exact, but they are well done for his Age.

[By the Antient MSS.] F. Mabillon quotes two MSS. of 800 years old, vvherein he finds under the Name of Bede a clear different Commentary from that vvhich is printed under his Name. This bears the Name of Florus, in the Antient MS. of Corbey. It carries the same name in the MS. used by Trithemius, and in another quoted by F. Mabillon. In an Antient MS. Collection of Canons, this Collection is cited also under the name of Florus. In some MSS. it carries the name of Bede and Florus. Lastly, Florus made another Commentary upon S. Paul taken out of the Works of 12 other Fathers, without any mention of S. Austin, which proves that he had already Collected the Testimonies of this Father in another Work.

JOHN, Patriarch of Constantinople; and AGATHO, Deacon of the same Church.

John Patriarch and Agatho Deacon of Constantinople.

AFTER the Death of the Emperor Constantine [commonly called Pogonatus] his Son Justinian [the Second of that Name] a Cruel Man obtained the Empire in 685, and was deprived of it in the Tenth year of his Reign by Leontius Patricius, who cut off his Nose, and Banished him; but he was soon after Deposed by Appsimarus Tiberius: And at length Justinian was again restored in 705. but was at last Slain in Bithynia, Anno. 712. by the Command of Bardanes, surnamed Philippicus, who Invaded the Empire. This Man who had been the Scholar of the Abbot Stephen, the Scholar of Macarius, caused the Picture of the Sixth Council to be Pulled down, the Names of Sergius, and Honorius to be put into the Dypsticks, and the Acts of the Council, which were in his Palace to be Burnt. He Persecuted the Orthodox Bishops, Banished Cyrus Patriarch of Constantinople, put John in his Place, and endeavoured to reverse the Definitions of the Sixth Council, and revive the Doctrine of the Monothelites. But he did not live long enough to perfect his design, for he was taken, and had his Eyes put out by certain Persons that conspired against him in 713, on the Saturday before Whitsuntide, and the next Day Fl. Anthemius was declared Emperor, surnamed Anastasius, and Crowned by John. He published the Sixth Council anew, put up the Picture of it, and caused the Acts to be written out again by the Deacon Agatho, who relates this whole matter in a Memoir, which he hath put at the end of the Acts of the Council.

John Patriarch of Constantinople, declared that he was of the same Opinion, and to reconcile himself to the Western Church. He wrote a Letter to Pope Constantine, in which he excuses himself for not sending a Synodical Letter of Communion, because he was hindered by the violence of Philippicus. He then gives him an Account how he was raised to the Patriarchate; He says, That Philippicus had a design to put a Person into it who was not of the Clergy, and who was of his own Sentiments, but he was forced by the earnest Petitions of the Clergy of Constantinople to choose him; That he never had declared himself to be of the Erroneous Opinions of the Emperor, nor did write to the Pope in defence of them; but he owns, That he was forced to dissemble the Truth by using ambiguous terms; He endeavours to excuse his behaviour, plainly acknowledges two Natural Wills in Jesus Christ, and approves of the Council held under Martin I. and the Sixth Council. Lastly, He earnestly desired the Pope to receive him into his Communion, and to write his Synodical Letters to him, without regard to what had passed. Nevertheless Constantine gave him no Answer, and he was likewise Deposed a little after, and Germanus put in his place.

GERMANUS, Patriarch of Constantinople.

Germanus, Patriarch of Constantinople.

GERMANUS Bishop of Cyricum was translated to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople, Anno. 713. and enjoyed it till 730, when he was Deposed by the Emperor Leo Isaurus, and sent into Banishment in which he Died. We have three of his Letters in the Acts of the Seventh Council. Some attribute also to him a Mystical Work about the Ceremonies of the Liturgy, Entitled Theoria, Printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum which contains also an Explication upon the Lord's Prayer, which is printed by it self. Four Sermons upon the Virgin printed by F. Combefis in Greek and Latin in his Addition to the Biblioth. Patrum. The first is upon her Presentation in the Temple. The second, which is upon her Annunciation, is a Dialogue between the Angel, Mary, and Jeseph; and the two last are upon the Death of the Virgin, in one of which he insinuates, that she was taken up into Heaven in her Body. Schottus hath published another Sermon upon the Nativity of the Virgin, under the Name of Germanus; but F. Combefis hath restored it to Andreas Cretensis. Some also believe, and not without Reason, that the Book, Entitled Theoria, and his Homilies, of which we have spoken already, belong to another Germanus Patriarch of Constantinople, who lived in the twelfth Age under Alexius Comnenus, and in the time of Pope Gregory the IX, to whom he wrote a Letter. Gretzer hath also published two Sermons upon the Cross, which are this latter's rather, than the former's; as also the Sermon upon the Virgins Girdle put out by Surius. Lastly, F. Combefis hath published in Greek and Latin, a long Discourse about the Burial of our Lord, which Gretzer attributes to the Author of the two Homilies upon the Cross; but it seems to be better Written, and to belong to a more ancient Author. We find also a Fragment taken out of a Treatise of Synods, and Heresies, directed to Antimus the Deacon, which seems also to be a good Piece. But the Work that doth most certainly belong to the elder German Patriarch of Constantinople, is that which Photius gives us some Extracts of, [in his Biblioth. cod. 233.] Entitled, * Of a lawful Retaliation, in which he defends S. Gregory Nyssene from the Errors of Origen, which some imputed to him. He shews, that they, who were of Origen's Opinion concerning the ending of Hell-Torments, have imputed this Error to S. Gregory Nyssene by altering some of his Expressions, putting an ill Construction upon others, and not rightly understanding his other Writings. Photius observes, that his Style in this Work is clear, and easie; that he makes a fit use of Figures; that his Phrases are elegant, and polite; that he is not flat, and troublesome, that he keeps close to his Subject, and doth not fly from it by impertinent Expressions, forgetting nothing necessary for his Subject, and solidly proves the Propositions asserted; that he chiefly confutes the Error of those who imagine, That the Devils and Damned Souls shall one day be entated among the Blessed, having constantly suffered [for their Sins.] He confutes, I say, this Opinion by the Authority of Jesus Christ, his Apostles, the Prophets, and Testimonies of the Fathers, particularly by some Passages taken out of the Works of S. Gregory Nyssene. He answers to the Testimonies of this Father, which the Origenists alledged, and shews their Cheats, discovers the Places that they have added, and vindicates him against all the Accusations of his Enemies.

that

BONIFACE of Mentz.

BONIFACE was an English Man by Nation, and was called properly Winfrid, or Winfred; he professed a Religious Life in England, and at the same time applied himself close to his Study, that he might make himself serviceable to the Church. With this intention he went out of England in the year 715, to preach the Gospel in Frisland, but the War forced him to return into England. Not long after he went to Rome, from whence he was sent by Gregory the Second to preach the Gospel in Germany, anno 719. He preached first in Turingia, and then in Hassia, East-Frisland, and Saxony. Having planted the Faith of Jesus Christ in these Provinces, and converted several thousands Souls, he made a second Journey to Rome, and was there consecrated Bishop in 723 by Gregory the Second, who sent him back again with Instructions, and Letters of Recommendation. Being returned, he continued to preach the Gospel in Turingia, Hassia, and Bavaria. He received the Pall from Gregory the Third, with an allowance to constitute Bishopricks in the Countries newly converted. The Respect which he had for the Holy See, made him undertake a third Voyage to Rome, but he stayed not long, but returned soon into Germany. It was then his main business to establish a firm Custom in the Churches which he had Planted, to reform Discipline and Manners, to abolish Superstitions, to erect Episcopal Sees where it was necessary, and to hold Councils, of which he summoned several in Germany and France. Hitherto Boniface had only the Quality and Dignity of a Bishop and Vicar of the Holy See, without any particular Title. Wherefore Pepin, and the great Lords of France, thought it convenient to give him one, designing to make him Bishop of Colen; but the See of Mentz becoming vacant by the Desposition of Gervoldus Boniface was put into his Place, and that Church made a Metropolis, which was confirmed by Pope Zachary, who made five Bishops Sees subject to it, viz, Tongres, Cologne, Wormes, Spire, and Utrecht; and the Bishoprick newly erected, or those that depended upon Wormes, viz. Strasburg, Amberg, Wirtemberg, Buraburg, Erford, Eichstat, Constance, and Coira. But he soon after laid down that Dignity upon the account of Lullus his Scholar, whom he put in his Place with the Consent of Pepin, the Bishops, Clergy, and Lords of the Province, having first obtained Leave of the Pope to do it. He went to Utrecht to preach the Gospel in Frisland, where he was barbarously murder'd by the Heathens, June 5. an. 754. in the place, whither he was come to confirm a great multitude of Persons newly baptized, and was buried in the Abby of Fulda. Serarius hath published a Collection of Boniface's Letters, together with Lullus's, Adulmus's, and several other of his Scholars, Friends, Princes, and Popes, that wrote to him. [At Mentz in 1605. Reprinted 1629.]

Mentz.

The 1st. is to one of his Friends, called Nithardus; in it he takes the Name of Winfrid, which shews, that it was written when he was young. He exhorts this Friend to contemn Temporal Things, and apply himself to the Study of Holy Scripture, that he may acquire (saith he) that Divine wisdom, which is more glittering than Gold, finer than Silver, more sparkling than Diamonds, more rare than Precious Stones; and he adds, That there is nothing that he can search after in his Youth with greater Honour, or possess with greater Comfort and Pleasure in his Age, than the Knowledge of Holy Scripture.

The 2^d. is directed to an Abbess, to comfort her in her Afflictions.

The 3^d. is superscribed to the Bishop Daniel. In it he complains of the Behaviour of certain Clergy-men, who taught Errors, and permitted Persons guilty of Murder and Adultery to be admitted into the Priesthood. And that which troubled him most, was this; That he could not wholly separate from them, because they were in great Reputation in Pepin's Court, of whom Boniface of Mentz. he stood in need : But he says, That he did avoid all Communion with them in the Holy Mysteries. He observes, That the Opposition which he met with from Heathens and Infidels was the more tolerable, because it was without ; but when a Priest, Deacon, or Clergy-man, departs from the Faith, this causes a Disorder in the inward parts of the Church. He asks Advice of this Bishop, how he should carry himself ; he says, That on the one hand he is obliged to hold a fair Correspondence with the French King's Court, because he cannot, without his Authority and Command, defend the German Churches, and subdue the Idolatry of those Provinces. That going to desire Orders for that end, he cannot but communicate with those disorderly Clergy-men ; yet he is afraid that he offends God by it, having promised by an Oath to Pope Gregory to avoid those Persons ; but on the other side, he is afraid of bringing a greater Damage upon the Church, if he should forbear going to the French King's Court. He adds, That he seems to satisfy his Oath by separating from those irregular Clergy-men in their Ministry, and not agreeing with them in their Errors, or sinful Conversation. We have Daniel's Answer to this Letter, wherein he approves of Boniface's Carriage.

The 4th. Letter was written by S. Boniface when he was but a Deacon. It was to desire Adelmus's Books of Almus.

The 5th. is a Letter written by two of S. Boniface's Scholars to an Abbe's.

The 6th. is a circular Letter of S. Boniface to all Christians, in which he exhorts them to pray to God for a Blessing upon his Travels for the Conversion of the Gentiles.

In the 7th. he desires an Abbe's to help him by her Prayers.

In the 8th. he gives Egbert Bishop of York notice, that he hath sent a Writing to Ethelwald King of the Mercians against some Errors, and exhorts him to oppose them. He tells him, That he hath sent him some of S. Gregory's Letters, which he had taken out of the Library of the Church of Rome, and which he thought not common in England. He desires of him some of Bede's Works.

He requests the same thing in the following Letter of the Abbot Huetbert, and recommends himself to his Prayers.

In the 10th he exhorts in his own Name, and in the Name of eight Bishops that were with him, the Priest Herefred to shew the Memoir which they sent him to the King of the Mercians, and exhorts him to follow their Advice. 'Twas to hinder the Debaucheries and Disorders of his Kingdom.

In the 11th. Letter, he consults the Bishop Perhelmus about the Customs of France and Italy, by which it was forbidden to marry her to whose Child he had been Godfather : Whereupon he says, That till then he thought there was no harm in it, having never found, that it was forbidden by the Canons or Decrees of the Holy Bishops. He desires him to let him know, whether he hath met with any thing about it in any Ecclesiastical Writings.

The 12th. to King Ethelbald contains nothing remarkable.

The 13th, 14th, and 16th. are directed to the Abbe's Eatburg ; in them he recommends himself to her Prayers.

In the 15th. to Nethelmus Bishop of Canterbury ; he prays him to hold the same Friendship and Correspondence with him, which he had with his Predecessor Berthwald. He earnestly requests him to send him a Copy of S. Austin's Questions to S. Gregory, and this Pope's Answers, in which he allows Kindred in the third Degree to marry. He desires him to examine carefully, whether these Answers be S. Gregory's, because they are not in the Library of the Roman Church. He asks his Opinion about a Person who had married a Widow, to whose Daughter he had been Godfather, and prays him to tell him, if he had met with any Decree about it in the Canons, or Holy Fathers. Lastly, he desires him to tell him, in what Year of Jesus Christ the Persons, whom S. Gregory sent to preach the Gospel in England, arrived there.

The 17th. is sent to certain Monks, who had lost their Abbot. In it he names another to them, and gives them several Directions about a Monastick Life. He also nominates a Priest and a Deacon, who should have the Care of Divine Service, and preach the Word of God to the Brotherhood.

The 18th. contains some special Tokens of Christian Friendship and Love to the Arch-deacon, to whom it is written.

The 19th. is a Letter sent in the Name of Boniface, and five other Bishops, to Ethelbald, or Ethelwald, King of the Mercians. Having commended this Prince for his Virtues, particularly for his Liberality to the Poor, and his Justice ; they tell him with a great deal of freedom, that they have heard, that he lives in Incontinence, and shew him the enormous Nature of that Crime. They reprove him also for depriving certain Monasteries of their Privileges and Revenues, and account it worthy of the Name of the great Sin of Sacrilege. They complain also, that his Magistrates and Justices imposed Taxes upon the Monks and Clergy ; they say, that the Churches of England had enjoyed their Privileges from the coming of Austin, to the Reign of Chelred King of the Mercians, and Ofred King of * the Bernicians ; that these two Kings had committed very great Sins in abusing and wronging the Monks, and destroying their Monasteries, but had been punished for their Impiety, and died most miserably. They exhort him not to follow their Example, and in the conclusion, lay before his Eyes the shortness of this Life, and the torments which attend Sinners in another.

* Of Northumberland rather for Bernicia and Deira, which had been two Kingdoms, were united by Osly, and so made the Kingdom of Northumberland a little before Ofred Reigned.

Mentz.

The 20th Letter is to an Abbess, who had laid down the Government of her Nunnery, that she might live a more peaceable and quiet Life. She had desired his advice, Whether she should undertake a Journey to Rome. He doth not dissuade her from it, but advises her to stay, till the Disturbances in Italy were over.

In the 21st. he writes to the Abbess Eatburg the Visions which a certain Person had seen, who thought, that his Soul was separated from his Body for a time. He imagined himself to be taken up into Heaven, and from thence to behold evidently all that pass'd in this World, and in the other; to hear the Angels and Devils disputing about the state of the Souls, which were come out of the World; that the Sins which they had committed, stood up to accuse them, but the few Virtues, which they had practised, appeared in their defence; that he had seen Pits of Fire, in the bottom of which were the Souls condemned to Eternal Flames, and at the Mouths were those, who should one day be delivered from their Punishments; that he had seen Paradise, and the way that the Souls of Just Men go thither, when they depart out of the World; that some fall into a River of Fire, as they pass, which thoroughly purges them, who have smaller Sins to expiate: Lastly, that he saw the Storms which the Devils raised upon Earth, and the Sins into which they plunged Men.

The following Letters of Boniface are Letters of Compliment, Thanks, or private Matters.

The 32d. is a Letter of Recommendation written by Charles Martel, [Controller of the Household to Chilperick King of France, and Father of Pepin the next King,] in favour of Boniface.

The next are several Letters written to Boniface, or Adelm.

The 44th. is a Letter of Adelm to * King Geruntius, against some particular Customs in Ire- * Britannoland, concerning the Shaving of Clergy-Men, and the Celebration of Easter. rum Cornu-biansum

After this come several Letters written by Lullus, the Scholar of S. Boniface, who succeeded him, and by other English-Men. Rex, Viss.

In the 62d. Lullus ordains a Week of Abstinence, and two Days of Fasting, to obtain fair Weather.

The 70th. is a Letter of Cuthbert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and his Synod, written to Lullus, and to the Christians of Germany, after the Death of Boniface. In it he shews the respect they had for the Memory of Boniface, and assures him, that they determine to celebrate his Festival, and take him for their Patron with S. Gregory and S. Austin, The Apostle of England. They exhort the Bishops of Germany to discharge their Ministry with Vigilance and Sanctity, and pray them to offer the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for them, promising to do the same on their part.

In the 87th. Magingok Bishop of Wurtemberg consults Lullus about the inseparable Conjunction made by Marriage, and observes the different Opinions of the Fathers about it.

The 91st. is Boniface's, and is directed to Pope Steven. He desires him to continue the same Friendship and Protection to him, which his Predecessors had granted him; he promises for his part to continue his Labors, and always bear the same respect for the Holy See. He submits to his Judgment and Correction all that he hath said or done: he excuses himself, that he had not written to him so long, because he had been busy in repairing the Churches, which the barbarous People had pillaged and burnt.

The 92d. is also Boniface's, it is directed to Fulredus, a Priest, to be presented to King Pepin, as a Petition from Boniface, that after his Death he would yield his Protection to his Scholars, and the Churches erected by him, and settle Lullus in his place to preach the Gospel to the Infidels, and govern the Churches.

The three next are but short Notes written to Lullus.

The 96th. is King Pepin's Letter to him, wherein he tells him, that every Bishop should often, and devoutly repeat the Litanies without Fasting, to give God thanks for the plenty he hath given them.

The 97th. is a Letter written by Boniface to Pope Steven, in which he consults him about the Contest between the Bishop of Utrecht and the Bishop of Cologne. S. * Wilbrod was Ordained Bi- * Or Wil-shop by Pope Sergius, and appointed to preach the Gospel in Frisia, where having converted ma- brod.
ny, he erected his See at Utrecht by the Order of Carloman; but the Bishop of Cologne contended, that that City belonged to his Bishoprick, because from the time of Dagobert, that Castle had been annexed to the Bishoprick of Cologne, upon the account of preaching the Gospel to the Frisians. He adds, that this Bishop having not performed the Condition, he had forfeited his Right, and that this City ought to be a Bishop's Seat dependant upon the Holy See. He prays him to tell him what he ought to do, and send him a Copy of Sergius's Letter, that he might convince the Bishop of Cologne.

The 100th. Letter is Lullus's, who wrote to the Pope against the Priest Enredus, who would not be subject to his Jurisdiction.

The 105th. is Boniface's, wherein he imparts to Cuthbert Arch-bishop of Canterbury the Canons made in his Synod. He tells him, That they made a Confession of the Faith of the Church, owned an Union, and Subjection to the Roman-Church, would yield Obedience to S. Peter and his Vicar, and that they have Ordained, that Synods should be called every Year; that they should require the Palls for Metropolitans of the Holy See; that they would follow the Commands of S. Peter; that Metropolitans, who have received the Pall, should observe the behaviour of the Bishops;

Boniface of Mentz. Bishops; that Bishops should neither keep Hunting Dogs, nor Hawks; that the Priests should visit all their Charge in Lent, and give the Bishop an account of their Conversation; that Bishops should visit their Diocels every Year; that Clergy-Men should not wear Lay-Mens Habit, nor bear Arms; that Metropolitans should judge their Suffragan Bishops in their Synod; and the Bishops shall bring to this Synod all Persons which they cannot reform, who shall be subject to their Metropolitans, and they to the Bishop of Rome. The remaining part of it is an Exhortation to Metropolitans to discharge the Functions of their Ministry with Vigilance, and die rather than do any thing contrary to the Sacred Laws of the Church. About the end he tells Eusebert, that it were convenient to restrain the Women, and Virgins of England from going in such Numbers to Rome, because the greatest part of them were debauched, and caused great Scandal in the whole Church; for there is scarce a City, saith he, in Lombardy or France, where there are not some English Women of a wicked Life.

The 108th. Letter is a Copy of those Letters, which a Bishop used to send to the Religious Persons of his Diocels, to recommend the Dead to their Prayers.

The 107th, 116th, and 117th, Letters are Petitions to the Emperors to oppose Swearing, and and to desire some Favour.

The last is in the Name of the Church of Mentz, which desired her Bishop.

The following Letters are no part of this Collection, being Letters of the Pope's to Boniface, and the Acts of the Council of Rome against Adelbert, held under Pope Zachary, of which we shall speak in another place.

The Style of Boniface's Letters is harsh, and barbarous, but they are good sense. He was very well acquainted with the Rules of Church-Discipline, he was wholly devoted to the Holy See, he had much Sincerity, and ardent Zeal for the Reformation of Manners, especially of the Clergy, and for the Conversion of Infidels. Some attribute to him the Life of S. Lvoimus, whom F. Mabillon thinks to belong to a more ancient Author. His Treatise of the Unity of the Faith is not come to us. F. Dacherius hath published in the Tenth Volume of his Specilegium, a Piece, entitled, the Statutes of Boniface of Mentz, which contains several Rules for managing the Functions and Life of Priests, with a Catalogue of the Festivals; but this Book cannot be the Treatise of the Unity of Faith, as some have affirmed: And there is some Grounds to doubt whether it really belongs to Boniface of Mentz; and so much the more, because he there addresseth himself to the Emperor, whereas in Boniface's time there was no Emperor in Germany.

GREGORY II.

Gregory II. GREGORY the second of that Name, was raised to the See of Rome * the 24th Day of May, in the Year 714. and governed that Church Sixteen Years, Eight Months, and some Days. We have several of this Pope's Letters.

* 28 of April, in 715. D. Cave. The 1st. dated in 718. is directed to Boniface the Priest, to whom he gave permission to preach the Faith among the Infidels of Germany. To this is annexed the Form of the Oath, which Boniface swore to the Pope at his Ordination in the Year 722, or 723.

The 2d. Letter is addressed to Charles Martel, Controulor of the King's Household, to recommend Boniface to him. Upon which this Prince granted him Letters of Protection, which are among Gregory's.

The 3d. is also a Letter of Recommendation for Boniface, directed to all Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Lords, Earls, and in general, to all Christians.

The 7th. is to the whole Nation of the East-Saxons inhabiting Germany.

The 8th. which bears date 725. is directed to Boniface, to congratulate the progress he had made in converting the Infidels.

The 9th. 11th. and 12th. respect the Controversie about Images, and are set down in the Acts of the VIIth. Council, where we shall have a fit opportunity to speak of them.

The 10th. is addressed to Ursus, Duke of Venice, whom he exhorts to join himself with the Exarch, in recovering the City of Ravenna from the Lombards, and putting it under the Government of the Emperors Leo and Constantine again.

The 13th. is a Decretal Epistle, in which he answers several Questions put to him by Boniface.

In the 1st. Article about the Degrees of Consanguinity, within which it is forbidden to Marry, he says, that it were to be hoped that no Persons nearly related would contract Marriage; but to yield a little to the Barbarity of that Nation, they must content themselves to prohibit Marriages between Persons related in the Fourth Degree.

In the 2d. he permits an Husband, whose Wife is unable to perform Conjugal Duties, to Marry another.

of the Eighth Century of Christianity.

In the 3^d. he orders, that a Priest accused of any great Crime, shall clear himself by Oath, if there be no Witnesses for him.

Gregory II.

In the 4th. he forbids, that Confirmation performed by a Bishop shall be repeated.

The 5th. commands, that there shall be only one Chalice set upon the Altar at the Celebration of Mass.

In the 6th. he uses S. Paul's words to resolve the Question, Whether it be lawful to eat Meats offered unto Idols?

In the 7th. he declares, that it is not lawful for Children, whose Kindred have put them into the Monasteries before the Age of 14 Years, to go out of them to lead a Secular Life.

In the 8th. he forbids to Re-baptize those, who have been once Baptized in the Name of the Trinity, although it were by wicked Priests.

In the 9th. he will have those Children Baptized, of whom there is no clear proof, that they have ever been so already.

In the 10th. he orders, that Lepers shall not be deprived of Communion.

In the 11th. he forbids flying, when the Plague, or any other Contagious Disease is in a Monastery, or in the Church.

In the last, he commands Boniface to reprove disorderly Priests and Bishops, but would not have him to refuse to talk, or eat with them.

This Letter is quoted by Gracian under the Name of Gregory, but it is Gregory II. and 'twas dated the 10th. Year of the Emperor Leo, the 10th. Indiction, which is Anno 726 of the Vulgar Era, or common Account.

The 14th. Letter of this Pope is directed to Serenus Bishop of Aquileia, and in it he exhorts him not to invade the Rights of the Patriarch of Grado.

In the last to this Patriarch he tells him, what a strict prohibition he had laid upon the Bishop of Aquileia.

Besides these Letters we have a Memoir, which this Pope gave to the Bishop Martinian, the Priest George, and the Sub-Deacon Dorotheus, whom he sent into Bavaria, in which he gives them Instructions, what they should do in that Country for the establishment of the Churches, for the Ordinations of Bishops, and Regulation of Discipline. He advises them to allow of those Bishops who hold the Faith of the Church, and have been Canonically Ordained; to permit them to celebrate Divine Service according to the Roman way; but to put out those, whose Faith is suspected, or Ordination faulty; to model the Divine Service according to the usage of the Church of Rome; to constitute in the Provinces a sufficient Number of Bishops, with an Arch-bishop; to set Bounds to Provinces and Diocesses; to enjoin the Bishops not to Ordain such as have been twice Married, nor Ignorant, nor lame Men, nor such as have done Publick Penance, nor Slaves, nor Servants, nor Africans; to have a special care of the Churches Revenues, and divided them into four Parts, one for himself, another for the Clergy, a third for the Poor and Strangers, and a fourth for the Building; to Ordain only in the Ember-weeks; to administer Baptism at Easter and Whitsuntide only, unless in case of Necessity; to observe the Constitutions of the Church of Rome; not to suffer any Man to have more Wives than one, nor to Marry his Niece; to esteem Virginity more highly than Marriage, to account no Meats unclean, but such as are offered to Idols; to avoid all sorts of Superstition; to teach, that it is not lawful to Fast upon Sunday, or upon Christmass, Epiphany, or Ascension-Days; not to receive the Offerings of such as are at Enmity, till they are reconciled; to do Penance for daily Faults; to instruct the People concerning a Resurrection and a Judgment. This Memoir is dated Anno 715. [This Pope's Epistles are extant in the Councils, Tom. 6. P. 1437.]

G R E G O R Y III.

GREGORY the third of that Name, was chosen in the Year 731. and sat 10 Years and some Months in the See of Rome. His first Letter is directed to Boniface, who was Ordained Bishop of the Germans by his Predecessor. He granted him the Right of bearing the Pall, promises him to erect new Bishopricks in Germany, according as the Number of Christians shall multiply. He assures him, that he had not absolved a certain Priest who bragged; that he had received Absolution from him; and answers some Questions, which Boniface had propounded to him.

Gregory III.

In the 1st. Article he orders, that they shall be Baptized again in the Name of the Trinity, who have been Baptized by the Heathens.

In the 2^d. he forbids to eat the Flesh of a Wild Horse.

In the 3^d. he commands to offer the Sacrifice for all that died in the Orthodox Faith.

The 4th. ordains, that those who have been Baptized by a Priest that hath sacrificed to Jupiter, or eaten Meats offered to Idols, shall be Re-baptized.

The 5th. forbids Marriage to the seventh Generation.

The

Gregory III.

The 6th. bids him to hinder a Widower to Marry above twice.

The 7th. imposeth Penance for their whole Life upon such as Murder their Father, their Mother, their Brother, or their Sister, and prescribes them for Penance to abstain from Wine, and Flesh-Meats, and to fast three Days in the Week.

The 8th. forbids to sell Slaves to the Heathens.

The 9th. enjoyns him, when he Ordains a Bishop to summon two or three Bishops to be present at the Ordination.

The 2d. is a Letter of Recommendation directed to all Bishops, Priests and Abbots, given to Boniface, when he returned into Germany.

The 3d. is a Letter composed on purpose for the same Person, directed to the Germans, whom he commands to obey Boniface, and leave their Heathenish Ceremonies.

The 4th. is directed to the Bishops of Bavaria and Germany, whom he enjoyns to come to those Councils, which Boniface shall call.

The 5th. is directed to Charles Martel, of whom he desires assistance against the Lombards. 'Tis very urgent, and yet withal very submissive.

The 6th. is to the same Person about the same Business.

The 7th. is to Boniface, he approves of the Division which he had made in Bavaria into four Bishopricks. He tells him that he ought to Ordain those Priests, who have exercised their Ministry in that Country, Bishops, although he can't find out by whom they were Ordained, if they be Orthodox, and of good Conversation. He will not have such Persons to be Re-baptized, who have been Baptized already in the Name of the Trinity, although through Error the words were not well pronounced, but orders them to be contented to confirm them by Imposition of Hands, and by anointing with the Chrism. He allows him to reprove and correct Wile, if he act contrary to the Discipline of the Church. He orders him to call a Council, and not to continue long in one place, but to travel for the Conversion of all the Country. This Letter is dated Octob. 27. Indiction 8. which is the 739 Year of the Vulgar Era.

To these Letters is joyned a Collection of Canons, taken out of the Penitentials. which seems to be a later Composure, than of Gregory III. and which I do not believe to be the Works of this Pope; [yet both are Printed together under his Name in the Councils, Tom. 6. Pag. 1468.]

ZACHARY Bishop of Rome.

Zachary.

POPE Zachary was raised to the Holy See in the Year 741. He was a Greek, if we may believe the Authors of the Popes Lives, and had the reputation of being most mild and courteous, and yet at the same time very valiant and courageous. At the beginning of his Popedom, Italy was in great Troubles, Luitprandus, King of the Lombards, being at War with Thrasimond Duke of Spoleum, and the Romans, who assisted the latter. Zachary made Peace between the Romans, and the King of the Lombards, upon condition that he should restore four Cities, which he had taken from them; and so poor Thrasimond being forsaken, was forced to give over his opposition. But the Lombard having obtained his design, was not careful to perform his promise, but Zachary went to him, obliged him to restore the Cities to the Romans, and make a Peace with him. This very Pope being consulted by the French, whether they should acknowledge Pepin for their King, who had all the Authority already, and was enstated in the Government of the Realm, or Chilperic, who indeed had the Name of King, but was not capable of a business of that weight; answered in favour of Pepin, of whose Protection the Romans and Popes had then great need, having so Potent an Enemy near at hand, as the King of the Lombards was.

Although these Matters were of very great consequence, yet those, which are spoken of most in Zachary's Letters, concern the Churches newly founded in Germany by Boniface, who consulted him with much respect.

The 1st. is an Answer to this Bishops Questions, contained in the foregoing Letter. They both began with Compliments. Boniface tells the Pope, how great Veneration he had for the Holy See; and the Pope assures him, that he was extremely glad at the receipt of his Letters, by which he was informed, that the Church of Jesus Christ was every Day increased by his Preaching. Boniface tells him, that he had Ordained three Bishops in Germany, and divided the Province into three Diocesses; that he had placed one Bishop in the Castle of Wirtemberg, another in the City of Buraburg, and the third at Erford. He prays him to confirm what he had done, and to make these three places into Bishops Sees.

Zachary returns an Answer to this Article, that he approved what Boniface had done, and did accordingly make those three places Bishopricks. Nevertheless he desires him to see, whether these places are considerable enough to place Bishops in, because the Canons forbid to place them in Villages or small Towns, lest the Dignity of Bishops be thereby rendred vile and contemptible.

Boniface

Boniface, in the second Article of his Letter, informs Zachary, That Caroloman, a French Duke, had desired him to hold a Council in his Kingdom, to restore the Discipline, which was almost lost because there had not been a Synod held in France for above Four-score Years; and the Bishopricks and Arch-Bishopricks by that means were fallen into the Hands of Lay-men, whose Lives were very Scandalous, and Disorderly. He desires leave of Zachary to hold a Council, and this Pope grants him his Request in his Answer.

In the third Article he desires to know what he should do with those Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, who lived in many Disorders and Debaucheries. Zachary answers him, That he ought not to suffer them to perform the Functions and Offices that belong to their Orders and Degrees.

In the 4th Article, Boniface desires the Pope to appoint him a Successor, or give him leave to chuse himself one. The Pope denieth him this Request, it being contrary to the Canons to appoint a Successor to a Bishop while he is alive; yet he grants him power to nominate one at the point of Death.

In the 5th he enquireth, whether it be true, that one of his Country had obtained a Dispensation from [Gregory III.] Zachary's Predecessor, to Marry his Uncle's Widow, which had been his Cousin-Germans Wife, and had received the Veil. The Pope answers him, That his Predecessor did not grant such a Licence, because the Holy See allows nothing contrary to the Constitutions of the Councils, and the Holy Fathers.

In the 6th he asks him, whether it be true, That on New-Years-Day Heathenish Dances and Ceremonies are practised in Rome. The Pope answers, That there is no more any such practice there, and that that detestable Custom was abolished by S. Gregory.

In the 7th he says, That some French Bishops, who had been Adulterers or Fornicators, after they had made a Journey to Rome, pretended that the Pope had given them Power to perform their Offices, but he maintained the contrary, because the Holy See would do nothing against the Canons. The Pope confirms him in this Opinion, and commands him not to believe them, but to punish them according to the Severity of the Canons. He adds, That he hath sent three Letters of Confirmation to the three Bishops constituted by Boniface; and also that he hath written to Caroloman, to exhort him to a speedy Execution of his design. This Letter is dated on the 12th Indiction, that is, in the Year 742.

The second Letter of Zachary is a Copy of the Letter written to the three Bishops instituted by Boniface. By the Authority of the Holy See he confirms the Institution of their Sees. He declares, that no Body but the Apostolick Vicar, shall ordain Bishops for those Sees; and prohibits encroaching upon their Jurisdiction or Territory.

The third Letter of Zachary is that which he sent to the French Bishops, to Congratulate them for endeavouring the Re-establishment of Church-Discipline, and the Reformation of the manner of the Clergy, and to exhort them to do it effectually, and as becomes Holy Bishops.

By the 4th Letter directed to Boniface, Zachary gives the Pall to the three Metropolitans instituted by Boniface; Then he approves the Sentence which Boniface had passed against two French Men, who had lived a Prophan and Disorderly Life. This Letter is dated in June, in the 12th Indiction, that is, in the Year 743.

In the next Letter, directed to the same Person, he wonders that Boniface having at first desired of him the Pall for the three Metropolitans, he begg'd it then but for one. He complains, that he suspected him guilty of Simony. He commends him for giving no Credit to a Bishop of Bavaria, who did falsely affirm himself to have been Ordained by the Pope. He exhorts him to hinder all them that do not live according to the Canons, from performing the Priestly Functions. He confirms him in the Right granted him by his Predecessor, to Preach in Bavaria. This Letter is dated in the Year 745.

In the 6th Letter, directed also to Boniface, Zachary answers a Question propounded to him by * two Persons of Piety of Bavaria, about the Validity of Baptism, Administred by a Priest, * Vigilius who not understanding Latin, instead of saying, In Nomine Patris, Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, had et Sidonius said, In Nomina Patris, & Filia, & Spiritu Sancta. Zachary answers, That if that Priest did us, ut Vss. not design to introduce an Error or Heresie, but committed this fault merely out of Ignorance of the Latin Tongue, they ought not to Re-baptize those whom he hath Baptized, but only Consecrate them by the Imposition of Hands. in Ep. Heb. Syll.

The 7th Letter to Pepin, Constable of France, and to the French Bishops or Lords, is only a Collection of several ancient Canons, touching divers Articles of Discipline, about which he had been Consulted by Ardobanus a Presbyter sent from Pepin.

In the 8th Letter he acquaints Boniface, that he hath sent those Canons, and enjoins him to Examine anew the Matter of the three French Bishops, and to send them to Rome, in case they maintain their own Innocency. This is dated in January in the Year 747.

The 9th Letter, according to the Date, was sent the Year before. Zachary commends Boniface's Zeal, exhorts him to continue in it, comforts him concerning the Irruption of the Barbarians into the Countries converted by him. He approves what he had done in the Synod held in France, and was mightily pleased that they had pitched upon a City to be made a Metropolis, that Boniface might be settled there. He blames them that opposed this design, and commends the French Princes for having countenanced it. He confirms his Sentence against disorderly Bishops.

Zachary. He assures him, That he ought not to believe those that boast of being Established by the Holy See. He acquaints him, that the Condemnation of Adalbert and Clement was approved in a Synod held at Rome. He saith, he will deal with another Seducer, named Geothricus, who was in his Journey to Rome, as he deserves. He will have him to hold yearly a Council in France. He confirms him in the Right of a Metropolitan, which he annexeth to the City of Coler.

 Samson of this Letter is concerned* The 10th Letter is directed to Boniface. He says, that they ought to Rebaptize those who have not been Baptized in the Name of the Three Persons of the Trinity; That Sacrilegious, Impure, or Heretical Priests or Deacons are to be Banished into Monasteries, and put to Penance. He rejects the Error of one  Samson*, a Presbyter of Scotland; affirming That a Man might be made a Christian, without being Baptized in the Name of the Trinity, only by the Fellows Imposition of Hands. He approves a Writing of Boniface, about the Unity of the Faith, and the Apostolick Doctrine, directed to all Bishops, Priests, and Deacons; He refuses to lend another Person to hold Councils in France; he approves also the Prohibition of Faith sent to him by the French Bishops. He writes against Engilmar, who molested Boniface, assuring him, That he will write to the Duke of Bavaria, to send him to him, that he may Judge him. Lastly he answers Boniface's last Letter, that seeing the French did not keep their promise, to make Coler a Metropolis in respect to him, he may dwell at Mentz, and gives him leave to choose a fit Person to succeed him. This Letter is dated May 748.

The 11th Letter of Zachary is directed to some French and German Bishops; he congratulates their Union among themselves and with the Holy See, and exhorts them to continue their labour for the Church, joining with Boniface, Vicar of the Holy See.

The 12th Letter is to Boniface. He commends his Zeal and Piety. He likes well his Separation from the Erring and Disorderly Bishops. He says, That if the French Bishops will observe the Faith, and perform their Promises, they will deserve Praise; That what he wrote to Italy, he gives freely. He grants a Privilege to the Monastery of the Benedictines founded by Boniface, in a Solitude of Germany. Then he answers several Questions proposed to him in a Manuscript, which Lullus, sent by Boniface, presented to him. This is the Sum of these Answers. 1. That it is Unlawful to eat Wild Beasts, yea Hares. 2. That on the Thursday before Easter, when the Holy Christ is Consecrated, they ought to kindle three great Lamps full of Oyl, which may last till Holy Saturday, and to kindle at those Lamps the Paschal Tapers, used at the Sepulchral Fonts. 3. That those that have the Falling-Sickness, if they have it from their Birth, or from their Parents, should be banished from the Towns; but if it happens to them accidentally, they ought to endeavour to Cure them: That in the mean while they are not to Communicate, but after all the rest of the Congregation. 4. He approves the Custom of Washing one anothers Feet on Holy Thursday before Easter. 5. He reproves some certain Forms of Blessings used among the French. 6. He says, it were to be wished that Presbyters were 30 Years old (before their Ordination,) yet, if need be, they may be Ordain'd at 25. 7. He informs him, that Milo, who had been put in Rigobert's place at Rheims, should do well to quit that Bishoprick. 8. He says, That he hath found no Decree about the time in which they ought to eat Bacon; yet he does not think they ought to eat it before it be Dried in the Smoke, or Dressed at the Fire; and if they will eat of it without Dressing, they must stay till after Easter. 9. He approves the Condemnation of a Bishop who bore Arms, and committed Fornications. 10. He says, That Ordinations ought to be Celebrated at Lawful times: Yet he excuses Boniface for performing them at other times out of Zeal. 11. He informs him, That he ought not to make any Scruple of taking a Penny a House for the Church Revenues. 12. He enjoins him to put to Penance, and to Depose those Presbyters who have been Ordained, being only Laicks, and involved in Criminal Matters, if their Crime comes afterward to be discovered. 13. He thinks one may fly to avoid Persecution, when it is fierce. 14. He forbids Communicating with an Excommunicated Person who desires not Absolution. 15. He thinks that a Tribute may be taken of the Sclavonians who come to live in Christian Countries. 16. Lastly, he tells him, That he hath marked in Lullus's Volume, in what places they are to make the Sign of the Cross in the Canon of the Mass. This Letter is dated November 751.

In the 13th Letter, written a few days after, he praises the unwearied labour of Boniface, who had for Twenty-five Years together preached the Gospel in Germany, and holden Councils in France. He says, It is just he should have a Cathedral Church, and for that purpose he confirms the Right of Metropolitan to him and his Successors in the Church of Mentz, and gives him for Suffragans the Bishops of Tongres, Coler, Worms, Spire, Utrecht, and all the Countries of Germany.

The 14th Letter of Zachary is the Privilege granted * to the Monastery of Fulda, Founded by Boniface, which imports, that this Monastery shall be Subject to the Holy See only; and that no Person shall lay Mass, or exercise any Jurisdiction there, unless invited by the Abbot.

* The Name was, The Monastery of Our Saviour; but hath been in after Ages called, The Monastery of Fulda, because it was built in the City and near the River of the same Name, Ann 742. by the care of Boniface, but charge of Charles the Great, and Pepin, Kings of France.

There is also a Letter of Boniface to Griphon, Pepin's Brother, wherein he recommends to him some Monks of Turingia, to protect them against the Pagans.

The 15th Letter of Zachary is directed to the Bishops of France. He sent it by some Monks, or Clerks, who were sent by Optatus, Abbot of Mount Cassin, and from Caroloman, to procure Peace between Gripho and Pepin, and to demand a second time St. Benedict's Body, which they pretended had been stolen away from Mount Cassin. He exhorts the French Bishops to maintain the Justice of their Demand.

In the 16th, he exhorts the French to suffer no Ecclesiastical Person guilty of Murder or Fornication; and advises them to assemble Councils every Year, to restore the Discipline.

The 17th Letter is Supposititious, at least the Title and Date of it are false; for it is directed to Austrebert, Bishop of Vienna, and there was no Arch-Bishop of that Name in that Church under Zachary's Pontificate; and it is dated the 7th of March, of the first Year of Constantine, which is the Year 741, of the Vulgar Æra; at which time Zachary was not Pope.

The 18th is not more certain: 'Tis a Prohibition somewhat ill Written, that a certain Person should not Marry his Father's God-Daughter, because of the Spiritual Consanguinity.

ANDREAS CRETENSIS.

ANDREW, born at Damascus, having finished his first Course of Studies in his own Country, came to Jerusalem towards the Year 720, where he embraced a Monastick Life, and was at the 6th Council in his Patriarch in Theodorus's stead, and there encountered the Monotholites. He was detained at Constantinople, and put among the Clergy of that Church; he was ordained Deacon, and had the care of the Education of Orphans committed to him. A little after, he was Ordained Arch-Bishop of Crete; he governed this Church many Years, and died at Metilene, in the beginning of the Eighth Century of the Church.

there is certainly a great Mistake; for how could he come to Jerusalem in 730, and become a Monk, and in that Quality represent his Patriarch Theodorus at the Sixth General Council, which was 50 Years before, viz. in 680. His coming to Jerusalem ought to be placed doubtless towards the Year 630, and then his Death will fall toward the beginning of the Seventh Century, according to the Calculation of Dr. Cave, Cal. Oudin, and the best Chronologers.

He composed a great Number of Sermons. and particularly Panegyricks. Father Combefis collected all that he could meet with in the Libraries, and Printed them in Greek and Latin [at Paris] in 1644. [with Notes, and an Index to explain the Words.] This Collection contains 17 of them.

The first is upon the Virgin's Nativity: he extols this Festival, which he looks upon as the Original and Principal of all the Feasts of the New Law. He there speaks of Joachim and Anne, of the Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple.

The 2d. is upon the Annunciation. In it he maketh several Divine Reflections upon the Angel's Words.

The 3d is on the Circumcision, and upon St. Basil. He follows Africanus's Opinion about Joseph's Ancestors; and says, he was Jacob's Natural Son, and Heli's according to the Law. He speaks of the Names of Immanuel and Jesus, and makes some Mystical and Moral Observations upon the 8th Day. Then he passes to the Praises of St. Basil, in the end whereof he maketh an excellent Prayer to him.

The 4th is upon our Lord's Transfiguration. It contains several Allegorical Reflections upon the Circumstances of this Miracle.

The 5th is an Homily, in which he explains Lazarus's Resurrection. He there confounds Mary, Lazarus's Sister, with the Woman that was a Sinner.

The 6th is upon Palm-Sunday.

The two next upon the Exaltation of the Cross.

The three following are upon the Virgin's Death. In it he describes several miraculous Circumstances of her Death, and particularly her Triumphant Ascension into Heaven in Body and Soul.

The 12th is a Panegyrick upon Titus, first Bishop of Crete.

The 13th is upon St. George, whose Martyrdom he relates.

Andreas Cretensis.

The 14th is a Panegyrick upon St. Nicholas Bishop of Myra: He says nothing of his Life in particular, but only that he encounter'd the Arians; that he preserv'd Lycia from Famine, and converted an Heretick Bishop.

The 15th contains the Praise, the Life, and Miracles of a certain Monk, named Patapius.

The 16th, which is another Panegyrick upon Patapius, is not Andrew's of Crete, but some of his Scholars; who relates, how that holy Hermit appeared to Andrew of Crete, and what he had told him of his Life.

The 17th contains excellent Instructions about the Miseries and Uncertainty of Humane Life.

F. Combefis, in his Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum, attributes also to Andrew of Crete two Homilies; the one upon the Virgin's Nativity, which had been published by Schotus, under the Name of German, Bishop of Constantinople. Alsius hath attributed it to Gregory Bishop of Nicomedia; and it is found in some Manuscripts under S. John Damascene's Name. But F. Combefis having seen it in a Manuscript under Andrew of Crete's Name, believes it rather to be his, than the others, because of a great number of Compound Words commonly used by Andrew of Crete. The second is a Sermon upon the Beheading of St. John Baptist, already published by Lipomannus.

They attribute to this Archbishop Andrew a great number of Odes, Pieces in Prose, upon the Festivals of the Year, which F. Combefis hath joined to his Homilies. He doth also ascribe to him some Iambick Verses, directed to Agatho the Deacon, which are at the end of the Letter of this latter, in the Second Volume of the Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum. Some believe, that this Archbishop of Crete is also the Author of the Commentary on the Revelation, bearing the Name of Andrew of Cesarea; which maketh others think, that he was translated from the Archbishoprick of Crete, to that of Cesarea in Cappadocia. But there is no need to suppose this groundless Translation: For, though we should suppose this Work to be of Andrew's of Crete, which is uncertain, Cesarea might perhaps have been put for Crete. This Author's Sermons are not so contemptible, as the most part of those of the Modern Greeks; they are full of Wit, Learning, and Morality, and want not Eloquence nor Greatness: His Discourse abounds with compound and hard Words; his Narrations plain, his Reflections just, his Praises vehement, his Figures natural, and his Instructions solid.

ANASTASIUS.

Anastasiu

ANASTASIUS, Abbot of the Monastery of St. Euthymius in Palestine, flourished about the Year 740. St. John Damascene commends him in the beginning of his Treatise of the Trisagion, which he composed, to draw this Abbot out of the Error, which he thought him engaged in about this Point. They attribute to him a Treatise against the Jews, published in Latin in Canisius's Antiquities, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. XIII.] but it might be supposed to be made by a more Modern Author; for the Author of it says, That 800 Years ago Christ's Oracles were fulfilled, that the Jews were dispersed, and Jerusalem destroyed by Vespasian: Which makes me think, that he lived to the Ninth Century. This Author does not only bring Proofs for the Christian Religion, but he answers the Questions and Objections of the Jews. The Work is imperfect: It is found in Greek in the Vatican Library, and in the Jesuits at Rome. It is written well, and the Reasons he alleges are pretty solid. He observes, That when Christians honour Images, they do not adore the Wood, but their Respect refers to Christ, and his Saints; and that they are so far from adoring Images, that, when they are grown old and spoiled, they burn them, to make new ones.

EGBERT of YORK.

Egbert.

[* Alias
Eadbert.]

EGBERT, an English-Man, Brother to * Ethbert King of Northumberland, was Archbishop of York, from 731, till about 767. The chief Work of Egbert was a Penitential, published in four Books, which are found in Manuscript in the Libraries of England. We have different Extracts of it: There is one, containing divers Canons concerning Clerks. Another composed of Thirty five Constitutions against divers Sins of Clerks, and other Christians. These Collections are ill contrived, and of little Authority

There

There was Printed in 1664. at Dublin, together with Boniface's Letters, a Treatise about the Life of Clergy-Men, bearing Egbert's Name. It is made up of Questions and Answers; and the Questions are not directed to one Archbishop, but to many Bishops: 'Tis therefore a Consultation directed to a Council; but it seems to me to be much later than Egbert. The small Treatise of the Remedies of Sins ascribed to Bede, is one of the ancientest Extracts of Egbert's Penitential: All those Pieces of no great use. They are found in the end of the sixth Volume of the Councils of F. Labbe's Edition.

S. JOHN DAMASCENE.

JOHAN, Surnamed MANSUR [by the Arabians] or Chrysorrhoas [from his Eloquence] was born at Damascus, of Rich and Godly Parents. He was taught and brought up by Cosmas, a Monk of Jerusalem, who had been taken by the Saracens. After his Father's decease, he succeeded him in the Place of Counsellor of State to the Prince of the Saracens. Being in that Office, he began to write in the Defence of Images; which did so highly provoke the Emperor Leo, Surnamed Eikovoustos, that he formed a design to destroy him by an unparall'd piece of Treachery: He caused one to Counterfeit the Hand of John Damascene, and to contrive a Letter in his Name, whereby he betrayed his Master, advising Leo to come speedily to Damascus, to take that City. This Letter he sent to the Prince of the Saracens, who, if we believe the Author of St. John Damascene's Life, caused John's Hand to be immediately cut off, and to be for many hours exposed to the sight of the People in the middle of the Town. In the Evening John demanding it, joined it to his mangled Arm; afterward having prayed to the Virgin, and thereupon going to sleep, it was found re-united to his Arm when he awoke out of his Sleep. This Miracle struck the Prince of the Saracens with Amazement, and forced him to acknowledge John's Innocency; he prayed him to continue in his Court, but John chose rather to withdraw himself from the World, and therefore betook himself into St. Sabas's Monastery at Jerusalem, where he was committed to the care of a very severe old Monk, who imposed on him a perpetual Silence; for the breaking of which he was turned out of his Cell by that old Man, who commanded him for his Penance, to carry away the Filth of the Cells of the Monastery. When he had made himself ready to obey his Order, the good Old Man embraced him, and caused him to return. About the end of his Life he was Ordained Priest by the Patriarch of Jerusalem; but he returned immediately again into his Monastery, from whence he did valiantly oppose the Opinion of the Iconoclasts. He died towards the Year 750. This Author wrote a great number of Works of all kinds: They may be divided into Doctrinal, Historical and Moral, *Heortastical, Ecclesiastical and Prophane. Among the Doctrinal Works, we may place in the first Rank the Four Books of the Orthodox Faith, in which he hath comprehended the whole Substance of Divinity in a Scholastical and Methodical Manner.

S. John Damascene.

*Such as treat of the Festivals of the Year.

The first Book is of the Nature, Existence, and Attributes of God, and of the Three Persons of the Trinity. In all Points he agreeth with our Divines, except in the Article of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, which he believes to proceed from the Father only.

The Second Book treats of the Creatures, the World, the Angels and Demons, of Heaven and Earth, and all Things contained therein, of Paradise, and of Man. He teaches, that Man is composed of a Body and Soul, that his Soul is Spiritual and Immortal; he distinguisheth the Faculties of it; he speaks of its Passions, Actions, Thoughts, Will, and Liberty, which he places in the Power of doing what we please. He treats also of Providence, Prescience, and Predetermination, or Predetermination. He affirms, that this taketh no place in free Actions; that God permits them, but ordains them not. He concludes with Man's Fall, of which Adam's Sin was the Cause.

This leads him to the Incarnation of the Son of God, which is the Subject of his Third Book. He explains this Mystery with great exactness; he establisheth the distinction of the Existence of the Two Natures; he speaks of their Proprieties, of the Wills of Christ, and of his Free Will, which he believes to be different from ours, in that the Determination of it is without any doubt or deliberation preceding. He enlargeth upon the Two Wills of Christ; he explains in what sense these Expressions are to be understood. There is in Christ an Incarnate Nature, a Theandrick Will, and an Human Nature Deified. He shews, That Jesus Christ was subject neither to Ignorance, nor to Temptation; that the quality of Slave does not belong to him; that he increased in Knowledge and Wisdom so far forth only, as it did more appear outwardly, according as he grew into Years. He proves the Humane Nature did really suffer, whilst the Divinity remained impassible. He maintains, That the Divinity never ceased to be united to Christ's Soul and Body, no, not in the time of his Death.

In the Fourth, having discoursed of Christ's Resurrection, and examined some Questions about the Incarnation, he treats of Baptism, of the Faith, the Cross, and the Worship due to it; of the Custom of Praying towards the East; of the Holy Mysteries, in which we ought not to doubt, but Christ gives us his Body and Blood * to feed us, the Bread and Wine being † changed into Christ's Body and Blood, and being but one and the same thing. He tells us, with what Purity we ought to receive such a Holy Sacrament. He establisheth Mary's perpetual Virginity, both in and after the Birth, and reconciles the two Genealogies of Christ, after the same manner with Africanus. Then he proves, that Saints ought to be Honoured, and their Relicks Reverenced. He would also have the Images of Saints, and of Christ, to be Honoured. and believeth them to be very useful to remember us of them. He confesses, they do not Worship the Matter whereof the Cross or the Images are made, but only that which is represented thereby. He says, That this Custom is Established by an ancient Tradition; and thereupon he quotes the Fabulous Story of the Image sent by Christ to King Abgarus. He takes notice, that no Image of God ought to be made. He maketh a Catalogue of the Sacred Books of the Old Testament, agreeable to the Canon of the Hebrews. To the Books of the New, he adds the Canons of the Apostles, which he thinks to have been Collected by St. Clement. Having treated of all these Things he comes again to some Questions he had forgotten. He explains how many ways they speak of Christ. He proves God is not the Author of Sins, and that there is but one Principle of all Things. He renders a Reason, why God created some Men, who would Sin, and not Repent. He shews what's the Law of Sin, and the Law of Grace. He gives some Reasons of the Observation of the Sabbath, and Circumcision. He extols the State of Virginity. He concludes with some Reflections upon Antichrist, the Resurrection, and the Last Judgment: Whereupon he says, "That Hell Fire shall not be material as that among us, but such as God knows: Non materia hujusce nostri constantem sed qualem Deus novit. This Work is in Greek and Latin in the Best Edition, [in 1548, and 1575.] St. John Damascene wrote many Tracts more upon some particular Doctrines.

A Dialogue between a Christian and a Saracen about Religion.

Another Dialogue under the Name of an Orthodox Christian and a Manichee, in which he disputes against the Errors of those Hereticks.

A Treatise of the Two Natures, against the * Monothelites, who did admit * The Acephali, but One Nature in Christ, made up of Two.

or Monophysites, A Treatise of the Trisagion against the Addition of Peter the Fuller, where- a sort of Here- in he explains several Forms of Speech about the Trinity, and the Incarna- ticks. Dr. Cave. tion.

A Treatise of the Two Wills in Christ, against the Monothelites.

Another upon the Trinity, and the Incarnation.

To these Tracts may be added the last Article of his Logick wherein he explains what is the Hypostatic Union, and his Institutes, containing an Explication of the Terms used by him in speaking of the Mysteries, as Essence, Substance, Person, Hypostasis, &c.

The three Orations upon Images belong to the Doctrinal Tracts. He distinguisheth two sorts of Worship and Adoration; the one Supreme, belonging to God only; the other a Worship of Honour and Respect only. He says, The Matter of Images is not Worshipped, but what is represented by them; that they are instead of Books to the Ignorant, and that, in Worshipping of them, they Worship the Saints, of whom they are the Images. He cites St. Basil to Authorize this use of them. He objects to himself St. Epiphanius's Letter, and answers, Either that that Letter is supposititious, or that he caused the Picture he speaks of to be buried, only for some particular Reasons; like as St. Athanasius caused the Relicks of Saints to be buried, to condemn the Prophane Practice of the Egyptians. He cites several Passages of the Fathers, to prove, that the Images of Saints are to be Honoured; but there is hardly one word proving directly what he maintains, though he relate a great many Passages in those three Orations. He owns, the Worship of Images cannot be established from Holy Scripture, and that it is authorized by the Tradition of the Church only. Lastly, he confesses, no Image out to be made of the Trinity, nor of Things purely Spiritual.

The Prayer for the Dead is another Point, which also is not proved but by the Tradition of the Church. S. John Damascene defends it in an Oration made for that purpose. In it he affirms, that the Prayer for the Dead is from the Tradition of the Apostles. He add, That the Church does do nothing, but what is useful and pleasing to God; from whence he concludes, that by those Prayers they obtain the Remission of those Sins, which remain to be expiated by the Dead. He relates the Fable of Trajan's Deliverance, and a Story that happen'd to St. John the Almsgiver.

We may moreover add to these Tracts, two very short Treatises; the one, in what consists the Image and Similitude of God, in which we were created; and the other, of the Last Judgment. Besides, we may add to these, two Letters about the Mass, and the Consecration: but I do not believe them to be St. John Damascene's.

The Historical Works of S. John Damascene are fewer in number.

We have a Treatise of Heresies, which bears his Name; but the twenty four first are not S. John Damascene's.

The rest, beginning at the Nestorians were added by S. John Damascene. He joyns to the Hereticks already known, viz. the Nestorians, Eutychians, Monophysites, Apollinarianites, Theodotians, Jacobites, Agnetes, Donatists, Monachists, Saracens and Iconoclasts. He joins, I say, to these, other unknown Sects of Persons that had extraordinary Opinions and Practices, namely, the Semidaites who taste of the Patre brought to them by Discolus's Scholars, and believe this is to them instead of Sacrifice; the Orchists, which are Monks dancing, when they sing God's Praises: the Gnesimachs, who will not have Men to Write or Study, a good Life being sufficient; the Heliotropites, who believe there is a certain Virtue in the Herb, called Turnsol or Heliotrope; the Thnosophites, who believe Men's Souls to be like to the Beasts, and that they die with them; the Isacarcophites, who find fault with some Expressions in the Scripture; the Christolites, who believe that Christ hath left his Body and Soul in Hell, and that the God-head only ascended up to Heaven; the Echnopirones, who retain some Pagan Superstitions; the Ethiopsophites, who find fault with ancient Usages, and introduce new ones; the Parermeneutes, who interpret several places of the Old and New Testament according to their own fancy; and the Lampetians, living after their own fashion. It is plain, That S. John Damascene gave what Names he pleased to these he thought to be of these Opinions and Practices, tho' they made not a Body nor a Sect. Part of the Greek of this small Tract was published by Billius, at the end of his Edition [at Paris in 1619.] but M. Coselier published it not long ago whole in his Monuments of the Greek Church, l. i. p. 278.

The History of Barlaam contains a long Narrative of the Conversion of the Son of the King of the Indies, called Jesaphar by the Monk Barlaam; 'tis more like a Romance than an History. Some think it is not S. John Damascene's, nevertheless it is like enough to his Style, and all of it is agreeable to his Doctrine, except in the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son, which may have been added by the Interpreter in the Translation, as also in the Original by some Transcriber.

We have but one of his Moral Works; but it is as considerable in its kind, as the Book of the Orthodox Faith is: For S. John Damascenus hath comprehended in three Books. Intituled, Paralipsis, an infinite number of Precepts and Maxims of Morality, reduced to different Heads, under which he first cited some Sentences of the Scripture, and then some Passages of several Fathers.

The Hecateastick Works of S. John are very numerous, but few of them are printed. These are printed.

[A Sermon on Christ's Transfiguration, in Greek and Latin.

Three Discourses upon the Virgin's Nativity, also in Greek and Latin.

Two upon her Assumption, in Latin only.

A Sermon upon Holy Saturday, published in Greek and Latin by Billius [and in Greek and Latin by Pantinus, at Antwerp, in 1601.]

His Ecclesiastical Works, or Books of the Divine Service, are,

Some Hymns on the great Festivals; Odes and Proles for the Service of the whole year, distinguished into two Parts. They are not all S. John Damascene's, but some are Metropolitan's and other Authors.

Lastly, we have a Book of Logick and another of Physick of S. John Damascene.

These are the Works contained in the most perfect Edition of S. John Damascene. The First Editions contained but few Works.

His Three Discourses of Image-worship were printed in Greek, at Rome, in 1553. in Latin, at Paris, in 1555. and at Antwerp, in 1556.

The History of Barlaam and Jesaphar, at Paris, in 1563. at Colon in 1593. at Antwerp, 1602.

His Four Books of the Orthodox Faith were printed in Latin, at Paris, in 1507. in Greek, at Verona, in 1531.

The Dialogue against the Manicheans, at Basil, in 1578. [at Passau in 1572, Octavo.]

The Hymns, at Paris, in 1575.

They printed in 1539, 1548 and 1575. at Basil, a Collection of the chief Works of this Father, wherein are found the Books of the Orthodox Faith in Greek. Since that, Billius made a much larger Collection of them, containing all the Works above-mentioned. It was printed at Paris, in 1577, 1603 and 1619. but it hath few Works in Greek.

M. Aubert having published S. Cyril, designed to undertake a new Edition of S. John Damascene's Works, and having communicated his Design to the Learned, had collected several Pieces; among the rest, M. Allatus sent him a great number of his Works, never published before, which he had taken the pains to get copied out from some Manuscripts, and to translate them himself. M. Aubert dying before he could execute his Design, F. Labbe promised, in 1652. an Edition of S. John Damascene's Works, and printed a Specimen of it, wherein he set down the Names of the Works which Allatus had communicated to M. Aubert, without mentioning what this Learned Man had contributed to it, yea, and intimating, That he received no help by his Manuscripts. Allatus having heard of it by F. Gear, complained,

That

That F. Labbe would set himself forth by his Labours, without expressing the least acknowledgment of them; and he published a Catalogue of the Manuscripts of S. John Damascene, which he had sent to M. Aubert, and of them he had by him yet, and which he had to send. There are mention'd there.

A Panegyrick of S. John Chrysostom; and the following Sermons, on the Virgin's Nativity; on Christ's Presentation in the Temple; on the Virgin's Death; and the Fig-tree dried up; A Confession of the Catholick Faith; A Treatise of Malice and Vertue; An Historical Tract of Christ's Birth; The Greek Treatise of the Dialogue between a Christian and a Saracen; Definitions; other Definitions; A Treatise of the Divinity and the Incarnation of Christ; A Treatise of Christ's Body; Another against the Jacobites; Two Treatises against the Nestorians; A Writing containing the Passages of the Fathers, proving, That Christ is composed of two Natures, and that there be two Natures in him; A Treatise of the two Wills and the two Operations in Christ; A Writing upon Easter; A Prayer; A Sermon on the Annunciation of the Virgin; A Treatise to those that believe two Natures, two Wills and two Operations in Christ. Those are the Works of S. John Damascene, which Allatus had sent to M. Aubert, together with several other Pieces of the Greeks upon S. John Damascene's Works; Of the Lives of this Saint; And a Critical Censure upon his Works made by Allatus himself. He was moreover to send him his Lexicon, which he says, is a large Work, rare, and contains in it many things, with several other Greek Pieces, the Titles whereof may be seen in the Catalogue it self, in the end of the Collection of the Greek Works published by Allatus, and printed at Amsterd. in 1653.

S. John Damascene writes clearly and methodically; he was a Subtile Divine, an able Compiler, but a mean Preacher.

S. CHRODEGAND, Bishop of Mentz.

S. Chrodegand. CHRODEGAND, *Son of Landrada, having spent his Youth in the Court of Charles Martel, was advanced under Pepin's Reign to the Bishoprick of Mentz, and Ordained by Pope Stephen, (Anno 743.) He was the Founder and Restorer of the common Life of Clerks; for, having taken Possession of his Bishoprick, he caused his Clergy to dwell in a Cloyster, gave them a Rule, and supplied them with all the Necessaries of Life, that they might take no more care for Earthly Things, but might apply themselves wholly to God's Service only.

[* Alas Chrodegandus or Rodargus.]

This Rule of Chrodegand was published, in its Native Purity, by F. Labbe, out of a Copy transcribed from an ancient Manuscript of the Vatican Library. F. Dacherius had Printed one under his Name in his Spicilegium; but this is a Rapsody patched up out of the true Rule of Chrodegand, Decrees of the Council of Aix-la-Chapelle, and some other Monastick Rules. The true one hath but 34 Articles, with a Preface to them, wherein Chrodegand tells his Clergy, That, if the Canons of the Nicene Councils were yet in force, and the Bishop and his Clerks lived according to their Rules, there would be no need for him to make a new Rule; but having found the Clergy and the People of his Diocels remiss and loose, he thought himself obliged to prescribe these Rules: That he enjoins all the People of his Diocels, to live in Unity and Love, to frequent the Divine Service constantly, to be Obedient to their Bishop, to avoid Law Suits and Divisions, to give no Offence; and the Pastors to look to their Flocks, as knowing they must one day give an Account of them to the Pastor of Pastors.

Then he prescribes some particular Rules to his Clerks.

In the 1st. Article he recommends Humility to them.

In the 2^d. he binds them to take place of one another according to their Seniority in Orders. He will not have them to call themselves by their Proper Names, without adding the Name of their Dignity; That the younger Clerks, when they meet their Seniors, shall bow to them, and ask their Blessing; That being set down, they shall rise up and give them their place. He enjoins young Men to observe this Rule, and preserve Modesty in all things.

The 3^d. AMBROSIVS AVTPERTVS.

Autpertus.

AMBROSIVS AVTPERTVS, a French Benedictine Monk, and Abbot of S. Vincent, [a Monastery situate near the head of the River Volturnus,] Died about the Year 778. His Writings are honourably cited by Paulus Diaconus, in his History of the Lombards and the Author of the Chronology of this Abby wrote his Life, and made a Catalogue of his Writings. We have a great Commentary of his upon the Revelation, in which he puts a Moral Sense upon all that is said in that Book. F. Labbe says, That there are also some Commentaries of Ambrose on the Psalms, and the Song of Songs, Printed at Cologne in 1536. But for F. Oudin, who did both seek himself, and got others carefully to seek for those Works, declaring, he could not find them. The Book of the Conflict of Vertues and Vices, which was among S. Austins Works, and which bears Ambrose's Name in some Manuscripts, is this Author's; he wrote a Tract of Concupiscence, which is found Manuscript in Bennet College Library in Cambridge. He made the Lives of the Saints Paldon, Tuton, and Vason, the first Abbots of S. Benedict of Volturnus which are so much the better, because he hath only represented their Vertues, without relating any Miracles. He hath composed several Works, and some are found in Manuscripts under his Name, and others are Printed under other Author's Names. There is one upon our Saviour's Transfiguration, which is at the end of his Commentary upon the Revelation, in a Manuscript of the Abby of S. German-des-Prez. He hath made one on the Virgin's Assumption, which was the 18th. among S. Austins Sermons upon the Saints. There is one upon the Purification, Printed among the Sermons, attributed to S. Ambrose, which is found inserted in an Homily upon the same Festival, made by Alcuin.

STEPHEN III.

Stephen III.

PAUL I. being at the point to Die, Toton, Duke of Nepi, who dwelt at Rome, brought many Arm'd Men thither, who took Constantine, his Brother, who was but a Lay-Man as yet, put him in possession of the Pope's Palace, the next Day caused him to be Ordain'd Subdeacon and Deacon, and the Sunday after to be Consecrated Bishop of Rome by Three Bishops. Two of the chief Officers of the Roman Church, viz. Christopher, Secretary, and Sergius, Chaplain, being not able to bear with this Violence, fled to the King of the Lombards, and having received his Orders, return'd to Rome with a Band of Armed Men. Being got into the Town they were set on by Toton and his Creatures; but Toton being slain in the Conflict, Constantine, was turn'd out, and one Named Philip, a Priest and Monk, was chosen to sit in the Holy See. But Christopher the Secretary, who had been head of this Enterprize, forced him to withdraw into his Monastery, and in August in the Year 768, procured the unanimous Election of Stephen, who came from Sicily to Rome, under the Pontificate of Gregory the Third, and from that time had been much esteem'd in the Church of Rome. After his Election, Constantine was shamefully deposed, those of his Party were very cruelly used; they carried their Fury so far, as to go and fetch him out of the Monastery, where he was shut up, to pull out his Eyes. After these Cruelties Waldspert, a Presbyter, who had brought the Lombards to Rome to expel Constantine, would also have apprehended Christopher the Secretary, and the chief Citizens of Rome, to deliver them up to the Lombards; but they sent a Vicount against him, who heading the People, took him Prisoner, and put out his Eyes. During all those troubles, Stephen sent into France to request the King to send some Bishops to Rome, there to set things in order in a Council. Sergius, sent by the Pope, found Pepin Dead, and delivered the Letters to his Sons Charles and Carloman, who sent Twelve French Bishops to Rome, who held a Council there, with the Bishops of Italy, to which they brought Constantine blind, as he was. The first Day he beg'd the Council's forgiveness, and to excuse himself, told them, that the People had forced him; but the next Day he vindicated himself, affirming, that it was no new thing, for Laicks to be raised to the Episcopal Dignity, that Sergius was made Bishop of Ravenna, from a Lay-Man and Stephen Bishop of Naples. The Bishops, being provoked by this defence, caused him to be beaten, and turned out of the Church. Afterward the whole matter was examined, and the Acts of the Council, that had confirmed Constantine, were burnt. After this Pope Stephen fell down prostrate, with the Bishops, and those of the People, who had communicated with Constantine, and having confessed their fault, and ask'd forgiveness with Tears, they imposed a Penance on them. The Council caused the Canons, forbidding to Elect Lay-Men, to be read, and made several Constitutions. Concerning the Bishops, Priests, and Deacons Ordain'd by Constantine, it was declared, that their Ordination was Null, and that they should remain in the same degree of the Clergy, in which they were before, unless they should afterwards think it fit to Ordain them anew; and as to the Lay-Men which had been Ordain'd Deacons and Priests by Constantine, that they should wear the Religious Habit during the rest of their Life. Lastly, All that Constantine had done was declared Null, except Baptism and Confirmation. Consequent to this Decree, the Bishops Ordain'd by Constantine, having got themselves to be chosen by the Clergy, and the People, were re-ordain'd by Stephen. The Council treated also of Images, and maintain'd the Worshipping of them against the Council holden in Greece. Things being thus ordered Stephen remain'd in the quiet possession of the Holy See. But he had some difference with the King of the Lombards, about the Arch-Bishoprick of Ravenna, which became vacant by the Death of Sergius. The King of the Lombards had put one Named Michael in his room. Stephen would have deprived him as an intruder, and he was at last deposed and sent to Rome by the Order of Charles King of France. But Desiderius caused Christopher and Sergius to have their Eyes put out, for summoning of him in the Pope's Name, to restore to the Church what belong'd to her, and put Christopher to Death.

This Pope wrote three Letters. The 1st is directed to the Queen, or to King Charles; He thanks the King there for the good Turns Iberius, his Envoy, had done him, and desires him to give him a Reward.

The 2^d. is to Charles and Carloman; He congratulates their Reconciliation, and desires them to force the Lombards to restore what they had taken from the Church's Patrimony.

The 3^d directed to the same, is to dissuade them from marrying Desiderius's Daughter, or from bestowing their Sister upon his Son. This Letter is very earnest and vehement. There be two Letters more of this Pope in the Carolin Code; the 1st. which is the 46th of this Collection, is directed to Betrade, and is written against Sergius, Christopher, and those others, who would have assassinated Stephen. The other is a Letter of Thanks to Carloman.

There is also found there two Letters of Constantine, directed to Pepin: In the 1st of which he acquaints him with Paul's Death, and promises to be obedient to him. In the 2^d. he assures him, He was chosen against his Will; and tells him, that he hath received a Letter from the East about Images, of which he sends him a Copy. Stephen died the last Day of January 772.

ADRIAN

ADRIAN I.

ADRIAN was elected and consecrated Bishop of Rome by the unanimous Consent of the whole Clergy and People of Rome (ann. 772. Feb. 9.) In the beginning of his Pontificate Desiderius King of the Lombards sought his Friendship: But seeing that King had been perjurd all-a-long he would not at first give Ear to his Embassadors; yet he was prevailed with at last by their Oaths, and sent Deputies to him; but they were hardly got out of Rome, when News was brought that Desiderius had invaded the Dukedom of Ferrara, and the Exarchate of Ravenna, and that he was ready to besiege that City. The Pope having sent to demand those Countries back again, he promised to restore them, if he would come to him: But Adrian would not put himself into his Hands, and therefore declared, That he would not go to him, before he had restored what he had taken from the Church. Desiderius seeing he could do nothing by Fraud and Cunning, attack'd him openly, and prepared himself to besiege the City of Rome. In this Extremity the Pope applied himself to Charles King of France, and sent to intreat him to help the Romans, after the Example of his Father Pepin. He would have done it immediately, had not Desiderius born him in hand by his Envoys, That he had restored all to the Church of Rome, at that very Time when he was drawing near to Rome, to besiege it. Charles hearing of it, came into Italy with an Army, summon'd the King of Lombardy several times, to give the Church of Rome her Right. The King always denied it; but at last, his Men being taken with a panick Fear, he was forced to withdraw into Pavia, and his Son Adalgisius to Verona. During this Time the Pope recovered the Dukedom of Spoleto, and great part of the Country which the Lombards had taken. On the other side Charles, besieged the Cities of Verona and Pavia; the the first yielded presently, he left his Army before the other and went to Rome, where he was receiv'd by the Pope and the Romans, in a manner suitable to so signal a Service as that he did them. He confirmed the Donation his Father had made to the Holy See, of the Towns and Territories taken by Conquest from the Lombards, and promised to preserve them to it. From Rome he returned to the Siege of Pavia, which he took soon after: He took Desiderius Prisoner, and conquered the whole Kingdom of the Lombards. From this time Adrian continued in the peaceable possession of the Roman Church, and of the Countries the Kings of France had bestowed on him. He laid out his Wealth in Building, Adorning and Beautifying the Churches of Rome. He was Pope 23 Years, 10 Months and a few Days. This is the Sum of this Pope's Letters to Charles the Great, which are found in Manuscript of the Vatican, and have been put out by Gretser, but without observing any Order of the Times. The first Numbers note the Order of the Vatican Manuscript, and the second the Number of the Caroline Book.

Adrian I.

I. 83. He congratulates Charles's Conquest of Bavaria, and gives him notice, That Arichisius, Duke of Beneventum, hath sent to Constantinople, to demand Aid, with the Dukedom of Naples and the Patrician Dignity, upon promise to obey the Greek Emperor, to be clad after the Grecian Way, and to follow their Usages. But the Embassadors sent by the Emperor found Arichisius dead: But the People of Beneventum had promised the Greeks to perform these Conditions, since Charles has granted them Grimoaldus for their Duke, and they had led their Embassadors to Naples. He desires Charles to take his Measures accordingly, and discovers to him the Snares laid by the Neapolitans and the People of Benevent, for those whom he had sent.

II. 87. He grants the Pall to Ermmembert, Arch-bishop of Bourges, at Charles's Request.

IV. 85. He writes an answer to Charles, about the Bishops of Lombardy, who did inroach upon the Diocesses of other Bishops; about Armanald's Daughter, which married after having taken the Religious Habit; and about Simony, very rife in Italy and Tuscany. He complains of the Disobedience of the People of Ravenna and the Pentapolis. He desires Charles, not to countenance them, and not to receive those that are come to him without his Orders, as he receives none of the King's Subjects, that bring no Order from their Master.

V. 84. He acquaints him, That according to his Orders, he commanded the Venetian Merchants to be banish'd out of Ravenna and the Pentapolis. He desires him to apprehend the Duke of Garonne, who had possessed himself of some Lands belonging to the Church of Ravenna.

VI. 83. He recommends the Duke Paul, who went to him, to clear himself from the Accusations charged upon him and the Duke Constantine.

In the 96th. directed to the same Bishop, and to John a Presbyter, he exhorts them to a Conformity to the Usages of the Roman Church. He confutes the practice of the Spanish Churches, which put off Easter to the eighth Day, when the 14th Moon fell on Saturday. He reports a long Passage of S. Fulgentius about Predestination. Of the Obligation to abstain from Blood. 5. Of the Commerce and Marriage with Pagans and Jews, and of the Women that Marry again during the Life of their first Husband.

Floard mentions a Letter of this Pope to Tilpin, Arch-Bishop of Rheims; in which having described the Disorders that had happened in that Church: He confirms to him the Right of Metropolitan or Primate, and grants him the Privilege of not being judged but by a Canonical Judgment, and by the Pope, if in the very Judgment he did appeal to the Holy See. This Letter seems doubtful to me.

Adrian gave to Charlemagne the Code of Dionysius Exiguus, of whose Canons there was a Summary made, bearing unjustly the Name of this Pope. Some attribute to him a Collection of 72 or 80 Capitula's, which they suppose him to have given to Ingilram, Bishop of Metz, or Ingilram to have presented them to him, for both these are found in the Manuscripts: It contains 72 or 80 Articles of Ecclesiastical Judgments, for the most part taken out of the Ancient Canons, Popes Letters, and the Theodosian Code; but some Additions are made to them, favourable to the Pretensions of the Court of Rome. This piece was forged when the false Decretals were made, and perhaps by the same Author. They talk also of a Privilege granted by this Pope to the Monastery of S. Denys, wherein it is permitted them to have a Bishop: But this also is visibly supposititious.

PAUL, Deacon of Aquileia.

PAUL, Deacon of Aquileia, called Winfred after the Name of his Family, Son of Wartfred and Theodolinda, was Secretary to Desiderius, the last King of the Lombards. This Prince being taken (Anno 774.) by Charlemagne, and his Kingdom utterly destroyed, Paul the Deacon fell into the Conqueror's Hands, who used him very civilly. But his Ties to his Prince having brought him into a suspicion of some Conspiracy, he was banished into an Island of the Adriatick Sea [called Diomedea] from whence he escaped into [Anchis] the Duke of Beneventum, Desiderius's Son-in-law, and a little after made himself a Monk in Mount-Cassin, where he died in the beginning of the 9th Century.

This Author wrote * the History of the Lombards, divided into Six Books. They do more- over falsely attribute to him an Abridgment of the Roman History drawn out of several Authors: For, though he made an Addition to Eutropius's Epitome, he is not the Author of that Collection, which is rather Anastasius's the Library-keeper. He abridg'd the History of the first Bishops of Metz, which Abridgment is found among the Historiographers of France, and in the last Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. XIII.] The first Times of this History, which he brings up to the Apostles, are altogether Fabulous. He made this Writing, as he tells us himself (Ch. 16. B. 6. of his History of the Lombards) at the request of Ingilram, Bishop of Metz. He composed also, in particular, the Life of S. Arnulphus, Bishop of Metz, which is found among Bede's Works. There is a relation of S. Cyprian's Martyrdom, under his Name, which is found at the beginning of this Father's Works, of Pamelius's Edition. They published, more-moreover, under his Name, the Lives of S. Benedict, S. Maurus, and S. Scholastica. Sigebert assures us, he wrote the Life of S. Gregory the Great, which was printed in the last Edition of that Saint's Works. Besides, they ascribe to him a Commentary upon S. Benedict's Rule, which is not printed. There be some Hymns and Homilies, both Manuscript and Printed, bearing his Name. It is thought that S. John's Hymn, Ut queant laxis, &c. is his. Lastly, he composed, by Charlemagne's Order, a Book of Homilies or Lessons, gathered out of the Holy Fathers for all the [Festival] days of the Year. This Book was Printed at Spire, * [Anno 1472.] by Peter Drach, with a Letter of Charlemagne's at the beginning of it, declaring, That this Work was composed by Paul the Deacon, by his Order. F. Mabillon hath Printed this Letter and some Extracts of the Commentaries of the first Homilies, because the Edition of Spire is grown very scarce.

CHARLEMAGNE.

THE Emperor CHARLEMAGNE may be rank'd among the Latin Ecclesiastical Authors, as well as Constantine among the Greeks: For he did not only labour in the re-establishing the Church-Discipline, but moreover he made several Laws, wrote Letters, and caused some Treatises of Ecclesiastical Matters to be composed.

Charlemagne's Laws, about Ecclesiastical Matters, are called Capitularia, Capitularies. They contain'd some Constitutions made by Councils, and confirmed by this Prince, or some Laws made by the sole Authority of this Prince.

The 1st Capitulary of Charlemagne is of the Year 769; it contains 18 Articles about the Manners of the Clergy. It forbids Ecclesiastical Persons bearing of Arms and Hunting. It enjoins Priests to be subject to their Bishops, to give them an account of their Conduct every Year in Lent; to take no Church without the consent of the Bishop upon whom it depends; to take care to Administer the Sacraments to the Penitents and to the Sick, and let no Body die without the Unction, Reconciliation, and the Viaticum; not to say Mass but in Churches dedicated to our Lord, but upon Stone-Altars consecrated by the Bishop. It charges Bishops to look carefully after their Diocesses, to obviate Superstitions, to visit every Year. It forbids Judges to punish or condemn the Clergy without the Bishop's consent.

The 2d Capitulary is dated in the Year 779; it was made in an Assembly of Bishops, Abbots, and Lords. About Ecclesiastical Matters, it ordains, That the Suffragan Bishops shall be subject to their Metropolitans; That Bishops shall be ordained in those Towns where there were none before; That in Monasteries the Rule shall be observed; That the Bishops shall have a full Power over the Presbyters and other Clerks; That they shall be impowered to punish Incontinent Persons, and to order the Life of Widows; That they shall neither entertain nor ordain the Clerks of other Bishops; That every one shall pay Tythes, which shall be distributed by the Bishop's Order; That the Church shall not protect Murderers, tho' they have fled into Churches, and they shall give them no Meat there.

They order'd also, in this Assembly, the manner of Praying for the Prince, as follows; That every Bishop shall sing three Masses and three Psalters; the first for the King, the second for the Army, and the third for the present Calamity: That Presbyters shall say three Masses, and the Monks, Nuns, and Canons three Psalters. Besides, That the Bishops, the Abbots, and Abbesses that are Rich, shall bestow upon the Poor one Pound of Silver, or the worth of it; That those, who are not Rich enough, shall feed some poor Folks; That the Earls shall also give a Pound of Silver, and the rest proportionably.

In the Capitulary of the Year 788. there is but one Article concerning Ecclesiastical Matters, whereby Bishops are forbidden entertaining the Clerks of another Bishop, without his consent.

The 1st Capitulary of Aix-la-Chapelle, of the Year 789, is prefaced with a Letter directed to all Ecclesiastick and Secular Persons, exhorting them to watch over their Flocks, to instruct them in the Definitions of the Holy Councils; and, declaring to them, That he sends them some Capitularies drawn out of the Canonical Constitutions. The 58 first Chapters are taken out of the ancient Councils and Degrees of Popes. And the 22 next, are new Constitutions, wherein he forbids Perjuries, Witchcrafts, Murders, false Witnesses; and recommends Peace, Patience, Submission to lawful Powers, Reverence in Churches, Order in the Divine Service, Rule in Monasteries, Vigilance and Learning in the Pastors, and particularly the use of the Roman way of Singing, which Pepin had with much ado brought into the Churches of France.

The 2d Capitulary is of the same Year, containing 16 Rules for Monks.

The 3d comprehends some Rules of Policy, and, among the rest, That in the Administration of Baptism they all follow the Roman Usage; That Bells shall not be Baptized; That Monks shall not meddle with secular Affairs, &c.

There is a particular Capitulary for the Saxon Converts, containing 34 Chapters.

The 8th condemns to Death those Saxons that will not get themselves Baptized. The 6th and 7th grant the Tythes of all to the Churches. The 8th forbids keeping Courts on Sundays

Sundays and Holy-days. The 19th. Ordains, That Children shall be brought to Baptism within the Year. There are several against Superstitions, and some for Ecclesiastical and Civil Policy.

The Capitulary of the Year 793, is for Italy, it contains 17 Chapters. The 1st. permits the Lanty to govern the Hospitals founded by them: But it forbids them to govern the Churches, wherein Baptism is administred. The other Chapters concern Civil Matters.

The Capitulary of Francford of the Year 794. was drawn in the Synod; it contains Fifty one Chapters. By the first Charles grants Tassilon, Duke of Bavaria, his Pardon. By the 4th it is ordain'd, That the Bishops shall do Justice to the Clergy, and that their Judgments shall be obey'd. By the 5th it is ordain'd, That the Bishop shall not run from Town to Town; but shall settle in his own Church, and take care of it. By the 6th they compose the Difference between the Bishops of Vienna and Arles, according to the Pope's Letters; and they grant five Suffragan Sees to that of Vienna, and nine to that of Arles: As for Tarentaise, Ambrun, and Aix, they ordain, That they shall send to the Pope about them, and shall follow his Judgment thereupon. In the 7th they ordain, That a Bishop, suspected of Infidelity, shall clear himself by taking God to witness of his Innocency. By the 8th they Depose Gerbodius, who called himself Bishop, without any Proofs or Witnesses of his Ordination, and had been ordained Deacon and Priest, contrary to the Canons. The eight following Canons are concerning Monks and Abbots. The 17th forbids Clerks to go to a Tavern. The 18th enjoins Bishops to know the Canons. The 19th is for the Observation of the Sunday. The 20th prohibits ordaining Bishops in Boroughs. The 21st prohibits ordaining a Slave without his Master's consent. The 22d enjoins Clerks and Monks to continue in their Profession. The 23d renews the Order for the paying of Tithes. The 24th ordains, That Churches shall be Repair'd by those that enjoy the Benefices. The 25th, That no strange Clerk shall be received without Letters from their Bishop. The 26th, That no Body shall be ordained without a Title to a Benefice. The 27th, That the Bishop shall instruct his People. The 28th, That he shall be Judge of the Differences between the Clerks. The 29th, That there shall be no Cabals among them. The 30th, That Monasteries shall be under Discipline. The 31st, That all the Faithful shall learn the Creed and the Faith of the Church. The 32d, That Avarice and Covetousness shall be avoided. The 33d, That Hospitality shall be exercised. The 34th, That Infamous Persons shall not be Accusers. The 35th, That they shall reconcile in case of Necessity. The 36th, That the Clerks of the King's Chappel shall not communicate with those Clergy-men which are at odds with their Bishops. The 37th, That the Bishop shall judge the Presbyters found delinquent. The 38th, That he shall take care of Orphan Girls. The 39th, That he shall not stay above three Weeks out of his Diocess, and that the Church-lands of a Bishop deceased, shall belong to his Successor, as his Patrimonial-land to his Heirs. The 40th, That they shall worship no new Saints, nor build any Chappel in the High-ways to their Honour; but those only shall be honoured, which have been chosen because of their Martyrdom or the Merits of their good Life. The 41st, That the Trees and Groves consecrated to the Pagan Deities, shall be cut down. The 42d, That they shall stand to the Sentence of Umpires chosen. The 43d, That Children shall not be brought to the Sacraments. The 44th, That they shall observe the Canons concerning the manner of veiling Virgins. The 45th, That those Abbesses shall be deposed, which live disorderly. The 46th, That the Bishop shall distribute the Oblations made in Churches. The 47th, That no Body shall be ordained Priest, before he be 30 years old. The 48th, That after Mass they shall give one another the Kiss of Peace mutually. The 49th, That the Names shall not be recited before the Oblation. The 50th, That we must not believe that Men cannot pray to God but in three Languages only, because God may be Worshiped in all sorts of Languages, and he understands all our Petitions. The 51st, That the Bishops and Presbyters shall not be ignorant of the Canons. The 52d, That Churches cannot be sold to Prophan Uses. In the 53d, the Synod assents, That the Emperor may keep the Bishop Hildebold in his Court, as he did Ingilram already. In the 54th he recommends Alcuin to the Prayers of the Synod, as a Man very well seen in Ecclesiastical Matters.

The Capitulary for the Saxons for the Year 797. given in an Assembly of Bishops and Lords, contains nothing but Articles meerly Civil.

Anno 799. Charlemagne sent two Persons to Rome, to Pope Leo III. to consult him about the Chorepiscopi, and the Punishment of Wicked Priests; he wrote to his Bishops also about it; and we have a Fragment of that Letter with Chapters brought over from Rome, for the Abolishing of the Chorepiscopi.

Anno 800. or thereabouts, he set out an Edit, wherein he charges the Counts and other Judges to afford the Bishops their helping Hand, for the Execution of the Constitutions made about Ecclesiastical Discipline.

Some time after he made a Capitulary, to recommend the Reverencing of the Holy Apostolick See, in Honour of S. Peter's Memory.

There is another Capitulary yet of the Year 801. containing 22 Chapters, drawn by the Bishops, and confirmed by the King's Authority. The 1st and the 2d import, That the Priests shall pray for the Health and Prosperity of the King and the Royal Family, and for their Bishop: The 3d, That they shall take care of the Church and the Relicks. The 17th, That he that had the possession of a Church during the space of Thirty Years, shall continue in the peaceable possession of it. The 18th and the next, That Clerks shall carry no Weapons with them; that they shall not meddle with Law-Suits; that they shall not go to the Tavern; that they shall forbear Swearing. The 21st. That they shall impose Penance upon those that shall confess to them, and shall grant the Viaticum and the Communion to the Sick. The 22d, That they shall give the Unction to the Sick.

The 1st Capitulary of the Year 802, given by the King to his Commissaries, contains some Articles of the Life and Manners of the Clergy, of Abbots and Religious Persons.

The other Chapters, and the 2d Capitulary of the same Year, are upon Civil Matters.

The Capitulary of the Year 803. was made in the Synod held by Paul of Aquileia, at Aix-la-Chapelle; it contains Seven Articles. The 1st provides for the preservation of Church-lands: The 2d is for the restoring the Election of Bishops by the People and Clergy. The 3d prohibits encroaching upon Churches, Lands, and Privileges. The 4th, 5th, and 6th declare, the Ordinations, Imposition of Hands, and Consecrations made by the Choriepiscopi, to be void. The last is concerning the Judgment of Presbyters. There be also two Capitularies more made a little after upon this Article.

The 3d Capitulary of the same Year, contains only two Articles upon Ecclesiastical Matters. The 1st imports, That Churches shall be repaired, and that in those Places which have more Churches than needs, some of them shall be pulled down to build up others, where they shall be needful. The 2d, That none shall be ordained Priest before he be examined, and no Excommunication shall be pronounced without cause.

The 5th of the same Year contains one whereby it is forbidden to give or take any thing for the Holy Chrisme.

The 8th given at Worms in the same Year, is an Edict for the Exemption of Bishops and Priests.

Anno 804. he made at Salz eight Articles for the Bishops. By the first they are charged to take care of the Churches of their Diocesis. By the 2d and 3d he preserves the Tythes to the Parochial Churches. The 4th imports, That the Bishops shall take care to Ordain Priests. The 5th forbids secular Persons to go into Nunneries, and Clerks also, except in case of necessity, and by the Bishop's Order. The 6th forbids Nuns to have in their Monasteries any other Girls but such as design to stay there. The 7th and 8th forbid admitting Male-Children thereinto, or carrying Arms thither. These Articles are back'd with the following Advertisements to Presbyters, to preach and teach the Scripture and the Creed; to be able to say the Psalter without Book, as also the Words for Administring Baptism; to be skilful in the Canons and the Penitential; and in Singing; not to dwell with Women, except their Mother, Sister, or Aunt; not to go to the Tavern; not to be Covetous, Drunkards, or Idle; not to break the Fast of Holy Thursday; not to Administer the Holy Chrism, and to come to the Synod.

Anno 805. He made a Capitulary of 16 Articles at Thionville, containing several Rules of Ecclesiastical Policy: Some Articles of it are also found in the 2d and 3d Capitularies. In the Articles given the same Year to Jesse, Bishop of Amiens.

The 2d imports, That no Lay-Man shall be Superior of Monks nor Arch-Deacon.

There's an Edict of the same Year, and in the same Place, about the Reverence due to Bishops and Priests.

The 4th Capitulary of the Year 806, contains several Constitutions of Ecclesiastical Policy.

The 6th renews some ancient Canons about Discipline.

The 2d Article of the 1st Capitulary of 809. discharges the Priest from Administring the Holy Chrisme.

The 5th of the 1st Capitulary of 810, enjoins them to preach and instruct the People.

The 1st and 2d Capitularies of 811, contain excellent Instructions of the Duty of Abbots, Monks, Clerks, and Bishops.

The Capitulary of 813, contains 28 Articles, made in the Councils of Arles and Mentz, and confirmed by the Authority of Charlemagne, about Church-Discipline and the Manners of the Clergy.

Lastly, besides these Capitularies of Charlemagne, of which we know the Time, there are also five Capitularies more, of which the Time is unknown; they contain several Constitutions, which are almost all contain'd in the Capitularies above-mention'd.

Most of the Capitularies of Charlemagne, concerning Ecclesiastical Matters, have been collected in the first of the four Books of Capitularies compiled by Ansegisus, (according to some Abbot of Lobbes, and according to M. Baluzius, Abbot of Fontenelles) whose Collection was approved by Levin the Meek, and by Charles the Bald. This Abbot undertook to set in order, order, and to collect the Constitutions contain'd in the Capitularies of Charlemagne, and Lewis the Meek, made before 828. The first of the four Books of his Collection contains Charlemagne's Ecclesiastical Constitutions; the second, the Civil Laws of the same Emperor; the third, the Ecclesiastical Constitutions of Lewis the Meek; and the last, the Civil Laws of the same. After him, Benedict, Deacon of Mentz, gathered about the Year 845 some Capitularies of these two Emperors, omitted by Ansegisus, and added thereto the Capitularies of Carloman and Pepin; but his Collection published in three Books, is very much confused. These two Collections are the seven Books of the Capitularies of our Kings. The six first Books were set out in 1548. by Tilius, Bishop of Meaux; and the seven Books altogether have been published by M. Pithæus, in the end of the last Century, and in the beginning of this. Since 1545 they had Printed in Germany some Capitularies, and in 1557 several had been Printed at Basil, but all those Editions were imperfect and defective, and we are obliged to M. Baluzius for having procured us such a fair Edition of the Capitularies, very large and full, and revised by several Manuscripts, with all the care and application imaginable. It came forth in 1677, from Muguet's Press, in two Volumes Folio. The first of which comprehends the Capitularies of the Kings Childebert, Chlotarius, Dagobert, Carloman, Pepin, Charlemagne, of Pepin King of Italy, and Lewis the Meek, together with the seven Books of Capitularies, collected by Ansegisus and Benedict, four Additions to these Collections, the Canons of Isaac, Bishop of Langres, taken out of the three last Books of Capitularies, and the Chapters of Herard, Arch-Bishop of Tours, taken also out of our King's Capitularies. The second Volume contains the Capitularies of Charles the Bald, and the posterior Emperors, with divers Forms.

These Capitularies renew the ancient Church-Discipline in many Points, and in the other establish one suitable to the Necessity and the Manners of the Age, and against the most common Disorders of the Time. They set up again the Bishops Elections, and restored the Church to her former Possessions. They forbid the Laity to encroach upon them, and the Clergy to alienate them. They revived the ancient Laws concerning Ecclesiastical Judgments, the Authority of Metropolitans, and of Provincial Synods, and the Prohibitions of the Canons against encroaching upon other Bishops Dioceses, and receiving their Clerks or Persons Excommunicated by them. They did not forget the famous Prohibition so often repeated, for all sorts of Persons in Holy Orders to have no strange Woman in the House with them. They put in force again the Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, whereby it is forbidden to make Ordinations absolute and without Title. They prohibited Translations and Non-residence; the perseverance of Clerks and Monks was ordained. Clerks were commanded to be subject to their Bishops by several Laws. They ordained, That he should have the disposing of all the Benefices in his Diocese, and that no Priest might be put in or out of any Parish or Chappel but by his Authority. They bind the Parsons to go or send to the Episcopal City for the Holy Oyl. The Choriepiscopi were forbidden Episcopal Functions, and they endeavoured the total abolishing of them. They charged the Bishops to examine the Doctrine and the Manners of Presbyters before they ordained them; to ordain no Body Presbyter, unless he was Thirty Years old; they enjoyn'd Presbyters and other Ecclesiastical Persons, to live regularly, to addict themselves to the Offices of their Ministry, and chiefly to Preaching. Priests are forbidden saying Mass without communicating: They were enjoined to have the Eucharist always ready at hand, to be administred to the Sick, together with the Unction, which was common at this time. Clerks had no other Judges but the Bishops, and they required a great number of credible Witnesses to Condemn them. They set up Schools in Bishopricks and Abbies, to learn the Psalms, Singing, and Grammar. They endeavoured to destroy the Remains of Pagan Superstitions. The Invocation of Saints (hh) was much used; Relicks and the Crofs were Reverenced (ii): But in France no Veneration of Images was allowed. The Prohibition of contracting Marriages, was extended to the fourth Degree of Consanguinity; Spiritual Affinity (kk) began then to take Place.

[hh] Invocation of Saints.] In the Days of this Emperor, Charles the Great, who flourished towards the latter End of this Century, Idolatrous Superstitions and Corruptions were arrived at their full growth. Image-Worship was established by Law in the Eastern and Western Churches, and Saint-worship as our Author says truly, much used; but from the beginning it was not so. Neither the Scriptures of the old and New Testament, nor yet the purest Antiquity do at all authorize this Practice. Among those excellent Prayers which we meet with in Holy Scripture, composed by Men divinely inspir'd, we cannot find one directed to any Saint or Angel, nor any other Being whatsoever, but the only Living and the True God; but we read in several places, That both the Angels and Saints, while they were alive, have disclaimed all Worship when tendered to them, as not due to them: and after their Death we are assured that they cannot hear us. Consonant to these Truths did the Church of Christ for above 200 Years believe and act, and not only make no Prayers to any Angel or Saint, as Irenæus testifies, but shewed a great Abhorrence of all such Hereticks, as used such a sort of Worship. The first step towards it was made by Origen, who advanced this Doctrine in the Church, That the Saints departed out of this Life, do carry along with them a Remembrance of the State and Condition of their Brethren, and out of their Love to them do carefully recommend them to God, and pray for them. From this Perswasion, (which many learned from him) did the Christians take occasion to intreat their Living Friends, who were eminent for Piety, That if they died before them, and so came first into Christ's joyful and happy Presence, they

Cyp. ep. 57. they would not forget to recommend them to God, who were left behind in a sinful World: But yet no Saint was invoked or prayed to after Death many Years after this; for S. Jerom, Ambrose, and Theodoret unanimously acknowledge, That God alone is to be Worshipped and Prayed to; and S. Auslin expressly says, Non sit nobis Religio cultus hominum mortuorum; Let not the Worship of Dead Men be any part of our Religion. But although there was no Invocation of Saints, yet many Doctrines and Practices were allowed and believed, which laid the Foundation of Saint-Worship, which was introduced soon after. Sulp. Sever. As. 1. it was held, That the Souls of the Martyrs were every where present, but especially at their Tombs, where several Miracles were wrought. 2. Many of the Eminent Fathers, both for Learning and Devotion, made Rhetorical Panegyricks of the Christians deceased, wherein by Apostrophe's and Prosopopœia's they seem'd to Invoke Souls departed. Thus S. Jerom, in his Epitaph of Paula, saith, Farewel, O Paula, and by thy Prayers help the decrepit Age of him that Honours thee. And so Nazianzen, in his Invectives against Julian, saith, Hear, O thou Soul of great Constantine, &c. 3. The Christians in their Prayers, at the Commemoration of the Memories of the Martyrs, not only used many unwearied Expressions, implying a sort of Invocation of them, but did formally pray to God to grant them such Blessings as they stood in need of, through their Intercession; for so Auslin says, We mention not them as though we prayed for them, but that they may pray for us. These Doctrines and Practices, so prepared Mens Minds for the Invocation of Saints, that about the Year 600, S. Gregory inserted Petitions to them in the publick Litanies among the Latins, as Petrus Gnapheus had some time before among the Greeks, and it was quietly received and allowed, and so continued to the Times of Charles the Great, and downward till the Reformation, without any considerable Oppositiō: So apt are Men to cherish will-Worship.]

[(ii) Relicks.——reverenced. Although the Reverence of Bones and other Relicks of Saints seems as absurd a piece of idolatrous Worship as the Heathens themselves were guilty of, yet it was the first that crept into the Church through the Policy of Satan, which was effected by this Means: It pleased God, for the Testimony of his Doctrine and Truth, to work great Miracles by the dead Bodies of his Saints, in witness that they had been his Messengers, and Instruments of his Will: But that which was intended by God for the good of Men, and Conversion of Souls, became a Snare to lead them into Error; for their Admiration of the Vertue which God seemed to put into them, stirred them up not only to seek for them, and use them as Amulets and Remedies against all Evils and Distempers, but also made them give them a singular Respect and Veneration, as we may gather from S. Auslin's Words, I know many that Worship Graves, Images, &c. Indeed there was a Respect always paid to the Martyrs deceased, by the Christians, by celebrating their Memories at their Tombs, upon the anniversary of their Martyrdom, and by bestowing a neat and convenient Burial upon them; but it was never allowed by the Orthodox Fathers to give them a Divine Honour: Yea, S. Gregory says, That it is not lawful to bring the Body of the Saints into a publick view, or handle them with the hands. 'Twas Satan's Subtily to insinuate Idolatry by an intemperate Devotion.]

[(kk) Prohibition of Marriage.——to the fourth Degree of Consanguinity, Spiritual Affinity.] To avoid all incestuous Marriages, such Canons as these, prohibiting Marriage within certain degrees are very convenient to be imposed, and ought to be observed: And tho' indeed this may seem too strict, restraining such Kindred from Marriage, as the Word of God it self doth seem to permit, Levit. 18. being extended to the fourth Degree of Consanguinity; yea, it is better to prohibit something in it self lawful, where there is little or no inconvenience consequent upon it, than to permit a thing, which in strictness, perhaps is lawful, but is in appearance evil and scandalous, as a Marriage-Conjunction of Persons near-akin, is commonly accounted. But as to Spiritual Consanguinity or Affinity, as it is no real Relation, so to hinder such as are thus allied from Marriage, is an instance of Papal Tyranny and Usurpation, no Persons being really better qualified for Marriage together, than such as are Brethren and Sisters in the Lord. So that though the Constitution for not Marrying to the fourth Degree, is tolerable enough, yet the latter, since it may produce many Inconveniencies among Men, deserve no Regard or Observation; and it is to be believed, that it had long since expired, had it not been much for the Advantage of the Papal Hierarchy, by creating an abundance of Dispensations.]

The Celebration of Sundays was then very solemn. On this Day they did forbear all manner of servile Work, and Christians were obliged to be present at Divine Service, which was solemnly perform'd. The keeping of publick Markets was prohibited on this Day. This is the number of the Holy-Days then kept, set down in the 158 Chapter of the First Book of the Capitularies: The Festivals of Christmas, S. Stephen, S. John the Evangelist, the Innocents, the Octave of the Lord, the Epiphany, the Octave of the Epiphany, the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, eight Days at Easter, the Great Litany, the Ascension, Whitsunday, S. John Baptist, S. Peter and S. Paul, S. Martyn and S. Andrew. As to the Virgin's Assumption, it is said, We leave it out to enquire into it. Churches were built with as much Splendor and Magnificence as the Age would permit; they were decked and adorn'd, the Altars consecrated and cover'd with Linen-Cloth; the Service was perform'd with great Pomp. The Roman way of Singing was brought into the Churches of France, but they kept still their own peculiar way of Singing. They took great care of the Church-Rooks and Singing. Women were forbidden to come near the Altars; and Abbesses to give the Blessing, to make the Sign of the Cross upon Mens Heads, and to give the Veil with the Sacerdotal Benediction. Simony was severely forbidden. They made Laws against Usury then, not only in Ecclesiastical, but Lay-Men. There were many Hospitals for the Poor and the Sick. The paying of Tythes was become Obligatory, and all sorts of Persons were constrained to pay them to Church-Men. They were forbidden exacting any thing for the Sacraments, or for Ecclesiastical Offices. Church-Revenues were divided into three Parts; one part was for the repairing of Churches, the other for the Poor, and the last for Church-Men. They began to oblige the Clergy of Cathedrals to live together canonically. They made divers Constitutions to keep Monks in order. They forbid to receive Children without the Parent's Consent, and to veil veil Virgins before Thirty Years of Age, and Widow-Women before the thirtieth Day after their Husband's Decease. They prohibited a sort of Clerks, which wore the Religious Habit, and would live neither as Monks nor Clergy-Men. The Rectors of Country Parishes came from time to time to give the Bishop an account of their Conduct; and the Bishop did also visit his Diocels. Publick Penance was in use yet, but not with the same Rigor as in the former Ages. They granted Absolution several times. They never denied the Communion to dying People. Secret Confessions were frequent. They recommended frequent Communion. They administered yet Baptism by immersion, and only at Easter and Woutsumside, unless in case of Necessity. Prayer for the Dead was very much practised. This is part of the Discipline contained in Charlemagne's Capitularies.

This is the Catalogue of this Emperor's Letters. A Letter to Offa, King of the Mercians, in the Year 774. A Declaration for the Designation of Bishopricks. A Letter to Eustrade his Wife. Some Instructions given to Angilbert, going to Rome, Anno 796. A Letter to Leo, sent by Angilbert. Two Letters to Offa. A Fragment of a Letter against vicious Priests, directed to the Bishops of France. A Letter to the Monks of S. Martin of Tours; wherein he enjoins them to send back again to Theodulphus, Bishop of Orleans, some Clerks of Orleans, who had harboured among them. A Letter for the Restauration of Schools in Churches and Monasteries. A Letter to Pepin, for the Peace of the Churches, and of those who serve them. A Letter to the Bishops of the Kingdom, written in 811, commanding them to instruct the Priests and the People in the Signification of the Ceremonies of Baptism: The Copy we have of it is directed to Odelbert; it was set forth by F. Mabillon, and is found, as well as the preceding, in the Collection of Capitularies of M. Baluzius. This Letter stirred up Amalaricus, Jesse, and some other Bishops, to make some Treatises to explain the Right of Baptism. A Letter to Alcuin, about the number of the Works in the Year, among Alcuin's Works. A Letter which he made for a Preface to the Book of Homilies, made by Paul the Deacon, [and collected into one Volume by his order] set out by F. Mabillon in the first Volume of his Analecra, p. 25. Siebert ranks Charlemagne among Ecclesiastical Writers, upon the account of this Work, which yet was none of his, but of Paul the Deacon of Aquileia. F. Mabillon hath moreover set forth, in the fourth Volume of his Analecra, an Epistle of Charlemagne, touching the Grace of the * Holy Ghost. Lastly, we meet with several Letters more of Charlemagne, as Foundations, Donations, Priviledges, &c. in the Collection of such kind of Pieces.

Charlemagne.

* Of the sevenfold Spirit.]

But the two most considerable Ecclesiastical Works that have appeared under this Prince's Name, are the Letters written in his Name to Elipandus, Bishop of Toledo, and the other Bishops of Spain, against the Error of Felix, Bishop of Urgel, which is at the end of the Council of Francfort; and the four Books called Carolin, against Image-Worship, and the Decree of the Nicene Council: Some attribute them to Ingram, Bishop of Metz, others to Alcuin, others would have us think them to be Supposititious: But this last Pretension is unwarrantable; for, not to speak of the Authority of Hincmarus, who cites them, and of several ancient Authors, which are found in Libraries, Pope Adrian's Answer to this Work shews it had been published in his Time by Charlemagne's Order, and the Councils of Francfort and Paris are authentic Testimonies of the Truth of these Books: So that there can be no Doubt but this Work is a kind of Manifesto, containing the Sentiment of the French Church, published under the Name and by the Order of Charlemagne. We shall speak more fully of these Works of Charlemagne, when we make the History of the Seventh Council, and of this of Francfort, where we will examine the Affair of Felix of Urgel, and the Sentiments of the Author of the Carolin Books, touching Images.

ALCUIN.

FLACUS, ALBIN, or ALCUIN, born in England, Deacon of the Church of York, and the Scholar of Bede and of Egbert, was invited into France (Anno 790) by Charlemagne, who looked upon him as his Master, and shewed a great Esteem for him. He had the Reputation of one of the most learned Men of his Age, in Ecclesiastical Matters. He instructed the French not only by his Writings, but moreover by the Publick Lectures he read in the King's Palace and other Places. Charles gave him [the Government of] many Abbies, and at last charged him with the Care of the Canons of S. Martin of Tours: He died in this Society, Anno 804.

Alcuin.

This Author's Works were collected by Andreas [Quercetanus, or] du Chesne, and Printed at Paris by Charmoist in 1617.

They are divided into Three Parts. The 1st comprehends his Tracts upon the Scripture; the 2d his Books of Doctrine, Discipline, and Morality; and the 3d the Verses, Letters, and Poems he made.

The first part comprehends the following Works. Questions and Answers about several difficult Passages of Genesis, with an Explication of these Words, Let us make Man in our Image.

Alcuin. An Exposition of the Penitential and Gradual Psalms, and of the 118th Psalm. A Treatise of the use of Psalms, with Prayers taken out of the Psalms. An Office of the Church for the Year. A Letter upon what is laid in the Song of Songs, that there be Sixty Queens, and Eighty Concupiscences. A Commentary upon Ecclesiastes, and Seven Books of Commentaries upon the Gospel of S. John. It is observed in the end of this Part, that Alcuinus had laboured to correct the whole Text of the Vulgar Bible, by Charlemagne's Order, and that this Manuscript-work is found in the Library of Vauxcelles, with some some Verses of Alcuinus upon this Work.

The Second Part comprehends the following Treatises. A Tract of the Trinity, Dedicated to Charlemagne, divided into Three Books, wherein he handles with great accuracy and clearness some Speculative and Scholastick Questions, concerning those Mysteries, with Twenty Eight Questions and Answers about the Trinity. A Letter explaining what is Time, Eternity, and an Age, &c. * A Tract of the Soul, directed to his Sister Eulalia a Virgin. Seven Books against the Opinion of Felix, Bishop of Urgel, who believed Jesus Christ might be called the Adoptive Son of God, as to his Humane Nature. A Letter upon the same Subject written to Elipandus, Bishop of Toledo. Elipandus's Answer, in which he treats Alcuin very rudely, and having loaded him with Calumny, cites some Passages of the Fathers, and the Church-Office, to justify that Jesus Christ may be called God's Adoptive Son, as to his Humane Nature. Alcuin's Reply to Elipandus's Letter, divided into Four Books. In the Two first he Answers the Authorities alledged by Elipandus; and in the Two last he proves his own Opinion by Testimonies of the Fathers, and the Scripture. He forbears Reviling Words, and deals with him with as much Moderation, as his Adversary hath expressed himself with Heat and Passion. At the end of these Four Books, there is an Advertisement of Alcuinus's about the Original of Felix's Error, and the Retraction he made of it; Elipandus's Letter to Felix; The Confession of Faith he made after his Retraction; And a Letter of Alcuinus about the Questions that may be raised touching the Son of God. These are the Dogmatical Works contained in this Second Part.

The first of the Works of Discipline is the Book of [the Divine] Offices, bearing Alcuinus's Name, but it belongs to a later Author, there being mention made there of Hilperick, who lived in the Tenth Century; besides, it contains several Observations of a lower Age than that Alcuin lived in.

The 2d Work about Discipline, is Alcuin's Letter to Charlemagne, upon the Septuagesima, Sexagesima, and Quinquagesima; and upon the difference of the number of the Weeks of Lent, with Charlemagne's Answer upon the same subject.

The 3d is a Tract of Alcuin, directed to Adrian, upon the Ceremonies of Baptism, which are the same that are Practised now, of which he renders Moral Reasons.

The 4th is a Letter * to the Clerks of S. Martin, to exhort them to confess their Sins.

The 5th is a Sacramentary, containing Masses for many Festivals of the Year.

These Works are followed with Three Homilies upon the Incarnation, the Virgin's Nativity, and the Festival of all Saints. These three Homilies are taken out of the Book of Homilies of Boys of S. Paul the Deacon, and it is not certain that they are Alcuin's.

The Life of Antichrist follows, which is full of groundless Fancies. There is but one Work of Morality, which is of Vertues and Vices: The rest are Works upon Prophane Arts and Sciences. The Book of the Seven Arts is Cassiodorus's Preface upon that Subject.

The last Part of Alcuin's Works comprehends the following Books

The Life of S. Martin of Tours, and a Sermon on his Death.

The Life of S. Vedastus of Arras.

The Life of S. Richarius, a Presbyter.

The Life of S. Wilbrord, Bishop of Utrecht, in Prose and Verse, with a Homily for his Festival.

One Hundred and Fifteen Epistles, with the Fragments of some more, taken out of English Authors.

Poems upon several Saints.

A Poem upon the meeting of Pope Leo, and Charlemagne.

Divers Poems.

The Letters upon Ecclesiastical Matters are these.

The second, of which we have already spoken, about the difference of the number of the Weeks of Lent.

The 6th upon these words of the Gospel, Here are two Swords.

The 7th of the manner of instructing the People in the Faith.

The 8th, in which he speaks against a Letter written to him by Felix of Urgel, whom he calls Jocosely, Felix infelix. But this was retorted upon him by Elipandus, who called him several times Albinus niger, Antiphrasius.

In the 13th he speaks of a Writing he had made against Felix of Urgel, and of a Dialogue of that Author between a Christian and a Saracen.

The 29th, directed to Osfred, King of Northumberland, is full of Instructions very useful for Princes.

The 30th contains some for a Queen that had retired from the World.

The 31st. is full of Advices to the Canons of Tours.

The 32^d. to the Bishop Adelbert and his Society, contains a commendation of the Life of the Canon Regulars, and an Exhortation to follow it.

The 49th. contains the same sort of Exhortations to the Friars of Wiremouth and Farrow.

The 50th. to those of York.

The 62^d. to the Canons of S. Legar.

The 63^d. is directed to Pope Adrian, to whom he writes very submissively.

In the 69th. he exhorts the Canons of Lyons, to reject the Errors which are come from Spain, to follow the Tradition and Usage of the Universal Church, to avoid the Additions made to the Creed, and the new Customs brought into the Service of the Church. He speaks particularly of their Error, about the Adoption of the Son of God, and the practice of some, who threw Salt upon Christ's Sacrifice. He maintains, they ought to Offer nothing but Bread, Water, and Wine; that the Bread ought to be very pure, without any mixture, made of Flour and Water. The last thing, he finds fault with, in the usages introduced in Spain, is, that they made but one Immersion, calling upon the Three Persons of the Trinity. He maintains against them the use of the Triple Immersion, and here he explains the Ceremonies of Baptism; he speaks of the same thing in the 81st. Letter, where he does intimate, that there were some who dipped Three times, repeating the Invocation of the Trinity at each time. He reprehends in this Letter, those who doubted, whether the Souls of the Holy Apostles and Martyrs were received up into Heaven before the Day of Judgment, in the 71st Letter he proves the necessity of Confession.

The 72^d. is to Pope Leo, whom he calls Vicar of the Apostles, Prince of the Church.

In the 78th. he commends the Monastick Life, and exhorts Monks to discharge the Duties of it.

The 97th. contains excellent Instructions about the Duties of a Bishop.

He Treats of Baptism in the 104th.

In the 106th. he Answers the Question put to him by Charlemagne, which is the Hymn that Jesus Christ said after his last Supper. He pretends, it was the words related by the Evangelists:

Since this Edition there have been Printed some more of Alcuin's Works; as a Commentary upon the Song of Solomon, at London in 1638, [by the care of Patrick Young.] An Abridgment of the Faith against the Arians, set forth [at Paris in 1630.] by F. Sirmondus, without the Author's Name, and attributed to Alcuin by F. Chiffletius, upon the Authority of some MSS. A long Confession of Faith, divided into Four parts, drawn out of the Fathers, published by F. Chiffletius, and Printed at Dijon in * 1656. [but it is dubious whether it belong to Alcuinus, or no.] A Discourse of the Purification, which was without Name among S. Ambrose's Works, and was restored to Alcuin by M. Baluzius, in the 2^d. Vol. of Miscellanea, p. 382. Two Letters set forth by M. Baluzius in the same place, [Tom. i. p. 365.] the one directed to Charlemagne, upon the price of Jesus Christ's Death; the other to the Abbots and Monks of the Goths, upon the Unity of the Two Natures in the Person of Jesus Christ. There's in the same place a Capitulary, containing sundry Moral Maxims directed to Charlemagne; but that Work seems to me unworthy of Alcuin. Twenty Six Letters published by F. Mabillon in the 4th. Vol. of his Analesta. And a Poem, in which he laments the disorders and looseness of one of his Friends, under the Name of a Cuckow.

Dr. Cave.]

The Learned are not all agreed, that the Confession of Faith, set out by F. Chiffletius, is Alcuin's. The Author of the Office for the Holy Sacrament, in the Historical and Chronological Table of the Authors, hath propounded some difficulties about this Confession of Faith, which might make one doubt, whether it be truly Alcuin's. He says, the two first parts of it are very excellent and precious; but there are many things taken out of the other Works of Alcuin, especially the different Orations. That the third Part does not seem to be coherent to the two first, there being several places in it copied out of them word for word; which probably an Author, whatever he might be, would not have done in the same Work. Besides, that it is almost all of it taken from Pelagius's Confession of Faith, and from the Book of the Ecclesiastical Doctrines, yet so, that the Pelagian and Semi-pelagian expressions of those Books are commonly left out in it; that there are also some places of it without any rational coherency: And above all, what he set in the end, to join it to the 4th. seems to have been added. That the 4th. Part, in what it contains about the Eucharist, is perfectly fine, but doubtless it ends in the first Chapter; all the rest being but a Rhapsody of divers Orations. He confesses the Stile of this last Part, as well as of the first, does pretty well resemble that of Alcuin, which is not always very pure and correct, but very quick and lively. He intimates, that altho' these Four Words (Caro, Cibus, Sanguis, Potus,) which are found in S. Thomas's Prose, are read there, the Thread of his Discourse did so naturally lead him, to use them in that order, that one ought not to conclude, that this Work was made since S. Thomas's time. That the Stile hath nothing Scholastical, yea, and that it hath some expressions, which were not used since Berengarius, as, that the Eucharist is Christ's Body and Blood only for the Just. Lastly, that in this 4th. Part there are some places found in the Book of the Divine Offices attributed to Alcuin.

Dailleus hath taken affirmatively, what was said but doubtfully by the Author Of the Office of the Holy Sacrament, and he adds new Conjectures, to shew that this Confession was not Alcuin's. The 1st. is grounded upon this, that in this Confession of Faith some things are met with, which are taken word for word out of the Books of the Meditations, and the Mirrour, falsely ascribed to S. Austin, and composed since Alcuin's time, seeing, that of the Meditations, which is the

Alcuin. ancient, was written since S. Anselm's time. The 2d. is grounded upon this Work's not being set down in the Index's of Alcuin's Works. The 3d. upon this Author's often copying himself, which an Author does not usually do. Moreover he insists upon this, that there is a place in this Book, which is found in the Book of Offices, attributed to Alcuin. 4thly, Daille pretends, that this Author's Sentiments differ from Alcuin's. He says, that explaining the Creation of the World, he relateth the two Opinions related by Alcuin also in his Questions upon Genesis, but prefers that which was disapproved by Alcuin. He adds, that this Author believes the real presence, which Sentiment he does not think to be Alcuin's; and that he looks upon the contrary Opinion as Heretical. Lastly, He pretends that there be some things in this Work which do not agree with the Ninth Century; as when he complains of the infelicity of his Age, and speaks of the Miracles whereby the Eucharist had been represented under the shape of a Man. * F. Mabillon contrarywise asserts the truth of this Work, chiefly upon the Antiquity of the Manuscript, from which it is taken. He maintains the Characters to be of Charlemagne's time, or very near it; and tho' the sole Testimony of a Man, as much conversant in these matters as he was, might be sufficient, he joined to it the Attestation of many Learned Men. The Antiquity of this Manuscript shews, that this Book is of Alcuin's time, seeing the Manuscript it self is of that time. 2dly. He notes, That the Ancient Title of this Manuscript was written in Red, and that they only put Ink upon the Ancient Red Characters, which are to this effect; Albini Confessio Fidei. 3dly. He proves that this Author is older than the School-Men, because he does not speak as exactly as they do of the Mysteries, that he always translates ἁρμόνιος of the Greeks by the word Coeffential, whereas the School-Men always said Consubstantial. He taketh notice of the Place, in which he varies from our way of speaking of the Eucharist. He adds, that this Author hath some Opinions which were not common, but in the Eighth and Ninth Century; as when he pretends, that Catechumens cannot be saved without either Baptism, or Martyrdom; that the Question of the Two Predestinations, which he treats of, was Agitated in this Age; that all, that this Author says of himself, agreeth to Alcuin. Lastly, To bring in a Witness, he says, That John Abbot of Fescamp, who lived in the Twelfth Century, hath cited several passages of this Treatise in a Book he made against Berengarius.

Having alleged these proofs of the Antiquity of this Book, he clears the difficulties; he says, it's no wonder, this Author should have made Extracts of Pelagius's Confession of Faith, seeing it was commonly cited in this time, and was look'd upon as a Work of S. Hierom. That it's less to be wondred at, that he should be cited in the Book of Gennadius's Ecclesiastical Doctrines, seeing Adrian made no difficulty to alledge one Authority out of it. That the passages, which are found in this Confession, are not taken out of the Book of the Meditations, and the Mirrour; but it is the Compilers of those Two Works, that have inserted them in two places of Alcuin's Treatise, seeing the Manuscript of this Work is doubtless older, than the Author of those other Treatises. And if this Confession be not found in the Catalogues of Alcuin's Works, that's not to be wondred at, seeing all those Lists of Catalogues are imperfect; that it is an ordinary thing with the Authors of this Age, and with Alcuin, not only to transcribe other Men's, but their own Works also; That the Author of the Book of Offices did transcribe Alcuin's Confession of Faith; that it's not true, that Alcuin's Opinions about the Eucharist are different from this Author's; that he had instances to prove, that Jesus Christ had appeared in the Eucharist in the shape of a Man; that some Authors of the Ninth Century, before the Birth and the Condemnation of Berengarius's Error, have condemned his Opinion as Heretical; that it's no extraordinary thing for an Author, alledging in two places two different explications of the same passages to approve now the one, and then the other; and that it were a more extraordinary thing, that two different Authors should bring two like explications of the same passage; that altho, Charlemagne's Age was more Learned than the Tenth, yet Alcuin Expostulates the infelicity of that time, and the disorders then in the Church, in the Works not doubted of, as in the 6th. Letter, and in his 271 Poem. And therefore, that there's nothing in the Confession of Faith, bearing his Name, that proves it not to be his. [These Reasons and Solutions, saith F. Mabellonius, make it probable, tho' not certain, that this Confession of Faith is Alcuin's.] Alcuin's Stile is neat and lively, he writes wittily, his Expressions are pure enough for his time, he handles things pleasantly; one may say, he did not want Eloquence, no, nor Elegance neither.

ETHERIUS.

Etherius. ETHERIUS, Bishop of Axume in Spain, and Beatus, Abbot and Priest, were some of the first that opposed Felix and Elipandus's Error: These charged them with Eutychianism. It was to vindicate themselves, and to convince their Adversaries of the opposite Error, that they made two Books, in which they profess to hold the Doctrine of the Council of Ephesus, and resist the Sentiment of their Adversaries, contrary to their Doctrine. These two Books are very much confused, and full of several idle useless Reflections, and divers Repetitions. They were printed in Canisius's Antiquities, and in the last Bibliotheca Patrum.

PAULINUS of Aquileia

PAULIN, Bishop of Aquileia, was present at the Council of Frankfort, held in 794, there he encountered Felix and Elipandus's Error, about the Title of adoptive Son, which they attributed to Jesus Christ; he made a small Writing and three Books upon this Subject. These Works are found among Alcuin's: They did formerly attribute to him the 7 Books of Alcuin against that Error. There is a Fragment yet extant of a Letter, directed to Heistulphus, who had killed his Wife, which he suspected of Adultery; he does most sharply reprove that Lord, and lays a heavy Penance upon him. We may find also some Fragments of Paulinus of Aquileia, in the first Tract of the Miscellanea of M. Baluzius [Tom. 1. p. 362.]

Aquileia.

Lastly, The Book of wholesome Instructions, which went a long while under S. Austin's name, was restored to Paulinus of Aquileia, in the last Edition of this Father's Works, upon the Credit of an old Manuscript of M. Colbert's Library. It contains several useful Advices to lead a Christian Life, and is of the same Style with the Advertisement to Heistulphus. This Bishop died about the Year 803. His Style is very simple, and no way elevated.

THEODULPHUS Bishop of Orleans.

THEODULPHUS, Abbot of S. Benedict upon the Loire, and afterwards preferred to the Bishoprick of Orleans, before 794. flourish'd towards the end of this Century, and died towards 821. F. Sirmondus publish'd this Bishop's Opuscula in 1646. [at Paris, with his own Notes.] The first and chief is his Capitulary, containing 46 Articles for the Instruction of the Priests of his Diocess. He discourses with them of the Dignity of their State, and recommends to them the Care of their Flock, Diligence in Reading, Praying and Working; he enjoyns them, when they come to the Synod, after the Custom, to bring along with them the Habits, Books and Vessels, wherewith they perform their Functions, and 2 or 3 Clerks; to have a care, that the Bread, the Water and the Wine, wherewith they celebrate the Mass, be very decent and proper; to make the Bread themselves which is to be consecrated, or cause it to be made in their presence. He forbids Women to approach the Altar, whilst the Priest is celebrating; and orders, That their Oblations shall be received in their Seats. He forbids Priests to celebrate Mass by themselves, without other Communicants. He prohibits putting any thing in Churches besides the Sacred Vestments, Vessels and Books. He will not have any body to be buried within the Church but Clergymen only, or persons of single Piety. He prohibits Assemblies in the Church for any other thing than Praying, and also celebrating Mass without the Church. He extends the Prohibition of Churchmen keeping Women at home with them, to the nearest Relations. He forbids Clerks to go to the Tavern, and recommends to them Sobriety in the Feasts they are invited to. He forbids Presbyters to take the Tyths belonging to their Brethren, or to solicit and entice their Clerks. He charges all Presbyters to baptize Children in case of Necessity, whether they be of their own Parish or not. He forbids Presbyters and Laymen to convert Sacred Vessels to prophane uses. He would have Schools set up in Parishes, to teach Youth to lead a Christian Life, of which he maketh an Abridgment; and all the Faithful to know the Lord's Prayer and the Creed. He exhorts them all to pray to God, at least, twice in the Day. He enjoyns them to spend Sundays in Praying, and being present at the Divine Service, and prohibits all manner of Work but what is of necessity, to dress Meat. He permits Travelling, provided they be present at the Office. He charges the Laymen to be present at the first Vespers of Festivals, at Mattins, and at Mass; and would have them to be exhorted to the practice of Hospitality, to be deterred from false Oaths, Perjuries, false Witness; to be instructed in the Holy Scripture, to be reprov'd, to be admonish'd to be constant in Prayer. He exhorts Laymen to confess all their Sins, even those of Thought, and instructs the Presbyters how they ought to examine Sinners. He exhorts Men to the Works of Mercy towards others. He will have the People to be put in Mind of the Obligation laid upon Children to honour their Parents, and upon Parents to use their Children gently, and of the mutual Love they owe one another; that Merchants and Men of Business are to be remembered, that they should not mind their Temporal Gain so much as Life Eternal; That the People must confess their Sins the Week before Lent, and then receive Penance, in order to their doing of it, during Lent. He marks out several ways of obtaining forgiveness of Sins, he recommends the exact keeping of the Lent-Fast, and the joyning of Almsgiving to Fasting. He will not have Men to break their Fast at the ninth Hour of Prayer, but to stay till the Hour of Vespers. He thinks, it would be a great perfection to abstain from Eggs, Cheese, Fish and Wine; yet he allows infirm Persons and Labourers to use them. He will have all the Faithful to communicate on Sundays in Lent, except those which are suspended the Communion; and that all take the Sacrament on Holy Thursday, and on Easter-Eve and Easter-Day; that they abstain from the Use of Matrimony on Fast-days, and also some Days before the Communion; that they prepare themselves for this Holy Action by Almsgiving and good Works. That the Priests who say private Masses on Sunday, shall not say them publicly, lest they should take off the People from being present at the Mass in their Parishes. Lastly, he will have the People put in mind, That they should not eat, till they have been at the solemn Mass and the Sermon.

Theodulphus. There was published since an Addition to this Capitulary, containing a general Advertisment about such things as the Parsons ought to instruct the People in.

This Bishop wrote one Book more upon Baptism, directed to Magnus Arch-bishop of Sens, wherein he explains the Ceremonies of that Sacrament; and a Tract of the Holy Ghost, directed to Charlemagne, which is nothing else but a Collection of several Passages of the Fathers, to shew that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son. He cites the Books of the Trinity, and the Creed under Athanasius's Name.

Lastly, There are six Books of Theodulphus's Poems extant; The 1st. is a Piece directed to the Judges, to exhort them to do justice. The 2^d. begins with a Catalogue, in Verse, of all the Books of the Old and the New Testament; both of those which were in the Old Canon, and those that have been received since: It contains also Poems for Palm Sunday, and several other Poems. The 3^d. contains an Elogy of Charlemagne, Pope Adrian's Epitaph, and Verses to several Persons. The 4th. Book contains Verses on the Fables, the Liberal Arts, Verses to Bishop Aulphus and to Moduin, with some Verses of Moduin's to Theodulphus. The 5th. contains Verses of Consolation upon his Brother's Death, a Description of the seven Mortal Sins, and an Exhortation to the Bishops. And the last Verses upon different Points of Morality. F. Mabillon hath [* Ten.] published [in his Analesta, Tom. i. p. 376.] * some more of them, which were not in F. Sirmond's Edition. Theodulphus was a good Man, very zealous for the publick Good, and none of the least Writers, nor of the unlearnedest of his Time. His Poems are very fine, and surpass his Prose.

LEO III.

Leo III. LEO III. was elected in the Room of Adrian, January 28. 795. Presently after his Election he sent Embassadors to Charlemagne, to give him notice of it, and to carry him S. Peter's Keys and the City's Banner, and some other honourable Presents, praying him to send some of his Princes to take the Oath of Allegiance of the Roman People. The King sent Angilbert, Abbot of the Monastery of S. Riquier, with some considerable Presents.

For all Leo had such a powerful Protector yet he was assaulted (anno 799.) by a Faction of seditious People [headed by his Predecessor, Adrian's Nephew] who fell upon him as he was going a solemn Procession, endeavour'd to put out his Eyes and to cut out his Tongue, and dragg'd him into Prison in a Hall. It was found that he had not been maim'd, as they thought. He fled into the French Embassador's Lodgings, from whence he was conveyed to Spoletto, and thence he came to France, to King Charlemagne, who was then in Saxony. The King having heard his Complaints, sent him back again to Rome with the same Marks of Honour with which he had received him, and promised him, That he would soon come to do him Justice upon the Place: And, indeed the next Year, having held his Parliament at Meitz, he went into Italy, both to take Cognizance of the Outrages done to the Pope and to oppose the Designs of Grimaldus Duke of Boneventum. Being at Rome, he admitted Pope Leo to justify and clear himself by Oath, there appearing no Body, to accuse him: After this, he brought those that were guilty of the Assault made upon him to Trial; they were condemned to Death, but the Pope obtain'd their Pardon. Leo, to acknowledge and requite so many Favours, as the Holy See had received from Charlemagne and his Progenitors, moved it to the People, to desire him for their Emperor, and crowned him on Christmas-day, in S. Peter's Church (anno 800.) taking the beginning of the Year from January, and anno 801. taking it from Christmas, according to the Authors of this Time. After the Ceremony ended, the Pope did adore the new Emperor; that is, he kneeled before him, and took the Oaths of Allegiance to him, and set up his Picture in publick, to the end that all the Romans might pay him this Duty.

Anno 804. Leo came into France to visit Charlemagne, and was made Welcome by that Prince, who sent his Son to meet him and came himself to receive him at Rheims, from whence he led him to his Palace at Cressy, and thence to Aix-la-Chapelle. After his Return to Rome he enjoyed the Pontificate quietly till Charlemagne's Death: But (anno 815.) there was another Conspiracy made against Leo, which he avenged so severely, that he put some of the Criminals to Death with his own Hands. Lewis the Meek found fault with his Proceeding, as being disagreeable to his natural Kindness, and contrary to the Right of the Sovereignty he had in Rome: He ordered Bernard King of Italy to go thither, and to enquire into the Truth; which he did. The Pope, on his part, sent Legates into France, to justify himself. But the Romans were so incensed against his Cruelty, that this Pope being fallen Sick, they seized on his Lands and plundered his Castles. He died May 23d 816.

There be 13 Letters of this Pope's extant among the Councils [Tom. VII. p. 1111.] The 1st. is an Answer to Kentwolfe, King of the Mercians, who had desired him to abolish the Archbishoprick of * Lichfield, and to restore the Bishop of Canterbury to the Rights taken away from him by Offa and Adrian I. The Pope granted him his Request, and having commended the King and Athelmard, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, he subjected to his Jurisdiction all the Churches that had been taken from him: We have this Letter only upon the Faith of William's of Malmshbury. The 2^d. Letter of Leo is a Privilege of Exemption granted for a Chapel, built by Charlemagne, in Saxony, upon the Hill of Eresburgh. The 3^d. is directed to Charlemagne: He complains that this Emperor had been informed, That he could send him no Commissioners which he would admit to inform of his Affair; he tells him, That it is a Calumny, and prays him not to believe [* Lichfield was the first Bishop's See among the Mercians founded by Offa King of the Northumbers, anno 646. and made an Arch-bishoprick in 793. but by this Pope was despoiled of its Dignity. So Adulphus was the first and last Arch-bishop of it.

believe it. In the 4th. he informs Charlemagne of the Treaty concluded between the Saracens and the Inhabitants of Sicily. In the 5th he tells him what had passed in a Meeting of some Moors and Greeks. In the 6th. he acquaints him with the Death of the Emperor Constantine, killed by Leo's Order. The 7th. and the 8th. are Letters of Thanks, directed to the same Charlemagne. In the 9th. he solves some Questions upon the Scripture, propounded by Charlemagne. The 10th. is a supplicatory Letter, to pacify Charlemagne, who was incensed against him, and to persuade him of his Innocency. By the 11th. he asks him leave, To let a Bishop of the Isle of Grade, banish'd stay in a Town of Italy. In the 12th. he complains, That Charles's Commissioners, who should have done him Justice, had done him Wrong. The 13th. is a Letter of Thanks to Riculphus, Bishop of Mentz. Leo's Letters are written with great Art, but with little reference to Ecclesiastical Matters.

Some Greek Authors against the Iconoclasts.

HERE are some Authors, of whose Works we will speak more at large, when we treat of the Acts of the seventh Council. Some Greek Authors.
Tarasius, Photius's great Uncle, who from the Emperor's Secretary was made Patriarch of Constantinople (anno 785.) and died in 806. wrote a Circular Letter about Images; two Letters directed to Pope Adrian, and an Apologetick Oration upon his Election.
Epiphanius, Deacon of Carana in Sicily, recited a Panegyrick in the seventh Council.
Basil of Ancyra, offered a Confession of Faith to the same Synod.
Theodosius, Bishop [of Ammorium.] made a Writing upon the same Subject.

ELIAS Cretenfis.

THIS Author made some Commentaries upon S. Gregory Nazianzen's Works, which are printed, in the second Volume of that Father's Works. He hath done the same also upon the Works of some other Greek Fathers, which are found Manuscript in Libraries. He wrote Answers to Dionysius the Monk's [8] Questions, which are extant in Greek and Latin, in the fifth Book of the Greek and Roman Law [l. 5. p. 194.] Elias.

George Syncellus and Theophanes.

GEORGE SYNCELLUS of the Patriarch Tarasius, made a Chronicon [from the Creation of the World to the Reign of Maximinus and Maximinianus, anno 300.] which hath been continued by Theophanes a Monk [to the Reign of Leo Armericus, anno 813. they are Printed the one at Paris 1652. and the other 1655.] George, &c.

Councils held in the Eighth Century.

Councils held in England about the matter of Wilfrid.

Councils of England.

FE W Men have been more molested and cross'd in their Life than Wilfrid Abbot of Rippon, and afterwards Bishop of York. He was a Native of Northumberland, born towards the year 634. He left his Country to go to Rome, where he was instructed in the discipline of that Church. Thence he returned to Lyons, and there he received the Tonsure from Delphin, Bishop of that City, who was murder'd soon after by Ebroin's order. After his death, Wilfrid was called home by Alfrid, eldest Son of Osui, King of Northumberland, who gave him the Monastery of Rippon, founded by him in the Bishoprick of York. He was ordain'd Priest by Hagilbert, Bishop of Dorchester. He was present at the Conference, held at Streneſſall before the King, about the difference between the Church of Rome, and the ancient British and Irish Churches, about Easter-day; and there he maintain'd the usage of the Roman Church against Colman, an Irish Man. Afterward, he was nominated to the Arch-bishoprick of York, and passed over into France to get himself ordain'd, there being then but one Bishop in England. He was consecrated by Angilbert, Bishop of Paris, and Eleven Bishops assisted at that Ceremony. During his absence, they that stood for the usage of the Irish Churches, perswaded King Osui to put into the Church of York, Ceadde, Abbot of Lifſtinguen, who was consecrated by one English and two British Bishops. S. Wilfrid, after his return, did immediately retire into his Monastery, and after that, he was called out into Mercia, where the King gave him Lichfield, to erect a Bishoprick or a Monastery there. After the death of Adeodatus, Bishop of Canterbury, he perform'd for some time the Episcopal Functions in that Church, till Theodorus obtained that See. This Man re-establiſhed S. Wilfrid in the Arch-bishoprick of York, and deprived Ceadde, who did very patiently bear that expulsion. Wilfrid enjoyed that Arch-bishoprick peaceably, during King Osui's Reign; but he was turned out of it in the beginning of Egfrid's Reign, towards the year 670. being deposed by Theodorus himself. He presently withdrew into Friesland, and thence went to Rome. He was very well entertain'd By Pope Agatho, who restored him to his Dignity in a Council of Bishops, and that Sentence was confirm'd by the Popes Benedict and Sergius. Being fortified with this Authority, he came back again into England, where he met with bad Entertainment, and was imprison'd by the order of Queen Ermenburge, Egfrid's Wife. Being got out, he went to preach the Gospel to the South-Saxons, and baptized, as its believed, Edelwach [or Ethelwolve] their King. Theodorus seeing, That he had suffered himself to be surprized by S. Wilfrid's Enemies, reconciled himself with him, and prevailed with King Alfrid to consent to his re-establiſhment; he return'd to York in 686. but five years after, he was expelled again, for refusing to receive some Constitutions, made by Theodorus, Arch-bishop of Canterbury. He returned to his Bishoprick of Lichfield, which he found vacant. Some years after, he was invited by Brithwald, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to be present at a Synod, within two Leagues of Rippon, in hope of an agreement. They urged him him to withdraw into his Abby of Rippon, and to quit his Bishoprick. He did not only refuse to do it, but he had recourse to the Holy See. Therefore, he went to Rome again and purged himself before Pope John in a Synod, in the presence of the Deputies of both Parties, and was declared innocent. With this sentence he returned into England, but Alfrid would not permit it to be executed. Sexulfus who succeeded him, continued in the same resolution; but being turn'd out, two Months after, and Ofred having succeeded him, Brithwald, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, went into Northumberland, and there held a Synod in 705. near the River Nid at which the King also and the Officers and the great ones of the Country were present. They read the Pope's Letters, and after some difficulties, raised by the Bishops of the Country, they were reconciled, and that long Contest was thus happily ended. Wilfrid yielded up his Episcopal See of York to John of Beverly, and he was restored to the Possession of the Church of Haguestad, and of the Abby of Rippon. He died in 709.

These Matters of Fact are certain, being affirmed by Eddi, S. Wilfrid's Disciple and Author of his Life, by John VII's Letters, and the relation of Bede's and William of Malmesbury.

A Council of Rome under Gregory II.

THIS Council was held in April 721. in S. Peter's Church. Twenty two Bishops were present at it, among whom there was one of Spain, one of England, and another of Scotland. Eleven Priests and Five Deacons. Gregory II. president in it, and published the Constitutions which were approved by all that were present.

The eleven first are against them that Marry their Kindred, Persons consecrated to God, or the Wives of Priests and Deacons, or who steal away Widows and Maidens.

The Twelfth is against those that consult Diviners or Sorcerers, or use Enchantments.

The Thirteenth against those that invade Gardens or Places belonging to the Church.

The Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth, against a * private Man, who had married the Deaconess [Epiphania].

And the Seventeenth, against Clerks wearing long Hair.

A Council of Germany under Carloman.

THIS Council was assembled in Germany, An. 742. by the order of Carloman the French Prince. Boniface held the first place there. Both the number of the Bishops, and the place of it, are unknown. The Canons of this Council are set down in the Capitularies under the name of Carloman, who declares, That following the advice of his Bishops, Monks and Lords, he caused Bishops to be ordain'd in his Towns, and subjected them to the Arch-bishop Boniface, the Legate of the Holy See; That he hath ordered a Synod to be kept every year in his Presence, to re-establish the Churches Rights, and to reform Manners and Discipline; That he hath caused Church-lands, that had been invaded, to be restored; hath deprived wicked Priests, Deacons and Clerks guilty of Fornication, of the Ecclesiastical Revenues, degraded them and put them to Penance. This is the sum of the first Canon.

The 2d. imports, That he hath forbidden Clerks to bear Arms, or to go to the Army, except those that have been chosen to celebrate Divine Service there, and to carry the Relicks of Saints, that is, one or two Bishops, with two Chaplains, and two Priests for the Prince; and for the Lord one Priest only, to hear Confessions and impose Penances. He forbids the Chair or Pulpit to the Clerks.

By the 3d. Canon he enjoins Parsons to be subject to their Bishop, to give him an account once a year in Lent of their Ministry, to receive him when he is Visiting, to go every year to fetch new Christ on *Holy-Thurs*day before Easter; That the Bishop may be a Witness of the Chastity, Life, Faith and Doctrine of his Presbyters.

The 4th. prohibits admitting into the Presbyterial or Episcopal Functions, unknown Priests or Bishops, before they be examined in a Synod.

The 5th. orders Bishops, with the help of the Magistrates, to purge their Dioceses from Pagan Superstitions.

The 6th. ordains, That he or she that shall henceforward fall into the Crime of Fornication, shall be imprison'd, and shall do Penance there with Bread and Water; and if he be a Priest that hath committed this Crime, he shall be shut up for two years, having been whipt till the Blood comes; and then the Bishop shall lay on him what Penance he pleases. And if it be a simple Clerk or Monk, he shall be whipt three times, and then shut up for one year; That the Nuns which have received the Veil, shall be used after the same manner and shaved.

The 7th. forbids Presbyters and Deacons to wear close Coats, as Laicks do; and ordains; That they shall use long Cassocks. It forbids them to have Women in their Houses with them. It enjoins Monks and Nuns exactly to follow S. Benedict's Rule.

The Council of Lestines.

AN. 743. the same Carloman assembled a Council at Lestines, near Cambray, the Canons whereof do immediately follow the last mention'd, in the Book of the Capitularies. They go also under Carloman's name, declaring, That in the Assembly then held at Lestines, the Bishops, Nobles and and Governors of Provinces have confirm'd the foregoing Decrees of the Assembly, promising to observe them, to receive the Canons of the Fathers, and to re-establish the Church-discipline and Doctrine in it's Splendor. That the Abbots and Monks have received S. Benedict's Rule, and promised to keep it. That they have degraded and put to Penance such Priests as are guilty of Adultery or Fornication, and ordained, That the Decree made against them shall be executed.

In the 2d. he ordains, by the advice of his Clergy and People, That the Laity shall enjoy the Church-lands, which they hold as Tenants at will, upon condition that they shall pay a Penny for every House, and when he that enjoys them, comes to die, they shall return to the Church; yet so, that if it be needful still for the good of the State, or if the Prince orders it so, they shall renew their Leases; provided, nevertheless, that the Churches or Monasteries, whose Lands are held by such a Title, are not extream poor.

In the 3d. Canon, Adulteries, Incests and illegitimate Marriages are prohibited. Bishops are ordered to hinder and punish them. It forbids also delivering Christian Slaves to Pagans.

In the 4th. Carloman renews his Fathers Decree against them that observe Pagan Superstitions, condemning them to a 15 Pence Fine.

These Canons in an ancient Collection are joined with an abjuration in the Tudesk Tongue, a List of the most ordinary Superstitions, and an Instruction about prohibited Marriages, and about the prohibition of keeping the Sabbath-day. This hath so much relation to the Canons of this Council, that it may be rationally believed to have been part of it.

A Council of Rome held under Pope Zachary.

THIS Council was held (An. 743.) and compos'd of 40 Italian Bishops or thereabouts, and of many Priests. Zachary published there the following Canons, which were written and approved by those that assisted at it.

The 1st. decrees, That Bishops shall not dwell with Women.

The 2d. That Presbyters and Deacons shall have no strange Women in the House with them, tho' they may have their Mother and near Relations.

The 3d. That Priests and Deacons shall be decently clad, and shall wear a Cloak in the Town.

The 4th. That the Bishops ordain'd by the holy See shall every year in the Ides of May come to the Council, if they be near; if not, they shall perform this duty by writing Letters.

The 5th. anathematizeth those that marry a Priest's or a Deacon's Wife, a Nun, or a Religious Woman, as also those who marry their God-Mother.

The 6th. forbids any person to marry his Cousin-german, Niece, Mother-in-law, Sister-in-law, and any near Relations.

The 7th. anathematizeth those who steal Maidens and Widows [to marry them.]

The 8th. is against those [Clerks or Monks] that let their Hair grow.

The 9th. prohibits Feasting on New-years-day, as the Heathens did.

The 10th. anathematizes those who gave their Daughters in Marriage to the Jews, or sell Christian Slaves to them.

The 11th. ordains, That the times appointed by the Canons for Ordinations shall be observed; that Persons twice married shall not be ordained; That no Clerk of another Diocess shall be ordained or received without a dimissory Letter, or permission from his Bishop.

The 12th. Canon ordains, That if Priest, Deacons or other Clerks, have any difference among themselves, they shall apply themselves to the Bishop only to be judg'd; and if they differ with their own Bishop, they shall go to the next Bishop; and if they will not refer the matter to him, they shall go to the Holy See.

The 13th. forbids Bishops, Priests and Deacons, to carry a Staff to the celebrating of the Mass, or to step up to the Altar with the Head uncovered.

The Council of Soissons.

THIS Council was assembled by Pepin Prince and Duke of France, the 2d. year of Chilperick's Reign, An. 744. March 2d. It was compos'd of 28 Bishops, of some Priests and Lords. Adalbert was condemned there. After this Council, Pepin published 10 Canons in his own and this Assembly's name.

By the 1st. They own the Faith established in the Nicene Council, and the Authority of the Canons of other Councils; and they publish them in France that the Discipline, which was corrupted there, may be re-established.

It is ordain'd in the 2d. That there shall be a Synod kept every year, to procure the Salvation of the People and to prevent Heresies, such as that of * Adalbert was, who was condemned by 23 Bishops and several Priests, with the Prince's and the People's consent.

[* Adalbert's Heresy was, that he taught, That it was lawful to marry the Elder Brother's Wife, according to the Custom of the Jews, and that Jesus Christ when he went down into Hell, did release as well the Wicked as Godly. And for these Doctrines he was condemned in this Council. Vid. Bon. Ep. ad Zach. in Us. Ep. Hib. Syl.

In the 3d he declares, That by the advice of the Bishops and great ones, he hath put legitimate Bishops in the Towns of France, and hath given them for Arch-Bishops over them, Abel and Council of Ardorbert (the former was Arch Bishop of Rheims, and the latter of Sens) to have recourse to their Soissons. Judgments, when it shall be needful both for the Bishops and the People, to the end that the Monasteries may be regular and orderly, that Monks and Nuns may peaceably enjoy their Revenues, and the Clerks be not debauched, not wearing secular Habits, or going a Hunting.

By the 4th he forbids the Laity to commit Fornication, Perjury, and bear False Witnesses. He enjoins Parish Priests to be subject to their Bishop, to give him yearly, in Lent, an account of their Management; to demand the Holy Oil and the Crisme of him, and to receive him when he is upon his Visit. The 5th forbids receiving Foreign Clerks and Priests, before they be approved by the Bishop of the Diocesis. The 6th charges Bishops to endeavour the utter extirpation of Paganism. The 7th orders the Crosses set up by Adalbert, in his Diocesis, to be burnt. The 8th forbids Clerks to have Women in their Houses, except their Mother, Sister or Niece. The 9th forbids the Laity to have in their Houses Women devoted to God, and also to Marry another Man's Wife during the Life of her Husband; because Husbands ought not to forsake their Wives, but in case they have caught them in Adultery. The last ordains, That whoever shall violate these Laws, made by 23 Bishops, Servants of God, with the consent of the Princes and the Gracians of France, shall be judged by the Prince, or by the Bishops, or by the Counts.

The Second Council of Rome under Zachary.

THIS Council (assembled Anno 745.) was composed of 7 Bishops and some Presbyters. The Council of Presbyter Deneardus, sent by Boniface, came before the Council (Octob. 25.) and declared, Rome. That this Bishop had called a Synod in France, in which Clement and Adalbert, false, schismatical and heretical Bishops had been deposed, and then put in Prison by the Prince's order; but, that they would not obey this Sentence, keeping their Dignity still, continuing to seduce the People. He added, he had * a Letter of Boniface's upon this Subject: It was read, he demanded, That those two Bishops should be kept in Prison, and that no Body might speak with them. He accuses Adalbert, who was a French Man, to have been a Hypocrite in his Youth, to have made People believe, That an Angel from Heaven had brought him some Relicks from far, by which means he could obtain whatever he desired of God; That afterward he had given Money to be ordained by some ignorant Bishops; That at last he equal'd himself to the Apostles; That he would consecrate no more Churches to the Honour of the Apostles or Martyrs; That he condemned Pilgrimages to Rome to visit the Sepulchres of the Apostles; That he had consecrated Altars in his own Name; That he had set up little Crosses and small Chapels in the Country, where he kept Assemblies; That the People crowded thither, and forsook the Churches; That some had been so impudent as to say, S. Adalbert's Merits shall help us; and, That he had the Face to give some of his own Nails and Hair, to be honoured and carried with S. Peter's Relicks; That the People flocking to him, to cast themselves down at his Feet, ready to confess their Sins, he told them, There was no need for them to do it, that he knew all they had done, that their Sins were forgiven them, and that they might be assured of it.

* This Letter is extant in Usher's Bp. Hib. Syllog. p. 31.

As for Clement, who came out of Ireland, That he did reject the Authority of the Canons; That he would not receive the Writings of the Fathers, and maintained he might continue Bishop after having had two Bastards; That he gave leave to Marry the Brother's Wife; That he affirmed, That Christ being descended into Hell, had delivered all those that were there, whether Believers, or Unbelievers, Jews or Pagans, Worshipers of the true God or Idolaters. These Accusations, brought to the Synod of Rome, provoked the indignation of the Bishops against those two wicked Villains: Yet the Pope put off the judging of this Matter to another Meeting on the same day. They read in this the Proofs of the Facts alledged in Boniface's Letter, the Life of this Adalbert, a Letter which he affirmed to have fallen from Heaven, and to be found by S. Michael, and brought to Rome by another Angel. These Follies became a Laughing Matter to the Council.

The next day they read a Prayer of Adalbert's making, wherein he called upon the Angels Uriel, Raguel, Tubuel, Michael, Incar, Tubicas, Sabaoc, Simiel. The Council hearing all this, declared, That all these pretended Angels, except S. Michael, were Demons; That they knew the Names but of three Angels, Michael, Raphael, and Gabriel. They required Adalbert's Writings to be burnt, but the Pope judged it better to secure them in the Library of the Roman Church. After this the Council declared, That Adalbert, whose Acts had now been read, who made himself be called Apostle, and his Nails and Hair be honoured as Relicks, who had seduced the People into several Errors, and invoked Demons for Angels, ought to be deposed and put to Penance. They pronounced the same Sentence against Clement, upon the Accusations brought in Boniface's Letter.

This is the sum of the Acts of this Council, in the end of which is the Letter of Gemmulus, Deacon of the Roman Church, to Boniface, about the Condemnation of those two false Bishops.

The Council of Cloveshaw.

COUNCIL OF CLOVESHAM. THIS Council was held in England at Cloveshaw, September 1. 747. Altho' it was composed but of 12 Bishops, it may pass for a National Synod of England, because, besides the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Rochester, there was the Bishops of the Mercians, Saxons, both East and West Angles, and some other People of England present at it. They read a Letter, which Zachary wrote to the Church of England, to exhort them to restore the Discipline. After which they made 30 Canons. In the 1st the Bishops are exhorted to do their Duty, to discharge their Ministry with Zeal and Vigilance, to give themselves wholly to it, and to entangle themselves no more in Secular Affairs, but apply themselves to the Service of God and the Church, to instruct their People, and to set them a good Example, by leading an exemplary Life. The 2d recommends Peace and Union to them. The 3d prescribes them to visit their Diocesses every Year, and to abolish the remainder of Heathenish Superstitions. The 4th, to warn Abbots and Abbeys to live regularly, to be Examples to the Monks and Nuns under their Government, and to take care of them. The 5th enjoins them not wholly to neglect the Monasteries held by Seculars, to visit those that dwell therein, and to put a Presbyter in them. The 6th forbids them ordaining Presbyters, before they be assured of their unblamable Life. The 7th Ordains, That there shall be Lectures in the Abbies both for Men and Women, and that they take care to instruct the Youth therein. The 8th enjoins Presbyters to leave their secular Businesses, to apply themselves wholly to the Service of the Church, to read Divine Service with attention, to look to the Church, and the Ornaments of it, to addict themselves to Reading, Praying, celebrating the Divine Office, to admonish and reprove those under their Tuition, and to draw them to God by their Words and Example. The 9th enjoins them to administer the Sacraments, and to live without Scandal. The 10th imports, That they shall know how to perform their Functions, and shall be able to explain the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Prayers of the Mass and of Baptism; That they shall also take care to learn the Signification of those Ceremonies and Sacraments. The 11th, That they shall all administer Baptism in the same manner, and shall explain the Ceremonies and the Effects of this Sacrament. The 12th, That the Priests shall not read the Prayers aloud, but shall sing them with a sweet and agreeable Melody; and if they cannot do this, they shall only pronounce them distinctly. The 13th, That in Festivals they shall follow the Roman Rites. The 14, That the Abbots and Parsons shall not fail to read Divine Service in their Churches every Sunday and Holy-Day. The 15th, commands them to sing the Seven Canonical Hours of the Day and the Night, and forbids intermixing unusual Prayers, which are neither out of the Scripture, nor according to the Roman usage. The 16th appoints, That Rogations or Litanies shall be made by the Clergy and People, on the usual days, namely, on the 26th of November, and three days before the Ascension, and on which they shall fast till the ninth hour of the Prayer, and say Mass. It prohibits mixing Prophane Songs with this Ceremony, and will have nothing to be carried in (11) Procession, but only the Crosse and some Relicks.

(11) Procession] This piece of Devotion which for the time was both seasonable and solemn, when it was first instituted by Claudius Mamertus in a time of a general Earthquake at Vienna, wherein all the People walking two by two through the Streets and Fields of the City, did sing Litanies, imploring God's Mercy in averting that Judgment; being found a successful means to obtain the Blessing desired, was ever after continued in the Church, and in this Age, with other things, degenerated into a pompous Ceremony and a ludicrous Worship, the Christians carrying before them Crosses, Relicks, yea, and the Sacrament it self, after the manner of the Persians.

This Canon sets limits to the growth of this Superstition, allowing only Crosses and Relicks to be carried in Procession. But that which might give a greater Check to it is this, That some of the most Learned that use it, have much suspected the Goodness of this sort of Worship, and whether it is pleasing to God or no; for thus one of them speaks:  Haud scio, an tam recte quam belle id fiat; Vereor inquam, vereor, ne iis in rebus Diis potius gentium quam Christo gratiam faciamus.* I am doubtful, whither in this Ceremony there be not more Pomp than Goodness; for I am afraid, that in these Matters we do more Service to the False Gods than the True.

The 17th ordains, That they shall keep the Festival of S. Gregory Pope, and S. Austin the Apostle of the English. The 18th, That the Fasts of the Ember-weeks shall be kept. The 19th enjoins Monks submission to their Superior, and forbids them to wear secular Habits. The 20th, warns the Bishops to see that Monasteries be, according to their Name, the abode of Folks living in Silence, Peace and Repose, and working for God, praising and praying to him, and giving themselves to spiritual Reading, and not Places of retreat for Poets, Musicians, and Buffoons: It forbids admitting Lay-Men into them, particularly into the Convents of Virgins: It enjoins these to set themselves to Reading or Singing, rather than to embroidering of Stuffs of divers colours to make secular Habits. The 21st ordains, That the Meals of Friars and Nuns shall be sober and modest, and shall not begin, if possible, till the third hour of Prayer be over, that is, till Noon. The 22d enjoins Monks and Ecclesiasticks, to make themselves worthy Communicants of Christ's Body and Blood, and reproves those that neglect this Duty to live Licentiously, without any care of confessing their Sins. The 23d orders, That they shall bring Lay-Children, not yet corrupted by youthful Lusts, to communicate frequently; and that aged Persons also, ceasing from Sin, shall be exhorted to frequent Communicating. The 24th enjoins a serious trying of those who come to make a religious Profession, and that they shall not give them the Habit till they have been been well proved. The 25th, That the Bishops shall publish, in their Diocesses, the Canons of the Synod, and if there be any Abuses in their Diocess, which they cannot remedy, they shall acquaint the Synod with them. The 26th recommends Almsgiving, but will not have Men give ill-gotten Goods, or with an intent to sin more freely, or to lessen the satisfaction of the canonical Penance, or to free themselves from Fasting, &c. The 27th teaches how to pray; there it is said, That though they do not understand the Latin of the Psalms they sing, yet they may refer their Intention to the general Petitions, which are to be made to God (mm) (This shews, That the Publick Service was then performed in Latin in England, altho' some did then Pray in the Saxon Tongue privately, as it is observ'd in this place.) In the end, it condemns an Abuse began to grow common, of those who dispens'd with themselves in Fasting and Praying, getting others to do it for them for Money, and thinking, by this means, to satisfy their Duty and the Penance laid upon them.

assures us of the time wherein he lived, which did not much precede this Council. And for this reason Bed. Hist. doubtless it was, That the Liturgy and H. Scriptures were read in the Churches of England in the Latin Angl. l. 1. Tongue, there being no need of translating them into the Language of the Country; especially if it be true c. 1. that some Historians relate, that the Saxons, when Austin the Monk came into England, had no Letters. 1 Cor. 14. So that this is no Argument for the Romish Imposition of the Latin Service upon Nations, where that Orig. cont. Tongue is not understood; a thing so highly unreasonable in it self, so opposite to H. Scripture, and so Cess. l. 8. contrary to the Primitive Practice as the Fathers do unanimously agree, That for the space of 800 Years Just. Apol. 2 after Christ we can find no Nation, but what had their Liturgy and Scriptures either in their own Tongue, Ambr. in or in a Language well understood by them, by the reading and hearing of which they might be edified, 1 Cor. 14. and in which they might join with Heart and Voice. Indeed the Latin Tongue was generally received in Europe and Africa, and most of the Christian Churches in the Roman Empire, but then it was as generally understood, the Romans labouring to have all the Provinces of the Empire to speak Latin. And when through the Incurfions of the Goths and Vandals, and other barbarous Nations, the Latin Tongue was not only corrupted but lost, then Translations became necessary, though the Church continued the Publick Service in the same Language; for 'tis not sufficient, as this Council says, to refer their Intentions to the general Petitions, but they must hear and pray with the Spirit and Understanding also, and the most ignorant and illiterate ought to be able to say Amen to the Priests Prayers and Thanksgiving, as the Apostle reproveth, 1 Cor. 14. 16.

The 28th forbids establishing Communities or religious Societies without sufficient means to maintain them. It forbids religious Men and Women to wear secular and prophane Habits. The 29th forbids religious Men and Women to dwell in private Houses, and enjoins them to receive those that shall betake themselves to them. The 30th orders Prayers to be made in Churches at all hours for Kings and Princes.

The Council of Verneville.

Council of Verneville. THIS Council was held at Verneville upon Oise, and not at Vernon, as some have thought, about July (Anno 755.) by the Order of Pepin, who confirm'd by his Edict, and published the Canons that had been proposed in this Council.

The four last are in the Council of Verneville.

Council of Metz.

The Council of Compeigne.

Pepin's last Capitulary is that which he made at Compeigne in 757. It contains 21 Canons, which are almost nothing else but a Repetition of the Canons of the preceding Capitularies: So that it is needless now to set down the Particulars of it. We shall not speak neither of the Assemblies of the same Nature, held under Charles the Great, seeing we have related the Canons of them in the Abstract of his Capitularies.

Council of Compeigne.

The Second Council of Nice for Images, The Seventh General.

Wherein the Acts of another Assembly, held at Constantinople, Anno 754, against Images, are related: And the Books written in France against these two Councils. Together with the Letters of the Pope's upon that Subject.

(nn) THE Use and Worship of Images was commonly received in the East, when the Emperor Leo, surnamed Isaurian, [or the Iscuriar] being advanced to the Empire (Anno 717.) undertook to abolish this Practice. The Contest begun about the Year 725. he found

Second Nicene Council.

(nn) The Use and Worship of Images was commonly received in the East. Before the Contest about Image-Worship began in the East, it cannot be denied, but that Images had been for some time allowed in Churches, as helps of the Memory, Instructors of the Illiterate in Sacred History, and Ornaments of the Church. Gregory Nyssene speaks of the Lively Pictures of the Martyrs, and their Sufferings, then painted upon the Walls of Churches, being the first of all the Greeks that mention them, Writers do unanimously agree, that Pictures and Images were about his Time [viz. about the Year 370.] admitted into the Eastern Churches, and that only for Ornament, or History sake. Some indeed did zealously oppose themselves against this Innovation (of whom, Ephiphanius was the Chief) not as a thing absolutely unlawful, but as fearing it might introduce Idolatry among the People, but because it was declared, that no Worship was intended or allowed allowed them; they submitted, but notwithstanding, what these Men foresaw, did, in process of time, come to pass: For not only the People became down-right Idolaters, but even the most Learned paid too great a Reverence to them, saying Prayers before them, and Worshipping Christ by his Image. This grand Abuse of them stirred up the Emperor Leo to remove Images out of Churches, and to destroy and burn them, as the Cause of so great a Sin. This is evident from Damascene's Words, who himself was one of the most violent Opposers of the Emperor's Proceedings. Exprobrant nobis, says he, quod προσκυνοῦμεν ὡς πρῶτον, adoramus, & veneramur Christi Mariæ, & Reliquorum Sanctorum Imagines. They accuse us of Image Worship and Idolatry. And 'twas for this Crime that they appeared so vigorously against Images. They had been used, but when they were abused to the Dishonour of God, Leo would endure them no longer in the Church. As soon as they were Worshipped, they were pulled down.

in his way Pope Gregory II. German, Patriarch of Constantinople, and St. John Damascene. The first of these wrote vehemently to him upon this Subject. In his first Letter, he represents to him, that having received in former Years several of his Letters, very Orthodox, he wondered, that ten Years after he went about to destroy Images, and treat them as Idolaters who honour'd them. He maintains, That the Word, having rendred himself visible, by taking the Humane Body, they might draw Christ's Picture. Yea, and he pretends, that the first Christians had some Pictures of him, and of St. James, of St. Stephen, and the other first Martyrs. He alleges the Picture which Christ sent to King Abgarus. He confesses that no Image can be made of the Deity. He adds, Images are very useful to stir up Motions of Piety and Compunction in the Faithful. He says, They don't Worship Clothes, and Stones, but they are a means of renewing the Memory of Saints, and raising our Mind to God. He denies also that they are Worshipped as Deities; but he says, that if they be Images of Christ, they (oo) say before them, Lord Jesus, save us; and if they be Images of the Virgin, they say, Holy Mother of God, intercede for us with thy Son, that he may save our Souls. If it be a Martyr, Intercede for us, &c. He complains, That he did not follow the Counsels of German, who was then 95 Years old, but those of Apsimarus, and other like Persons. He tells him, That it belongs to Bishops, and not to Emperors, to judge of Ecclesiastical Doctrines; that as Bishops do not meddle with secular Affairs, so the Emperors should not meddle with the Ecclesiastical. He observed that it was to no purpose to assemble the General Council he had required; if he would only give over Prosecuting Images, the Church would be at quiet. He protests, That (pp) he was so far from raising Tumults against him, that he hath written to all the Princes in the West in his Behalf, and that they were resolved to live peaceable with him; but, that hearing he was the Destroyer of Images, and had sent an Officer to break an Image of our Saviour, which was done before several Persons of the West, they had laid aside all Respect of him, and had broken down his Statues, and the Barbarians had invaded Decapolis, had put out the Magistrates, and taken the City of Ravenna; that his Imprudence had been the Occasion of all this.

Then he relates the Emperor's Threatnings to him in these Terms; "I will send to Rome, says he, to break down St. Peter's Image, and will carry Gregory away, as Constantine did formerly Martin. He answers him thus: "You ought to know, and be sure, that the Roman Bishops do always employ themselves to maintain the Peace between the East and the West, our Predecessors endeavoured to do it, and we do follow their Example. But if you go on to insult over us, and threaten us, we will not fight against you, but will withdraw within 24 Furlongs from Rome, into Campania; after that, do what you please. Then he puts him in mind, that Constantine, who persecuted Pope Martin, died unfortunately in his Sin, being slain in the Temple by one of his Officers, being informed by the Bishops of Sicily, that he was an Heretick: That Martin, contrariwise, was honoured as a Saint in the Place of his Banishment in Thrace, and the Northern Countries. That he desires nothing more, than to tread in the Steps of his Predecessors; but, that he thought himself bound to preserve his own Life for the Peoples Good; because in all the West, every Bodies Eyes were upon him, and all Christians had Confidence in him and St. Peter, whose Image Leo threatened to destroy; that they looked upon St. Peter as a God upon Earth; and if Leo attempted any thing in the West, he feared that they would also avenge those of the East mis-used by him: That he knew his Empire did not reach far in Italy; that Rome only had cause to fear, by reason that the Sea was so near; but if the Pope removed but 24 Furlongs, he was safe. He wonders lastly, That when all the most barbarous People of the West grew mild, the Emperor of the East should grow fierce and barbarous. He declares to him, That if he sends Men to break down St. Peter's Image, the Blood that [(oo) If they be Images of Christ, they say before them, Lord Jesus, save us, &c.] What plainer Evidences of an Idolatrous Worship than this; not only to bow themselves before the Images, but to Pray unto them; just Grounds for Leo to charge those Men with Idolatry, that did it; and to be moved like another Hezekiah, or Josiah, against such horrible Corruptions of God's Worship.

[(pp) He protests, that he was so far from raising Tumults.] Notwithstanding these Protections of this Pope, yet the Historians of those times assure us, that he caused several of the Countries, belonging to the Empire, as Hesperia, Cemilia, Liguria, and all his Western Dominions, to Revolt from him, and forbid them to pay him his Tributes; yea, offered to betray the City of Rome it self to the growing Power of the French. So Wilful and Resolute were the Roman Patriarchs, in maintaining their Superstitions and Idolatry.

will be spilt, shall fall upon his Head: As for himself, he protests he is clear and pure from it. This Letter shews the Falshood of what some Greek Historiographers, out of Hatred to the Pope, Second Ar- have reported, That Gregory II. had forbidden the Romans and Italians to pay the Tributes due con- Council. to Leo the Emperor, and had freed them from their Oath of Allegiance to this Prince.

This Letter did not alter Leo the Isaurian's Mind; nay, he wrote to the Pope, that he was Emperor and Chief Bishop, Imperator sum & Sacerdos. Gregory writing again to him, in his Second Letter tells him, It's true, the Emperor's, his Predecessors, shewed themselves both Emperors and Chief Bishops by their Deeds, defending Religion jointly with the Bishops; but he could not pretend to this Dignity, seeing he divested the Church of its Ornaments, and spoiled Temples of Images, which did equally instruct and edifie the People: That Emperors ought not to meddle with Doctrine; that Bishops only had the Understanding necessary to decide them; that Ecclesiastical and Civil Matters being judged by quite different Principles, he might be very skilful in Civil Matters, and have very little Skill in Matters Ecclesiastical; that as Bishops had no Right to meddle with State Affairs, so the Emperor had no Right to govern Church Affairs, to make Elections in the Clergy, to Consecrate, to Administer the Sacraments; no, nor to receive them, but from the Bishops Hand. That the Prince does punish the Guilty with Death, Banishment, and other Penalties; but the Bishops don't do so: But when any Body hath sinned, and confessed his Sin, instead of Beheading, or Hanging of him, they lay on his Head the Gospel or the Cross, they put him in the Vestry, or among the Catechumens, they make him Fast, Watch, and Pray; so that after a long Correction and Affliction, they at last give him the Body and Blood of Christ; and having Purified him, and made him a Vessel of Election, they lead him to Heaven. Then he does sharply rebuke him for his Cruelty, Barbarity, and Tyranny, and exhorts him to submit himself. And as to that which was objected, (99) that in the six first Councils, nothing had been said of Images, he Answers, That they were to common, that there was no need to speak of them. He advises him to refer himself to his Judgment, and German's, Patriarch of Constantinople, seeing they have received from Christ the Power of Binding and Loosing in Heaven, and on Earth. All this did not hinder Leo the Emperor from going on in his Enterprize, and from setting out, Jan. 7. Anno 730. an Edict, whereby he ordered Images to be removed out of Churches, and Sacred Places, and to be thrown into the Fire, inflicting Penalties upon those that would not obey this Order. German was then turned out, and Anastasius put in his Room, in the See of Constantinople.

Constantine Copronymus, Leo's Son, followed his Father's Steps, and for the better Establishing the Discipline he had a mind to introduce, he called a Council, (Anno 754.) at Constantinople, composed of 338 Bishops. It began in February, and ended in August. This Council made a Decree against the Use and Worship of Images, which we will set down afterwards. It was not received by the Romans. But by the Authority of the Emperor, a great part of the Eastern Churches received and executed it; till (rr) Irene, who had Married Leo the Fourth's Brother to Constantine Copronymus, being a Widow, and Mistress of the Empire, her Son Constantine being but young, yet was to devout as to let them up again. To succeed in her Enterprize, she resolved to call a new Council, and wrote to Adrian in her own and her Son's Name, shewing him, that the Princes, her Predecessors, had destroyed Images in the East, and had drawn the People, and all the Eastern Churches to their Perdition; that to reform this Abuse, they judged it fit to assemble a Council, and desired him to be there without fail, to hold the Place of the first Bishop in the World; and if he could not come himself, to send some Legates in his Place, that the ancient Tradition of the Church might be confirmed in this Synod, and that there might be no Schism hereafter in the Apostolick and Catholick Church, of which Christ is the Head. They add, they send him Constantine, Bishop of Leonce in Sicily, to bring him this Order, desiring him back again with an Answer as soon as he can.

Tarasius, whom the Emperor and Empress had caused to be chosen Patriarch, though he was but a Lay-Man, and Officer of the Crown, having excused his accepting of that Dignity, set forth the Division of the Church about Images, and the necessity of calling a General Council. The Assembly assented to it, he was ordained Patriarch, and wrote Synodical Letters to the Patriarchs of Rome, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. Pope Adrian sent * two Priests to hold his Place in the Council, and the Eastern Bishops did the same. After their Arrival, the Emperor's Officers would have had the Vicedomus, and Council to sit at Constantinople; but this became impracticable, because many Petrus Hugumens.

(99) Obj. That in the six first General Councils, nothing had been said of Images.] A very weighty Objection, and not to be slid over with such an Answer as the Pope gives it; viz. That they were so common, that there was no need to speak of them. There was hardly any Doctrine or Practice of the Christian Church, but had been either Explained, Confirmed, or Regulated by some of these Councils; and had Image-Worship been then used, it would have been mentioned in some of them. But the Truth of it was, that it was a perfect Innovation, a Practice never used but among Heathens, and therefore this Pope could do no other than pass it over with such an insufficient and sorry Answer.

(rr) Irene.] A second Athalia, or Jezebel, not less Zealous for Images, nor less Scandalous and Notorious for Wickedness and Cruelty; for she put out the Eyes of her Son Constantine, gave her self up to follow Wizards and Sorcerers, put many good and Innocent Persons to Death; a fit Instrument to set up this Doctrine of Devils.

of them that had approved the Destruction of Images, would have no more Synods to be held about that Affair, which they thought to be already decided. As they were discourting these Matters in private Meetings, the Emperor sent them word, that it was not lawful for them to meet without the Consent of the Bishop of Constantinople, and that in rigor they were Deposed.

Nevertheless, they raised some (ss) Tumult, when the Council Assembled the first time, the 1st day of August, An. 786. and having caused the Soldiers of Constantinople to rise, they got them to Besiege the Bishops, and to require with threatnings that no Council should be held. So they were forced to separate themselves; and to the end they might hold another without constraint, they sent the Soldiers to the Army, under pretence, that the Agarenians had made Incurfions into the Empire. After this the Council was Assembled at Nice about the end of 787. The Pope's Legates held the first place there, Terasius Patriarch of Constantinople the 2d, the Deputies of the Eastern Bishops the 3d, after them Agaperus Bishop of Casarea in Cappadocia, John Bishop of Ephesus, Constantine Metropolitan of Cyprus, with 250 Bishops, or Arch-Bishops, and above 100 Presbyters or Monks, and two Commissioners of the Emperor and the Empress.

The first Action or Session was held the 24th of September, in the Church of St. Sophia: After they had declared the Cause of holding the Council, they read the Letter of the Empress Irene, and the Emperor, wherein they both assure them, that they have Assembled the Synod with the consent of the Patriarchs; that they leave the Bishops at full Liberty to speak their Mind; that Paul the last Patriarch of Constantinople, acknowledging the Fault he had committed, in receiving the Synod which enjoind the destroying of Images, having quitted his See, he had caused Tarasius to be chosen in his Room; that he had refused this Dignity; but being urged to accept of it, he had required a Synod might be held, to suppress the Schism which divided the Church in the point of Images; that according to his request they had called this Council; that they exhorted them to Judge justly and courageously, to condemn Errors, and establish the Truth, in order to bringing Peace back again into the Church; that they had received Letters from Pope Adrian, which they would have read in the Assembly, with the Papers sent by the Eastern Bishops. After the reading of this Letter, Basil Bishop of Ancyra, Theodosius of Myra, made very large Declarations, that they did Honour, Reverence, and Worship Images, and that they were sorry for having been of another Perswasion; and they were received. After them Hypatius Bishop of Nice, and four others, who had been Caballing the Year before, did also present themselves to be received, declaring that they did admit of Image-Worship. These gave an occasion to examine, how in what Quality they should be received. They searched several Ecclesiastical Laws touching the manner of receiving Hereticks. Thereupon they read the 53 Canon of the Apostles, the 8th Canon of the Nicene Council, the 3d of the Council of Ephesus, the 1st Canon of St. Basil's Epistle to Amphilochius, a Letter of the same Father to the Ephesians, the Definition of the Council of Ephesus against the Messalians, St. Athanasius's Letter to Ruffinian, the Judgment of the Council of Chalcedon about the reception of the Bishops, who had assisted at the Council of Ephesus under Dioscorus, and some Abstracts of their Ecclesiastical Histories of Rufinus and Socrates. They debated, whether they ought to receive converted Hereticks, so as to leave them in the Sacerdotal Dignity. Some insisted upon Athanasius Letter to Ruffinian, which imports that they shall be admitted to Penance, but shall not continue in the Clergy; but it was answered, that it was to be understood of Heresiarchs only. Some Voted, that according to the Nicene Council, they should lay hands on them anew; but some said, that the Council did not mean a new Consecration, but a simple Ceremony of Imposition of Hands. They enquired, whether the Heresie of the Iconoclasts, was greater or lesser than the former Heresies; and there was nothing determined upon that Point. Lastly, after many Allegations, they declared, that those who return'd from their Heresie, yea, and those also who had been Ordain'd by Hereticks, were to be received, and to keep their Dignity, if there was nothing else that hindred them from continuing in the Degree of Clerks.

In the Second Action of the 26th of the same Month, after Gregory, Bishop of Neo-Casaria, had presented himself, and owned that he had done amiss in rejecting Image-Worship, they read Pope Adrian's Letter to Constantine and Irene, in which having commended their Zeal, he establisheth the Worship of Images, and affirms, that the Church of Rome received it by Tradition from S. Peter, he proves by a false Relation, that in S. Sylvester's time, S. Peter's and S. Paul's Pictures were in the Church. He alledges the Opposition his Predecessors had made to the destroying of Images. He exhorts the Emperor to re-establish the Use of them in the East, as it was Established in the West. He says, that Christians do not make their Images God; but use them as Memorials of the Worship due to God, and his Saints. He grounds the use of them

(ss) Tumult.] The true Cause of this Tumult was, that the Image-Worshippers being resolved to carry the point, having gotten so powerful, as well Zealous Patron of their Idolatry, as Irene the Empress was, would have shut the contrary Party out of the Council, who thereupon endeavoured to gain admission by force, that their Doctrine might not be condemned unheard. This being granted them, they carried themselves peaceably, as well in publick, as in their Disputes in the Councils, which they managed with such undeniable Arguments drawn from Holy Scripture, that the Image-Worshippers were obliged to dissolve the Council at Constantinople without accomplishing their design. But not long after, by the Empress's Order, they called another Council at Nice, where they Established Idolatry by a Law, the Empress's Guards keeping the Iconoclasts from entering the Council, and her self undertaking to put the Constitutions of it in force.

upon several instances of the Old Testament, as those of the Sacrifices, the Mercy seat, the Cherubims, and the Brazen Serpent, and upon some Testimonies of the Fathers, which are either supposititious, or impertinent, proving nothing at all, or proving only the use of Images, but not that any Worship was paid to them. Nevertheless, Adrian does not only maintain, that it is useful to have Images, to teach the Ignorant the things, which they represent, to remember them of the Saints, to stir up Piety and Compunction; but besides, he will have them to be worshipped. To this Letter Anastasius adds many Lines, wherein the Pope entreats the Emperor, 1. To cause the Council held against Images to be rejected and Anathematiz'd, and to restore those that had been Persecuted for defending of them. 2. To cause St. Peters Patrimony to be restored him. 3. To Order that all the Arch-Bishops of his Diocels shall receive Ordination from him. 4 To maintain the Church of Rome's Primacy. 5. To hinder the Patriarch of Constantinople from assuming the Title of Universal Bishop. 6. Not to leave Tarasius in the See of Constantinople, to which he was advanced, being a Lay-man. 7. He acquaints him with Charles the Great's Victories, and his Beneficence to the Roman Church. It's no hard Matter to apprehend, why the Greeks did not transcribe these Articles; nay, the Pope's Legates durst not perhaps present them to the Synod in which Tarasius presided. They read another of Adrian's Letters, written to Tarasius, in which, having freely expressed to him how much his Ordination had troubled him, he commends his Confession of Faith, and exhorts him to procure the Condemnation of the Synod, which had rejected Images. After the Reading of the Letter, The Pope's Legates asked Tarasius, whether he did not approve of it. He answered, He did, and declared he did affectionately worship the Images of Christ, the Virgin, Holy Angels, and of all the Saints, though he worshipped God only with a Sovereign Worship of Latria, and put his Trust in him alone. The Synod approved of this Declaration, and the Pope's Letter. All the Bishops made the same Declaration severally, and the Abbots followed them.

In the 3d. Action, of the 28th or 29th of the same Month of September, Gregory of Neocæsarea was admitted, though with much Contradiction, after he had read a Retraction of his old Opinions, and Profession of Faith about Images. The rest of the Bishops that abjured, were likewise received, and took their Place in the Council. Then was read Tarasius's Synodical Letter, sent to the Patriarchs, in which, to his Confession of Faith about the Trinity, and the incarnation, he adds the Intercession of Saints, of the Virgin, the Angels, and the Worship of Images. Therein he owns but six General Councils. They also read the Letter of Theodosius of Jerusalem, approved by the Eastern Bishops; in which, after a long Confession of Faith about the Trinity and Incarnation, he adds the Worship of Saints and Images. The Bishops approved these Writings, and rejected the Council against Images.

In the 4th. Action, Tarasius caused the Testimonies of the Scripture and the Fathers, whereby he pretended the Worship of Images was authorized, to be read. They alledge but three Passages of the Old Testament, where mention is made of the Cherubims upon the Mercy-Seat, and one Passage of the New, taken out of the Epistle to the Hebrews, Chap. 9. where the Cherubims are mentioned, and what was in the Tabernacle. The Bishops insist upon this, and pretend, that the Cherubims had Humane Faces, and that the Use of Images is thus established in the Old Testament. I leave you to judge, whether that be a sufficient Proof. Then they quote a Place out of St. Chrysostom, taken out of St. Meletius's Panegyrick, which proves only, that the Faithful being Affectionate to that Saint, did not only repeat his Name, but moreover represented his Picture upon Rings, Cups, Glasses, Bed-Curtains, and in many other Places; but he does not speak at all of the publick Worship of Meletius's Pictures. The next Passage alledged by them, under St. Chrysostom's Name, is drawn out of an Homily, which shews that there is but one Legislator in the Old and the New Testament, which is not this Saints, as we shewed in the Criticism of his Works. The Author of this Homily says, that he beheld with Pleasure a goodly Picture, wherein was represented an Angel putting to flight some Barbarian Troops. The Passage of St. Gregory Nyssen, which they alledge here, does not prove it much better, though this Father speaks in other Places of the Pictures representing the Conflicts of the Martyrs, set up in some Churches. That of St. Cyril proves the Use of Images among Christians, as well as that of St. Basil, in St. Barlaam's Penegyrick; which Passage is cited out of it's Place, in this Council. But it is hard to understand how they can draw a good convincing Argument for Image-Worship, from what is reported by St. Gregory Nazianzen, that a debauched Woman was persuaded to leave off her Lewdness, by beholding a Picture, representing Polemon's Change of Life, whom Xenocrates converted from his Vices. Do they believe that Polemon, the Heathen's Picture, deserved any Religious Worship? It's true, St. Gregory Nazianzen says, That Picture was venerable (σεβασμία); but he means no more but this, that it was well done, and did inspire some Respect for the Manner of the Painting; which shews, that though this kind of Epi-tt Testimonies of Scriptures, and Fathers, whereby he pretended the Worship of Images to be authorized.] This Learned Sorbonist, in the Recitation of these Testimonies, hath so ingenuously owned both the Falshood and Impertinency of them, that it it needles to spend any further Pains or Time upon a Confutation, there being not any one pertinent Allegation, or genuine Proof out of any ancient Author, to prove the Worship of Images lawful. All that can fairly be gathered from them is this, That some Images have been made by Christians, and allowed a Civil Use, or at most, but an Historical Use in the Church, which none disallows, so long as they are kept within those Bounds, and not suffered to become an Object of Worship, though but in inferior Sense, which is Idolatry. Yet if any one desire an Answer to them, the Abbridgment of the Caroline Books, which our Author gives ut at the end of this Council, will give him Satisfaction. T thets thers (Holy, Venerable) were said somewhere else of the Pictures of Saints, that would not come up to an invincible Proof, that they ought to be honoured; but only, that what was represented in them, did inspire some Reverence and Devotion. Antipater of Bosra speaks of the Statue, which the Women, cured of the Bloody-Flux, erected to Christ. But this does neither prove the Worship of Images, nor the common Use made of them in Churches. The Passage of Asterius of Amasea, is quoted more pertinently, and proves, that on St. Euphemia's-Day, they did expose the Picture of the Martyrdom of this Saint. The Narrative of a Miracle of a Woman troubled with a Pain in her Back, for speaking with little Respect to St. Anastasius's Relicks, which they were bringing over from Persia, is indeed a Proof of the Worshipping of Relicks, but not of Images; therefore the Sicilian Bishops add, That a Woman possessed with a Devil, was cured at Rome by St. Anastasius's Image. Then they bring in a supposititious Piece, falsely attributed to St. Athanasius; importing, that the Jews of Berytus, having used Christ's Image, as the Gospel relates, that their Fathers used Christ himself; and having at last pierced his Side with a Spear, there came out of it Blood and Water, and that so many Miracles were wrought by it, that an infinite Number of Jews being convinced by them, turned Christians, and received Baptism. This Relation is followed with two Letters of St. Nilus, whereof the one, directed to Heliodorus, is alledged to prove the Virtue of Images, though it shews only the Virtue of the Intercession of Saints; and the other to Olympiodorus, had been alledged by the Iconoclasts, and falsified, as it's pretended. They quoted a Passage out of Maximus, who, in the Relation of what passed between him and Theodosius, reports, That they brought the Holy Gospels, the Crolls, with the Image of Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary, that they saluted them, and laid their Hands on them, to confirm what they had agreed upon. This Passage is fitter than the other to prove Image-Worship; yet they wrangle a while about the Word (Saluting) which they pretend was not expressive and strong enough; nevertheless it was concluded, It was enough to honour them with a Kiss or Salutation, and that God only was worshipped with a Worship of Latria. The 82d. Canon of the Council of Trullo, is indeed a Proof of the Use of Christ's Images, but it does not establish the Worship of them. The Passage of Leontius, Bishop of Cyprus, is more formal, and establisheth the outward Worship of Images, by rejecting the ill Interpretation that might be put on it. Those of Anastasius Sinaita prove only the Honour due to Saints and Angels. That which is drawn out of the Spiritual Meadow, and recited under Sophronius's Name, though this Work belong to John Moschus, contains an Answer so strange and exorbitant, that I don't believe any body would approve of it. They say, it was made to a solitary Man, vexed with the Evil Spirit of Fornication, who understanding from that Evil Spirit, that he would let him alone, if he would give over worshipping the Virgin's Image, consulted his Abbot what he should do, and received from him this Answer, which I do not think fit to translate: Expedi autem tibi potius, ut non dimittas in civitate ista lupana, in quod non in troas quam ut refuses adorare Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum cum propria Matre in sua imagine. Notwithstanding, this Instance was made use of, to prove, that they who had sworn to persist in Heresie, were not bound to keep that Oath; because that good Monk having promised the Devil with an Oath, that he would do what he desired of him, if he let him alone, did not regard that Oath. The Miracles related in the Acts of St. Cosmus, and St. Damian, do prove an excessive Devotion to the Images of Saints, if the Authority and Antiquity of those Acts were well established; but it being otherwise, no convincing Proof can be drawn out of them. The Passage cited under St. Chrysostom's Name, taken out of an Homily upon the Washing, is doubtful; and were it true, it does not concern Saints Images, but the Nature of God's Image which is in Man. Those of St. Athanasius and St. Basil are more impertinent yet, for the perfect Resemblance of the Son of God, with his Father, whose Image he is, is spoken of. The latter, cited under the Title of St. Basil to Julian, which to the Confession of Faith joyns the Worship of Saints and Images, is a supposititious Piece. The Stories taken out of the Lives of St. Simeon, St. John the Faster, of St. Mary the Egyptian, and other such Acts, are of no great Authority. After they had recited these Extracts, they read the Letter of Pope Gregory the Second to German of Constantinople, wherein he established the Worship of Images, and three Letters of this Patriarch of Constantinople upon the same Subject, wherein he doth acknowledge, that the Worship paid to Images is but an outward Worship, expressing the inward Veneration Men have, for what is represented thereby. All the Bishops approved this Opinion, and Anathematized those, that brake down Images, and those also who did not reverence and salute them. After this, Euthymius, Bishop of Sardis, read, in the Name of the Council, a Confession of Faith, in which to the Articles concerning the Trinity and Incarnation, they add Praying to Saints, their Intercession, the Honour due to them, and to Crosses, to Saints Relicks, to the Saints and the venerable Images, which we honour, which we embrace, and worship respectfully, especially the Images of Christ's Humanity, and those of the Holy Virgin, Mother of God; those of the Angels, who, though incorporeal, have appeared under Humane Shapes to the Just; and lastly, those of the Apostles, Prophets, Martyrs, and other Saints, which is the end of this Action.

In the 5th. which was held the 4th. of October, they alledge several Pieces, to shew that the Iconoclasts had done, what some other Hereticks had attempted before them. This first Passage is St. Cyril's, accusing Nebuchadnezzar of having taken away the Cherubims upon the Mercy-Seat. The Second Piece is a Letter of one Simeon (who must be different from the great Symeon Stylites) written to Justin the Younger, against them that had broken down Images: It seems to be supposititious.

nitious. The Third, is an Abstract of a Sermon of John of Thessolonica; assuring, that not only Mens Pictures may be drawn, but Angels also, by reason they are Corporeal. The Fourth, is an Abstract of a Dispute between a Jew and a Christian, wherein the Christian answering the Jew, who charged him with adoring of Images, tells him, that Christians do not adore them, but preserve and behold them, adoring and invoking God. The Fifth, Is a Fragment of a false Itinerary of the Apostles, which had been cited by the Iconoclasts. The Council does reject and Anathematize it, and condemns it to the Fire, and, to prove the Falsity of this Monument, cites a Passage of Amphilochus. There was no need of this, for that Monument is visibly Apocryphal. They reject also a Testimony of Eusebius to Euphrasion; which Passage proved nothing, neither for, nor against Images; yet it gave an Occasion to condemn the Memory and the Writings of Eusebius, against whom they cite Antipater of Bostar. The Sixth Piece alledged by the Council, is an Extract of the Ecclesiastical History of one John, whom they call the Separate, who says, That Christians would not have Angels Pictures to be drawn, and that Philoxenus could not endure Doves. They prove by a Passage of St. Sabas's Life, that Philoxenus was one of the Heretick Enemies to the Council of Chalcedon. They cite in the Eighth Place a Fragment of the Council of Constantinople, held under Mennas, where Severus is accused of breaking down Altars and taking away the Doves hanging over them; saying, Doves ought not to be called the Holy Ghost. In the Ninth, they report a Testimony of John, Bishop of the Gabale, accusing Severus of not honoring Angels. The Tenth Monument, is a Passage of Constantinian, Library-Keeper of the Church of Constantinople, maintaining, that no Image can be made of the Deity; but of Christ's Humanity there may. The Eleventh, is a Passage of Evagrius's History, about Christ's Image, sent to Abgarus. The Twelfth, are some Extracts of the Spiritual Meadow. From all these Passages, they pretend to conclude, that the Jews, the Pagans, the Samaritans, the Manicheans, and the Severians were the first Enemies of Images. Lastly, they read an Account of the Origin of the breaking down of Images, shewing, that a certain Jew of Tiberias, counterfeiting himself to be a Diviner and a Sorcerer, persuaded the King of the Arabians to order all Images to be taken away out of the Churches of the Christians in his Kingdom, promising him a long Life, if he would do it; that this Order being given out, the Christians refusing to take away the Images with their own Hands, the Jews and the Arabians had pulled them down, burnt, torn, or defaced them; that the King, instead of the long Life, which the Magician had promised him, died within two Years and some Months after, and that his Son put the Magician to Death, and suffered Images to be set up again. After this Relation, all the Bishops demanded the Restoration of Images; they called for some to be brought in, that they might honour them, and repeated the Anathema's against those that broke, or dishonored them.

In the 6th. Action, held the 5th or the 6th of October, they read the Acts of the Council of Constantinople, held against the Images, and a un Refutation of what is in this Council. The 1st. thing they quarrel at, is the Title it had assumed, of The Holy Seventh General Council. They pretend, it cannot have those Titles, since it was not received, but contrarywise rejected, and Anathematized by several Bishops; nor was it approved by the Bishop of Rome, and the Bishops about him, nor by his Vicars, nor by a Circular Letter, according to the usual Law of Councils. And Lastly, that the Patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, did not assent to it, neither in Person, nor by the great Bishops of their Provinces. Yet they do not question the Number of the Bishops set down in the Acts of 338: But they say, that this Number could not make a General Legitimate Council, because those that composed it, had swerved from the Truth, and embraced an Error. I omit the Prefaces of the Council of Constantinople, and the Reflexions of the Nicene Council, which respects the Confession of Faith about the Trinity, and the Incarnation, and the Acknowledgment of what was decided in the six first General Councils, which are Articles which both Councils agreed in: But the former pretends, that they who make Images, do overthrow the six first Synods. The other contrariwise maintain, that they who condemn them do act contrary to the Spirit, and the Practice of the Bishops, who assisted at these Synods, and contrary to their Tradition. There is nothing weaker, than what the former do alledge, to prove, that the Use of Images is contrary to the Decision of the General Councils. They are nothing but a meer Petitiones Principii, or evident Sophisms, which deserve no Refutation. There is one upon the Eucharist, which is nothing better than the rest. They pretend, that no Image of Christ ought to be made, because the Eucharist is the visible Image. To which, the Fathers of the Second Council answer, That the Name of Image is not given to the unbloody Sacrifice, offered by the Priest, but it is the very Body, and the very Blood of Christ; that those Oblations, before the Sanctification, have been called Types by some of the Fathers, as by Eustachius of Antioch, and St. Basil; but after the Sanctification, they never were called Types or Images of Christ, and that they are believed, and properly called the Body and Blood of an A Confutation of the Acts of the Council of Constantinople.] The Argument's drawn from the Scriptures and Fathers, which the Council of Constantinople insists upon, to shew the Incongruity of the Worship of Images to the Nature of God, and the Design of the Christian Religion, though not so clear and cogent as might be produced, yet are so weakly, and insufficiently answered by the Nicene Fathers, that they may well pass for inconfutable, till some better Answer of them appears, which since M. du Pin hath not done, but doth acknowledge the same. It is needless to stand upon the Justification of the Former, or labour to discover the Insufficiency of the Latter, which is so evident to every Reader.

Christ. They add, that their very Adversaries could not forbear acknowledging this Truth, and that they confess in the same Place, that the Eucharist, by the Consecration, is made Christ's Body; which is an Argument, that the two Councils held the Reality of Christ's Body in the Eucharist, and that they differ only in the Expression, and the Name they give it; the one pretending, that the Eucharist, even after the Consecration, may be called and considered as an Image and a Type; and the others denying expressly, that the Fathers did ever give it that Name after the Consecration; which is not altogether true, though it cannot be said, that the Eucharist may be called a Type or Image, as other Images, and the whole arguing grounded upon this Analogy be very weak.

The Bishops of the first Council deny Images to be of the Tradition of Christ, of the Apostles or of the Fathers. Those of the second, maintain them to be a Tradition of Christ which was, not written, and prove it by the Story of the Statue, erected by the Woman with the Bloody-Flux to the Honour of Christ. I should desire a better Proof of it. They alledge the other Proofs they had brought in, some of which do indeed shew the Use of Images was common in Churches in the 4th and the 5th Century; but never a one comes up to the time of Jesus Christ, the Apostles, or their immediate Successors.

The Bishops of the first Council add, That there is no Prayer in the Church for the hallowing of Images. Those of the second answer, there are many Holy things in the Church which are not Hallowed by Prayer, but are Holy by their very Name; as the Cross and the Sacred Vessels, which are Reverenced, by reason of their Shape and Use; that it is so with Images, which have Reverence paid them for the sake of that they represent, and of their Usefulness.

The Bishops of the first Council, charge them that Honour Images of Saints, with lapsing into Heathenism. Those of the second, make a vigorous Defence upon this Article, maintaining, that they Worship them not as they Worship God; but that they embrace and salute them, and pay them an outward Worship, to express their Veneration of the Saints represented by them; besides that, they use them for their own Instruction, and for raising Godly Motions in the Beholders.

From Reasons they come to Authorities, and first of all they alledge two Testimonies of the Scripture, where it is said, That God is a Spirit, that they that worship him, must worship him in Spirit and in Truth; and that no Man hath seen God at any time. The Fathers of the Second Council answer, This cannot be understood but of the Deity, and cannot be applied to Christ's Humanity; thus confessing that they would not have approved of the Images of the Trinity.

The Second Place of Scripture, is that famous one of Deuteronomy, Ye shall make to your selves no Graven Idol. The Fathers of the Second Council Answer, This ought not to extend to the Images of Christians but respects only the Jews and prophane Images, that Moses himself explained this Precept, by making Cherubims by God's Order, I pass by the other places of Scripture, which are less pertinent by far than the preceding, to come to the Testimonies of the Fathers.

The First is that of St. Epiphanius, who will not have Christians to set up Images in Churches, nor in Church-Yards, nor even in their Houses. The Fathers of the Second, maintain this Letter to be false, that St. Epiphanius could not be of a contrary Mind to St. Basil, St. Amphilochius, St. Gregory Nyssen, and the other Fathers, who commanded the Use of Images. It had perhaps been better for them to say, That this Father speaks too harshly.

The Second Passage is drawn out of St. Gregory Nazianzen's Verses, where it is said, Men ought not to have their Trust and Hope in Colours, but in their Hearts. This Passage is of a dubious Sense, and does no way concern Images; but 'tis a moral Reflection, according to the Remark of the Fathers of the Second Nicene Council, wherein this Father observes, that Men ought not to place their Confidence in worldly Goods, which he compares to Colours, but in a good Conscience.

The Passages of St. Basil are yet of a larger Sense: They say, That Scripture does represent to us the Images of the Souls of Saints, but not of their Bodies. This does not overthrow other Images; neither should they have alleged against Images, a Place taken out of an Homily which is not St. Chrysostom's.

The Passage of St. Arhanasius, that Creatures ought not to be worshipped, is only against Idols. That of Amphilochius hath something in it of greater Difficulty. This Father says, That we should have no Care to paint out in Colours a Corporal Representation of the Saints, because we have no need of them, but that we should Imitate their Virtues. The Fathers of the Second Council make a large Discourse, to shift off this Passage. They shew the Usefulness of representing the Histories of Saints, which do both instruct and stir up Godly Motions. But they say, it's not enough to erect Temples and Images to their Honour, but we ought besides, to imitate their Vertuous Actions. They pretend, Amphilochius meant nothing else, and explain themselves with a Passage of Asterius of Amasea, which gives them an opportunity to produce another of the same Father, proving the Use of Images.

The Bishops of the first Council had cited a Passage stronger yet than that of Amphilochius, drawn out of a writing of Theodotus of Ancyra; saying, That Christians have not learnt to draw the Pictures of the Faces of Saints, but to imitate their Virtues: For (saith he) what benefit can they, that would set up those kind of Representations, reap thereby? And what Spiritual Thought can they suggest to them? 'Tis a Vain Imagination, and a Diabolical Invention. The Fathers of the second Council answer, That this place of Theodotus is supposititious. Perhaps it had been more to the purpose to observe, That the first Part is Theodotus's, but the second is a Conclusion which their Adversaries draw from the place of Theodotus, to which they might easily have returned the same Answer they had done to that of Amphilochius.

The last Passage reported in the Acts of the Council of Constantinople, is a Passage taken out of a Letter [of Eusebius Cæsariensis] to Constantia Augusta, which is attributed to that Author; yet is it not sure that it is his, and the Passage drawn out of it does not at all concern Images. Nevertheless the Fathers of the second Council, without telling us thus much, reject the Authority of Eusebius, charge him with being Anathematized, represent him as a Theopassian, who hath condemned Images, and rank him with Severus, Peter Gnapheus, Philoxenus, &c. believing it advantageous to them, that Eusebius should be their Adversary, and the Enemy of Images.

2d. Nicene Council.

The Definition of the Council of Constantinople follows these Testimonies: They forbid all sorts of Persons to make, to worship, or to set up in Churches, or in private Houses, any Image, upon pain of Deposition, if it be a Bishop, a Priest, or a Deacon; or of Excommunication, if it be a Monk or a Lay-man; and it enjoins them to be dealt withal according to the Rigour of the Imperial Laws, as Adversaries of God's Laws; and Enemies of their Ancestors Doctrines. But they forbid to take away the Sacred Vessels under that pretence, or to make them pass for Images; as also the Veils, the Vestments, and the other Things used in the Sacred Ministry. This Declaration is joyned with the Anathematizing of those, that do not receive the Doctrine of the 6 First Councils. They are also Anathematized, who make Images of Christ, or of the Saints, after the Acclamations to the Emperors Leo and Constantine, and Imprecations against German, Gregory, and John Damascene, who are Anathematized and Deposed. The Council of Nice confirms these Definitions in every Article.

The 7th. Action was held the 13th. of October. It contains a Confession of Faith, in the end whereof vv it is defined, That the Holy Venerable Images may be exposed to the sight, as well as the Crofs, both those which are made in Colours, upon Cloth, and those of another kind; that they may be placed in Churches, set upon sacred Vessels, upon Sacerdotal Vestments, upon the Walls and Tables, in Houses, and in the Highways, viz. The Images of Jesus Christ and the Virgin, of the Angels and Saints, that they are useful to remember Men of them, and to renew the Desire of the Saints, that they may be kissed and revered, but not adored with the true Adoration, due to God alone; that Incense and Wax-candles may be burnt before them, as they are before the Crofs; because the Reverence paid to them passeth to their Object; and they that honour them, honour those represented by them. This Confession is followed with a Letter of the Council to the Emperor and Empress, and a Circular Letter to all the Bishops and Churches.

Anastasius the Library-keeper, who translated the Acts of this Council, reckons but seven Actions, and attributes to the last the Canons, and Tarasius's Letters. But in the Greek Edition, there is an 8th Action of the 20th of September, because what is related there, was indeed transacted at Constantinople, whither the Patriarch and the Bishops went, to give an account of their Proceedings to the Emperor and the Empress. They were kindly entertained by them, and the Empress her self would be present at the Synod, to hear the Acclamations of the Bishops in her Commendation. She caused the Definition of the Council to be read, and asked the Bishops, whether it had been made by the Unanimous Consent of all. It was approved by many Acclamations, and presented by the Patriarch to the Empress, which subscribed it, and caused it to be subscribed by the Emperor, her Son. After that, the Acclamations began again, to wish a long life to the Empress, and the Emperor: These being over, some of the chief Testimonies, alledged in the behalf of Images, were read before the Lords and the People. After the reading of them the Bishops, the great Lords, and the People, made many Acclamations.

There are 22 Canons of this Council yet extant, which Anastasius attributes to the 7th Action.

In the first, they confirm the ancient Decrees of the Councils, [as well Provincial, as General,] and Anathematiz'd those which are Anathematiz'd by them, and Deposed those which are Deposed by them, and Suspend and put to Penance those, which they have ordained to be Suspended and put to Penance.

vv It is defined, That Images be placed in Churches, and Reverenced, but not Adored with the true Adoration due to God only. It is clear from the Premises, that this Definition of the Council was resolved upon before the Matter was heard, or canvassed; and though they had no Grounds for this Practice, either from Scripture, Reason, or Ecclesiastical Constitutions, yet Image worship they must have, but then it must be a very nice sort too, a Veneration, not true Adoration; or, as Tarasius distinguishes, not with ἀσπεία: Which evidently shews, that though they would not forsake Image-worship, yet they were afraid of incurring the Guilt of Idolatry by it, which they thought to salve by a nice distinction of Veneration and Adoration, or as the Modern Romanists, ἀσπεία, and ἀσπεία. But this will not serve the turn, nor clear the Guilt, for as Aquinas and his Followers have at large proved, where any Thing is worshipped merely for the sake of another, it must have the same kind of Worship given it, which is given to the Thing represented by it. And then if they give the Image any Veneration, notwithstanding this distinction, it must be a Divine Worship, the same which is given to God, and that is gross Idolatry.

Aqui. Sum. p. 3. q. 25. art. 3.

~~~~~ In the 2d. they ordain, That they shall examine, whether he, who is preferred to the Dignity of a Bishop, be skilful in the Psalter, the Gospel, St. Paul's Epistles, and the Canons; and whether he be able to instruct his People in the Commandments of God, and in their other Practical Duties.

The 3d. declares all the Elections of Bishops or Priests, made by Princes to be void. It ordains, That Bishops shall be chosen by other Bishops, and thereupon cites the Canon of the Nicene Council, which does not speak of the Election, but of the Ordination [of Bishops:] For of old time the Election did belong to the Clergy and People, and the Ordination to the Bishops.

The 4th. is against the Bishops, who take Money for Depositing or Excommunicating a Clerk.

The 5th. Degrades those, who did boast of having ordained for Money, and renews the Canonical Laws against Simonists.

The 6th. renews the Canon of the Nicene Council for the holding of Provincial Synods. It threatens with Excommunication those Princes who would hinder it, and imposes Canonical Penalties upon the Metropolitans who should neglect it; and forbids them to take any thing which the Bishops have brought with them to the Synod.

The 7th. ordains, That some Relicks of Saints shall be put into the Temples, which have been consecrated without any Relicks being put into them, and the accustomed Prayers used at that Ceremony. It forbids Bishops upon pain of Deposition, hereafter to consecrate a Temple without Relicks.

The 8th. forbids Baptizing or Receiving the Jews, unless they be thoroughly converted.

The 9th. ordains, That all the Works made against Images shall be put in the Palace of the Patriarch of Constantinople, among the Heretical Books. It threatens to Depose or Excommunicate those that shall conceal them.

The 10th. forbids the Admission of Clerks into Chappels or Churches, without permission from their Bishop.

The 11th. ordains, That there shall be Stewards in all Churches, yea and gives the Bishop of Constantinople leave to put some in the Metropolitan Churches, if the Metropolitans neglect to do it. The same is ordained for Monasteries.

The 12th. forbids Bishops and Abbots to yield up, or to give away unwarrantably their Churches or Monastery, Lands or Revenues.

The 13th. ordains, That Monasteries and Bishops Houses shall be repaired, and restored to their proper use, and shall no more be suffered to serve for publick Inns.

The 14th. forbids such Children as have indeed received the Tonsure, but not the Imposition of the Bishops hands, to read in the Desk. It gives the Abbots, who are Priests, leave to make Readers for their own Monastery only, whom the Chorepiscopy are permitted to Ordain.

The 15th. forbids a Clerk to be entituled to two Churches.

The 16th. forbids Bishops, and other Clergy-men, to wear gay and fine Garments to make themselves taken notice of. It orders those to be punished, who laugh at such Clerks as are meanly clad. It is observed there, that in former times all Men consecrated to God went plainly and modestly apparell'd, because, as St. Basil says, any Garment which is not put on for Necessity, but for Ornament, carrieth a suspicion of Pride.

The 17th. forbids to undertake the building of Oratories, or Chapels, without a sufficient Fond to defray the Charges necessary for finishing of them.

The 18th. forbids Women to live in Bishops Houses, or in Monasteries of Men.

The 19th. prohibits taking any thing for Orders, or Entrance into Monasteries, upon pain of Deposition for the Bishops, and such Abbots as are Priests; and for Abbesses and Abbots who are not Priests, upon pain of Expulsion from their Monasteries. Nevertheless it permits those, who are admitted into Monasteries, or their Parents or Relations, to give voluntary Gifts; yet upon this condition, That those Gifts shall belong to the Monasteries, whether he that is Admitted stays, or goes away, unless the Emperor turn him out.

The 20th. prohibits making double Monasteries, that is, for Men and Women; and as for those that are Founded, it ordains, That the Monks and Nuns shall dwell in two several Houses, that they shall not see one another, nor have any Commerce together.

The 21st. forbids Monks to quit their own Monastery to go to others.

The 22d. forbids Monks to eat with Women, unless it be needful for their Spiritual Good, or upon a Journey, yea though they be their Relations.

Moreover, to the Acts of this Council is joyned a Panegyrick, pronounced in Commendation of it by Epiphanius Deacon of Carana in Seicily; a Letter of Tarasius to Pope Adrian, about the Subject of the Council; another Letter of the same Person against the Simonists, in which he hath gathered together several Canons upon that Subject; another Letter of his to John the Abbot, upon the Definition of the 2d. Nicene Council, and against Simoniacal Ordinations.

The Acts of this Council being brought to Rome, they sent Extracts of them into France, where they had a different Practice about Image-worship. They were indeed permitted to have them, and to put them into their Churches; but they could not endure that any Worship or Honour our should be paid them, whilst the Cross and Sacred Vessels were permitted to be honoured. Charles, who was then King of France, and afterwards was Emperor, caused these Extracts to be Examined by * some Bishops of his Kingdom, who composed a Treatise to vindicate their own Usage, and to answer the Proofs alledged in the Council of Nice for the Worship of Images. This Work was put out by Charles's Order, and under his Name, within three Years, or thereabouts, after the Nicene Council. It is divided into four Books.

* Of whom Alcuin 2d. Nicene was the chief; and Council. R. Hoveden says, He it was that composed the Caroline Books.

In the Preface having observed, that the Church, redeemed with the precious Blood of Christ her Spouse, washed with the saving Water of Baptism, fed with the precious Blood of her Saviour, and anointed with Holy Oyl, is sometimes assaulted by Hereticks and Infidels, and sometimes vexed by the Quarrels of the Schismatics and the Proud; that she is an Ark, containing those that are to be saved, figured by that of Noah; which undergoes the Storms of the Deluge of this World, without any danger of Shipwreck; which does not yield to the deep and deadly Whirlpools of this World, and which cannot be overcome by the Hostile Powers wherewith she is surrounded by reason Christ does continually fight for her; so that she does still withstand her Enemies, and inviolably maintain the true Faith and Confession of the Trinity. That she is a Holy Mother, without Spot and Corruption, always Fruitful, and yet a Virgin; that the more she is set on by the Contradictions of the World, the more she encreases in Virtue, the lower she is brought, the higher she raiseth up her self. After this Encomium of the Church, they add in Charles's Name, That seeing he hath taken the Reins of his Kingdom in his hands, being in the Bosom of this Church, he is obliged to endeavour her Vindication and Prosperity; that not only the Princes, but the Bishops also of the East, puffed up with sinful Pride, had swerved from the Holy Doctrine, and the Apostolick Tradition, and do cry up impertinent and ridiculous Synods, to make themselves famous to Posterity; that some years ago they had held in Greece a certain Synod full of Imprudence and Indiscretion, in which they went about to abolish the use of Images, which the Ancients have introduced as an Ornament, and a Remembrance of Things past, and to attribute to Images what God hath said of Idols, though it cannot be said, that all Images are Idols: But it's plain there's a difference between an Image and an Idol; because Images are for Ornament and Remembrance, whereas Idols are made for destroying Souls by an impious Adoration, and vain Superstition. That the Bishops of this Council had been so blind, as to Anatematize all those who had Images in Churches, and so boast, that their Emperor Constantine had freed them from Idols. That besides this, there was another Synod held about three years since, composed of the Successors of those of the former Council, yea and of those that had assisted at it which was not less Erroneous and Faulty than the former, though it took a clean contrary way. That the Bishops of this Synod order Images to be Adored, which those of the former would not permit to be had or seen; and that whenever these find Images to be spoken of, whether in the Scripture, or in the Writings of the Fathers, they conclude from thence, that they ought to be worshipped. That thus they both fall into contrary Absurdities; those confounding the Use, and the Adoration of Images; and the other, believing Idols and Images, to be one and the same thing. As for us, says he, being content with what we find in the Gospels, and the Apostle's Writings, and instructed by the Works of the Fathers, who have not swerved from him, who is the Way and the Truth, we receive the 6 first Councils, and reject all the Novelties both of the first and the second Synod. And as to the Acts of this latter, which are destitute of Eloquence and common Sense, being come to us, we thought our selves bound to write against their Errors, to the end, that if their Writing should defile the Hands of those that shall hold it, or the Ears of those that shall hear it, the Poison which it might instill, may be expelled by our Treatise, supported by the Authority of the Scripture; and that this weak Enemy, which is come from the East, may be subdued in the West by the Sentiments of the Holy Fathers, which we have produced. In fine, we have undertaken this Work with the consent of the Bishops of the Kingdom which God hath given us, nor out of any ambitious Design, but animated with the Zeal of God's House, and the Love of Truth, because, as it is a holy Thing to pursue good Things, so it is a great Sin to consent to Evil. This is the Subject of his Preface.

In the first Book, after having made some Cursory Observations upon some Terms of the Council, he shews that the places of the Scripture, alledged in that Council for Image-worship, being explained in their genuine Sense, and according to the Fathers, do not at all prove what they pretend. In the first Chapter, he reproves this Expression in the Letter of Constantine and Irene; By him that Reigns with us: He says, That it is a piece of intolerable Rashness in Princes, to compare their Reign to that of God. He says, That, properly speaking, God alone reigns, and Princes reign, but improperly, as none but He is really Immortal and True, and all other Things are immortal and True only by Participation. In the 2d. he charges them with too much Boldness, in saying, That God hath chosen them, who do truly seek his Glory. He finds fault in the 3d. with their calling their Letter Scripta Divalia, as a profane Expression: Nay, he would not have the Dead called Diva Memoria; and he says, That 'tis Ambition, not Apostolical Tradition, that brought in that Expression. In the 4th. Chapter, he blames another Expression of their Letter to Pope Adrian, We beseech your Holiness, or rather that God, who suffers none to perish, beseeches you.

you. He calls this Expression, A wretched way of speaking, and an execrable Error; because he who is God, and hath a Sovereign Empire over all his Creatures, cannot debate himself so, as to beseech them. In the 5th Chapter he observes, That 'tis a great Crime to explain any thing in another manner, than it ought to be understood. In the 6th, he says, that when, there arises any Question in the Church, they ought above all to consult the Church of Rome; which is preferred before all others, and that no Writings should be made use of, but such as the receiveth: That as St. Peter was preferred before all the Apostles, so the Church of Rome is above all other Churches, and is the first of the Apostolical Churches, and so much the more, because she holds her Primacy from the Authority of Jesus Christ himself, and not from the constitutions of Synods; that St. Paul also hath contributed to the Establishing of the Church, that she might have all the Authority of both those Apostles. He quotes the Passage of St. Jerome to Damasus and observes that his Father Pepin enjoyn'd the French and German Churches to follow the Roman usage in the singing of Divine Service. I do not well see, what the Author of this Book aimed at in this Place; it being evident, that the Church of Rome was contrary to his Pretension, and that Pope Adrian had been consulted, and had approved the decision of the Synod which he confutes. In the following Chapters, he runsover the Proofs and Passages out of the Old Testament alledged by the Council, or by particular Bishops in the Council, and shews at large that they signifie nothing for the Worshipping of Images. He insists more particularly upon the Cherubims, and maintains that no Worship was paid them, He confesses that it is said, that Abraham Worshipped the People of the Land of Heth, and that Nathan Worshipped David; but he pretends there was a great difference between Men Living and Images. He allows that those may be Saluted and Reverenced upon the Account of the Dignity they have; but he cannot endure the same should be done to a Picture, made with colours which can neither see, nor walk, nor feel.

In the 2d. Book he finisheth his Answer to the places of the Scripture they had made use of to Authorize Images, and begins in the 13th. to Answer the Authorities of the Fathers, or of other Ecclesiastical Records. In this, having made a Protestation, that he does not forbid having Images, but only Worshipping of them, he answers the Testimony drawn from the Acts of Sylvester, wherein it was said, that this Pope had caused the Images of the 12 Apostles to be carried to Constantine; he Answers, I say, this does not prove that he caused them to be Worshipped, but only that he shewed them, to raise his mind by these visible Signs to things invisible; that, tho he had perswaded him to honour them, which he did not, it was to lead that Prince, who was newly Converted, by things visible to the knowledge of the invisible. And lastly, tho those Acts of Sylvester be read by several Orthodox persons, yet they are not of sufficient Authority, to decide controverted Points. In the 14th. and the 15th. he shews that the Passage of Athanasius, alledged by the Council, proves nothing at all. In the 16th. he exclaims mightily, that they had applied to the Images a passage of St. Austin, which is meant of the Son of God. In the 17th. he says, he does not answer St. Gregory Nyssen, whose Life and Writings are unknown to him. In the following Chapters, he shews, that the passage drawn out of the 16th. Council, and those of St. John Chrysostom, and St. Cyril prove nothing at all for the Worship of Images. In the 21st. he maintains, that the Adoring of Images is prejudicial to our duty to God, but not the suffering them in Churches for a remembrance of things past, and for an Ornament he consents, as he tells us in the next Chapter, that those of a weak and dull memory use them, to put them in mind of things; but he will not yield, that they should pay them any Worship. He proves in the 23d. ch. that this was Pope St. Gregory's Opinion. In the 24th. he owns, that Men may be Bowed to, and Reverenced; but he denieth, that the same may be done to inanimate Images. He pretends in the 25th. that Image-Worship is not grounded upon any Example of the Apostles. In the 26th. he affirms it to be a great Temerity, to compare Images with the Ark; but he says in the 27th. 'tis a kind of Impiety to compare them to the Sacrament of Christ's Body and Blood. He speaks of the Consecration of the Eucharist very plainly and clearly, and he intimates in the end, that the Eucharist was still given to Children Newly Baptized. Lastly, he is not willing that Images should be compar'd even to the Cross, to the Sacred Vessels, and to the Books of the Gospels and the Holy Scripture. As to this Article he is in the wrong, and all his Reasonings are a meer Sophisme; for indeed the Cross, the Sacred Vessels and the Books are no less inanimate Creatures, than Images, and deserve neither more nor less Adoration. If then we may pay an xx outward Worship to the Cross, because it put us in mind of that, which Christ was xx If we may pay an Outward Worship to the Cross, Sacred Vessels, Bibles, &c. Why should we not also Honour the Images of Jesus Christ.] If the Worship be the same, we grant the Idolatry is the same, but who ever bowed down to the Book of the Bible, or the Sacred Vessels and prayed to them? Tho' but with a Relative Worship. There is an inferior sort of Respect and Honour due to all things Consecrated to God's Service, or instrumental in his Worship, whereby tho no Man Worships or Adores them, yet he so far respects them, as not to put them to any common or prophane Uses, but keeps them clean and decent; and this all persons may be allowed to give to the Holy Bible and Sacred Vessels, used in the service of God (which is all that is intended by Worship in these books) and yet it may be and is unlawful to Worship the Images of Jesus Christ and his Saints, as the Nicene Fathers have Decreed; for all Respect is not Worship.

Nailed

Nailed to, and to sacred Vessels, because of the use made of them, and to sacred Books, because of what they contain, thereby to shew our inward Respect and Worship of Christ, the Holy Mysteries, and the Truths of the Holy Scripture: Why should we not likewise Honour with an outward Worship the Images of Jesus Christ, of the Virgin and the Saints for a simple Testimony of our inward Veneration of the things represented by them, according to the common Notion of Men? There can be no difference at all, but from the Practice of the Church, receiving the Worship of the one, and not of the other. But when the Church pleases to approve of this, as well as that, the one can no more be Condemned than the other. Anastasius is in the right then, when in the Preface to the Translation of the Acts of the Nicene Council, he urgeth this reason, as a convincing Argument against the Opinion of the French, They say, quoth he, That no Work of Mens Hands is to be Worshipped; as though the Book of the Gospels were not the Work of Men, which they Adore by Kissing it, and the Sign of the Cross, which Christians do Worship every where, though it be a Wooden, Golden, or a Silver'd Cross, different from that which Christ was fastened to. But let us come again to Charles the Great. In the 31 Chapter, he cries out against the Council's Anathematizing those, who do not Worship Images. He pretends that hereby they have declar'd their Fathers Hereticks, and they being so, could neither Consecrate nor impose Hands; from whence it follows, that their Successors are not true Priests, nor true Bishops. Thereupon he opposeth the Practice of the West to that of the East. We pray, says he, and give Alms, according to the Practice of the Church for our Fathers, and they Anathematize them. We beg rest for them in the Sacrifices of the Mass, and they make imprecations against them in their Councils. We remember them in our Prayers, and they do not mention them, but to condemn them. We pray that they may rest in Abraham's Bosom; and they wish them to be damn'd with Hereticks. Yet he confesseth they were both mistaken; the former in Condemning the use of Images for ever, the latter in commending them to be Adored; those in throwing them to the Fire, these in burning Incense to them; the former in avoiding the sight of them, the latter in continually embracing of them; those in Anathematizing those that have them, and these in Condemning those that do not Worship them. Then he concludes with propounding the Judgment of the French, which holds the mean between both. We do not believe, says he, they ought to be Abolished, as the former have done; but then we do not declare, they are to be Adored, as the latter have done. But let us Adore God alone, and let us Reverence his Saints according to the Ancient Tradition of the Church. We tolerate Images in the Church, to serve as an Ornament, and if they please, as a memorial of things past. On the one hand we avoid too great a feverity, and on the other a base Flattery. We avoid Malice and Sottishness: We are neither too bold nor too weak; and thereby we shew to those that run into contrary extremes, the way they ought to keep in going to Christ.

The third Book begins with a Confession of Faith, in which, having set forth the Doctrine of the Church about the Trinity and the Incarnation; he recites the other Articles of the Creed; and remarks upon that of the Resurrection, that Men shall have the same Body; upon that of the Life Eternal, that the Happiness and the Torments shall be greater or lesser, according to the difference of Virtues or Crimes; upon that of Baptism, that it ought to be administered to Children. Then he adds That the Gallican Churches believe, that a Man fallen into Sin after Baptism, may be saved by Repentance; that they receive the number of the Canonical Books, owned for such by the Authority of the Church; that they believe God hath created all Souls; that they Anathematize those, who believe them to be a portion of the Divine Substance; that they do also condemn those that say, That they have formerly sinned in Heaven, before they were sent into the Bodies; that they abhor those that affirm God hath commanded any thing impossible to Man, and that the Commandments cannot all be obey'd by every particular Person, but only by every Christian Society in common; those that condemn first Marriage, with the Manichees, and the second with Cataphryges; that they Anathematize them that say, that Jesus Christ did lie out of necessity, or weakness of the Flesh; or that he could not do all he would; that they condemn the Heretic of Jovinian, who denied there should be any difference in the other Life between Men's Merits, and affirmed Men should have there the Virtues neglected by them here below. Lastly, that they confess free Will, so as to assert that Men do continually stand in need of God's Assistance, and that they are perswaded, that they do err, who say with Manicheus, that Man cannot avoid sin; as also those who assert with Jovinian, that Man is not capable of Sin, because both have Free Will. This is the Abridgment of the Confession of Faith, which the Author of these Books tells us, he hath express'd in St. Jerome's own words. In the 2d Chapter he upbraids Tarasius with his hasty and precipitated Election, and promotion to Holy Orders. In the 3d he finds fault with the expression he had used, that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father by the Son: He said, they ought to believe that he proceeds from the Father and the Son, and brings in several Proofs of this Doctrine, blaming Tarasius for expressing his Mind so, more than those who only said he proceeded from the Father, without joining the Son to him, though in the 8th Chapter he suspects all them that omitted it, to be in an Error. In the 4th, he reproves Theodorus for saying that the Son hath no other Principle but the Father. He believes that that Expression seems to insinuate that the Son is not the Principle himself, and that it may occasion one to think, that he believed him Posterior to his Father. In the 5th, he taxeth one expression more of Tarasius upon the Trinity; but he could not endure, that most of those Bishops add to their Second Nicene Council.

Confession of Faith the Worship of Images, and does vehemently complain of it in the following Chapters. He taketh it worse yet, that they should dare to Anathematize those of a contrary Mind. He taketh it ill in the 14th and 15th Chapters, that the Emperors and the Emperor meddled with that Business: But methinks he should have remembred, That the Emperors had concerned themselves more in the other Councils, and should have considered that he did busie himself about it in the West, more than Irene had done in the East. In the 15th Chapter, he answers this Objection: They Honour the Statues, Medals, and Pictures of Princes; why shall they not Honour those of Christ and the Saints? He answers it, I say, by maintaining that the former ought not to be Honoured. In the 16th Chapter he answers another Reason of the Council, That the Honour of the Image passeth to that which is represented by it. He says first of all, That he cannot apprehend how a Cloath and some Colours have any Relation to a Saint in Heaven; that it is not so with Pictures, as with Relicks, which have a natural Relation to the Saints; that it depends upon the Painters Fancy to make Folks believe that a Picture represents a Saint, or a false God. He asks, whether those that have most resemblance deserve more Honour than those of a more precious Matter. He says, that if the latter, 'tis then the Matter that they respect; and if the former, it seems an unjust thing to prefer them before those that are more valuable. Lastly, he confesses, that the Learn'd may indeed Honour images without any abuse, by referring the Honour not to what they are, but to what they signify; but he believes that they can be nothing else but a cause of Offence, and a stumbling Block to the Ignorant, who Reverence and Adore nothing but what they see; from whence he concludes, it's better quite to Abolish the use of them. This shews, that the Dispute between the Greeks and the French was not so much a Dispute about Doctrine as Practice. In the 17th Chap. he condemns an Expression of Constantine's, Bishop of Cyprus, but it was badly Translated; for whereas that Bishop had said, that he Honoured Images, and Adored the Trinity; he maketh him say, that he Honoured Images with the Honour due to the Trinity: So it's an Error of Fact. In the following Chapters he reproves the Opinions of some Bishops. In the 21st, he derides the instance of Polemon's Picture. The two next Chapters are against the Praises given to the Art of Painting. In the 24th, he pretends there's no comparison to be made between the Relicks of Saints and their Images. In the 25th he says, That the Miracles done by Images are no Argument that they are to be Adored, for then Thorn-Bushes should be Adored, because God spake to Moses out of a burning Bush, Fringes should be Adored, because Jesus Christ healed the Woman with the Bloody Flux, by the Fringe of his Garment; and shadows too, because St. Peter's Shadow wrought Miracles. In the 26, he laughs at Theodosius Bishop of Myra, who had related his Arch-Deacons Dreams, to Authorize Image-Worship. In the 30th Chap. he confutes several Proofs alledged by the Council, because they were taken out of Apocryphal Histories. In the 31st, he taxeth with Impiety and Folly the Answer of that Abbot, who told a Monk, it was better to frequent Bawdy-Houses, than not to Adore the Images of Jesus Christ and the Virgin.

In the last Book he goes on to confute some Expressions of the Council, and of particular Men in the Council. He maintains no wax Candles ought to be Lighted, nor Incense to be burnt before Images, because they are senseless. He cannot endure that the Council should compare those that do not Adore Images to Hereticks. He taketh it ill, that he should thus abuse their Predecessors, confessing nevertheless, that these last were to blame for burning and destroying Images. He rejects the Story of Christ's Image sent to Abgarus, as a mere Fable. He makes no great reckoning of another Story of a Monk, who had set up a Lamp before an Image, which burnt several days. He adds, that tho' those Miracles were true, it would not follow from thence that Images were to be Adored. Lastly, having derided them for many of their Arguments he maintains, That that Synod was to blame for assuming the Title of Universal; because whatever is Universal ought to be conformable to the Tradition and Practice of all the Churches. "Thus, says he, if it fall it, that the Bishops of two or three Provinces meet together, and that according to the Authority of Tradition, they Establish some Doctrine, or make some Rule agreeable to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Ancient Church; what they do is Catholick, and their Council may be called Universal; because though it be not composed of the Bishops of all the Parts of the World, what it does is agreeable to the Faith and Tradition of the whole Church; but contrariwise, if they go about to Establish some Novelty, what they do is not Catholick. In a word, whatsoever is Ecclesiastical is Catholick, and whatsoever is Catholick is Universal, all that is Universal is not New. Thus the Synod, we speak of, being contrary to the Sentiments of the Universal Church, we cannot own it for Universal."

These Books were brought to Rome, and presented to Pope Adrian, by Engilbert, Charles's Ambassador. The Pope, who maintain'd the Council, having received them, thought himself bound to Answer them by a Writing directed to Charles the Great himself. First of all he Vindicates the Expressions of Tarasius and the other Greeks about the Holy Ghost, by some Passages of the Fathers, which have spoken after the same manner, supposing those Greeks did not differ from the Roman Church about the Procession of the Holy Ghost. Then he defends the Passages of the Scripture, the Reasons, Authorities and Histories alledged by the Synod, and censured in the Caroline Books; but his Answers are but weak. He pretends, that St. Gregory taught in his Letter to Secundinus, That Images deserved some Worship. He cites some Passages out of the Fathers upon almost every Article; but he maketh such Applications of several of them, that very few would would approve of, and he vindicates some Reasonings, that some could hardly Relish. But about the end, having reported all the Testimonies of St. Gregory, he expresseth himself about Image-Worship after a manner which cannot be possibly condemned; for he says that Images are not cene Reverenced, but so far forth as they raise up our Mind to God, and that whosoever prostrates himself before Christ's Image, 'tis God whom he Adores; that likewise we shew our Love and Affection to the Saint by the means of his Images. He adds, That the Nicene Synod, having established this Doctrine, and rejected the false Synod which would have quite abolished Images; he had received it as a Legimate and Catholick Synod; that nevertheless he had not yet written an Answer to the Emperor, lest he should relapse into the Error of his Predecessors; which he feared so much the more, because Writing to him, to exhort him to restore Images, he had also demanded of him the Restitution of the Diocesses of the Church of Rome, and of the Patrimonies also belonging to it, but had received no Answer from him. Wherefore he says, that if Charles will give him leave, in his Answer to the Greek Emperor, he will approve of what he hath done for Images; but at the same time he will maintain the Quatrel with him, about the Diocesses and Patrimonies of the Church of Rome, and if he do not restore them, he will declare him an Heretick for it.

This Letter of Adrian did not alter the Sentiments, nor the Practice of Charles, nor of the Gallican Churches: For in the Synods of Frankfort held in 794. where this Question was again debated, after they had done with the Opinion of Felix and Elipandus; they rejected the Opinion of the Greeks, and condemned all manner of Adoration or Worship of Images. This is the second Canon of that Synod.

In the East, though the Definition of the Nicene Council had restored Images in several places, yet it was not equally observed every where, and Constantine himself abrogated it. Leo the 5th his Successor, re-establish'd the Decree of the Council of Constantinople; so that the East was altogether divided in the Point of Images, Anno 320. Michael Baldus succeeding Leo, and being desirous to settle Peace in the Church, assembled a Council, in which they followed the Sentiments of the Gallican Church; for they took away the Images that were set up in dirty corners; and they left those, which were in high Places, where they might be seen, that the Picture might serve for a Book to instruct the Ignorant, upon condition that they should not adore them, and that they should burn no Lamps nor Incense before them. Some of those that were most Zealous for Image-Worship, came to Rome to complain of this Council. Which forced Michael to send Deputies thither, whom he directed to Lewis the Meek: First, That he might help them with his Credit. This Emperor finding such a fair Opportunity to procure Peace to the Church, sent Freculphus and Adegarius to Rome, with the Deputies of the Greek Emperor, to treat of this Affair. But Lewis's Envoys not finding the Romans complying, desired the Pope's consent, that that their Master might discuss the Matter with his Bishops. Having obtained it, they came back again to France. They held at Paris, An. 124. an Assembly of the ablest Bishops of the Kingdom; and this question was searched to the bottom. They read Adrian's first Letter, written upon this subject to Constantine and Irene. They found that he was in the right to condemn those that broke down Images; but that he acted indiscreetly, when he permitted them to be Adored; because they may be had, but may not be Adored. They Examined a new the Nicene Synod held in pursuit of this Letter; and they thought that they found in these Acts, that it did not only Establish Image-Worship, but enjoined them to be called Holy, and to believe some Holiness to be derived from them. They caused what had been written by Charles the Great's Order against this Council to be read over again. They made no great reckoning of Adrian's Answers, in which nothing was found considerable, besides the Pope's Name, which they did bear. They complain'd that this Abuse was Established at Rome and in Italy. They commended the Emperor for opposing this pretended supposition, and for endeavouring to restore Peace to the Church, by avoiding the Extrems which both sides had run into. They approv'd the prudent Carriage of the Deputies, in demanding this Matter should be debated in France. They judg'd, that for the better affecting of their design, it was necessary to lay the Fault at the Greeks Door, to pacify the Pope, and to commend his Zeal and Piety, yet so as to establish the Truth by places out of the Scripture and the Fathers, and to set it forth with Sincerity and Modesty; that by this means they might draw the Pope over and reclaim him; and if they could not effect that, they would still have the satisfaction to have spoken the Truth, and done their Duty. Lastly, They made a Collection of the Passages of the Fathers, divided into Fifteen Chapters: The first is against those that pretend, that Images ought to be taken away out of the Churches, and to be defaced upon the Sacred Vessels. The second contains some Testimonies of St. Gregory the Great about Images, shewing the Use that may be made of them. The third contains Testimonies of St. Austin against those that would Adore them, or that believe any Holiness or Virtue to be in them. The fourth contains several other Passages against the Worshipping of Images. The fifth contains some passages, proving that Saints and their Relicks may be Honoured, but not Adored; from whence it is inferred, that much less may Incense be Burnt and Offered to them. The sixth contains some Testimonies against them that maintain Image-Worship, by the Usage of those that introduce it. In the seventh they pretend to shew from some Passages of the Fathers, that Honouring of Images ought to be avoided, that we may give no Scandal to the Weak. In the eight and ninth they bring bring some Explications of the Fathers, to shew that the Passage of Genesis, where it is said, that Jacob worshipped * the Top of his Son Joseph's Staff; and that of the Kings, where Nathan is said to have worshipped David, proves nothing for the Worshipping of Images. The 10th Chapter contains a Testimony of St. Austin, concerning the Sacred Vessels. The 11th contains one about the Cherubims. The 12th contains some to shew, that Adoration is due to God alone. The 13th contains several of them upon the Cross, to prove that a great difference is to be made between that and Images.

This Difference is confirmed in the 14th Chapter, by the Usage of the Church, which hath always worshipped the Cross, and used that Sign in Benedictions, Consecrations, and Exorcisms. In the 15th, they advise the Destroyers of Images, not to take from thence an occasion to break them down, or to scorn them; and they put them in mind, that have them, not to adore them: And to establish the Truth of those two Points, they cite several Passages of the Fathers. Lastly, They drew up the Form of two Letters, one whereof is that which Lewis was to write to the Pope, to exhort him to procure the Peace of the Church, by correcting the Abuses that stir up Tumults in the East; some being for adoring of Images, and others against the very tolerating of them. The Second, is a Form of that which they will have the Pope to write to the Greek Emperors. It begins with a long Exhortation to submit themselves to the Roman Church, and to pay her Reverence; and then they advise the Emperors to restore Peace to the Church, by following the Opinion of the French, that is, by permitting Images to be had, but not to be honoured. Lastly, They alledge some of the most express Passages of the Fathers, to establish that Usage.

Lewis the Meek sent this Deliberation, and these Acts to Pope Eugenius, by Jeremy, Archbishop of Sens, and Jonas, Bishop of Orleans, and desired him by his Letter, to confer with them about the Ambassage which he was to send into Greece. But, to give the Pope no cause of Jealousie, he says, He did not send them with these Papers to impose Laws upon him, or to take upon himself to teach him, but merely to give him an account of the Sentiments of the Gallican Church, and to contribute to the Peace of the Universal Church. He recommends them to him, and prays him to receive them favourably, and entreats him to endeavour the Re-union of the Greek Church, and to carry himself with great wariness in such a nice Affair as this is. He desireth that his Deputies may accompany those whom the Pope shall send into the East.

At the same time he gave the two Prelates, his Ambassadors, Instructions, wherein he charges them to shew to the Pope the Collection of the Passages made in the Assembly held at Paris, to examine the Business about Images, by his own Consent. He commands them to satisfy him about the Business of Images, to handle this Question gently and moderately, and to have a great care not to make him obstinate, by too openly resisting of him. At last, he warns them, that, when that Business is ended, if yet the Peremptoriness of the Romans permits it, to ask the Pope, if he be not willing and desirous, that they should go into Greece with his Deputies: If he be willing, to send him word on't immediately, to the end, that at their return they may find Amalaricus and Halgarius, and before their departure to agree about the Place where the Deputies shall take Ship.

It is very probable that the Pope and the French did not agree about this Matter; but this did not hinder the King from sending Halgarius, Bishop of Cambray, and Aufridus, Abbot of Nonantula, into Greece, to the Emperor Michael. What they did concerning Images, is not known; it is only said, that they were well entertained. Perhaps they perswaded Michael to permit Images to be had. But this Emperor, and his Son Theophilus, were set against the Ordinance of the Nicene Council. This last being dead in 842. and his Wife Theodora being left in Possession of the Government, she re-established the Worship of Images, and the Authority of the Nicene Council. But the French and the Germans persisted long in their Usage, and it was very late e'er they owned that Council, in the room of which they put that of Frankfort, as it appears by the Testimonies of several French Authors and Historiographers.

Now to recapitulate in a few words, what we could observe upon the Point of Images, from the beginning of the Church: It must be confessed, that in the three first Centuries, yea, and in the beginning of the fourth, they were very scarce among Christians. Towards the end of the fourth Century they begun, especially in the East, to make Pictures and Images, and they grew very common in the Fifth: They represented in them the Conflicts of Martyrs and Sacred Histories, to instruct those who could not Read, and to stir them up to imitate their Constancy, and the other Virtues of those represented in these Pictures. Those of the Simpler and Weaker Sort, being moved with these Representations, by seeing the Saints Pictures thus drawn, could not forbear expressing by outward signs the Esteem, Respect, and Veneration they had for those represented therein. Thus was Image-Worship established, and was moreover fortified by the Miracles ascribed to them.

In the West, some Bishops at first would not suffer any Images, but the greater part agreed, that they might be of some Use, and only hindred them from being honoured. But the Worshipping of Images being established in the East, was also received at Rome, whilst in France, Germany, and England, all outward Worshipping of them was unknown. This Difference did not occasion any Contest nor Division between the Churches, when on a sudden a furious Storm rose in the East against Images, which was raised by the Emperor Leo, the Isaurian: He resolved to abolish them, and had Power enough to draw a great number of Bishops into his Opinion, and to get the Abolition of them to be order'd in a Council, and to be executed in the East. The Popes did always vigorously withstand that Decree, and maintained both the Use and the outward Worship of Images. The face of things was also soon changed in the East, and maugre the Opposition of several, the Empress Irene caused it to be decided in the Nicene Council, That Images might be had and honoured; and re-established the Use of them. This Decision had different Fortunes in the East, according to the Will and Humour of Princes; but at last it carried it. In the West the Italians received it; but the French, Germans, and English rejected it; and without any regard to all the Contests in the East, in which they had no hand, they continued in their ancient Usage, equally rejecting the Opinion of those that were for abolishing the Images, and of those that were for paying Worship to them. They worshipped the Crois, the Sacred Vessels, the Gospels, the Relicks, but would not Worship Images. They did what they could, that the West and the East might embrace their Discipline, yet without separating from the Communion of any Church. They continued long in this Practice, but at last they yielded, and the outward Worship of Images was brought in amongst them, as among the other People.

Some Reflections may be made upon these different Epochs, which will raise our Admiration of God's Conduct towards his Church in all these Changes. There's no doubt, but when Paganism was the prevailing Religion, it would have been dangerous for Christians to have Images or Statues, because they might have given occasion of Idolatry to them, who were newly recovered from it, and they might have given the Pagans reason to object to Christians, that they had, and worshipped Idols as they did: Therefore it was fitting there should be no Images in those first Ages, especially in Churches, and that there should be no Worship paid them. Afterwards, People being better Taught, more Learned, and farther off from Idolatry, there was not so much danger to propose them to them, and the Church being then more splendid in her Ceremonies, they served as Ornaments to Temples, and had their Use, because they set forth before their Eyes the Actions of the Martyrs. There can be no doubt but Pictures do not only bring to mind those we love, but moreover, representing their Actions lively, they make some Impression, and stir up Admiration and Esteem for them, and a desire of imitating them. Therefore, there being no more danger of Idolatry, why should not Christians have Images? Nevertheless they that knew their People to be prone to Idolatry still, and were afraid lest Images should draw them back to it, they might take them away; and this justifies the Proceeding of St. Epiphanius, Serenus, and of some other Bishops. But to go about to break them, to burn them, to reduce them to Ashes, and to look upon those that have them as Idolaters; wholly to condemn Painters, and the Art of Painting, as the Bishops of the Council of Constantinople have done; 'tis a piece of intollerable Imprudence and Folly. As to the Worship that was paid them, 'tis certain it cannot be referred to the Images, and that they have no Veneration for the Matter they are made of, nor for their Shape nor Form; but only they give some outward Signs before them of the Veneration they have for what is represented by them. This Worship being thus explained, as it hath been, by most of the Defenders of Images, cannot be taxed nor accused of Idolatry, as even those who do not use them, do not deny. But then it cannot be said to be absolutely necessary; and those who, for some private Reason, do not think themselves bound, for instance, to prostrate themselves before Images, to bow to them, to kiss them, to embrace them, to express their Reverence for that they represent; those, I say, are not to be condemned as Hereticks, who will not do so, for some particular Reasons, either because the Practice of their Church is otherwise, or because they fear those outward Duties should be mistaken for Adorations; or lastly, because they do not believe the Worship of Images to be sufficiently warranted, seeing, to prove it, they have alledged a great number of false Pieces, or of impertinent Passages that prove nothing.

Moreover, the Proceeding of those Persons could not be blamed, who, to settle Peace in the Church, and to unite two opposite Parties, of which the one were for breaking down all Images, and the other for honouring of them, endeavouring to make their own Usage to be received every where, and wrote to the Pope respectfully about it. This was the Temper of our French People, in the time of the Nicene Council, and after; thus they carried themselves; therefore they cannot be blamed. But then, the Worship paid to Images being well explained and understood by all, there being no more fear of Idolatry, the whole Church being agreed in the Acknowledging of it: It would be a piece of Temerity in a private Man, or some private Churches, to refuse to comply with this Usage, and condemn those that honour them. (yy) The

(yy) The Reformed Churches are to blame for Abolishing the Use and Worship of Images. All the Reformed Churches are not so great Enemies to the Images of Christ or his Saints; but as the Lutherans do still allow them in their Churches for Ornament, or as Helps of Memory, without giving them any Worship. So, were it safe, and not offensive to many good Men, could many other Churches also. But we have so great Experience of the People's proneness to Idolatry, and are so unsatisfied with the bowing down to them with a Relative Veneration, that we think it better to want the Historical, than run the Hazard of falling into the Idolatrous Use of them. And though we meet with very few of the Romish Communion, that are so moderate as our Historian, not to brand us with the odious and ignominious Name of Hereticks; yet we had rather with St. Paul, Worship God after the way that they call Heresy, than after that which Scripture calls Idolatry.

Reformed

Reformed Churches therefore are to blame, to go about to abolish the Worship and Use of Images. Only it were to be wished, 1. That great care should be taken to instruct the People well in the Nature of the Worship paid to Images, and to teach the Simple that it is not paid to the Images properly, but to Jesus Christ, and to the Saints represented by them; and that the Image is only the Occasion of it, in as much as before it, they give outward Signs of the Worship render'd to the Object. 2. That the Abuses and Excesses committed in this Worship should be avoided, such as those, of kindling a greater Number of Tapers before the Images, than before the Holy Sacrament of dressing and adorning them with so much Pomp, of Kneeling before them, sooner than before the Altar, where Christ's Body is kept, of believing some Virtue to be in one Image, which is not in another, &c. 3. Perhaps it were fitting to suffer no Image of the Trinity, nor of the Deity, all the most zealous Defenders of Images having condemned these, and the Council of Trent having spoken but of the Images of Christ, and of the Saints. Besides, they should be more careful to remove prophane Images, and all those that have something undecent and fabulous in them, from Churches.

The Council of Northumberland.

Council of Northumberland. Pope Adrian having sent two Legates into England, Gregory of Ostia, and Theophilactus, Bishop of Todi, they were very well entertained by the Kings, and the Bishops of the Country, and held a Council in Northumberland (Anno 787.) in which they made the following Canons to be received.

1st, That the Faith of the Nicene Council should be maintained, even to the laying down of their Lives in the Defence of it, if need were.

2d, That Baptism should be administr'd only according to the Order, and at the time appointed by the Canons, except in case of Necessity; that all Persons should be obliged to learn the Creed and the Lord's Prayer; that the Sureties should be put in mind of the Obligation they had taken upon themselves, to take care that those whom they undertake for at the Font, be instructed in the Creed and the Lord's Prayer.

3d, That every year two Councils should be held; that the Bishops should visit their Diocesses, and watch carefully over their Flock.

4th, That they should take care to see their Clerks live Canonically, and their Monks regularly; that they were different Garments; that Clerks be clad modestly and plain, and that of this, the Bishops, Abbots, and Abbesses ought to be Examples to such as are under their Care.

5th, That after the Death of an Abbot or an Abbess, they should chuse others in their Room, with the Bishop's Advice, and that they ought to be chosen out of the Monastery, if there were any fit for that Place; if not, that they are to be taken out of another Monastery.

6th, That Bishops shall Ordain none Presbyters or Deacons, but Men of an exemplary Life, and such as are able to discharge their Functions well; that they that are Ordained shall remain in the Title and Degree to which they are destined; and that no Clerk of another Church shall be received without Cause, and without Letters from his Bishop.

7th, That in all Churches Divine Service shall be perform'd at the usual time, and with Reverence.

8th, That the old Privileges granted to Churches shall be preserved; but if any of them be found made against the Canonical Constitutions, at the Suit and Request of wicked Men, they shall be abrogated.

9th, That Clerks shall not eat by themselves, and in private.

The 10th, That none shall come near the Altar, but reverently, and in decent Clothing; that the Oblations of the People shall be a whole Loaf of Bread, and not a bare Crust; that no Chalice or Paten shall be made of an Ox-horn, and that Bishops shall not undertake to judge in Secular Affairs.

In the 11th, Kings are exhorted to perform their Duty, and to Govern like Christians.

The 12th recommends Obedience due to Kings, and detests them that attempt any thing against their Life.

The 13th exhorts the Grandees and the Rich to do Justice:

In the 14th, Fraud, Violence, and Exactions are forbidden, and Concord, Peace, Union and Charity are recommended.

The 15th prohibits illegitimate Marriages upon pain of Anathema.

The 16th deprives Bastards of the Right of Succession.

The 17th enjoins paying of Tythes, and forbids Usury.

The 18th Ordains, That Christians shall perform their Vows.

The 19th prohibits certain Customs, which seemed to them some remainders of Heathenism, such as to Cut and Slash themselves, to decide Controversies by Lot, to eat Horse-flesh, &c.

The 20th enjoins Confessing of Sins, and receiving the Sacrament, and declares, That those shall not be pray'd for, who die without Confession.

These Articles were propos'd in Northumberland by Adrian's Legates, in the Presence of Osred II. King of Northumberland, of the Arch-Bishop of York, the Bishops, the Abbots, and Lords, who received them, and promised to keep them, and subscribed them. From thence they were carried ried to Offa, King of the Mercians, and read in his Presence, in an Assembly, at which the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury was present, with the Bishops, Abbots, and great Lords, who also received and subscribed them.

* The Council of Aquileia.

THIS Council was held by Paulinus Bishop of Aquileia, Anno 791. It begins with a long Explication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, and the Creed, in which it does chiefly establish these two Doctrines: That the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father, and the Son; and, That Jesus Christ cannot be called an Adoptive Son. After this Exposition of Faith come 14 Canons.

The 3d. against Drunkenness.

The 4th, against Womens cohabiting with Clergy-Men.

The 5th forbids Clerks to meddle in Secular Affairs.

The 6th forbids them Secular Employments, and Divertisements, such as Hunting, Musick, Dances, &c.

The 7th forbids the Suffragan Bishops of Aquileia to condemn a Presbyter, an Abbot, or a Deacon, without consulting the Metropolitan.

The 8th prohibits unlawful Marriages between Kindred, and clandestine Marriages. It ordains, That no Marriage shall be contracted but between Parties, which shall be known not to be a-kin; that there shall be an interval between Betrothing and Marriage; that the presence of the Priest shall be requisite; that Kindred, which shall be found to have Married within the Degrees forbidden, shall be separated and put to Penance; that, if it be possible, they shall remain unmarried; but yet if they will have Children, or if they cannot keep their Virginity, they shall be permitted to Marry others, and their Children shall be declared Legitimate.

The 9th forbids to contract Marriage before 14 Years of Age.

The 10th forbids a Man or Woman, which have been divorced for Adultery, to Marry again. It affirms, That Jesus Christ in this case permitted a Man only to put away his Wife, but not to Marry another; and confirms this Opinion by the Authority of St. Jerom. The common Practice was then contrary to this Law.

The 11th declareth, That Women, of what Condition soever, whether Virgins or Widows, which have promised to live Single, and have taken the Habit as a token of their Promise, though they have not received the Consecration from the Bishop, shall inviolably keep their Vow; and if they do secretly Marry, or suffer themselves to be defiled, they shall be punished according to the Rigor of the Civil Laws; and besides this, they shall be put asunder, and do Penance all their Life-time, unless their Bishop, considering the greatness of their Repentance, shew them some favour; but at the point of Death they shall not be deprived of the Vaticum. Nevertheless none of them is permitted to take the Religious Habit, without her Bishop's Advice.

The 12th forbids Men to enter, without great need, into the Monasteries of Virgins. It extends this Prohibition to all Ecclesiastical Persons under any pretence whatsoever, without permission from the Bishop; nay, it forbids the Bishop himself to go into them, unless in the Company of his Presbyters and Clerks. It ordains, That whether he goes himself, or sends any other, to Preach and Instruct Religious Women, the Person that does do it shall have Witnesses of his Carriage, that he may not be evil spoken of. It forbids Abbesses and Nuns to leave their Convents to go to Rome, or on any other Pilgrimages.

The 13th enjoins the keeping of Sunday, beginning from the Hour of the Vespers of the Saturday; and for the due Solemnization of it, it ordains, That they shall first of all abstain from Sin, and every Servile Work; that they shall wholly give themselves to Prayer, and shall be present at all the Divine Service. It ordains also, That the other Festivities shall be kept; and exhorts Presbyters to give good Examples to the People.

The 14th enjoins the paying of Tythes.

The Council of Ratisbone.

FELIX, Bishop of Urgel in Catalonia, being consulted by Elipandus, Bishop of Toledo, whether Jesus Christ, as Man, was an Adoptive or Natural Son? Answer'd him, That in this respect he was to be looked upon as an Adoptive Son. He maintained this Opinion by his Writings, and went about to spread it, not only in Spain, but also in France and Germany. But he found these Bishops opposite to his Error; for being met together at Ratisbone (Anno 792.) they condemned it with this Author, who was sent to Rome to Adrian, who confirmed the Sentence of this Synod, and made Felix to Recant. Alcuin, and Jonas Bishop of Orleans, speak of this Council. There is mention also made of it in the ancient Annals of France.

Council of Ratisbott.

The Council of Francfort.

COUNCIL OF Francfort. NOTWITHSTANDING the Judgment of the former Council, the Bishops of Spain persisted in their Error. Felix, who seem'd to have retracted it, maintained it anew, and Elipandus wrote a Letter to vindicate it. This Letter was confuted and condemned, First, by Pope Adrian; Secondly, by an Italian Council; and Lastly, by the Council of Francfort, who wrote to Elipandus, and the other Bishops of Spain, Letters, in which they prove, both from the Scripture and the Fathers, that Jesus Christ ought to be called the Natural Son of God, and cannot be called an Adoptive Son, there being no Division nor Separation of the two Natures. Charles the Great wrote also to those Bishops a Letter on purpose, wherein he presses them earnestly to retract their Error, and to follow the Sentiments of the Bishops. These four Letters are extant.

This Council of Francfort was assembled by the Order of Charles the Great, (An. 794) in the beginning of Summer. It was composed of 300 Bishops, or thereabouts, of France, Italy, and Germany. The Pope's Legates were at it, and it hath been long looked upon in France as an Universal Council. And indeed if National Councils in the East, and in Africa, have been stiled Universal; why should we not give the same Title to a Council made up of the Bishops of the principal Kingdoms of the West? In this Council, the matter of Images was debated, and they decided the Question started by Felix and Elipandus, about the Title of Adoptive Son, which they gave to Jesus Christ. They made 56 Canons.

The first is against the Error of those Bishops.

The 2d, upon Images.

The other 54 have been set down among Charles the Great's Capitularies.

A Council of Rome under Pope Leo III.

COUNCIL OF ROME under Pope LEO III. THE Affair of Felix of Urgel, which had already been brought to Rome under Adrian, was examined there anew under Pope Leo the Third, in a Council of 57 Bishops, held in 799, of which Felix makes mention in his last Confession of Faith; and of which some Fragments are extant.

LEO the Third relates in the first Action, how that Herefie, which was condemned by his Predecessor Adrian, was renewed, and began to spread.

In the 2d he describes how Felix, having been condemned at Ratisbone, had after that retracted his Error at Rome, and made a solemn Promise upon St. Peter's Tomb, "That he would no more call Jesus Christ the Adoptive Son of God, but did believe and call him His own Proper Son. He adds, That since that time he had relapsed into his Error, and would not submit himself to the Judgment of the Council of Francfort, assembled by the Order of King Charles, which had condemned his Error, and had threatned with Anathema those that maintain'd it, if they persisted in it. That not yielding to this Judgment in the least, he had written against Albinus, a Book full of Blasphemies and Errors, more horrid than those he had deliver'd heretofore.

In the 4th Action the Pope representeth it as a thing necessary, That those that are in an Error be exhorted again to endeavour to Reclaim them; and he Anathematizes Felix of Urgel, if he will not abandon the Heretical Doctrine which he teaches, viz. That Jesus Christ is the Adopted Son of God.

The Council of Aix-la-Chapelle, against Felix.

COUNCIL OF AIX-LA-CHAPELLE. IN the same Year Charles the Great invited Felix of Urgel to Aix-la-Chapelle, promising him, that he should have the liberty to propound to the Bishops, which he would call thither, all the Reasons and Allegations that he could produce to defend his own Sentiment, and that all the Proceedings in the determination of this Question should be managed with full Liberty: Which was done by the Acknowledgment of Felix himself in a Confession of Faith; for after he had alledged the Passages he had, Alcuin answered them, and did so clearly confute his Opinion by formal Passages of St. Cyril, St. Gregory, St. Leo, and other Fathers, and by the Authority of the Synod held at Rome a little before, that Felix did voluntarily abandon his Opinion, to embrace the Doctrine of the Church, and made an Orthodox Confession of Faith: Which was followed by those of his Adherents that were there with him.

To the Reader.

NOtwithstanding the Discouragement, which the most Ingenious and Learned Mr. Du-Pin hath met with, from the Heads of his own Church, for his Free and Impartial Account of the Doctrine of the Ancient Fathers of the First Eight Centuries; yet so Communicative is he of his knowledge, that he is not deterr'd from his Generous Design, but hath Presented the World with a Continuation of that so Good and Excellent a Work in this History of the Ninth Century: An Age, which was perplex'd with so many Intricate Controversies quite through it; that scarce any Person, but of his Great Abilities, and firm Judgment, would have dared to meddle with; yet he hath done it with that Clearness, Integrity and Faithfulness, that it is render'd one of the most Profitable Parts of Church-History. Indeed, the Roughness of the Way hath forced him out of his Former Method, and this part of his History appears in a Different Dress from his former; yet the same Ingenuity, Learning and Freedom, is so visible throughout, that no Man that hath any thing of the Critick, can doubt it to be his; and, the Different Method hath made the Controversies of the Age so clear, that that History, which in our Annals seems very confus'd, is, by his way of Management, rendered not onely Clear and Intelligible; but extremely Pleasant and Delightful, serving to give Light to some of the Greatest Contests, which have Disturbed the Church in these Latter Ages; particularly those of Predestination, and Grace, Christ's Real Presence in the Sacrament, &c. Some of the Controversies being such, as are at this Day Hotly Debated, between the Church of Rome, and the Protestants: it may be justly suspected, that our Author should Represent things most fairly for the Romish side, in which, by his Profession, he is engag'd, few being Impartial in such Cases; but, to the Just Commendation of Mr. Du-Pin's Integrity, it ought to be said, That he hath even in those Points, no farther inclin'd to his own side, than the zeal of the Contending Parties hath justly oblig'd him, and the Words of the Controversists will fairly bear, which is confess'd, are sometimes through the Heat of Contention, and ἀμετρία ἀνδολῆς. very Extravagant; but that ought to be imputed to the Author he is speaking of, not Mr. Du-Pin: So that considering the Temptation our Author had to be Partial in the History of this Century, more than in any of the Former, he is more to be admired for his Impartiality and Integrity in this, than in the Former Volumes.

As to the Translation, it was done from the Copy Printed at Paris; and there hath been more than ordinary care taken, that it be Faithfully rendred into plain, and significant English; and where-ever there occur'd any difficult Customs or Words, or any Expressions, contrary to the Doctrine of the Church of England, there is added in the Margin such Notes, as give an Explication of them, and discover both the Unsoundness of the Doctrine, and direct us to True and Orthodox Knowledge; whereby the History is fitted, not onely for the Reading of the Learned, but made profitable, and without danger, to the more Unskilful Readers.

In the Account of the Editions of the Fathers, Mr. Du-Pin is not so very exact, because his Design is only to give us an Account of their Writings, and a Censure upon them. out of the Best Editions of their Works, which he sometimes mentions: but since it is Useful to those that Read these Authors, to know the several Editions of them; an Account of the various Editions of the Works of the Ecclesiastical Writers of this Century is added; to gether with several Observations, for which the Reader's Kind Acceptance is all the Reward desired.

CHAP. I.

Containing an Account of what passed in the Eastern and Western Churches at the beginning of the Ninth Century about the Use and Worship of Images.

IN the beginning of the Ninth Century the Greek or Eastern Church enjoyed Peace, and the Worship of Images was received by the greatest part of the Members of it. The Emperor Nicephorus had chosen a Person of his own Name Patriarch of Constantinople in the year 806, who being of the same Judgment with the Emperor in the use of Images, joined with him in maintaining and upholding their Worship. Some little differences there were between them and Theodorus Studita about the restauration of Joseph, the Steward of the Church of Constantinople, who had been deposed by the Patriarch Tarasius, Nicephorus's Predecessor, but they were soon buried by the Death of the Emperor Nicephorus, which happened in the year 811; for Michael Curopalates, his Son-in-Law and Successor, made up the Breach between Theodorus, Joseph Arch-Bishop of Thessalonica, and Nicephorus. The Peace of the Church being thus restored again, the Emperor and Nicephorus unanimously used their utmost endeavours to promote Image-worship, and root out some reliques of the Manichees-Hereſie, yet remaining in the East. But the State of Affairs was much changed by the Death of Michael, whom Leo Armeniacus having slain, possessed himself of his Throne. This Emperor was a favourer of the * Iconoclasts, who having been much kept under, and scarce daring to appear after the Death of Constantinus Copronymus, made use of their Interest with him, and procured the banishment of their most inveterate Enemies, Nicephorus, Theodorus Studita, Nicetas, and several others, who were Zealous Patrons of Image-worship. After the Death of Leo, Michael, surnamed Balbus, who succeeded him in 820, mitigated the severity used against the Patrons of Images in the last Reign, and suffered several of them to return from their Exile, seeking out all fit means to bring the Iconoclasts and them to an Agreement, for which end he summoned both Parties to a Council. But the Image-worshippers refused to come to any Conference with their Adversaries, and boldly required him to restore the Bishops of their Judgment to their Sees again, and to depose the Iconoclasts in possession of them. Michael hearing this intolerant demand was very angry, and immediately declared, that he would have all Images removed out of the City of Constantinople, which he had hitherto permitted, but his resolution died with his passion, and he left all Men at liberty to worship Images, or not, as their Opinion was; yet he put out a Decree forbidding several Abuses then commonly practised in the Adoration of Images, as to remove Crosses out of the Churches, and put Images in their places, to adore the Images themselves, to adorn the Statues with Cloaths, to accept them as Godfathers and Godmothers to their Children in the administration of Baptism, to cut off the Hair of those that professed a Monastick Life over them, to mingle their Colours with the Elements and deliver them to the Communicants, to put the Body of J. C. between their Arms, and celebrate the Holy Mysteries in their presence in their Houses. And that this Edict might take the better effect, he commanded by the same, that the Images which stood in low places should be removed, and those that stood more high should be permitted to stand, and that they might be only of an Historical use, and not be adored by the more weak and ignorant, he ordered, that no Tapers should be burnt, nor Incense offered in honour to them. Michael having thus published this Decree, was very desirous to have it approved by the Western Church, and for that end resolved to send his Ambassadors to Rome with rich Presents; and that he might be the better received by the Pope, he made his application to Lewis, surnamed Benignus, by them desiring him to second his Petition, and assist him with his Interest. This Emperor thinking this a fit opportunity of settling the Peace of the Church, sent two Ambassadors, Trearcphus and Adegarus, to Rome with the Deputies of the Greek Emperor, to treat of this Affair. But the Romans could not be brought to compliance, no not by the Ministers of Lewis, whereupon they requested, and obtained leave of the Pope, that their Master might have this Question debated among his Bishops. With this Grant they returned into France to Lewis, who soon after in 824, summoned a Council of the most Learned and Judicious Bishops of his Realm, by whom this Question was thoroughly canvassed and examined. They first read Pope Adrians Letter to Constantine and Irine upon this subject, in which they found, that he did justly condemn those who demolished and defaced the Images, but thought that he had given too much encouragement to the Adoration of them. Then they re-examined what the Synod of Nice had done by means of that Letter, and found, that in the Acts of their Council they had not only established the Worship of Images, but had commanded them to be called Holy, by which they seemed to them to attribute some Holiness to them. They also read over the Book which Charles the Great had caused to be written against this Council, to which though Pope Adrian had given an Answer, yet they saw so little of solidity in it, that they looked upon nothing in it worthy of their notice, but the Name it bore. They complain of the Rigour and inflexible Humour of the Church-men in Rome and Italy, commend the Moderation of the Emperor, in avoiding the Heats of both Parties, and labouring so earnestly for the Peace of the Church. They commend the Prudence of the Ambassadors, who had obtained that that Question might be debated in France. They judged, there was no other way to make their design successful, but to make use of the Imperial Authority in settling what they should upon the most impartial Examination find to be true by plain Text of Holy Scripture, and the Judgment of the Fathers, which they would do modestly and sincerely.

In the last place, they made a large Collection of Passages of the Fathers, which they divided into 15 Chapters. The first was against those that held, that Images ought to be wholly removed out of Churches, and Pictures blotted out which were engraven on the Holy Vessels of Ministration. The 2d contains several Authorities out of S. Gregory the Great, shewing what profitable use may be made of Images. The 3d is several Testimonies of S. Austin against those that worshipped Images, and believed that they had any Holiness or Virtue in them. The 4th contains several other Quotations against the Worship of Images. The 5th proves by several Authorities, that Saints and their Reliques may have some honour given 'em, but not be adored, from whence they infer, that it is not lawful to burn Incense to Images. The 6th contains some Testimonies against them that defend the Worship of Images by the common usage of them, which hath been lately introduced. In the 7th they undertake to prove by several Passages of the Fathers, that even any Honour ought to be denied to Images, when it may give an offence to the weak. In the 8th and 9th they produce some Explications of the Fathers, to prove that the Text in Genesis, where 'tis said, That Jacob worshipped the Top of his Son Joseph's Staff; and another in the Kings, where 'tis said, That Nathan worshipped David, do prove nothing for the Worship of Images. The 10th contains a Testimony of S. Austins concerning the Holy Vessels. The 11th contains one touching the Cherubins. The 12th contains some, which evince that Adoration is due to God only. The 13th contains several about the Cross, which shew that a great difference is to be observed between that and Images, which is confirmed in the 14th by the practice of the Church, which hath always given some Respect and Reverence to the Cross, by making use of that Sign in Benedictions, Consecrations, and Exorcisms. In the 15th they exhort the Iconoclasts, who were for destroying all Images, not to take occasion from the former proofs to deface, beat down, or deride Images, since there is no Worship given, or intended to them; and to confirm the truth of these two Points, they recite several Passages of the Fathers. Last of all they compose a Copy of two Letters, the one to be sent in the Name of the Emperor Lewis to the Pope, to exhort him to further the Peace of the Church, by removing those abuses which had raised so many troubles in the East. In it, some were for intimating that he worshipped Images, but others would not hear of it. The other was such a form as they wished, That the Pope would write to the Greek Emperors. It begins with a long Exhortation to them, to submit to the Church of Rome, and pay all due respect to it; Then it advises the Emperors to restore the Peace of the Church, by permitting Images to be used, but not worshipped. And lastly, produces some most plain and remarkable Passages of the Fathers, to confirm and establish that usage of them, and none else, as Lawful.

Lewis the Kind sent this Consultation, and these Acts, to Pope Eugenius, by Jeremiah Archbishop of Sens, and Jonas Bishop of Orleans, and desired him in his Letter to confer with them about the Embassy, which he was to send into Greece. And that he might not give the Pope the least offence; which might serve for a pretence to fly off from this design, he says, That he did not send those Papers to him, to impose Laws upon him, or direct him, as a Master, but barely to represent to him the Judgment of the Church of France, and contribute all he could to the Peace of the Church Universal. He recommends them to him, prays him to accept them favourably, and beseeches him to use his utmost endeavours to re-unite the Greek Church, and to act with a great deal of Prudence and Caution in so difficult and nice a Point as this is. He desires also, that his Ambassadors might go along with the Pope's into the East.

At the same time he gave the Bishops, whom he sent Ambassadors to the Pope some private Instructions, in which he charges them to shew the Pope the Collections of Authorities made by the Council held at Paris, to examine the business of Images according to the permission he had given them. He commands them to manifest his design to the Pope about Images, to treat of that Question with all Candor and Moderation, and to be very careful that they did not provoke him by opposing him too plainly. Lastly, He orders them that if they could not compleat the business, when they had done all they could, they should ask him whether they might not go with his Ambassadors into Greece, to which if he consented, they should immediately send him word, that at their return they might find Amalarius and Haltigarius, who before they went should meet them at the place where they were to Embark.

What the resolution of the Pope was in this Affair is not known, but Lewis the Kind did send Haltigarius Bishop of Cambray, and Aufridus Abbot of Nonantula, to the Emperor Michael, who received them kindly. Nevertheless, it doth not appear that their Negotiation had any good effect, for things remained almost in the same state in Greece as long as Michael Balbus lived, and after his Death his Son Theophilus used great severity against the Image-Worshippers. But the Empress Theodora, the Wife of Theophilus, becoming Mistress of the Empire [in the Minority of her Son Michael] after the Death of her Husband, which happened in 842, called a Council at Constantinople, in which the Worship of Images was again restored, the Iconoclasts condemned, and Methodius made Patriarch of Constantinople in the room of John, who was of the Party of the Iconoclasts. And thus the Controversie of Image-Worship was ended in the East.

In the West, Claudius Clemens, a Spanish Priest, and Scholar of Felix Orgelitanus, and afterwards Bishop of Turin, imitating the Conduct of Serenus Bishop of Marseilles, took up a resolution not only to give no Honour to Images himself, but to remove them out of all the Churches of his Diocese, not sparing so much as the Cross it self. Theodemirus, [a Benedictine] Abbot, much disliked the Actions of this Bishop, being perswaded that Images, as S. Gregory taught him, were to be retained in Churches without giving them any adoration. Whereupon he wrote a Letter to him, exhorting him to change his Opinion and Management. Claudius was so far from following his Advice, that he wrote a defence of his Proceedings, wherein at large he confutes what he had said, and disproves the use of Images he contended for. We have nothing remaining of this Letter, but what Jonas Bishop of Orleans, and Dungalus the Monk, have preserved in their Consultations of it, by which it appears, that it was Written with much briskness and closeness, full of Ingenuity and Subtilty. [Melchior Goldastus, in the end of his Collection de Cultu Imaginum, hath put all the pieces of this Letter together, and in a small Treatise put them forth.]

This Writing of Claudius Bishop of Turin, being brought to the Court of Lewis the Kind, this Prince commanded the most Learned men, which he had about him, to examine it, who found great fault with it, and made a Collection of the most observable Assertions, which the Emperor sent to Jonas Bishop of Orleans to confute, as having several Errors and Falsities in them. Jonas began that Work, but Claudius Dying before he had finished it, he laid it aside, believing that his Error would be Buried with him. But Jonas hearing afterwards, that he had left some Writings behind him, wherein he revived the Error of Arrius, and that his Opinion did begin to spread in his Country, he thought himself obliged to finish that Work. He divided it into three parts; In the first, he maintains the use of Images, the Invocation, Intercession and Worship of Saints, and the Veneration that is due to their Relicks. He confesses, that the French did not Worship Images, reproved the Greeks, whom they supposed to Adore them, and asserts, That it is absurd to represent the Divine Nature under Corporal Figures. In the second, he maintains not only the Use, but Veneration of the Cross. In the last, he defends the Pilgrimages which were made to Rome out of Devotion, and answers, in the Name of Theodemirus, to that which Claudius of Turin had objected, viz. If that were a piece of Penance to go to Rome, why had he received, and did retain in his Monastery 140 Monks, who entred thither only to do Penance? He answered, say I, that there were several ways of doing Penance, and many different States. Men may either go into a Monastery, or go to Rome, with a design of doing Penance; but those that have once taken upon them a Monastick Life, ought to observe the Rule, and live according to the Order of S. Benedict, keeping continually in their Monastery. In these Books, he sets down the very Words that had been taken out of the Letter of Claudius of Turin, and after he answers them, and confirms his Answers with the most solid Proofs he could find, as the Testimonies of S. Jerom, S. Austin, S. Gregory, the Examples of the Saints, most evident Miracles, and the Practice of the Ancient Church. [This Work is Printed at Colon 1554. in the Hæresiology at Basil 1556. in Orthodoxogr. Tom. 2. p. 1526. and in Biblioth. Patrum, Paris 2d Edition, p. 688. Tom. 4. Two other Treatises also are extant written by Jonas, viz. De Institutione Laicorum, lib. 3. & de Institutione Regia, lib. 1. in Dacherius's Spicileg. Tom. 1. & 5. p. 57.]

Dungal's Treatise of Images.

Not long after the Deacon Dungal [a Monk of S. Dennis at Paris] wrote another Treatise against Claudius of Turin's Book, and Dedicated it to the Emperor Lewis and Lotharius. In it he opposeth three Points, which that Bishop had delivered in his Treatise, That we ought to have no Images; That we ought not to Worship the Cross; And that 'tis of no advantage to visit the Churches where the Bodies of the Saints are laid, or Honour their Relicks. He alledges a great number of Quotations of the Fathers, both Greek and Latin, as also of the Christian Poets, as S. Paulinus and Trudentius, to confute these Errors; and in the conclusion demands, how a Bishop, who hates the Cross of our Lord, can Baptize, Consecrate the Chrism, Confirm, Bless or Consecrate any thing, or Celebrate the Communion, since none of these can be done without making the Sign of the Cross? And how he can celebrate Divine Service without Invoking the Saints, and Honouring their Relicks? In this Treatise of Dungals there is little of his own, being nothing but a Collection of Passages out of Ecclesiastical Writers; what is his, is written in an harsh and unpleasant Stile. [Tis extant in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 196.]

The Opinion of Agobardus about Images.

Agobardus, Archbishop of Lyons, seems not so great a Favourer of Images, for tho', indeed, at first, he seemed to oppose the Adoration of them only, against which he alledges several places out of the Fathers; yet afterwards he maintains, That we ought not to make use of these Visible Signs to represent things Spiritual by, nor give them a Relative Worship in respect to the Saints represented by them. He affirms, that in the Ancient Church, the Images of Jesus Christ, and of the Apostles, were preserved rather for the love they bore to them, and to put them in mind of them, than out of Religion, or to Adore them. He is of Opinion, that it were fit, upon this occasion, wholly to suppress them, as being the Causes of much Superstition; in which he differs from the Judgment of the Church of France. [These things he chiefly asserts in his Book de Picturis, & Imaginibus, which, together with his other Treatises, are Printed at Paris, 1605. 8°. by the care of Papyrus Massionus, who found the MS. by chance in a Book-binders Shop. After which, his Works were Printed again at Paris with Calurius's Notes, 1686. 8°. 2 Vol. an Accurate Edition, but he endeavours to weaken his Authority against Image-Worship. This Edition is put in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 234.]

Wal. Strabo's
Judgment about
Images.

Walafrius Strabo, a Monk of Fulda, who wrote some time after Agobardus, speaks of Images with much more Moderation, for he not only approves the use of them, but allows some respect to be given to them. He observes, that we ought not to Honour them with a direct Worship, but he would have us not to condemn them. He distinguishes them into three sorts, some which signify some Mysteries, as the Ornaments of the Tabernacle and Temple, others which serve to perpetuate the remembrance of Sacred History, and others, which are made to impress upon our Hearts the love of those Persons which they represent, as the Images of Jesus Christ and the Saints. Whereupon he says, that the Devotion with which the Faithful are touched, when they look upon and contemplate them, is not to be blamed, since they draw so much profit from them; but he condemns the Superstition of those who honour them with Religious Worship. That as some Worship them more than they need, so others reject them imprudently, as a kind of Idolatry; That this Question had stirred up great troubles among the Greeks. That in the time of Pope Gregory II. the Emperor Constantine had removed all Images, but that under Gregory III. there had been a Council called at Rome against the Heresie, in which it was appointed, That the Images should be set up again in the Churches according to the Ancient usage. Lastly, That the complaint of the Greeks having been brought into France, had been confuted by a Synodical Writing by the Order of Lewis the Kind. That Claudius of Turin, who had revived that Error, died before he received a Confutation, That Christians being well Instructed, that none ought to be Worshipped but God, and that the Supream Honour, that is due to him, can't be communicated to Saints or Martyrs, whom they Invoke as Intercessors with him. These lawful and moderate Honours of Images are not to be rejected wholly. Non sunt omnimodis honesti & moderati Imaginum honores abjiciendi. That as we do not demolish Temples, altho' we believe God to be every where, and that he doth not dwell in them, so we ought not to deface Pictures as useless and noxious, because we are persuaded that we ought not to Worship them. In fine, he says, that they have many advantages; They are the Books of the Ignorant, and such as can't Read, and teach them those Histories that they could hardly know any other way. He concludes, that we ought to have and love Images, and not render them useless by condemning them, lest the irreverence which we shew them, should reflect upon them that are represented by them. Nevertheless, we ought to be careful not to corrupt of the Ninth Century of Christianity.

corrupt our faith by an excessive worship of them, for fear lest by rendering too great things Corporeal, we should give just ground of suspicion, that we do not sufficiently adore the Spiritual. [These things are spoken in his Treatise De Divinis Officiis, which is Printed at Mentz 1549, at Paris 1610, and in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 15. Other small Treatises of his are extant in Surius & Canisius Antiq. Lectio. Tom. 6. & Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 15.]

After this time I do not find that there was any Contest in the West about the Use and Worship of Images, which henceforward became common in France, Germany, and other Places. Let us now speak of the Authors chiefly engaged in this Controversy.

Nicephorus was but a Layman when he was chosen Patriarch of Constantinople in 806, after the Death of Tarasius. He had passed some part of his life at Court, but had been for some time before his Election retired from the World, yet was no Monk. He was no sooner in possession of the Patriarchal Dignity, but through complaisance to the Emperor Nicephorus, he restored in a Council Joseph the Steward, who had Crowned Theodora, whom Copronymus had Married, having Divorced his lawful Wife. Theodorus Studita and Plato violently opposed this Act, whereupon the Patriarch held a Council in 809, in which Joseph was not only confirmed in his place, but the second Marriage of Constantine was declared lawful by Dispensation, and every one that should maintain the contrary, was Anathematized. This Decision raised a great Quarrel between Nicephorus and Theodorus, who together with several Monks separated themselves from his Communion, and treated him as an Heretick, which Division continued till the Death of Nicephorus the Emperor. But the Emperor Michael put an end to this Schism, and made them Friends upon condition, that Joseph should be displaced, and that the Monks for the future should obey the Patriarch in all things that were not manifestly contrary to the Faith and Law of God. From this time Nicephorus and Theodorus were perfectly good friends, and suffered Persecution together for the Worship of Images. Nicephorus was driven out of his Church and banished in 814 by the Authority of Leo Armeniacus; and although under the Emperor Michael Balbus, many that were banished had liberty to return, yet he was allowed that favour, but remain 14 years in banishment, in which he died in 828. The Works which he hath left us are these that follow.

The first is a Letter written in 811 to Pope Leo III. which contains a long Confession of Faith. Baronius hath Printed it in Latin in his Annals, and 'tis also Printed in Greek with the Acts of the Council of Nice, and in Greek and Latin in Zonaras, and in the Collection of the Councils. In it Nicephorus speaks of himself with much humility and abasement; He says, that having passed the former part of his life at Court, and in Worldly Affairs, he had retreated into solitude, out of which he was drawn against his Will and made Patriarch of Constantinople, that finding himself burdened with the Weight of so great a Charge, he begged the Prayers of the Bishop of Rome, and all the Faithful of his Church: He commends the Piety and Faith of the Church of Rome, but adds, that New Rome was not at all inferior to Old in the purity of her Faith. To make proof of this Assertion, he joins a Confession of Faith to his Letter, in which, after he hath explained the Mysteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, and acknowledged the Invocation and Intercession of Saints, and Worship of Images, he declares, that he receives the 7 first Councils and the Doctrine of the Fathers. After this he excuses himself to the Pope, that he did not write to him sooner, and says that the cause was, that he was made to believe that the Church of Rome was at Enmity with that of Constantinople, but now the cause of the Division being removed, he doubted not but there would be a perfect agreement between the two Churches. In the conclusion he recommends to the Pope Michael the Archbishop of Philadelphia, who carried this Letter and some Presents with it. [This Letter is extant in Greek and Latine at Heidelberg, 1591, put out by Cornelius, and with Zonaras at Paris, 1620.]

Nicephorus's Abridgment of History is his most considerable Work, it begins at the Death of the Emperor Mauritius, and ends with the Reign of the Empress Irene. [ad an. 769] It hath been published in Greek and Latine by Petavius, and Printed in Latine and Greek in Octavo in 1616, and since put into the Bizantine History, Tom. 1. [It hath been since put out with Theoph. Simocitta's History, Paris 1648.]

Some attribute to him also a Chronology, which was heretofore Translated by Anastasius Bibliothecarius, [into Latine, and inserted into his History:] it contains a Catalogue of all the Patriarchs, Kings, and Princes of the Jews, Kings of Persia and Macedon, Roman Emperors according to the Order of their Successors, the Years of their Lives and Reigns, the Names of some of the Emperresses, Kings of Israel, and Jewish High-Priests, the Names and Years of the Patriarchs of the Churches of Jerusalem, Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch. This Work is very defective if it be Nicephorus's, some other Person hath added the Names of some of the Emperors, and some Patriarchs which lived after his Death: At first there appeared only a Translation attributed to Anastasius; afterward Camerarius made another Version, upon which Contius, a Lawyer at Bruges, made a Comment. Scaliger Printed it in Greek at the end of his Edition of Eusebius's Chronicon, [or Theaurus Temporum] and last of all F. Goar Printed them in Greek and Latin at Paris, 1652, with Szecllus's Chronicon. At the beginning of this Work is prefixed a Book, Entitled, Schometria, which contains a Catalogue of Canonical [Ecclesiastical] and Apocryphal Books, but 'tis not certain, that it is the Work of this Patriarch, [our Learned Bishop of Chester, Dr. Pearson, proves, that 'tis not Nicephorus's, but some other Authors coeval with him in his Vind. Ignat. p. 1.]

He made also four Treatises against the Iconoclasts, of which we have only a Latin Version composed by Turrian, which is extant in Canisius's Collection, [Tom. 4. p. 253.] and in the Biblioth. Patrum, [Tom. 14.] In the first, he supposes the Iconoclasts to have wrong Sentiments of the Incarnation, from whence he concludes, that they are justly condemned, because they have not followed universally the Doctrine of the General Councils, because they have demolished the Temples, beat down the Images, and treated them as Idolaters which worship them, inasmuch, that they have been the cause of the effusion of much Christian Blood; and lastly, because they have separated themselves from the Church. In the 2d Treatise, he endeavours to prove by 10 Reasons, that the Image of Jesus Christ ought to have more respect than the Cross. In the 3d Book he proves the Worship of Images by the Example of the Cherubims over the Ark. In the last, he shews, that the Image of Jesus Christ may be formed and painted, because according to his Humane Nature he is bounded, and finite.

He hath also 3 Books which he terms Antirrhethicks, against the Council held at Constantinople under Constantinus Copronymus, which abolished the use of Images, but we have only some Fragments of this Work put out by F. Combefis in his Second Volume of his Addition to the Biblioth. Patrum, [at Paris, 1648.] Lastly, we meet with several Canons which bear the Name of Nicephorus among the Greek Canonists. Glycas cites 51, which proves, that he made a great number. Coselerius hath published a Collection of 37, and another of 9, [inter Monument. Eccles. Græc. Tom. 3. p. 445.] These are the Contents of them, 1. If a Person by chance washes a Cloth consecrated to the service of the Altar, it loseth not its consecration; 2. A Man that hath been twice Married shall do Penance two years, and he that hath been Married thrice, 5 years; 3. He that remains but a small time within the Close of a Church shall not be punished for it, but he that continues long there shall suffer the punishments in that case provided; 4. The Gifts bestowed upon the Church by dead Men may be received, though they died intestate, if it be known that it was their design and intentions; 5. If the Feast of the Annunciation happen upon the Thursday or Friday * in the Holy Week, the Christians might upon that day eat Fish and drink Wine; 6. He that is consecrated an Abbot, and is a Priest, may ordain Readers and Subdeacons in his Monastery; 7. He may not ordain any Person who hath lived vitiously in his youth, although he be become a virtuous Man, because he that is consecrated to God must be without scandalous faults; 8. Such as are born of Concubines, or of 2d and 3d Marriages, may be ordained; 9. The Communion may be given to a sick Person, who is near death, although he be not fasting; 10. Bending of the Knee may be used in saluting upon Sundays from the Passover to Pentecost, but the ordinary kneeling may not be used; 11. A Priest doth not sin, if he consecrate the Sacrament, or burn a Taper for 3 Persons at once; 12. He may not consecrate a Chalice in the Vestry; 13. A Priest may not consecrate the Sacrament without hot Water, unless in case of absolute necessity; 14. A Monk who hath left his Profession, may resume it again, without using the accustomed Prayers; 15. Religious Persons may go within the Rails of the Altar to light the Tapers, or brush the Altar; 16. Monks may not labour upon Good-Friday, that they may not have a pretence of breaking the fast; 17. A Monk may forsake his Monastery in 3 cases, 1. if the Abbot be an Heretick, 2. if any Woman be admitted to it, or 3. if they teach the Children of Tradesmen in it; 18. Because these Youngsters will divulge the Secrets of the Monastery; 19. Monks that are put under Penances and Censures, may eat and pray with the rest, and have part of the Eulogies and Consecrated Bread; 20. On the Fasts of the Apostles and S. Philip the Monks in the Monasteries shall not eat till night, but they that labour may eat after-noon, and sup at night; 21. If a Nun have been forced by the Barbarians, if she hath lived an orderly and commendable life before, she shall be discharged after 40 days Penance, but if she hath lived a lewd and scandalous life, she shall undergo the Penance of an Adulteress; 22. He that hath put on the Habit of a Monk for any Temporal Ends, as to exempt himself from bearing Arms, and afterwards discovers his Hypocrisie, shall be put to Penance six score days, and afterwards may be admitted to the Communion; 23. Young Monks, who forsake their Monastery, must not be admitted to the Communion; 24. An Abbot ought not to pull off the Cowl from the Monks, nor endeavour it; 25. A Monk that hath put off his Habit, and will not resume it, ought not to be received to the Communion; 26. If a Sick Man desires Baptism, or a Monks Habit, they ought to be given him immediately; 27. A Monk that is a Priest ought not to celebrate the Mass without his Cloak; 28. A Confessor who hath had secret Sins discovered to him, ought to keep those secret Sinners from the Communion, mildly advising them to Repentance, and Prayer, and impose a suitable Penance upon them, but not prohibit them from coming into the Church, nor defame them; 29. As to Adulterers, Murderers, and other Notorious Sinners, who confess their Crimes, they must be kept from the Communion, endure a long Penance, and not suffered to remain in the Church longer than the Prayers for the Catechumens; but if their Sins are publick, they must go through the several degrees of Penance commanded by the Laws of the Church; 30. If a Layman do voluntarily confess his Sins, the Confessor may dispense with part of his Penance; 31. A Priest by the permission of his Bishop may use the Ceremonies of setting up the Cross; 32. The Sacrament may not be given to Usurers. 33. Monks must fast on Wednesday and Friday in Quinquagesima-week, but after they have eaten of the Fore-consecrated Elements, they ought to eat a little Cheese in opposition to the Heresie of the Jacobites and Tetradites. 34. If a Man that hath a Concubine will neither put her away nor marry her with the Blessing of the Church, his Offerings may not be received by the Church. 35. If a Monk leaves his Habit, Eats Flesh, Marries, and will not reform or repent, he must be Excommunicated, taken by force, and being put into his Habit, shall be shut up in his Monastery. 36. A Man that hath been guilty of Fornication ought not to be Ordained. 37. Such Persons as are reputed to be Fornicators need not to be avoided, but such as are known and proved such. These are the Canons of the first Collection, and the second are these, 1. Churches Consecrated by Hereticks are to be accounted no better than Common Houses; and therefore, though there be Singing before the Cross, yet there ought to be no Service at the Altar, burning Incense, Prayers, nor Lighting of Candles and Tapers. The 2d is about the Ceremonies in the restoration of a Monk, who returns his Habit which he had once left. The 3d declares, That we ought not to receive the Sacrament from the Hands of a Priest that doth not Fast on Wednesdays and Fridays. The four next are in the precedent Collection. The 8th says, That a Priest, Deacon, or Reader, Deposed, if he become a Monk, may say Grace in the Monastery. The last is the same with the 25th of the former Collection.--- Leunclacius in his Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws, hath Published 17 Canons attributed to Nicephorus, which are all in the former Collection, except the 2d which forbids Travelling on Sundays, the third, which rejects some Apocryphal Books, the ninth, which forbids Travelling in the Week after Easter, and Singing the Hymn called Beati Maculati the Saturday which is before Quasi-modo, the twelfth, which inflicts the Penance of Manslayers upon him that strikes his Father, the thirteenth, which allows Monks to Baptize, and the sixteenth, which says, That 'tis Lawful for Lay-men to Baptize Infants when a Priest cannot be had.

* The week before Easter was called the Holy Week, because of the continued Devotion of it. It was also called the Great Week, Δεξ τα μεγαλα η εβδομη τα εν αλλη αγιασα. Chrys. in Gen.

After these Canons, Catelerius hath also Printed a Canonical Letter of Nicephorus's, wherein he answers several Questions of Discipline propounded to him. The Questions and Answers are as follow. Quest. 1. Whether it be Lawful to Communicate, Eat or Sing, with those Priests which have been Ordained at Rome, Naples, or in Lumbardy, without Proclamation, or Title? He Answers, Yea, if it be through Necessity, and could not be done otherwise. Quest. 2. Whether they ought to receive Priests Ordained in Sicily out of the Province? He answers, Yes, for the same Reason. Quest. 3. Whether they may communicate with those Bishops in Prayer and Singing, who had communion with Hereticks, and go into their Churches? He answers, No, in no wise. Quest. 4. Whether they may do it if the Churches be not possessed by Hereticks, but Catholick Bishops? He answers, Yes, provided that the Catholick Bishop do solemnly open, and call Assemblies in them. Quest. 5. Whether the Orthodox Christians may go into the Church-yards, where the Bodies of the Saints lye, and Pray to them, when the Church-yards are in the possession of Hereticks? He answers, No, unless in case of Necessity, or to Honour the Saints Relicks. Quest. 6. How those Monks ought to be treated who have been invested in that Possession by Hereticks? He answers, They ought to be received to Communion by an Orthodox Priest after they have done their Penance. Quest. 7. How those Priests and Monks are to be dealt with who have Subscribed to Heresie? He answers, They ought to be received when they have done their full Penance. Quest. 8. Whether they may communicate with those Monks who hold communication with Hereticks? He answers, No. Quest. 9. Whether they ought to be put upon Penance, who have Eaten but once only with Hereticks? He answers, They ought to do Penance, and then they may be admitted with the ordinary Prayers and Ceremonies. Quest. 10. Whether such Lay-men, as have Subscribed to Heresie, and Communicated with Hereticks, may Eat with the Orthodox Laity? He answers, They may not, till they have done Penance. Quest. 11. Whether Men may be Baptized by a Priest, who hath held communion with Hereticks, when they cannot have an Orthodox Priest, especially in cases of danger? He answers, It is allowable for such Priests, in case of necessity, to Baptize, and Administer the Sacraments, which have been Consecrated by an unblameable Priest, to Invest Monks, to Read the Prayers at Funerals, and bless the Water at Epiphany. Quest. 12. Whether it be allowable to receive Schismatics? He answers, They ought to undergo Penance before they are received. Quest. 13. Whether a Priest, who hath been Ordained by a lapsed Bishop, may Exercise the Office of his Priesthood, after he hath done Penance, as a certain Priest in a Monastery now doth? He answers, There is no doubt at all but that he may not. Quest. 14. How they are to be dealt with who have Eaten with the Patriarch of Constantinople, who is a Heretick? He answers, They may be received, as he said before, after they have undergone the Penance imposed on them, and continue in the Order wherein they were. The Penance ought to be proportioned to the Persons and their Manners, which is sufficient, if it be undergone 80, or 120 days. Quest. 15. May Men have Society with those, who have communicated with those Priests, who have Eaten with the Patriarch, not knowing it? He answers, Their Ignorance excuses them. Quest. 16. Whether Orthodox Priests may impose Penance, as Hilarion and Enstasius have done? He answers, Priests may certainly do it, and 'tis probable Monks may do it, when there is no Priests. Quest. 17. Whether a Monk Invested, by a Deposed Priest, not knowing it, is rightly and sufficiently Consecrated? He answers, His ignorance makes him safe. This Letter was written by Nicephorus, in the place of his Exile to a Bishop of his Province, about the difficulties which then happened in communicating with the Iconoclasts.

Photius, who had read this History of Nicephorus, passes his Judgment upon it in the 66 Vol. of his Biblioth. in this manner. His Style, saith he, hath nothing superfluous or obscure, neither too much affected, nor yet too careless in his Words and Expressions, but yet he uses such choice and elegant terms, as might well become a good Orator. He avoided all new fangled Words, and uses only the common and ancient expressions, and is very agreeable and pleasing. In fine, he might be said to have out-done all that ever wrote History before him, had not his desire of Brevity hindered him from using necessary Ornaments for such a Work.

This Judgment of Photius is true, as to the History of Nicephorus, but the same commendation may not be given to his other Works, which have nothing in them Praise-worthy but their Method and Brevity. I except his Letter to the Pope, which is of a copious, but flat Style.

Theodorus Studita.

Next to Nicephorus, Theodorus Studita is the most considerable of the Patrons of Image-Worship; He was the Scholar of S. Plato, Head of the Monastery upon Mount Olympus, who voluntarily resigned the Government of it to him in 795. The same year Constantinus Capronymus having forced his Wife to enter upon a Religious Life, married one of her Maids of Honour named Theodotas, which Taresius the Patriarch was extremely against, tho' he did not oppose it with so much vigour as he ought, nor punished Joseph, the Monks Steward of the Church of Constantinople, who had married them; but Plato and Theodorus declared themselves openly against the Emperor, and separated themselves from his Communion, blaming the carriage of Taresius. The greatest part of the Monks followed their example, which angered Constantine so much, that he banished Theodorus with eleven of his Monks. After the Death of this Emperor, Theodorus returned to Constantinople, but not being able to stay in his own Monastery, by reason of the Inroads of the Barbarians, he was created Abbot of the Monastery of Studa at Constantinople, which was so called from the Name of the Founder. He restored this Monastery, put in his Monks, and enjoy'd it some time peaceably. But afterwards quarrelling with the Patriarch Nicephorus about the reitoration of Joseph the Steward, he was Banished a second time, because he would not approve the Decision of the Synod, which declared the second Marriage of Constantine Lawful. In his Exile, he continued his opposition to that Allegation violently; he wrote to Pope Leo III. about it, and treated them that maintained it as Hereticks, calling them Mechians, because they approved, or at least, tolerated Adultery. And whereas some of his Friends told him, that he could not properly impute Heresie to an Opinion that only respected Manners, he on the contrary held, That his Adversaries had made a Doctrine of it, by giving a Dispensation or Indulgence to an Adulterous Match, and pronouncing them Accursed who would not acknowledge it Lawful. They produced several Prefidents of Indulgences and Dispensations; in answer to which, to shew the present case to be very different from those they alledged, he wrote a Treatise of Dispensations or Indulgences. In 811 he returned from his second Exile, after the Death of the Emperor Nicephorus, and was reconciled to the Patriarch Nicephorus by the Mediation of the Emperor Michael and the Pope. In the Reign of Leo, he undertook the Defence of Image-Worship with much heat and vigour, and tho' the Emperor commanded him to be silent, yet he spake and wrote Zealously against a Synod held by that Emperor against the Worship of Images. This was the cause of his third Exile, in which he suffered much through the Cruelty of Leo, whom he provoked by Writing to his Fellows in his Exile, and animated them to maintain their ground. In the beginning of the Reign of Michael Balbus, in 821, he had Liberty given him to return to Constantinople, but having spoken too freely, he was forced to retire for some time. At the end of his Life, he visited the Patriarch Nicephorus in his Exile, and several others. He died in the Year 826. Michael his Scholar hath written his Life, who thus speaks of his Writings. "He wrote, or dictated several Works, which shew, That he was enlighten'd by the Holy Spirit. The first was a Catechise, which he calls a small one, tho' it contains 135 Sermons spoken to his Brethren, proper for each day, of which the Sentences are choice, and Terms elegant. In them he treats of Constancy, contempt of Adversity, Perseverance in the Austerities and Exercises of a Monastick Life, resisting of Temptations, and Courage under all Accidents of Life, with great Eloquence. He hath also another Work called a large Catechism, divided into three parts, containing the Rules and Discipline of a Monastick Life. He hath also composed a Volume of Panegyricks, or Sermons upon the chief Festivals of the Year, as well those of our Lord, as those of the Virgin and St. John, whose solitary and retired Life he commends in an Hymn by it self. He hath made a Piece also in Jacob Verse, in which he describes the Creation, the Fall of the first Man, the Murder of Cain, the Life of Enoch, and of Noah. In the same Book also, he delivers an History of the Heresie of the Iconoclasts. We have 5 Books of his Letters, in which he manifests a great deal of freedom in his Discourse, Zeal for the Truth, Care of the Church, and Constancy in Adversity. Lastly, He hath made a Dogmatical Treatise, in which he confutes the Sophisms of the Iconoclasts with solid Reasons.--- Of these Works, only these are come to our hands, A Latin Version of his 134 Sermons, made by Livineius, Canon of Antwerp, and Printed there by Miræus in 1602. The Version of several of his Letters, which Baronius had out of a MS. and caused them to be Translated by Sirmondus to put into his Annals, where they may be found between the Years 795 and 826. A Sermon in Latin upon the 4th Sunday in Lent, [which is in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.] A fragment of a Letter to Naucratus about the Hereticks, [extant in Gr. and Lat. in Allatus de consensu, l. 3. c. 13.] A Letter to a Monk who had left his Monastery, Translated by Turnan. A Sermon upon S. Bartholomew, turned into Latin by Dacherius in the 3d Tome of his Spicilegium. The Life of S. Plato, Head of the Monastery of Mount Olympus, published by Surius, December 6. [or 16.] Lastly, A Doctrinal Treatise about the Worship of Images, Printed at Antwerp 1556. in Lat. and at Rome in 1553. in Gr. with a Treatise of S. John Damascene of Images. Baronius hath also Printed the Testament or Will of this Abbot [in his Annals in 826.] which contains several profitable Admonitions and Directions for his Monks, [but chiefly a Superstitious Zeal for Image-Worship.

Worship. It is also Printed with his Sermons at Antwerp in 1602. and in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.] In the Greek Liturgies there are several Hymns, or Songs, in Honour of the Restoration of Images, attributed to him, but they are not his, being made since the Peace was restored to the Greek Church about that subject. F. Sirmondus hath Published the Works of this Monk in Greek and Latin at the end of his own Works. His Works are useful for Monks. He wrote in a plain and easy Style. He died in the Year 826. Nov. 11. His Life was written by his Scholar Michael, part of which is Published in Baronius's Annals, [Tom. 9.] The Relation of his Death made by Naukratius, who was another of his Scholars, hath been Published in Greek and Latin by F. Combefis, in Vol. 2. Auctuar. Biblioth. Patr. [Dr. Cave hath this Treatise in MS. and hath given us a Specimen of its trifling, and vain commendation of the Image-Worshippers, and in particular of Theodorus Studita, in Hist. Lit. p. 512.]

Joseph, Archbishop of Thessalonica, was the Brother of Theodorus, and his Companion in all his Troubles. He was Banished with him for opposing the Marriage of Constantinus Copronymus; the Restoration of Joseph the Steward of Constantinople; and for so zealously maintaining Image-Worship. He hath left us a Discourse in Honour of the Cross, [extant in Gretzer de Cruce, Tom. 2. p. 1200.] and an Epistle to Simeon the Monk, Printed in Baronius's Annal in 808. p. 10. [Dr. Cave, 22.]

There was another Theodorus [Surnamed Graptus] which flourished about the same time with Theodorus Studita, and was one of the most Zealous Patrons of Image-Worship; for the Defence of which, he died in Exile and Prison. He composed the Relation of a Conference of Nicephorus, Patriarch of Constantinople, with Leo, Published by F. Combefis, with a Narration of the Martyrdom of himself, and Brother Theophanes, who out-lived him, and was Bishop of Nicaea. There is attributed to him an Hymn in commendation of his Brother, which is found among the Greek Offices. [Theodorus also hath a Letter to Joannes Cyziconus, concerning his own and Brothers Sufferings from the Emperor Theophilus; Published also by Father Combefis, and a Book de fide Orthodoxâ contra Iconomachos, yet in MS.]

Theoſterictus, a Monk and Scholar of Nicetas, a Defender of Image-Worship, wrote the Life of his Master in a Panegyrick, recited by Metaphrastes, [and is extant in Surius, April 3.] It contains an Abridgment of the Persecutions raised upon the account of Image-Worship, from the Reign of Leo Isaurus to that of Michael Balbas. These are the chief of the Greek Authors which wrote in the beginning of this Age in the dispute of Images. [Besides the forementioned Authors, there were others engaged in this contest of Image Worship, tho' of less note in the Greek Church, as Sergius, called Confessor by Photius, who wrote an History against the Iconoclasts, of which we have nothing but the Name, and the Judicious Censure of Photius of it, in his Biblioth. Co. 67. 2. Michael called Syncellus, who endured much for Image-Worship with Theodorus Studita and Nicephorus, he hath left nothing in the defence of the Cause for which he suffered, but hath two Pieces extant, viz. An Encomium of Dionysius the Areopagite, which is among the Works of Dionysius, Tom. 2. And an Encomium upon the H. Angels and Arch-Angels of God, put out in Greek and Latin by F. Combefis in his Auctuar. Nov. Tom. 1. p. 1525.]

Claudius Archbishop of Turin, besides the Treatise of Images, of which we have already spake, hath composed several other Works. We have a Comment of his upon the Epistle of S. Paul to the Galatians, Printed at Paris in 1542. and inserted into the Biblioth. Patrum, [Tom. 14. p. 134.] Two Prefaces put out by F. Mabillon in Analect. Tom. 1. of which the first is to his Commentaries on Leviticus, and the other to those of his Epistle to the Ephesians. Trithemius makes mention of several other Commentaries of this Author upon many other Books of the Bible, viz. The Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, and all S. Pauls Epistles. His Comment upon Leviticus is in MS. in the Library of S. German de Prez. His Comment upon the Gospel of St. Matthew is a MS. in the Jesuits College at Paris, and in the Library at the Cathedral Church of Laon. His Comments upon S. Pauls Epistle to the Romans, and 2d to the Corinthians, are in the French Kings Library. That upon the Epistle to the Ephesians is in the Library of the Abby of Fleury, and upon Ruth in the Abby of Good-Hope. F. Labbs hath Published a short Chronicon attributed to this Author. Altho' Jonas Bishop of Orleans makes no great account of this Authors Commentaries, yet we may truly say, that in his Comment upon the Galatians, he explains the literal sense in a familiar and easy manner, agreeing with the true sense of the Apostle, without mixing any Allegories, and invented Senses far from the Subject. Jonas of Orleans, and Dungal, accuse him of reviving not only the Errors of Eustathius, and Vigilanthius, touching the Relicks and Honour of the Saints, and that of Felix Orgelitanus about the Incarnation, but also that of Arrius about the Trinity; yet Jonas owns, that it doth not appear by his Writings, but that he received it from Persons worthy of Credit.

Dungal, besides his Treatise against Claudius of Turin, hath a Letter directed to the Emperor Charles the Great, about two Eclipses in the Year 810. 'Tis extant in the 10th Tome of Dachserius's Spicilegium.

The End of the Controversy about Images.

C H A P. II.

A Relation of the Dispute concerning GRACE and PREDESTINATION.

The beginning of the Controversie about Predestination and Grace.

OF all the Questions that were Debated in the Ninth Age, there was none that was managed with more heat and noise, than this of Predestination and Grace. Gottschalkus, a German Born, was the first Broacher of it. He was brought up and Instructed in the Monastery of Augia [the Rich] or Richenou, and was Surnamed Fulgentius. He made Profession of a Monastick Life in the Monastery of Orbez in the Diocess of Soissons, and was Ordained Priest at forty years of Age, not by his own Bishop, but by Rigboldus, Suffragan of the Church of Reims, which made his Ordination to be suspected. Hincmarus describes him to us as an ill-bred, turbulent, and fickle Man, and assures us, that this was the sense which the Abbot and Monks of his own Monastery had of him. Nevertheless, they could not but say but he was an Ingenious, Studious, and Subtile Man, but very troublesome and over-reaching.

Rabanus's Book against Gottschalkus.

About the Year 846, he had a Mind to leave his Monastery, (Hincmarus accuses him of doing it without the leave, or consent of his Abbot) and go to Rome to visit the Holy Places there. From thence he went into Dalmatia and Pannonia, where, some say, under a pretence of Preaching the Gospel to the Infidels, he began to spread his Doctrine of Predestination. But however this was, at his return he tarried some time in Lombardy, in an Hospital Founded by Count Eberard, and had a Conference in 847 with Notingus Bishop of Vienna, concerning the Predestination of the Saints to Glory, and of the Wicked to Damnation. Notingus offended at this Opinion of Gottschalkus, not long after being come to meet Lewis King of Germany at a Town of Switzerland, told Rabanus Archbishop of Mentz, who promised him to confute this Error of Gottschalkus in Writing, by the Authorities both of H. Scriptures and Fathers, which promise he not long after performed in a Treatise, which he sent with two Letters, one to Notingus, and the other to Count Eberard, both against the Error of Gottschalkus. In his Treatise he accuses this Monk of teaching that Predestination is so made, That every Man, that is Predestinated to Life, can't be Damn'd; and every Man Predestinated to Damnation can't be Sav'd. He chiefly opposeth this last assertion, and shews, That such a Predestination is contrary to the Goodness and Justice of God, who desires the Salvation of all Men, because nothing is more Unjust than to Damn a Man who can't avoid Sin. He owns that Predestination is asserted in H. Scripture, but in this sense, That all Men being fallen by the Sin of the first Man into a State of Damnation, can't be delivered but by the Grace of Jesus Christ, who was provided, and Predestined from all Eternity. That those, who are freed from the State of Damnation, and to whom both their Original and Actual Sins are Pardoned by Baptism, are afterwards Damned for the Sins that they commit wilfully and freely; And that it is by the foresight of their Evil Will, that they have been Predestined; But that the Predestination of God, whether to Good or Evil hath no influence upon Man to necessitate him either way. That God Predestines things only, because he foresees after what manner they will happen. That he doth not Predestine Evil, but foresees it only, whereas he both foresees and Predestines Good. That out of the whole Mass of Mankind, he through meer Grace, accepts those, whom he pleaseth to Salvation, and leaves others, yet not Ordaining them to Damnation, but for their Sins, which he foresees they will commit freely. These are the Doctrines which Rabanus lays down against Gottschalkus in his Treatise to Notingus, which he endeavours to prove by Texts of Scripture, and Testimonies of S. Austin, Fulgentius, and Gennadius, whose Book concerning the Doctrines of the Church, he cites under the Name of S. Austin. He repeats the same thing in his Letter to Eberard, and exhorts that Lord not to suffer any contrary Doctrine to be Taught in his Dominions. [This Treatise and Letters, are Printed alone at Paris 1647. by the care of Sirmondus.]

Gottschalkus against Rabanus.

Gottschalkus seeing himself thus attacked by an Adversary of great Credit and Authority, resolved to set himself about the Explication of his Opinion that he might make him understand his true meaning, and rectify his mistake concerning him. Wherefore he went into Germany in the beginning of the Year 848, and finding that the difference between himself and Rabanus might be reduced to three Questions, 1. Concerning the Predestination of the Wicked; 2. Concerning the Will and Death of Jesus Christ to save all Men, even Infidels themselves; and 3. Concerning Free-will, he Composed a Treatise, in which he opposes the Opinion of Rabanus under these three heads.

He

of the Ninth Century of Christianity.

I I

He reproves him for asserting, That the Reprobate are not Predestined to Damnation. He maintains, That God foreseeing that they would live and die in Sin, hath Predestined them to Eternal Torments. Concerning the 2d Article he says, That we must understand that Text of Scripture, God will have all Men to be saved, of those that are actually and effectually saved, because there is none that God will have to be saved but shall be saved; And that Jesus Christ hath not poured out his Blood to redeem those that are finally and eternally Reprobated, but only for the Elect. Upon the 3d Question, which concerns Free-will, he reproves Rabanus for taking up the Opinion of Gennadius, the Scholar of that unfortunate Man Cassian, instead of S. Austin's. We have not this Treatise of Gottschalcus, but some fragments of it cited by Hincmarus. Gottschalcus propounded these three Questions to the most able men of his time, praying them to resolve them agreeable to the Doctrine of S. Austin. He wrote particularly to Lupus Servatus, Marcellus Abbot of Prumiers, and one Named Zonas.

In October 848, there was a Council held at Mentz, in which Gottschalcus was accused by Rabanus. Gottschalcus presented a Confession of his faith, in which he declared, That he owned and believed before God, and his Saints, that there were two sorts of Predestination. The one of the Elect to Eternal Happiness, and the other of the Reprobate to Damnation, because as God hath immutably Predestined the Elect before the Creation of the World through his free mercy to Life Eternal, in like manner hath he immutably Predestin'd the Reprobate for their wicked Actions to Eternal Death. This expression shews plainly, what was the state of the Question between Gottschalcus and Rabanus. Rabanus accuses him for believing, That God Predestined men to Damnation, without any provision of their wicked Works. Gottschalcus in this Confession of Faith owns, That no Man is Predestined to Damnation but for his Crimes. Propter ipsorum mala Merita. Rabanus acknowledges, That God knows those, that are in a state of sin, and hath decreed to punish them with Eternal Death, because of their Sins; but he will not call it Predestination to Death, lest Men should think God also Predestines them to Sin. And Gottschalcus resolutely maintained, That there was a Predestination to Death as well as to Life. They both agreed, That Predestination to Life was free and gratuitous; That God hath chosen, whom he pleaseth, out of the Corrupt Mass of Mankind, to Salvation, and through meer Mercy, and fits them for Salvation by his Graces and all other necessary means for that end; As also they both confess, That God deals after the same manner with the Reprobate, whom he condemns to Eternal Death only for their Sins, of which he is no manner of cause. But Rabanus would by no means allow this last Decree, Predestination to Evil, and Gottschalcus stiffly maintained it. The Bishops of this Synod not being able to persuade him to change his Opinion, or way of speaking, condemned him; and knowing that he was a Monk of the Diocese of Soissons, which was subject to the Archbishop of Reims, where he was Ordain'd, they sent him to Hincmarus, to whom Rabanus wrote in these words. We know, that a certain Vagabond Monk named Gottschalcus, who says that he was Ordain'd Priest in your Diocese, being come from Italy to Mentz, is found to teach a wicked and pernicious Doctrine concerning Predestination, maintaining that as there is a Predestination of God for the Good, so there is also for the Evil; and that there are many Persons in the World that can't return from their Errors, nor turn from their Sins, because of the Predestination of God, which constrains them to suffer their Death, to which they are determin'd, being in their own Nature incorrigible, and worthy of Damnation. This Man being known to maintain this Doctrine in the Council lately held at Mentz, and being found incorrigible, we have thought fit, according to the Order and Advice of our most Pious King Lewis, to send him to you, after we had condemn'd him and his pernicious Doctrine, that you may keep him within your Diocese, out of which he is gone contrary to the Canons. Do not suffer him to teach his Errors any longer, nor seduce the People; for I perceive, he hath already seduced several Persons, who are become less careful of their Salvation, since he hath put this Opinion into their Minds, saying in them, Why should I labour for my Salvation? If I am Predestin'd to Damnation I can't avoid it; and on the contrary, whatever Sins I am guilty of, If I am Predestin'd to Salvation I shall be certainly saved. Thus have I, in a few words, shew'd you his Doctrine, which you may better, and more fully understand from his own Mouth, and act according as you think fit against him. [This Epistle is also Printed by Sirmondus at Paris, 1647.]

Hincmarus was descended of a Noble Family in France, and brought up in the Monastery of S. Denis [near Paris] where he wore a Canons Habit, according to the Custom of the Monks of that Monastery. Being come from it, he was a long time at the Court of Lewis the Kind, but returned again to the Monastery of S. Denis, after it was reformed by Hildum in the year 829 [then Abbot of it.] He accompanied him into Saxony, whither he was Banished, but did not about the Faction of Lotharius with him, but, on the contrary, continued faithful to Lewis the Kind. When this Prince was restored, Hincmarus, who had a disposition very proper for such Affairs, abode at Court to serve the King and Bishops about Ecclesiastical Matters. After some time spent thus about Worldly matters, he returned again to his Retirement in the Monastery, but he staid not long there, for in May 844, he was chosen Archbishop of Reims, ten years after the Deposition of Ebbo, in whose place Fulcus was put, and presided almost 9 years in it, and was succeeded by Noto, who held the See but a year and half. He was Consecrated in a Synod of Archbishops and Bishops held at Beauvais, after he was desired by the Clergy and People of the Metropolis of Reims, with the consent of the Abbots, and Monks of his Monastery. A year after his Ordination, the Emperor Lotharius, who favoured Ebbo, (who was Deposed merely because he had put Lewis the Kind to Penance) and hated Hincmarus, whom he looked upon to be wholly for Charles the Bald, King of France, endeavoured to revoke the Sentence passed upon Ebbo, and reitore him, supposing, that some did not acknowledge Hincmarus to be their Lawful Bishop of Reims. To this end he wrote to the Pope, and obtain'd a Letter from him, wherein he gave Gombaldus, Archbishop of Rouan, Commission to examine this Affair with such Bishops of the Kingdom as he should think fit to choose, who should meet at Treves, and having cited Hincmarus, examine him before the Popes Legats, who should be present. After Easter, Hincmarus went to the Council, and waited for the Popes Legats till the time appointed. After this, Gombaldus Summoned Ebbo, who not daring to appear, left Hincmarus in quiet possession of the Archbithoprick of Reims. He governed that Church almost thirty years, for he Died not till Dec. 21. 882. He had a great share in all the Affairs which were transacted in that time in the Church of France, and as to his own particular, had no small difficulties to extricate himself out of, in which he shewed a great deal of Wit, Diligence and Courage. Being endued with these Qualities, he was pleated to meet with to good an occasion of signalizing himself by the Condemnation of Gotteschalculus; he first heard him himself, and resolved with himself to present him before the Council of Bishops, that was to meet with the Parliament appointed by Charles the Bald at Queirey, which was the Kings Palace in the Diocess of Reims. And that things might be done in the better order, he gave Rhotadus notice of it, to be present there, because he was the properest Judge of Gotteschalculus. Wenilo Archbishop of Sens was present with Hincmarus, and 11 other Bishops, among whom were Rhotadus Bishop of Soissons, two Suffragan Bishops, of whom Rigboldus, who Ordain'd Gotteschalculus, was one, and three Abbots, viz. Paschasius Rahbertus Abbot of Co by, Bavo Abbot of the Monastery of Orbez, where Gotteschalculus was a Monk, and Hilduinus Abbot of Hautevilliers, Gotteschalculus having been questioned in their presence, and maintained the same Opinions which he had done at Mentz with the same obstinacy and incorrigibleness, casting some reflexions upon his Enemies, was condemned for an Heretick, degraded from his Priesthood, which he had received from Rigboldus Suffragan of Reims, without the knowledge of his Bishop; and moreover, for his obstinacy, was condemned, according to the Laws, Canons of the Council of Agatha, [Can. 38.] and Constitutions of S. Bennet, to be beaten with Rods, and Imprisoned, as the Bishops of Germany had before ordered. Hincmarus fearing that Rhotadus had not power enough to see this Sentence executed, and so he might escape, took care to shut him up in a Monastery of his Diocess. The Judgment passed against Gotteschalculus was delivered in these words.

Queirey.

Brother Gotteschalculus, know that thou art deprived of the Sacred Office of Priesthood, which if thou hast ever received, you have managed contrary to all Rules, and Profaned, to this day, by thy Manners, disorderly Actions, and corrupt Doctrines; And that by the Judgment of the H. Spirit, of whose Grace the Priesthood is a special Gift, and by the Virtue of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, thou art utterly forbidden to officiate in any Office of it for the future. Moreover, because thou hast intermeddled with Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, contrary to the Profession and Duty of a Monk, and in contempt of the Ecclesiastical Laws, we do, by Virtue of our Episcopal Authority, Order and Command, that according to the Rules of the Church, thou be severely Scourged, and afterwards shut up in a close Prison; And that thou may never Teach again to infect others, we enjoy you perpetual silence in the Name of the Eternal Word. Thus was Gotteschalculus Condemned in the presence, and with the consent of his Bishop, Abbot, him that Ordain'd him, and of those who were well affected to the Doctrine of S. Austin, which shews that he had an injury.

Gotteschalculus Punished and Imprisoned.

This Sentence, which was pronounced against him, was Executed with the utmost severity, for he was Whipped in the presence of the Emperor Charles, and the Bishops, till he cast out of his own Hand, into the Fire, a Book, wherein he made a Collection of such Texts of Scripture, and Testimonies of the Fathers, as proved his Opinion; after which he was kept close Prisoner in the Monastery of Hautevilliers in the Diocess of Reims. Nevertheless, Hincmarus, that he might induce him to change his Opinion, sent him a Writing, in which he explained those places of the Fathers on which he grounded it, and proved, That God indeed knows them that shall be Reprobated for their Sins, but hath Predestinated no Man to Evil; and that his prescience is not the cause of any Mans ruin. He sent him also a second Instruction, but could not remove him from it.

Two Confessions of Faith made by Gotteschalculus.

Hincmarus also wrote to Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, an Account of what had passed in the Judgment given against him, and consulted that Bishop what he ought to do in case Gotteschalculus should continue obstinate, whether he should deprive him of the use of Divine Service and the Communion. What answer Prudentius gave to these Questions is not known, but about the same time Gotteschalculus composed two Confessions of Faith, one more long, in which he confesseth, That God hath not Predestinated any Man to Sin, or Evil, but to Good only, which is of two sorts, viz. The Rewards of his Favour, and the Effects of his Justice; That he hath freely Predestinated his Elect to Life Eternal, and also hath Predestined the Devils and Reprobates to Eternal Death. He grounds this Doctrine upon Consequences taken from Holy Scripture, and assertions of the Fathers, chiefly of S. Austin, Gregory, Fulgentius, and Isidore. That this Predestination is but one in it self, though it hath respect to two Objects, as Charity towards God and our Neighbour is the same Charity in two parts. To prove himself no Heretick, he brings a Definition of an Heretick out of S. Cassiodorus, viz. He is a Person, saith this Author, who either out of Ignorance, or Contempt of the Law of God, defends a new Error, or follows an old one. He affirms, That he holds nothing but what is agreeable to the Doctrine of H. Scripture and the Ancients; and consequently, the Definition of an Heretick doth not touch him. He doubts not but he can prove the Truth of his Doctrine in an Ecclesiastical Assembly, if he could be so happy as to have the liberty given him, not only by his Discourses, but also by casting himself into scalding Water, Pitch, or flaming Oyl, without suffering any harm. He explains himself more clearly in his shorter Confession of Faith, declaring, That God hath not Predestinated the Devils, and Wicked men, to Damnation, but for their Sins, which he foresees that they will commit. [These two Confessions are Published by Bishop Ussher, in his History of Gottschalcus. Dublin 1631. Hanov. 1662.]

Hincmarus also wrote a Treatise in defence of his Opinion, to the Monks and Recluses of his own Diocese, against the Opinion of Gottschalcus. † Ratramnus a Monk of Corby, finding some things in † Or Bertram. it that deserved a Confutation, wrote a Letter against that Treatise. Prudentius Bishop of Troyes wrote also a Book, in which he explains his sense of the Questions of his time, and sent it with a Letter, which served instead of a Preface to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, and Pardulus Bishop of Laon. He attributes much to the Authority of S. Austin in these Matters, and in the body of his Book, he sets down a Collection of several passages to that purpose out of him and other Fathers. He doth not disagree from Gottschalcus's Opinion concerning Predestination, declaring notwithstanding, that God is not the Author of Sin, and that he Damns no body but for their Crimes, which deserve so great a punishment. He follows also the Principles of S. Austin about Grace, Free-will, and Gods Will to save all Men. This Writing was sent to Hincmarus and Pardulus, after the Council held at Paris about the end of the year 849, in which this Matter was mentioned, but not debated, or determined in a full Council; nevertheless the part, which the Bishops began then to abett, made it so famous, that Charles the Bald being at Bourges on his return from the Siege of Toulouse, would have it cleared, and gave Order to Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, and Ratramnus Monk of Corby, to write upon that Subject. Hincmarus, for his part, wrote about it toward Easter in 850, to Rabanus Archbishop of Mentz, who had engaged in this Contest. He sent him the Treatise which he had written to the Monks of his Diocese against Gottschalcus, with the Writings of some other Authors, which seemed to favour him, and among them the Book of Prudentius Bishop of Troyes. Rabanus having seen them, would not undertake to answer the Testimonies alledged by that Bishop, but collected some Texts of Scripture, and Sayings of the Fathers, about Predestination, to prove that the Word Predestination was never taken in an ill sense; That God inclines no Man to Evil; That he is not the Author of our Damnation; That he doth not in a proper sense harden the Heart of a Man, but only permits it to be hardened, either by their own sinful actions, or by the malice of the Devil. That he made not Death; That he repents not for the destruction of the Angels; That he would have all men to be saved. In the conclusion, he advises Hincmarus to hinder men from debating such sort of Questions, which may cause much scandal among the Faithful, and not to suffer Gottschalcus either to Write or Teach. He wonders that that Monk should be allowed to Write, who is culpable both in Practice and Doctrine. He advises him to suffer him no longer to Write, or Dispute for the future, till he hath retracted, and much disapproves of their letting him enjoy Communion. He accuses him of Obstinacy and Pride, and looks upon him as incorrigible. He reproves him for wishing that he might pass through Vessels of scalding Water, Pitch, or flaming Oyl, and says he never heard of the like; That it was to tempt God; That he could not endure that punishment if, it were Ordained for him, and therefore 'tis a great piece of presumption to wish for it, and desire it.

Nevertheless Lupus Servatus, which I do not believe to be a different Person from the Abbot of Ferrara, who was consulted about the Questions of the Times, 1. By Gottschalcus; 2. By Hincmarus; and lastly, by Charles the Bald, made a Book to clear the three Questions. which Gottschalcus had propounded to the Council of Mentz, about Free-will, Predestination to Evil, and about the Death of Jesus Christ for all men; in which Treatise he lays down, and proves these Principles and Doctrines; That God, who only is immutable, hath made Spiritual Creatures subject to change, who may do either Good or Evil. This appears in the fall of the Angels, who being Created good, fell into Sin by the depravation of their Nature, whereas others of them adhering voluntarily to God, have received this as the Reward of their Fidelity, That they can't fall from their Happiness. That Man who is compounded of a Material Body and Spiritual Soul, was created in a State of Happiness, exempted from Death, and perfectly free; That he could do good by making use of the assistance of God's Grace, and Sin by abandoning of it, but having sinned freely, he is under an unavoidable necessity of Dying, and subject to the irregular Motions of Concupiscence. That the whole Nature of Man hath been corrupted by the Sin of the first Man, and all descended of him are fallen with him. That Men have some sort of freedom, but can't choose that which is good but by the assistance of the Grace of Jesus Christ. That our Liberty only inclines us to Evil, and so we may ruin our selves, but no Man can save himself, or free himself from the power of Sin, but by the help of Jesus Christ. That they that are Damned, are so by Gods Justice; and they that are Saved, are so by his gracious Mercy, because by the Sin of the first Man, we all deserve Damnation, and that no Man could escape it, if God did not save him through pure Mercy; tho we must not inquire, Why God shews Mercy on some and not on others: That he could do so to all, but it is his good Pleasure to save some, and leave others in the Mass of Perdition: That when he says in Scripture that he will have all Men to be saved, it ought to be understood only of those that are actually saved. That the Word All is capable of exceptions, and may mean all sort of Men; That Predestination is gratuitous, and not upon the account of our Merits. That it is in pursuance of this Election, that God gives his Grace to some, by which they are able and sedulous to do good, and leaves others to their corrupt wills by not assisting them. That he is not the Author of the Evil Men do, but Man ought to impute it to himself, or rather to the Devil, who leads him into it. That God foresees both good and evil, but he predestines nothing but the good, that he only suffers the evil and punisheth it; That what God hath predestined shall infallibly fall out, but that his Predestination importeth no necessity; That no Christian ought to think himself of the number of the Reprobate, Men ought to labour to live well, that their punishment may be the less. He passes over lightly the Question about Predestination to Damnation. He confesses that he meets not with that word used in that sense in Holy Scripture, and that the great Lights of the Church abhor that expression, for fear Men should think God hath made his Creatures to punish them, and that he unjustly condemns Persons, who have no power to avoid Sin or Damnation. That nevertheless, it happens, that as God hath ordained the punishments which are consequent upon the Sin of the First Man, so he hath ordained the punishment of Sinners, yet so as they themselves are the Authors of their own Damnation. That since Men agree in the Matter, they should not quarrel about the Words and Expressions, seeking to get an unprofitable Victory. Lastly, he passeth to the 3d Question concerning the Extent of the Redemption of Jesus Christ, which he calls the Measure of his Blood. He lets down and approves of the Expressions of Scripture, which import, That Jesus Christ died for all Men, and hath redeemed all, but he says, that they ought to be understood as he hath explained them, in which it is said, He will have all Men to be saved. He adds, that it may be said as a probability, that he died for all, that are in his Church, and receive the Sacraments, whether they be in the number of the Elect, or Reprobate. He says that some Men condemn this Opinion of Blasphemy; that he himself should be of that Judgment, and should believe that God punishes some of the Reprobate the less for the Merits of Jesus Christ, but that the Apostle speaking of the Merits of Jesus Christ, that they are of no worth to those that are circumcised, it seems reasonable to believe that the Death of Jesus Christ is of no worth to those that are indeed Baptized, but relapse and die in their Sins and Infidelity; That nevertheless, that he may not render himself odious to them who hold that Jesus Christ died not only for the Good, but also for Sinners, he lets down a Passage of S. Cyprian, which seems to favour that Opinion, and may unite all divided Minds about that Matter. Jesus Christ, saith that Excellent Bishop, by his Doctrine and Holiness died for all, not only for the faithful, but all the World, if all do not believe he hath done whatever was requisite on his part to save them. After these Remarks Lupus concludes, leaving every one to their liberty to choose what Opinion they judge truest. He confirms his Opinion, which he laid down in this Treatise, by a Collection of Passages out of S. Austin, S. Jerom, and some others of the Fathers upon these three Questions. [This Treatise of Lupus is extant, Printed by Sirmondus in Holland 1643, and 1650, and with the rest of his Works at Paris 1664.]

Lupus's Letter to Hincmarus

After Lupus had composed this Tract, he sent a Letter to Hincmarus and Pardus, which contained an Abridgment of his Doctrine. In it he says, that the truest Opinion is, that Predestination in regard to the Elect is a Preparative Grace, and in respect to the Wicked is a withdrawing of the same Grace; That all Men are born in a State of Damnation, and God takes such out of that State, as he pleaseth by his Mercy, and leaves others in it by his Justice. So that it is true that God predestines those he hardens, not by impelling them into sin, but by not keeping them from it; That this Predestination doth necessitate neither the good, or evil, because both have a freedom of will, which excludes a fatal necessity; That the Elect, who receive from God the power to will and do, do freely perform all that conduceth to their Salvation, and the Reprobate who are forsaken by God, do voluntarily, and not against their wills, those actions which deserve Eternal Punishment; That no Man is so silly, as to say, that there is a necessity, where the will hath a command, although it be assisted by the Grace of God, or left by his just Judgment. But as to Infants, who dye before they come to the use of Reason, it cannot be said that their will hath a part in their Salvation, or Damnation, because they are either saved by the Grace of Baptism, or damned by the Sin of the First Man. [This Letter is among his Epistles Printed by Massenus at Paris, 1588, and in the forementioned Edition of all his Works.]

It is easie to see, that this Author, although he was of S. Austin's Judgment, yet manages his Expressions so warily, that he may offend neither side, but bring them to an Agreement, but it happened to him, as it ordinarily does to them that are Mediators for Peace, though they carry themselves never so wisely and cautiously, and have often Reason of their side, they are disliked by both Parties at variance. Gottescalcus, a very rough and severe Man, blamed the mildness which Lupus Servatus had used, and the moderate Expressions which he had brought. That Man (saith he) in a Letter written to Retramnus, is so cautious and moderate, and hath so cunningly answered the 3 Questions of which he speaks in his Book, that he agrees not thoroughly with either Party. Hincmarus and Pardus were not better satisfied, but accused him of Opinions unworthy of the Mercy and Goodness of God, which forced him to write his Letter to Charles the Bald to explain his Judgment more clearly in that Dispute. It contains an Abridgment of his former Treatise concerning the Fall of all Men in Adam, concerning the Election which God is pleased to make of some; concerning Predestination and Reprobation; concerning the Assistance which God is pleased to give Men through his mere Mercy; concerning the just desertion of the Wicked; concerning the loss of Man's free will to do good; concerning the Efficaciousness of Grace, and the Death of Jesus Christ for all Men. Which last Article he explains more largely, for after he hath cited some Passages of S. Austin to prove, that when he says, that Christ died for all Men, he ought to be understood of those only that are saved; he opposes the saying of S. Chrysostom against them, but we must observe, that he is not of his Judgment, by taking notice, that he talks with all due respect to him, that he did not well understand that place of Scripture, and that he hath not proved his Opinion by any Testimony. Lastly, he rejects the Authority of Faulstus, as a Bishop who was in an Error, and says, that we must keep to the Judgment of S. Austin, S. Jerome, and other Fathers, commended by Pope Gelasius, and advises the Emperor to call a Council of Learned Men about these Questions, who may examine whether he speaks Reason, or no. [This Letter is also extant in the fore-mentioned Editions of his Works]

Jesus

At the same time Retramnus, a Monk of Corby, who had also been consulted by the Emperor Ratramnus or Bernardus, composed a Treatise of Predestination divided into two Books. The first contains a Collection of Passages out of the Fathers, that all that is done in this World, is done by Order and Direction of God's Providence. That although he be not indeed the cause of the Crimes, and Sins of Wicked Men, yet they are also subject to the Order of Providence, and serve for the Execution of his Will. That God hath foreseen from all Eternity what shall befall the Good and Evil, the Elect and Reprobate. That the Predestination of the Saints is the Effect of his Mercy, and the number of the Elect can neither be increased, nor diminished, nor altered. That all the holy thoughts and good actions of the Saints, by which they acquire themselves happiness, are the effect of the mere Grace of God. That our Free-will is too weak to do any good, unless it be strengthened by the Grace of God, which helps us to do good. That this Grace operates in us to will and to do, and that it is necessary for the beginning of Faith and Prayer. In the Second he treats of the Predestination of Sinners, and speaks by the by of the Predestination of the Elect. He shews by the Testimonies of S. Austin, Fulgentius, and other Fathers, that God hath not predestined Sinners to sin, but to the punishment of their Sins, and Eternal Torments. He rejects the distinction of those who say, that Eternal Punishment was ordained and appointed for Sinners, but they were not predestined to it. He maintains that this Predestination did not impose a necessity of Sinning upon any Man, though those that are Elected by the mere Mercy of God, shall be infallibly saved; and those whom God leaves in the Mats of Perdition, shall be infallibly damned for their Sins which they voluntarily commit. He adds, that we ought to attribute all the good we do to God, and all the evil we do to our selves, because God never inclines us to evil, but only leaves us to the motions of our Wills. At the end of these Books Retramnus prays the Emperor not to publish them, before these Questions be fully examined and cleared, that they might know which Opinion to follow. He adds, that if this Book displeaseth the Emperor, that he would correct it, or shew him what corrections he would have made in them. [This Treatise is published by Maugius in Collect. Script. Tom. 1. p. 29. and in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 13. p. 442.]

The Emperor gave these two Books of Lupus and Retramnus, to Hincmarus and Pardulus to examine them, who opposed them to Amalarius, a Deacon of Treves, and Johannes Erigina Sutor, whom they had ordered to write upon this subject. We have not the Work of Amalarius, but only that of Johannes Sutor, which, according to the Genius of that Author, is full of Scholastick Subtleties and Distinctions. He begins with this Position, That every Question may be resolved by four general Rules of Philosophy, viz. Division, Definition, Demonstration, and Analysis, and the rest of his Work is not less Logical, for although he cites several Passages of S. Austin yet he chiefly proves his Assertions by Scholastical Reasons and Arguments. He rejects the double Predestination, and proves that Predestination doth not impose any necessity. He maintains, that Man is absolutely free after the Sin of Adam, and that although he cannot do good without the Grace of Jesus Christ yet he doth it without being constrained to it, or forced by the Will of God, by his own free choice. He adds, that Sin, and the Consequence of it, the Punishments with which it is rewarded, being mere Privations, are neither foreseen nor predestined by God. That Predestination hath no place but in those things which God hath preordered in order to Eternal Happiness, and supposeth that this Predestination ariseth from the foresight of the good use of our free-will. To prove what he had asserted, that Eternal Punishments are mere Privations, he affirms, That the Torments of the Damned are nothing but privations of Happiness, or the trouble of being deprived of it; so that according to him Material Fire is no part of the Damned's Torments. That there is no other Fire prepared for them but the fourth Element, through which the Bodies of all Men must pass, but that the Bodies of the Elect are changed into an Ætherical Nature, and are not subject to the power of Fire, whereas on the contrary the Bodies of the Wicked are changed into Air, and suffer Torments by the Fire because of their contrary qualities; and for this reason 'tis, that the Demons, who had a Body of an Ætherical Nature, were maled with a Body of Air, that they may feel the Fire. Thus did Philosophy lead this Author to many wild and extravagant Notions and Opinions. [This Piece is put out by Maugius in his Vind. predest. & Gracie Tom. 1. p. 103.]

Wernis or Gerele, Archbishop of Sens, having read this Work, gathered out of it several Propositions, which he put under 19 Heads according to the number and order of the Chapters of Sutor's Work, and sent them to Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, who having read them, found, as he thought, not only the Errors of Pelagius in them, but also the Impiety of the Calixtians. Whereupon he composed a Book to confute him, in the Preface of which he accuses Joh Sutor of following of Pelagius, Calixtus, and Fulian, to resist the Grace of Jesus Christ, and the Justice of God.

God, to deny Original Sin, and many other Blasphemous Doctrines. Yet John Scotus did not deny Original Sin, and acknowledged the necessity of Grace in his Work, but Prudentius thought he found such Principles in it, as seemed to abet the Doctrine of Pelagius. Prudentius answered John Scotus's Book Chapter by Chapter, and opposed the Judgment and Authority of the Fathers to his false Reasonings. [The 19 Heads gathered out of Scotus's Book, are Printed in Bishop Usher's History of Gottschalcus, cap. 19.]

After he hath rejected his Method of deciding all things by the four Rules of Logick, and shew'd, that Questions of Divinity are not so to be handled, he confutes Scotus's Opinion of Predestination, Free-will, and the punishment of the Damned, and proves the contrary Opinion. He distinguishes Predestination from Prescience, and shews that Prescience extends to Sin, but not Predestination. He distinguishes Predestination into two sorts, the one by which God hath freely Predestined the Elect to Grace and Glory, the other by which he hath Destined the Wicked, whose Sins he foresees, to Eternal Damnation. He proves that Man, since the Fall, hath not a full Liberty and Power to do good, and that he cannot do it, not only without the Grace of Jesus Christ, but that his Grace excites, impels, and enables him to do it. He maintains, that no Man affirms that Grace wholly destroys Free-will, or that Predestination imposes any Necessity upon men, but he observes, that Free-will is nothing else but a voluntary choice, and unconstrained acting of the Mind. He, in the last place, decides the extravagant Opinions of Scotus about the Torments of the Damned, and propounds the Doctrine of the Church, and Fathers, who acknowledge, that Damnation consists not only in the privation of Happiness, but Tortures of Fire. [This confutation of Scotus's Book by Prudentius is extant in Mauguinus's Vindict. Gratia, Tom. 2. p. 191. and some parts of it are in Bishop Usher's Hist. of Gott. c. 8. & 11.]

Florus's
Writings against Scotus.

The same Extracts of Scotus's Book being sent to the Church of Lyon, they employed one of their Deacons, named Florus, to write against him. This Deacon some time before delivering his Opinion concerning Predestination, said, in his Discourse, That God hath freely Predestinated the Elect to Grace and Glory, but he only foresees the Crimes and Sins of the Reprobate, and afterwards Ordains, and Predestines them to Damnation; and concerning Free-will, that 'tis so much weakened by the Sin of the first Man, that it can do no good thing unless it be enlighten'd, and strengthened by the Grace of Jesus Christ. The same Doctrine he teaches us in his Tract against Scotus, and lays down a twofold Predestination, or rather Predestination under a twofold respect. 1. A gratuitous Predestination of the Elect to Grace and Glory, and a Predestination of the Reprobate to Damnation, for their Sins which they commit by their own Free-will; and maintains, that tho' our Free-will can choose that which is good, yet it never would choose, or do it, if it were not assisted by the Grace of Jesus Christ. And to explain this, he makes use of the comparison of a Sick Man, of whom we may say, that he may recover his health, although he hath need of Physick to restore it; or of a Dead Man, that he may be raised, but by the Divine Power. In like manner, saith he, the Free-will being Distempered, and Dead, by the Sin of the first Man, may be revived, but not by its own Virtue, but by the Grace and Power of God, who hath pity on it, which Florus understands not only of that Grace, which is necessary for actions, but of that also which is necessary to seek Conversion by Prayer, and begin to do well; Hitherto neither Prudentius, nor the Church of Lyon, nor any other Author, had declared themselves for Gottschalcus. They contented themselves in thus treating upon the Question, without engaging on either side. Florus, who in his first Discourse thought him much to blame, seems to doubt in his answer to Scotus, where in the 4th Chapter he says, That he knows not how that unhappy Monk was Condemned and Imprisoned; adding, That if he was really guilty of Heresie, as he is accused, it were Just, that according to the Custom of the Church, all the Churches of the Kingdom should be acquainted with his Condemnation, and the cause why he was Condemned. [This Treatise is extant in Mauguin's Vind. Gratia at Paris 1650, p. 575. and in the Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 8.]

Amalo's
Gottschalcus.

Nevertheleis, Amalo Archbishop of Lyon wrote a Letter to Gottschalcus about the same time, in which it appears, that he thought him faulty. In the beginning of it, he gives him the Title of Most Dear Brother, (although he says, he knew him an Enemy to Brotherly Unity) because Christian Charity ought not to cease or be cooled, even towards those that are our Enemies. He tells him, that he loves him most heartily, and wishes as well to him as to himself; But he says, that having read and examined his Writings, which he had sent him by a Brother, he had disputed with himself a long time whether he should answer him, because he had been accused a long time of dangerous attempts against the Church, and had still held his Opinion, although he was condemned by the Authority of a Council for his Obstinacy; That he was afraid lest he should be thought imprudent in holding correspondence by Letters with a Person who had been condemned by his Brethren; but on the other side, he took himself obliged by Christian Charity, to answer his Request. Lastly, That being convinced by the admonition which Jesus Christ propounds in the Parable of the Samaritan, that it is our Duty to comfort our Brethren in affliction, and to have such a sincere Charity towards our Brethren, as to live in Unity, and communicate one with another in all Offices and Services of Love, after he had begged God's Grace to enable him to give him necessary Comforts and Instructions, and to fit his Mind to receive them with Meekness and Humility, he looked upon himself to be under obligations to answer him. And first of all, he advises him to be of a peaceable and submissive Spirit. He tells him, that he had heard with grief, that he had began to spread abroad his new Doctrines, and to raise Disputes about unprofitable Questions in Germany.

That

That since he had seen one of his Writings, in which he explains his Opinion at length, and endeavours to prove it by the Testimonies of the Fathers, and H. Scripture. And lastly, That he had lately received a Writing of his directed to the Bishops, or rather made against the Bishops who were concerned in his Condemnation. That by his Writings he perceived, that his Tenets were dangerous; so that he thought he could not do a better piece of Service, than to set down in short those Propositions that seemed contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, and confute them by Scripture, and the Judgment of the Church. That he ought to keep firmly to that Doctrine, if he will be one of the Living Members of Jesus Christ. That he did not send this Work directly to him, because he was Excommunicated, but to his Metropolitan, that he being moved with compassion toward him, may admit him again into the Unity of the Church upon the abjuring of his Errors. After this Preface he saith, that this Proposition which he hath delivered displeaseth him. That all those that are redeemed by the Blood of Christ cannot perish; because he says, 'twill then follow, that either no Man that is Baptized can be Damned: Or, that those who are Baptized, and Regenerate by Baptism, and yet afterward perish, are not truly Baptized, or Redeemed by the Blood of Jesus Christ; now both are false, and contrary to the Scripture, and Faith of the Church. In the second place, he is angry that he is perswaded that the Holy, and true Sacraments of the Church, Exorcism, Baptism, Confirmation, Unction, and the Eucharist, are given to no purpose, to those that are in the number of the Reprobate, because they are not Redeemed by the Blood of Jesus Christ, without which the Sacraments are no better than useless Ceremonies. He maintains, that they do effectually work upon those that do not persevere. In the third place, he can't approve that which he holds, That Infants and Adult Persons, who are Baptized, but are not of the number of the Elect, are not true Members of the Church of Jesus Christ. In the fourth place, he doth not like his words, where speaking of Predestination, he saith, That the Devils and Reprobates are Predestined to Damnation, so that none of them can be saved. He affirms, That this is an horrible Blasphemy against God, and an Impiety, that makes Sin necessary. That God, indeed, foresees the Sins of Devils and wicked Men, without which they would be necessitated; and that he hath not Destined them to eternal punishments but upon the prevision of their Sins, which he knew they would commit freely. Fifthly, He abhors the Proposition delivered by Gotteschalow, that the Damned are as infallibly, and irrevocably Predestined to Damnation, as God is Infallible and Immutable; And he laughs at that which he adds, That the Bishops ought to exhort the Reprobate to Pray, that tho' their Damnation is irrevocable, yet their Torments may be less. Sixthly, He can't endure what he hath said, That God and his Saints rejoice at the Eternal Condemnation of the Reprobates. He says, That God rejoices in their Destruction, but not for it; That he rejoices not in their Evil doing, but in the Exaltation of his own Justice. Lastly, He condemns his behaviour toward the Bishops, by railing at them, contemning them, and calling them, that are not of his Judgment, Hereticks and Rabanists. He chides him for being unconcerned at the separation of the Church which he had suffered a long time, for exalting himself against his Spiritual Fathers the Bishops, for submitting to no Authority, nor desiring a peaceable Decision of the Controversie in hand with humility, and for thinking himself the only Person enlightened and inspired by God to confirm the Truth. He exhorts, advises, and conjures him to reflect upon himself, return from his Errors to the Church, and submit himself to the Bishops; and gives him, with a Fatherly goodness, such other Counsels as were proper for him to follow. [This Epistle is Printed by Mauguin in Collect. Script. 9 Sæculi, Tom. 2. and with his other Works, at the end of Agobardus's Works put out by Balarus at Paris 1666.]

Some have pretended, that this Writing of Gotteschalow, which Amolo confutes in this Letter, was Forged by Hincmarus, whom they accuse of this Forgery, but they have no proof of it, and the two conjectures upon which they ground the Acculation are too weak to raise any Credit upon, so that 'twould be a very rash thing to condemn so illustrious an Archbishop of so scandalous a Crime without better proofs, especially since we do not find any of the Favourers of Gotteschalow to have laid any such thing to his Charge. It is most reasonable for us to believe, that Gotteschalow composed this Writing privately, and sent it to Amolo Archbishop of Lyons, supposing that that Church would be more favourable to him, because it was of S. Austin's Judgment about Predestination and Grace; but since he strain'd his Opinions to too high, and faulty a pitch, and drew hard and unwarrantable Consequences from them, 'tis no wonder that Amolo gave him such an Answer, which is written with all the insinuating Art possible to appeale Hincmarus, and oblige this Monk to make him satisfaction. There is another small Piece, which is annexed to this Letter to Gotteschalow, which is thought to be a fragment of the Letter written at the same time to Hincmarus, in which he treats of Grace and Predestination. In it he teaches us to believe, that 'tis Grace by which men are saved, which is not given them according to their merits, but through the pure and free Mercy of God, which moves them to good not by Necessity, but by their Will and Love. That this Grace is given to Infants in their Baptism, to Adult Persons, and all the Faithful, in all their Actions, Thoughts and Words that are good, because there is no good but is the gift of God. That his Prescience is certain, and that he foresees how all things will come to pass; so that the number of the Elect is known to him, and cannot be changed. That the Predestination of the Just is of free Mercy, and is not done in consideration of their Merits, but that he hath justified and sanctified by his Grace in time, all those who have been Predestinated from all Eternity through his meer Mercy, that they may be holy and just. That Perseverance is a Gift of God ; That our Free-will is so much weakened by Sin, that it can't raise it self to the love of Truth and Justice, if it be not excited, healed and strengthened, by the Grace which frees it. He adds, That this Doctrine needs not to cast us into Despair, but gives us confidence in the Mercy of God ; That that which is found in S. Austin, and some other Fathers, that God hath Predestinated the Wicked to Damnation, and eternal Death, ought not to be understood as tho' God constrained them by his Power, or Predestination, to be Sinners, and so Damned, but in this sense, That God hath Ordain'd by his just Judgment eternal punishments, for those that he foresaw would continue in the Mass of Perdition by the Sin of Adam, or who would make themselves subject to Damnation by their own voluntary Sins. [This fragment of Amolo's Epistle is also extant in the forementioned Edition of Agobardus.]

Hincmarus's Letter to the Church of Lyons.

Hincmarus seeing Amolo thus in a manner to condemn Gotteschalvus, thought it convenient to write to the Church of Lyons upon that subject. Whereupon he wrote a Letter to him, giving him an account after what manner Gotteschalvus was Judged and Condemned in two Councils, and comprises his Doctrine under five chief Heads. 1. That God hath Predestined from all Eternity, those whom he pleaseth to the Kingdom of Heaven, or Eternal Damnation. 2. That they that are Predestined to Eternal Death can't be Saved, and those that are Predestined to Eternal Glory can't be Damned. 3. That God will not save all Men to be Saved, and that the Apostles Words ought to be understood only of those that are Saved. 4. That Jesus Christ came not to save all Men ; that he hath not suffered for all Men, but for those only who are saved by the Mystery of his Passion. 5. That since the Fall of Man, no Man can keep himself safe by his own Free-will from the commission of Sin. Pardulus Bishop of Laon, wrote also to the Church of Lyons upon the same subject, telling them, that of those six Persons who had written upon these Questions, none of them had sufficiently cleared them. Some join to these Letters one of Rabanus's written to Notingus. [Pardulus's Letter is not extant to the Church of Lyons.]

The Answer of the Church of Lyons to
by Remigius.

When these Letters were carried to Lyons, Remigius, who succeeded Amolo in the Archbishoprick of Lyons, wrote, in the Name of his Church, an Answer to three Letters that were brought him. He abandons Gotteschalvus, and condemns the rashness and temerity of that unhappy Monk. but defends the Opinion of S. Austin about Predestination and Grace ; and after he hath produced seven Rules, and several Passages of the H. Fathers, to prove that the Prescience and Predestination of God are infallible, he concludes, that none of those whom God hath Predestined from all Eternity, to his Glory, through his free goodnets, shall perish ; and none of those, whom God hath Predestined to Eternal Death, through his just Judgment, having foreseen their Sin, shall be saved. not that they are unavoidably Sentenced to Damnation, by the power of God, but because they deserve it by the malignity of their Will, which is unconquerable, and unchangeable. This was the sense of Remigius, upon two of the Propositions which Hincmarus reproved Gotteschalvus for. Concerning the third, which respected the Will of God to save all men, he says, that 'twas a difficult Doctrine to resolve ; but 'tis certain, that all are not saved, and that all that God Will shall come to pass. How then can he Will all men should be saved, when 'tis plain all men are not ? He finds this difficulty resolved four ways in the Writings of the Fathers. 1. They say, that All is put in that place for all sorts of Persons. 2. For all those that are saved, because there is none saved but by him. 3. Because he inspires his Servants with desires and wishes, that all men should be saved. 4. That he will have all men to be saved, as Creator, because he hath given them a Will by which they may be saved, if they please. He saith, that this last Explication hath many difficulties attending it, because God doth not expect the Will of Man to save them, but prevents them with his Grace. Yet he confesses, that according to some Fathers it may be said, that God, as Creator, would have all Men to be saved, but at the same time, as he is Judge, he will not have them saved who dye in their Sins, either Original or Actual. So that 'tis not true, that God doth not accomplish his Will that he hath, that all Men should be saved, because of the opposition of Man's Will to his, but because he will not have it fulfilled himself, that he may punish their Sins. He adds, that these things are so obscure and intricate, that he is not willing to contend much about them, nor define them rashly, but contents himself to hold what is certain, without engaging in these fruitless Disputes. Nor is he more willing to deliver his Opinion rashly about the 4th Question concerning Christ's dying for all Men, but would search diligently in the Scripture what he ought to believe. Wherefore, after he has recited several Texts which prove that Jesus Christ died for the Redemption of Men and of the World, he saith, that in the Order of Reconciliation, the first Men are the Elect, of whom none can perish. The second are the Faithful, who have received their Baptism sincerely, and whose Sins are Pardoned by Grace, but do not persevere. The third are such as yet remain in their Infidelity, but shall soon be called through the Mercy of God. The fourth are those that will remain always in their Infidelity, and shall not receive Grace, either for a time, or in the end. He acknowledges and proves, by the Authority of the Fathers, that Jesus Christ died for the three first, but maintains, that properly speaking, he died not for the Wicked, who were Dead before his coming, without the knowledge of the true Religion, nor for Infidels, which are Born since, or shall be Born in future Ages. He adds, nevertheless, that he finds some Fathers, who assert that Jesus Christ died for those Infidels that were never Baptized, nor Converted ; which expression, he says, may be Tolerated for Peace sake, though it be not exact nor true. That Men ought not to condemn one another in Questions of this nature, because there may be some things which we know not because of our ignorance. Concerning the last Proposition, he says, that he much wonders that any Man should hold, that since the fall of Adam Men can't use their free-will to do good. He says, if they had added, Without Grace, the proposition had been Orthodox, but to say it in general, as supposing that Grace alone does all the good we do, is a proposition which he never heard of before nor understood, and which the Hereticks themselves never yet asserted. He owns, that the Free-will may be said to be dead and perished by the Sin of the first Man, provided, it be not meant, that the Nature and Essence of the Will is not perished, but that the good which is in the will, i. e. the faculty of inclining it self to good, and that it hath need of the immediate Grace of Jesus Christ to incline it to good. Remigius Archbishop of Lyons, after he hath thus treated of the Doctrine contain'd in the Letter of Hincmarus, passes to the Judgment and Person of Gottschalkus. He finds fault, that he was first of all condemned by the Abbots and Monks, which were of the Council, to undergo their Regular Discipline, and afterwards was judged by the Bishops. He says, that according to the ancient usage, since he was accused of Heresie, he ought to have been judged by the Bishops only. He complains of the Cruelty with which their Sentence was executed. And as to the Heads of his Doctrine related by Hincmarus, he says, That the first and second were agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church and Fathers; That the 3d and 4th were not to be condemned; and as to the 5th, if it were true that he asserted it in those terms, it deserves to be condemned. In fine, That he deserved to be condemned for his imprudence and troublefomeness, for his talkativeness and inconstancy; That nevertheless they ought not for all that to condemn the Truth, nor use him with so much severity and cruelty as they had done. Then he confutes what Hincmarus had said concerning the will of God to save all Men, against the Predestination of the Wicked to Damnation, and concerning Free-will. He also Answers the Letters of Pardulus and Rabanus. This Answer was accompanied with another small Treatise from Remigius, Entitled, A Resolution of the Question, in which he endeavours to confirm the Principle of S. Austin; That all the Generation of Mankind is corrupted by the Sin of Adam, and subject to Damnation, of whom some are chosen through mere Mercy, others left through just Judgment, the one are elected through the free Mercy of God to glory, the other predestined for their own or first Mans Sin to Damnation. [This Treatise of Remigius, with some other Tracts of his are extant in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 15. and is put out by Mauguin in Collect. Script. de Præd. & Græ.]

This Answer not being such an one as Hincmarus expected, he endeavoured to establish his Doctrine another way. Wherefore meeting at Quiercy, in his return from the Council of Soissons held in 853, with several Bishops and Abbots, he propounded four Heads of Doctrine to the Emperor, which were published by his Authority. The I. was, That there is no other Predestination but only to Life, by which God had chosen out of the Mass of Perdition, into which all Men are fallen by the Sin of Adam, those whom he hath predestinated by his Grace to Glory. And as to those whom he hath left in the State of Damnation, he foresaw that they would perish, but he hath not predestined them to destruction, but only hath predestined the Eternal punishment which they have deserved. The II. is, That the Free-will which we have lost by the Sin of the first Man, is restored by Jesus Christ, and we have a full power to do good by the assistance of his Grace, and to do evil, being forsaken by it. The III. is, That God would have all Men without exception to be saved, although they are not all saved. That those that are saved, are so by the Grace of Christ, and those that perish are damned for their own Sins. The IV. was, That Jesus Christ hath suffered for all Men, although all Men are not redeemed by the Mystery of his Passion, which doth not happen because the Price of Redemption is not great enough, or sufficient, but because they have not Faith, or not such a Faith as is saving, i. e. a Faith which worketh by Love.

These four Articles were Signed by the Bishops and Abbots present at their Assembly, and if we may believe Hincmarus, were subscribed by Prudentius himself. But this Bishop repenting of what he had done, wrote to the Bishops assembled at Sens to choose a Bishop of Paris, that since he could not be present himself at that Synod, he had sent Arnoldus, a Priest, to whom he had given commission to subscribe to their Election of a Bishop, provided they would sign and approve these four Articles concerning Grace. 1. That the Free-will of Man which was lost by the disobedience of Adam, is so far restored by the Grace of Jesus Christ, that we cannot do, think, or desire any good thing without it. 2. That God hath predestinated some to Eternal Life through his mere Mercy, and others through his just Judgment to Damnation. 3. That the Blood of Jesus Christ was shed for them that believe on him, and not for those that do not believe. 4. That God saves all those he will have saved, and that no Man can be saved whom he will not have saved. 'Tis not known what effect this Letter had in the Council of Sens, but is probable that it was read, but nothing was determined in that matter.

But the 4 Articles of Quiercy being sent to the Church of Lyons, the Archbishop examined them, and confuted them in a Book made on purpose, [Entitled, A Censure of the Articles of Quiercy, or a Book proving that the Truth of Scripture is to be held, and the Judgments of the Holy Fathers followed.] In answer to the first Article, he finds fault with these Assertions; 1. That the first Man was free to do good, not mentioning the Divine assistance, without which neither he nor the Angels themselves can do good; 2. That they speak of the Predestination of the Elect, as if it were made upon the account of their good Works foreseen; 3. That they deny, that God hath predestinated the Wicked to Damnation. Upon the 2d Article he objects, 1. That they have spoken too succinctly and briefly about Free-will, having said nothing, but produced some Explanations, cations of the Fathers upon that point; 2. That they had asserted, that we have utterly lost our Free-will by the Sin of the first Man, though the Fathers acknowledge, that though it be weakened by that Sin, it still subsists in Man, but he can't use it well without the assistance of Grace. That all Men have naturally Judgment, Reason, and Understanding, by which they are able to distinguish that which is good from that which is evil, and that which is just from that which is unjust. That they also have a liberty of choosing good in some sort, but through the Law we have of Human Affairs, 'tis wholly carried upon the good of Society, Transactions of the World, and certain private Interests. Lastly, That in that respect we can do some good, but we can do nothing towards our Eternal Happiness but by the inspiration and Motions of Grace. 3. He also reproves them in this Article for saying, that after regeneration we have liberty of doing evil, as if we had it not before Regeneration. Concerning the 3d Article, which is about the Will of God to save all Men, part of his Remarks are lost, but by what remains we may see, that he disapproved their asserting of it so generally, and had rejected the Fathers Explications of it. In the last Article he reproves them for saying, 1. That there is no Mans Nature that is not healed by Jesus Christ, and asserts, that Jesus Christ did not assume the Humane Nature of necessity, but of his own good will, and that for the Elect; 2. He dislikes them for holding, that there is not, ever was, nor shall be a Man for whom Christ died not. He confesses that he died for all that is Baptized, and for the Righteous Men of the Old Testament, but denies, that he died for all Infidels which died before Christs Nativity, for those who never received the Faith, or Infants dying without Baptism. He maintains, that Christ died for none, but for those for whom the Church prays, and mentions in their Holy Services after their Death. Lastly, He disapproves their comparison between Infidels that never received the Faith, and Christians, who though they have been Baptized, die in their Sins. [This Confutation of Remigius of the Articles of Quiercy is extant with the Treatises last mentioned.]

The Canons
of the Council of Valence about Grace.

Remigius Bishop of Lyons having thus confuted the Articles made at Quiercy by his own Writings, caused his Doctrine to be confirmed in a Council held at Valence, an. 855. made up of 14 Bishops of the Provinces of Lyons, Arles, and Vienna, in which the 3 Metropolitans presided, and Ebbo Bishop of Grenoble was present. They made 6 Canons in this Synod concerning Grace, Free-will, and Predestination. The first forbids all Novel Expressions about such Matters, and commands Men to follow the Doctrine of the Latin Fathers. In the 2d they declare, that God hath foreseen from all Eternity all the Good which Righteous Men will do by his Grace, and all the Evil that Sinners will do by their own Malice; That the Righteous shall receive Eternal Life as a reward of their good Actions, and the Wicked be condemned justly for their Crimes to Eternal punishment. That this Prescience lays no necessity upon any Man, none being condemned but for their Original or actual Sins. In the 3d the Bishops strongly assert the Predestination of good Men to Eternal Life, and of Wicked Men to Eternal Death. Nevertheless after such a manner, as that in the choice of them that shall be saved the Mercy of God goes before their Works, but on the contrary in the damnation of those that perish their Crimes goes before the just Judgment of God, yet God hath predestinated no Man to sin by his own power, so that those that are predestinated are under necessity of being damned. The 4th is about the Death of Jesus Christ, concerning which they think it sufficient to say, and confess sincerely, that Jesus Christ died for all those that believe in him. They reject the 4 Canons of Quiercy as idle, vain, and false, and condemn Scotus's Treatise as a silly Book. In the 5th they assure all those that are Baptized and Regenerate, that they have a part in the Redemption of Jesus Christ, although afterward they loose the Innocency of Baptism, and are in the number of the Reprobate. Lastly, in the last they declare, that as concerning the Grace of Christ, by which Men are saved, and the Free-will of Man weakened by the Sin of Adam, but restored by the Grace of Jesus Christ, they do hold as the Holy Fathers have taught, what the Councils of Africa and Orange have decided, and what is held and maintained by the Bishops of the Apostolick See.

The Relation of what followed the Council of Valence about the Contest of Grace.

These Canons of the Council of Valence were presented to the Emperor Lotharius, the King of these Bishops who had made them, with the Treatise made upon that Subject by the Church of Lyons, and the Propositions of Scotus, that he might send them to Charles the Bald, and that he would advise him at the same time not to suffer the contrary Doctrine to be published in his Realm, but Lotharius not being to do it, Ebbo Bishop of Grenoble presented these Pieces himself to Charles the Bald, who went to him to his Palace at Verbery, an. 856. This Prince in September the same year, delivered them to Hincmarus to examine them, who composed an Answer to them. His Book was of a considerable bulk, and dedicated to Charles the Bald; it was Entitled, Of Predestination and Free-will, and divided into 3 parts. We have not the Work it self, but only the Letter written to Charles, which served for a Preface to it. In it he complains that they had condemned his 4 Articles without so much as reciting of them, and had put a bad construction upon them. That they would have him undertake the Defence of Scotus's Proposition, which he never saw, nor knew, and which were collected only to make Orthodox Persons odious. That they had made this noise without desiring his Opinion, without advertising him of what they disliked, without hearing him or citing him to the Synod. He wondered that Ebbo Bishop of Grenoble, a Person so Eminent for Piety, should engage in such a Faction. He observes by the bye, as a thing extraordinary, that of all the Bishops that were at the Council of Valence, he only was named in the Head of the Council amongst the Archbishops, which looked like affectation of Greatness, though he would not call it Pride.

Lastly,

Lastly, That the Bishops of this Council had began the Quarrel, and laid the foundation of the Difference. He then lays down the order of his Answer; First, he tells the Emperor, that he had sent him the Writings which had been presented to him by the Council; 2. That he had joined to them several other Tracts which he had received from other places upon the same Subject, of which he approved so much only as was agreeable to his 4 Articles; That he will make a Collection of the Authorities and Passages of the Fathers. Lastly, That he will prove, that these Articles are agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, and the Scriptures, which she acknowledges for genuine, and the Fathers whose Writings she allows, to which he will add the Authorities of more late Orthodox Writers, as Beda, Alcuinus, and Theodorus Archbishop of Canterbury.

In the year 859 the same Bishops which were present at the Council of Valence being met in the Suburbs of Langres with the Emperor Charles, presented to him the 6 Canons under debate, but suppressed what was said in them particularly against the 4 Articles of Hincmarus; Fifteen days after they met at a Council at Savona in the Province of Toul [or Tullium], where they were also read. Hincmarus and those of his Party opposed their Reception, but Remigius Archbishop of Lyons desired, that the Decision of the Controversie might be entirely left to the next Synod, to which they would every one bring the Books of the most eminent Fathers of the Church, and out of them determine what they should follow, that they might be of one mind. This was the conclusion of this Council, but Prudentius did not rest here, but brought the Matter to Rome, sending the Canons of the Council of Valence to Pope Nicolas. that he might confirm them. Prudentius says the Pope approved of them, but Hincmarus did not yield to it, and would not take notice of the Definition which he had passed upon the Question.

We do not find that this Question was afterward Examined or Judged in any Council of France, but Hincmarus made another Treatise of Predestination to defend his 4 Articles, and confute the Canons of the Council of Valence. This also is dedicated to Charles the Bald, containing 38 Chapters. In the first he treats of the Original of the Heresie of the Predestinarians, and pretends to prove, that it began since the time of S. Austin; and to prove it, he makes use of the Testimonies not only of S. Austin, but of S. Prosper and Celestine, by whom it appears that S. Austin's Doctrine of Grace was opposed by several, but he doth not observe, that they who opposed it then, were altogether opposite to the Error of the Predestinarians, for the Priests of Marseilles, and the other Frenchmen of whom S. Austin and Prosper speak, were so far from being Predestinarians, that they contradicted the Doctrine of S. Austin about Predestination, because it seemed too rigorous. He cites a Book falsely attributed to S. Austin, called Hypomnesticon; He maintains very positively that it is his, and proves it by the Letter of Faustus to Lucidus about the Recantation of that Priest, and by the Authority of the Council of Arles, which through a mistake (he says) was held by the Authority of Celestine, who was dead 44 years before that Council. In the 2d he gives the History of Gottschalcus, whom he pretends to have revived the Error of the Predestinarians. In the 3d he rejects the Authority of Fulgentius, but he gives one bad Reason for it, when he says, that he is not much to be esteemed, because Pope Gelasius doth not reckon him among the Doctors of the Church, for Gelasius was dead 8 or 9 years before this Father wrote. In the 4th he proves himself conformable to the Doctrine of the Apostolick See. In the 5th, after he hath observed that Gottschalcus and his Followers write the Authorities of the Scripture and Fathers to establish that Error imperfectly, he brings the Propositions of Gottschalcus, Prudentius, and Retramnus, in which they acknowledge Predestination to Eternal Torments. In the 6th he begins to treat of the Canons of the Council of Valence in particular. He observes in that Chapter, that the first is taken out of Florus, a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, but his Sentence is changed and altered by him that transcribed and abridged it. In the 7th he explains the Passage of S. Paul alledged by the Compiler of them, in which he says there are Vessels of Wrath fitted for Destruction. He cites several places of the Fathers to explain that Text, and shew, that 'tis not God that hath fitted those Vessels for Death, but they fitted themselves for it by their Sins. In the 8th he alledges some places in Fulgentius, to shew, that God hath predestinated no Man to Death. In the 9th he cites some Passages of Isidore of Sivill, S. Austin, S. Fulgentius, and Florus, to explain those which his Adversaries had alledged. In the 10th he expounds several places of Scripture which they made use of. In the 11th he examines the following Canon of the Council of Valence. He finds fault, that they had laid aside the Explication of Florus, and distinguished between Predestination to Grace and Predestination to Glory. In the 12th he treats of Predestination at large according to the Principles of S. Austin. He saith that God hath predestinated the Works as well as the Glory of the Elect. That he hath foreseen the Sins of the Reprobate, and knowing them, not only foresees, but predestines the punishment which they shall suffer, but he affirms, that it can't be said, that he hath predestinated them to Death or Damnation. So that all the difference between Hincmarus and his Adversaries is in this, that these affirm, that God foreseeing the Sins which the Reprobate would voluntarily commit, hath predestinated and condemned them upon the account of them to Damnation. And Hincmarus confesses, that God hath prepared and predestinated this Eternal punishment for their Crimes, but will not say that he hath predestinated them to be damned. S. Fulgentius in his Book which he wrote to Monimus, was most favourable to the Opinion which Hincmarus opposes, for which reason it is, that in the 13th Chapter he opposes some Passages of S. Prosper, and in his 14th a Passage of S. Austins cited by Fulgentius himself. In the 15th Chapter he returns to the History of the pretended Predestinarians. He says that the ancient Predestinarians had 4 Errors. The first,

A New Ecclesiastical History

That God condemns Men for the Sins which they have not committed, but would have committed had they lived. The 2d. That Baptism doth not take away Original Sin from them who are not of the number of the Predestinated. The 3d. That there is no difference between Preience and Predestination. The 4th. That God hath predestinated Men to Sin and Damnation. He owns, that the Modern Predestinarians hold not the first Error, that they pass the 2d. avoid the 3d. and have new moulded the 4th. although they retain the substance of it, asserting, that God hath predestined the Reprobate to Damnation, although he hath not predestinated them to Sin, since they can't suffer Damnation but by Sin. He confutes the two former Errors in a few words. Then he undertakes to justify his 4 Articles, by shewing that they are agreeable to the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers, and chiefly of S. Austin, S. Eusebius, and S. Gregory. He proves the first, which is concerning Predestination, by transcribing in the 16th Chapter several long Quotations of those Fathers. In the 17th he examines a place in the Book entitled, Hypomnesticon, attributed to S. Austin. In the 18th he proves, that the number of the Elect is certain and determined. In the 19th he owns, that a double Predestination may in some sense be allowed, though not in that of Goussier and his Adherents, who affirm, that God hath predestined Sinners to Torments, as he hath the Good to Glory, but that it may be said, The Elect are predestined to Glory, and Eternal Torments are predestined for the Wicked. In the 20th he examines in what sense S. Gregory speaks of the Predestinarians in the Plural Number. In the 21st Chapter he produces several Passages of S. Austin, to justify the sense and terms of his 2d Article of Free-will. In the 22d he shews, that what is said in that Article is conformable to the Decisions of the Councils of Africa and Orange about Grace and Free will. In the 23d he answers the accusation brought against him, that he had affirmed, that Man had wholly lost his free-will by the fall of Adam; He aims, that Man hath a freedom of Will since Adam's Sin, but his Free will is a Slave to Sin, which leads him to the commission of Evil only, so that he can't do any good through the weakness of it without the Grace of Jesus Christ. In the 24th Chapter he treats about his 3d Article, which is about the Will of God to save all Men. He declares, that the Church of Rome, which is the first Church in the World, ought to be consulted about that point in the first place. He compares it to the ancient Jerusalem, and cites a Passage in the forged Decretal of Pope Anacletus, which says, that that Church was founded by God himself. He adds also a Citation out of Innocent's Letter to Decentius Bishop of Eugubium, after which he quotes a Sentence of Cyprian, where he says, that the Prayers of the Church determine what we shall believe. Legem credendi lex statuas supplicandi; From whence he concludes, that since the Church prays for all Men without restriction, or exception, we ought to believe, that God will have all Men to be saved without exception. But why then are not all Men saved? He says, 'tis because they will not; They that love Darkness rather than Light, Injustice than Justice, Sin than Virtue, destroy themselves; That it will not then follow, that God is not Almighty, because he knows how to dispose of their actions who will not do as he wills them. Whereupon he cites several Passages out of S. Austin and S. Gregory, but depends chiefly upon the words of S. Chrysostome. In the next Chapter he joins some Expressions taken out of the Writings attributed to S. Dionysius the Areopagite, S. Cyprian, S. Hilary, S. Chrysostome, S. Irenaeus, S. Jerome, and S. Cyril, some things also he brings out of S. Austin and S. Prosper, to whom also he adds S. Cassian, S. Leo, S. Gregory, Bede, and Cassiodorus. In the following Chapter he confirms this Doctrine of the Will of God to save all Men without exception, because if God would not have all Men to be saved, there would be under a necessity of damnation. And whereas his Adversaries objected, that the Will of God is all powerful, and therefore, if God would have all Men to be saved, they would be so. He puts the same Question to them as to the Angels, and urges them to answer it. Are those Angels which are fallen, fallen by the Will of God, or not? And since they could not deny according to their own Principle, but that God did desire their Salvation? He concludes, that they must own, that God's will hath not always its effect. He there recites several Passages of the Fathers to explain those places of Scripture where the All-powerful will of God is spoken of. In the 27th Chapter he examines the State of the Question concerning the 4th Article, the Death of Jesus Christ was no Mediator, but only to Men. And whereas it was demanded of him, whether Jesus Christ died for Antichrist; He answers, that Antichrist shall be a Man, and since Jesus Christ died for all Men, he is of the number of those for whom Christ died. In the 28th Chapter he cites several Passages of the Fathers, to prove, that Jesus Christ died for those Men who are dead in their Sins, although it can't be said, that they are redeemed for Eternal Salvation. In the 29th he justifies the Expression which he had delivered, that there never was a Man whose Flesh was not assumed by Jesus Christ, and cites several places of the Fathers which approve that Expression. He then shews, that those that are Baptized receive the Faith that worketh by Love, which he had affirmed in his last Article. He adds in the following Chapter, that except two Sentences of it, the rest of that Article is taken out of S. Prosper.

Hincmarus having thus justified himself, passes his Judgment upon the Writings which were come to his hands, made upon this subject. He disapproves Scarus's and Prudentius's Books, and says, that he will not enter into any Contest with them because he does not know their design, yet he tells us, that he had observed some Expressions in them contrary to the Catholic Truth, viz. That there is a Triple Divinity; That the Sacrament of the Altar is not the true Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, Christ, but a Memorial only of his true Body and Blood; That the Angels are Corporeal; That the Soul of Man is not in his Body; That the Tortures of Hell are nothing else but the remembrance of Sins, and the reflection of a guilty Conscience; and other fruitless Questions concerning the manner how we shall see God, which arise, perhaps, saith Hincmarus, from hence, that those who are busied to move such disputes take no care to see him. He rejects the 7 Rules laid down by Prudentius. In the 31st Chapter he shews, that those that lived before the coming of Jesus Christ are redeemed by his Death, as well as those that live after his coming. In the 32^d he produces a great number of Testimonies both from the Greek and Latin Fathers, to prove, that Jesus Christ died for all Men without exception. In the next Chapter he confirms the same Doctrine by several Reasons grounded upon the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers, and shews, that although Jesus Christ died for all Men, yet they are not all redeemed and saved, because they will not. In the 35th he approves the 5th Canon of the Council of Valence, propounded by his Adversaries; That Jesus Christ died for all those that are Regenerate by Baptism; But he maintains, that Gatesheadicus and the Predestinarians deny that Baptism washes away the guilt of Original Sin from those that are not predestinated, and confutes their Error.

The Bishops of the Council of Valence, after the Articles of Grace, Free-will, and Predestination, confuted by Hincmarus, added a Canon concerning the Ordinations of Bishops to this effect. To prevent for the future, that Ignorant Bishops, unable to discharge that great Function, and whose Lives are not sufficiently Examined, may not be put into the Sees, as they formerly have been, (to the utter ruine and overthrow of all Church Discipline) it is decreed, That after the Death of any Bishop, they should Petition the Princes to grant the People and Clergy of that City power to make a Canonical Election of some Person of the same, or the Neighbouring Diocels, who is fit to fill the See, and if any Clerk be sent from Court to be made their Bishop, they should strictly examine and look into his Life and Doctrine and Manners before they Ordain him, and if he be found an Ignorant, Vicious, and Simoniack Person, the Metropolitan should refuse to Ordain him, and going to Court represent it to the Prince. Hincmarus imagining, that this Canon was made against him, and some other Bishops who had been Ordained through the favour of the Court, takes it into Examination, and therefore, in the 36th Chapter he observes first, that this Canon makes directly against him whom he thought the Author of it, because he was Shaved and Ordained in another Church than that of which he was Bishop, evidently meaning Remigius Archbishop of Lyons. Secondly, He observes, that he had left out several things which concerned the Ordination of a Bishop, as for Example, If they choose a Clergy-man of another Church, that he should not be Ordained till his Bishop hath given his Consent. Thirdly, He says, that those Men are not worthy to bear the Names of Bishops whose Ordination was such, as he describes, Ignorant, Vicious, and Simoniack. Fourthly, He says, that in speaking so he affronts all the Bishops of France, the Metropolitans who have made such unlawful Ordinations, and the Princes who have approved them. Fifthly, He defends his own Ordination, and relates the whole History of the Deposition of Ebbo, and the Process had against him; He relates the Judgment given in favour of him against Ebbo in the Council of Strifons in 853, the Declaration of Ebbo, who acknowledged himself justly deposed, and consented another should be made Bishop in his place, approved by the Bishops met at Thimville in 835, whose Sentence was confirmed by Pope Sergius. He adds, that 10 years after this Deposition, the Bishops of the Diocels of Reims being Assembled at Beauvais, deposed him of the Prince, and he was Ordained by his Consent after he had been Canonically chosen by the Clergy and People of Reims. Hereupon he says, that he spake these things with regret, but he was obliged to it, lest any Man reading this Canon should think his Ordination contrary to the Canons and Rules of the Church. Then he opposes to this Article 12 Canons of the Church concerning the Penalties to be insisted upon such Persons as revive old Heresies that have been condemned; Which are, 1. When an Error hath been once condemned by the Church, it needs no further Confutation. 2. That when the Author of an Heresie is condemned, all that fall into the same Heresie are involved in the same Condemnation. 3. That the same Condemnation extends to all the Abettors of an Heresie. 4. That they that Communicate with Hereticks, ought not to be admitted to any Synod of the Orthodox. 5. That those that revive a Condemned Heresie ought to be reproved by all the Bishops by virtue of the ancient Condemnation. 6. That it is not lawful to introduce new Doctrines, nor compose new Creeds. 7. That such as acknowledge their Errors may be again received into the Church, provided that we find sure tokens of their sincere Repentance in their return. 8. That such Persons may never be promoted to any higher degree of the Clergy than what they are now in. 9. That if they relapse again they deprive themselves of their Dignity. 10. That those that act any thing contrary to the Definitions of Pope Celestine ought to be Excommunicated. 11. That such Clergymen may be received, and continued in their degree of Priesthood, who having once assented to the true Faith, subscribe to Errors, provided they deliver a Recantation of their Errors in Writing. 12. That they that will not subscribe to the Truth are condemned of themselves. Hincmarus alleges a great number of Authorities of Popes, Councils and Fathers, to prove these Points of Discipline, which never were contested, in which he shews more Learning and Skill in the Canons of the Church, than Judgment or Equity. Lastly, Hincmarus ending this Work, adds a Conclusion divided into 6 Chapters, in which he sums up what he had before said concerning Predestination, Grace, Free-will, the Will of God to save all Men, and the Death of Jesus Christ for Infidels.

Hincmarus's Remarks upon the Constitution of the Council of Valence about Ordinations.

Theodorus Villa.

Hincmarus's Book upon the Expression Trina Deitas.

Some time after Hincmarus wrote another Treatise against Gotteschalvus upon another Subject. He had forbidden, that the Hymn of the Martyrs, called Sanctorum Meritis, should be sung in his Church, because at the end of it the Three Persons of the Trinity were called Trina Deitas, thinking that Expression to be contrary to the manner of speaking exactly about that Mystery. Gotteschalvus seeking an occasion to expose and accuse him, composed a Treatise to defend this Expression, maintaining that the Trinity was Personaliter Trina, i. e. Personally Three, because each Person of the Trinity hath his perfect and entire Deity, & Naturaliter una. He justified this Expression by some Examples of like Expressions drawn out of the Fathers. Hincmarus maintained the contrary, that the Deity was the Name of the Nature not of the Persons, and that we might not say Trina Deitas, as we ordinarily do Tres Personæ, because there is but one God in Three Persons. It is apparent, that this dispute was only about Words and Names, which Hincmarus spins out to a great length with much Zeal in his large Treatise Entitled, De Trina Deitate, reciting several Quotations of the Fathers, and producing several Arguments, which is both tedious and needless to abridge. We understand by Hincmarus, that not only Gotteschalvus, but also Ratramnus Abbot of Corby had written in the Defence of this Expression, and that the Benedictine Monks did sing this Hymn, not leaving out Trina Deitas. But now we do not find those Words in the Hymn of the Martyrs, which seems to be changed into, Te Summa Deitas, for they are in the Prose of S. Thomas upon the Eucharist. [The Editions of Hincmarus's Works are set down at the end of the 6th Chapter following, to which the Reader is referred.]

The End of the Second Controversy and Chapter.

CHAP. III.

A Relation of the Contest between Hincmarus and Rothadus Bishop of Soissons.

Rothadus Bishop of Soissons.

H*incmarus* was engaged in many other Controversies and Quarrels, which were not ended with less trouble than that with Gotteschalvus. The first was the Contest with Rothadus Bishop of Soissons, in which he was forced to contend with the Pope himself, and at last give place to his Judgment. This Rothadus had been Ordained Bishop of Soissons in the Reign of Lewis the Kind. He had an Order to apprehend Ebbo, his Metropolitan, who was fled, and to shut him up in a Monastery, that he might attend the Synod. He was present in 835 at the Synod held at Thionville, where Ebbo was deposed. So that Rothadus was an ancient Bishop when Hincmarus was made Archbishop of Reims, which was 10 years after the Deposition of Ebbo, which perhaps was the Reason, that he would not give so much respect and subjection to Hincmarus as he expected of him. The beginning of the Business of Gotteschalvus shews, that Rothadus and Hincmarus were not well affected to one another, for Hincmarus would not put that Monk into his Custody, suspecting him to be inclinable to Novelties. There were also some other differences, about which Hincmarus was angry with Rothadus, as his frequent Admonitions and Threatnings of him shewed. At last the Quarrel broke out, when Hincmarus accused him at the Council held at Senlis in 863, that he had unjustly deposed a Priest of his Diocese, and would not obey his Metropolitan, who commanded him to be restored, and the Person put in his place to be removed; that he had squandered away the Church Revenue, and pawn'd a Golden Chalice; that he had sold the Vessels and Ornaments of the Church without the consent of his Metropolitan, the Bishops of Provence, yea, of the Steward and Clergy of his own Church, and that he had lived in such a way as did not become a Bishop. Rothadus seeing himself likely to be condemned, appealed to the Holy See, and desired that he might have leave to go to Rome. Hincmarus and the Bishops of the Council consented to it, upon condition that he should return by such a time. Rothadus returned immediately to his Diocese, and prepared for his Voyage to Rome. But before his departure he wrote to the King, and Hincmarus, and at the same time sent some Heads of Request to a Bishop that was his Friend, to be shewn to the King, in which he prayed the Bishops that had not consented to his Condemnation, to stir in his defence. The Priest that carried this Letter was constrained by the King and Hincmarus to shew it them, although the Bishop to whom it was directed was not present. When Hincmarus had read it, he made use of it directly to hinder his going to Rome, and have him judged in France. He interpreted this as a tacit Renunciation of his Appeal, and that he would be contented to be judged in France by the Bishops he had desired the assistance of, and since since they were the Judges he had chosen himself, he could not afterward Appeal from them according to the Rule Ab electis Judicibus appellere non licet.

Being therefore glad of this opportunity, he perswaded the King to appoint those very Bishops for his Judges, whose assistance he begged, and immediately sent a Prohibition to Rothadus to stop his Journey to Rome, and caused him to be Summoned to a Synod by those Bishops. Rothadus refused at first to come, and insisted upon his Appeal to Rome, but it was denied him; so, against his Will, he was brought to the Synod, Deposed, and afterward Deprived, Banished and Imprisoned. Another Bishop was put into his place, but to lighten his Sufferings, Hincmarus gave him a good Abbey, with which he might live commodiously. Hincmarus says, that Rothadus, at first, seemed to acquiesce in this Judgment, but afterwards being solicited by the Bishops of the Kingdom, and by Lotharius, who quarrelled with him, because he would not wholly join with them in the Matter of Waldrada, as also by some Bishops of Germany, Lewis's Kingdom, he put himself in the head of them, and went to Rome, to obtain his Restoration. But Rothadus on the contrary maintain'd, that he never acquiesced in that Judgment; that he always protested against it; and demanded, that he might be Judged at Rome, and never had any intention to choose the French Bishops for his Judges; that it was a Trick of Hincmarus's, who made that ill use of the Letter he wrote to a Bishop his Friend. But however that was, Charles the Bald having given Pope Nicolas an Account, that Rothadus, who had Governed the Diocese of Soissons very ill for 30 Years, was Deposed, and desiring him to approve his Deposition, was answered, that he did not approve it in the least; and wrote in particular to Hincmarus, that he should restore Rothadus within 30 days, after he had received his Letter, or suffer him to come to Rome, and come himself, or send his Deputy on his behalf, threatening him, that if he did not do one of them within that time, he will interdict him from the Celebrating the H. Sacrament, and would inflict the same Sentence upon all those who consented to the Condemnation of Rothadus. Hincmarus, and the other Bishops of France, understanding that Pope complained of their Judgment, sent the Acts of his Deposition to him, by Odo a Bishop, and wrote to him at large concerning that Matter, but the Acts did only confirm the Pope in his Resolution and Opinion: Wherefore he wrote again to Hincmarus, that he was much troubled to see, that they had Judged that Bishop contrary to the Appeal he had made to the Holy See; that they ought not to have Deposed him without Writing to the Bishop of Rome; and which is much worse, Ordained another Bishop in his place after he had entred his Appeal. For which reason, he refused to confirm those Priviledges which Hincmarus had requested him to do, exhorting him to amend what he had done amiss, and enjoining him a second time to send Rothadus to Rome, threatening him, that if he did not do it, he would pass a definitive Sentence upon him, after a third Admonition. He gave Charles the Bald also an account of what he had Written to Hincmarus, desiring him to take it into serious consideration; and to shew his displeasure, told him plainly, that he must expect no favour from Rome, if he would not maintain the Priviledges and Prerogatives of the H. See. He also wrote a Letter to all the Bishops who were present at the Synod of Sens, and had consented to the Deposition of Rothadus; in which, after some Allegations out of the Fathers, and the Canons of the Council of Sardica, to confirm the Right of Appeals to the H. See, and condemning the Behaviour of the Bishops of France, in pronouncing Judgment against Rothadus, he orders them to recal him from the place of his Exile, and to send him to Rome, and with him two or three Bishops, or their Deputies, that he might re-examine that Affair, assuring them, that if they did not obey his Order within thirty days after they had received his Letter, he would Absolve Rothadus, and treat them as they had used him. Nicolas, at the same time, also gave Rothadus notice of what he had done for him, viz. That he had Written to Hincmarus, and exhorted him to come to Rome and answer his Appeal; and after he had received the Acts of his Condemnation, he let him know what he had Answered to the Bishops of France, at the same time advising him, if he knew himself Guilty, to submit to the Sentence passed against him, as he had advised his Adversaries to restore him, if they believed him wrongfully Censured. He tells him also, that he was permitted to come to him, being assured by the King and Hincmarus, that he was already let out of the Monastery to which he was confined. He desired the King likewise to furnish him with all things necessary for his Voyage, and tells the Queen Hermetruda, that he could not pass by this Matter, as she had desired him, to gratify her Husband Charles the Bald. It is evident that Hincmarus, who had a mind to keep the Matter as it was, hindered Rothadus from going his Journey, for Nicolas was forced to send him a fourth Letter, wherein he complains of his Carriage, and forbids him Consecrating him Bishop of Soissons who was chosen to be put in Rothadus's place. Hincmarus seeing himself out of favour at Rome about this Affair, and some other Matters, writes a long Letter to Pope Nicolas to justify himself, chiefly about this Matter. In the Letter he assures him, that Rothadus was not condemned with a design to hinder his Appeal to the H. See, that he was Tried by such Judges as he had made choice of himself, upon which account it was that he thought it not necessary to send him to Rome, but judged it sufficient to acquaint his Holiness of the Sentence they had passed on him; That he was perswaded that the Holy See ought not to be troubled with personal differences, between either the Superior or Inferior Clergy, for the Canons of Nice, and the Constitutions of Pope Innocent, and many other, leave them to the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Bishops of the Province. 'Tis true, when the causes of the Bishops are difficult, and can't be decided by the ordinary Canons in a Council of the Province, then they ought to be carried to the H. See. As also if a Bishop, who hath been Tried by a Council of the Province, and hath not Appealed to Judges of his own choosing, thinks himself unjustly Condemned, he may Appeal to the Patriarch to have his Cause re-examined; and the Pope may Write to those that have been his Judges, as it is appointed in the Council of Sardica. That the Archbishops only receive their Pall of the Pope, who therefore ought only to be judged immediately by him. Coming in the next place to the business of Rothadus, he says, That he had been admonished of his Duty long before, and reproved for his Disorders, but not reforming in the least, he was obliged to accuse him before the Synod of Bishops, that he might grow better upon their Advice; and that instead of hearkening to them, he denied that they would be Judges of the difference between him and his Metropolitan. That these Judges had condemned him, and he acquiesced at first in their Sentence, but afterward being solicited by the Bishops of the Provinces of Lotharius, and Lewis of Germany, required his Restoration. That upon the Letters that the Pope had Written he was set at Liberty, and they would send him to Rome, but they did not think it fit to Restore him, because he was unworthy, and his disorders being so publick, they could not do it without Scandal. That if his Holiness would restore him, he would quietly submit to his Decision, but he took himself obliged to let him know the Crimes of that Bishop, of which, if he were well informed, he could not believe that he would Disannul the Judgment given against him, especially since he chose the Judges himself; and according to the Council of Carthage, it is not allowed to Appeal from the Sentence of those Judges a Person hath chosen himself. He insinuates, that according to the Council of Sardica, the Pope ought not to have the first Hearing of the Causes of the Bishops, nor Judge them at Rome, but they ought first to be determined in their own Province; and in case of Appeal, the Pope must send his Commissioners to the places. He adds, That if he that hath been Condemned at the first Tryal be Restored, the latter Examination ought not to hurt the Persons of the first Judges, nor ought they to be reproved for it, unless it appears that they have Condemned him out of Enmity, Covetousness, or Partiality. In fine, That if the Pope Annuls the Judgment passed upon Rothadus, he would render all the Judgments of the Bishops of France ever after contemptible. As for himself, he would never concern himself to Judge, or Condemn any Man, but, if they would not amend upon Admonition, send them to Rome. And this he shall be obliged to do, to avoid the Menaces of Excommunication which the Pope hath so often repeated to him, altho' it is the Opinion of the Fathers that Excommunication ought rarely to be used, and that in case of great Necessity. Lastly, He implores him, that his Compassion for Rothadus should not make him overlook the Rules of Discipline, and give an ill Example of Impunity to the Church. These Maxims he confirmed by the Canons of the Councils, and the Ancient and Genuine Writings of the Popes. Hincmarus also in this Letter assures the Pope, that they had sent their Deputies to Rome in their stead, not to accuse Rothadus, but only to satisfy him, that the Bishops of France intended no manner of disrespect to the H. See in Judging him, and to certify the Pope, that that Bishop was condemned by those Bishops whom he chose for his Judges. But tho' Hincmarus had promised, in the Name of the French Bishops, to send their Deputies to Rome, nevertheless they did not go, and pretended, for an Excuse, that it was told them that the ways were not open, and they should be stopped in their Journey if they went. Wherefore Rothadus went alone, and having waited almost Eight Months for his Accusers, he presented a Petition to the Pope, in which he complains, That he had been Deposed in contempt of his Appeal to the H. See. He maintains, that he never desisted from his Appeal, nor did choose or demand any other Judges. He accuseth Hincmarus of Compulsion and Deceit. He complains of his ill usage which he had received from him, and prayed the Pope to Try him.

Pope Nicolas's Letters in favour of Rothadus.

Nicolas, who had entertain'd him civilly, and dealt with him as a Bishop, declared himself wholly for him, and made an Oration in S. Mary's Church upon the Eve of the Nativity 865, in which he pleaded Rothadus's Cause, and maintains, That having Appealed to the H. See, he could not choose any other Judges, nor be Judged at another Tribunal; that he had not done it. And lastly, Since if he had not Appealed, they could not have Deposed him without acquainting the Bishop of Rome with it, because the Canons reserve the Knowledge of such Causes as concern the Bishops to the Holy See; He declares him Innocent, and Disannuls the Judgment given against him, and restores him to his Dignity; And after he had done it, with great noise, upon a Solemn Day, he makes it known to the Clergy and People of Rome in a Letter on purpose. He sent also an Express to Carolus Calvus, in which he much blames the proceedings of Hincmarus in derogation of the Right which he pretended to belong to the Bishop of Rome, without whose Cognizance they could not Judge a Bishop. He complains of the delays which they had made for above two Years, keeping Rothadus from Rome, and neither sending their Deputies, Witnesses, nor Accusers. He declares Rothadus innocent, and desires the King, Charles the Bald, to see him restored to his Dignity and Estate. At the same time he wrote a Letter to Hincmarus, in which, after he had upbraided him with the same Dealings, he commands him to submit to the Judgment he had given in favour of Rothadus, and to Execute it, or come himself to accuse him, upon condition, nevertheless, that Rothadus should be first restored to his Dignity and Revenues. In conclusion he says, That if he did not do one of them, he Pronounced him, by Virtue of his Apostolick Authority, Deposed from his Priestly Dignity, and separated from the Communion of the Church, without hopes of Restoration. He wrote also a large Letter to all the Bishops, to oblige them to receive Rothadus, and approve the Judgment he had given in his favour; and taking this occasion to greaten his Authority, he claims, as his due, that all Causes of the Bishops should be brought to the H. See. He upholds this pretence pretence by the false Decretals, which he vouches to be Genuine, Ancient, and very Authentick; and because the Causes of the Bishops are the greatest Causes, whose Cognizance belongs to the Bishop of Rome, according to the Constitutions of the Popes. He proves that Rothadus made no Choice of his Judges, because he Named none in particular, but had only Written to some Bishops that they would undertake his Defence; that he never renounced his Appeal, nor indeed could he, because having once Appealed to a Superior Tribunal, he can't be Judged at an Inferior. Nevertheless, he declares that he will do no Injustice to any Man, and gave them free Liberty to accuse him before the H. See, upon condition they should first restore him, and put him in the same Quality he was before their Sentence passed upon him. He wrote also to the Clergy and People of Soissons, to Congratulate the Restoration of their Bishop, and Exhorts them to receive him joyfully. Lastly, He gave Rothadus a Letter directed to him, in which he restores him to his Dignity and Revenues, forbids all Men to trouble him, Exhorts him to take care of his Bishoprick, and execute his Episcopal Functions diligently, (upon condition nevertheless, that if after he is restored, any one shall accuse him before the H. See, he shall be ready to defend himself) and Pronounced a Sentence of Excommunication against them, who, after three Admonitions, would not restore any Goods, that belong to the Church of Soissons, which they had invaded, and against them who communicated with such. This Letter is Dated January, Indict. 13. An. 866. [These Epistles of Pope Nicolas, with many other, are Printed in one Collection at Rome 1542. and in Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 268, 480, 514, and 563.]

Rothadus furnished with all these Letters returned into France. The Bishops of that Kingdom seeing the Pope so earnest in that Affair, would not contend with him, but for Peace sake restored Rothadus, altho' they were perswaded that the Pope did not act according to the Canons, which appoint that Bishops should be Judged in the Province, and that their Causes should not be carried to Rome, but he ought to send Commissioners to the places. And this they did so much the more willingly, because the Person who had been put in his place was Dead, as Hincmarus Bishop of Reims observes in the 5th Article against his Nephew Hincmarus Bishop of Laon.

The Conclusion of the business of Rothadus.

CHAPTER IV.

A Relation of the Contest between Hincmarus and Wulfadus, and other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, who had been Archbishop of Reims.

H*incmarus* had no better success in the Contest with Wulfadus, and some other Clerks Ordain'd by Ebbo, after the Deposition of him from his Archbishoprick, than he had in the former with Rothadus. The Story is this: Hincmarus, then Archbishop of Reims, having observed that there were some Clerks in his Diocese Ordain'd by Ebbo, after he was Degraded, would not permit them to Execute their Office of Priest in the Church, nor acknowledge them as Clerks Lawfully Ordained. These Men seeing this, Appealed to the Council held at Soissons, in the Monastery of S. Medardus, in April 853, in which Hincmarus presided with Wenilo Archbishop of Sens, Paul Bishop of Rouen, and Amauri Bishop of Tours, and at which also Thierri Bishop of Cambray, Rothadus Bishop of Soissons, Lupus Bishop of Chalons, Immo Bishop of Noion, Erpuin Bishop of Senlis, Hermenfridus Bishop of Beauvais, Pardulus Bishop of Laon, Hilmeradus Bishop of Amiens, Hubert Bishop of Meaux, Agius Bishop of Orleans, Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, Herimarus Bishop of Nevers, Jonas Bishop of Autun, Godefridus Bishop of Chalon upon the Saone, Dodo Bishop of Angers, Gombertus Bishop of Eureux, Hildebrandus Bishop of Sees, Erloinus Bishop of Contance, Balfredus Bishop of Baienx, Herrardus Bishop of Lizieux, Ansegaudus Bishop of Auranthes, Breindigus Bishop of Maion, Launus Bishop of Angouleme, Reichol Suffragan of Reims, several Priests, Abbots, Deacons and Clerks, were present, with Carolus Calvus himself. These Prelates being Assembled, and treating about several Matters, Sigloardus, who supplied the place of the Archdeacon of the Church of Reims, told them, That there were several Clergy-men standing at the Door and desired admittance: They asked him their Names, who told them, That they were Rodoaldus, Gisfaldus, Wulfadus, Fredebertus, Canons of the Church of Reims, Sigismund a Monk, of the Monastery of S. Thierri, and three other of the Monastery of S. Remigius. The Council, and Prince, ordered them to come in, and Hincmarus immediately asked them their business. They answered, That they came to desire that they might be restored to their Priestly Function, to which they had been admitted by Ebbo, but had been Suspended from the Exercise of it by Hincmarus. Hincmarus asked them, them, whether they had a Petition in Writing. They answered, No. Whereupon he told them, that in Ecclesiastical Affairs 'tis usual to use Instruments and Records. That the Catechumeni gave in their Names in Writing when they required Baptism. That the Elections of Bishops were confirmed by an Instrument Signed by the Electors. That a Bishop when he was Ordained received Letters Testimonial of his Ordination. That all Accusations, Judicial Sentences, Excommunications, and Admission to Communion were performed by publick Records, and so they ought to prefer their Petition subscribed by their Hands, that they may determine about their demands. Therefore they drew up a Petition immediately, and presented it to the 3 Archbishops the Presidents of the Council. Hincmarus reading it over, and perceiving that Wulfadus his Name was not to it, because he understood he was sick in the Monastery, he sent a Request to him by his Messengers to sign it as the others had done, which he did. When it was brought back, Hincmarus said, that if their Complaint had been made against any Bishop, it had belonged to him to judge of it, but being made against that Sentence which he had passed upon them, the determination ought to be referred to Judges chosen by both Parties according to the Canon of the Council of Africk, confirmed in the first Book of the Synodal Articles of the Emperor Charles the Great, Chap. 43. Whereupon he delivered a Writing, in which he declared, that he chooseth for his Judges in that Cause Wenilo Arch-Bishop of Sens, Amauri Arch-Bishop of Tours, and Pardulus Bishop of Laon, who should have his place in the Judgment, without any prejudice to the Primacy of the Church of Reims, to his own Rights, and the Respect due to the Apostolick See. After which he retired, and Pardulus took his place. The Complainants were then allowed to choose either the same Judges or others, or to add whom they pleased to them. Whereupon they chose the same, adding only Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, against whom Hincmarus had nothing to object. Wulfadus also consented to this Election, and so the first Action or Session of this Synod ended.

In the Second, the Judges declared first of all, that if Ebbo had Ordained these Clerks before he was deposed, or since his Deposition was declared unjust and his Restoration Canonical, there had been no dispute, but that they ought to exercise their Priestly Office. But since those that Ordained Hincmarus have proved that Ebbo was justly deposed, and that he never was Canonically restored, and that he had the boldness to Ordain these Clerks after his Deposition, it is evident, that they neither can nor ought to exercise their Function. Then Thierry Bishop of Cambray presented the Acts of the Deposition of Ebbo, by which it appears, that he was deposed after he had owned his fault, that he had himself consented to his Degradation, and had notice given him not to exercise any Episcopal Function. It was also set down in the Book of these Acts, that Pope Sergius had confirmed his Condemnation, and ordered him to be allowed only a Lay-communion; that since he had not been Canonically restored, but had dared to Exercise his Priestly Function, of which he had been justly divested.

In the Third Action, Hincmarus's Ordination was Examined. Rothadus Bishop of Soissons brought the Testimonial of his Election, signed by the Clergy and People. Hincmarus himself presented his Letters of Ordination, a Letter of the French Bishops, and the Kings Letters Signed and Sealed, by which his Ordination was confirmed.

In the Fourth Session therefore they concluded, that Hincmarus was Lawfully Ordained Arch-Bishop of Reims, and began to Examine the Validity of the Ordinations made by Ebbo. Immo Bishop of Noyon cited a Decretal of Pope Innocent, that they can't receive Orders from them who have no power to Ordain. Whereupon it was in conclusion resolved upon and determined unanimously.

In the Fifth Session, that all that Ebbo had done after his Deposition, except Baptism, was null and void, and all those who had been Ordained by him should be deprived of their Orders in what place soever they were. Then Fredibert, who was one of the Canons Ordained by Ebbo, hearing this Sentence, said, that he was Ordained by that Bishop, because he saw the Suffragans of the Archbishop of Reims, of whom Rothadus Bishop of Soissons was one, were come to Reims by the Order of Lasbarius, and had restored Ebbo. To prove this, he produced a Letter signed by Eight Bishops. It was proved that these Subscriptions were forged, and Immo who was among them, and therefore concerned to clear this Matter, declared, that these Clerks being Excommunicated had no right to accuse a Bishop, but to satisfy the Council and Prince, he presented a Record, by which it appeared, that the Suffragans of Reims had declared, that they ought not to have any thing to do with Ebbo after his Deposition. He adds, that what was said in that Letter of the Staffs and Rings which they affirm that Ebbo had given (to 3 Bishops Ordained in his absence) was absolutely false, and that those Men who dare so boldly to affront and abuse the Bishops, should be punished according to the utmost Rigour allowed by the Canons.

In the Sixth Action, the Cause brought against Hincmarus being thus decided, he resumed his place; and then they handled in particular the Validity of the Ordination of a Priest, Abbot of the Monastery of Haut-Villiers called Halduin, who having been Ordained Deacon by Ebbo, was afterwards made Priest by Lupus Bishop of Chalons. The Bishop excused himself, that being made Governor of the Church of Reims during the Vacancy of that See by an Order of the Prince, this Halduin was presented to him by the Arch-Deacon of that Church to be Ordained Priest; The Synod judged, that conformable to the Canons of the Council of Nice and Sardica, the Priest Halduin ought to be deposed.

In the Seventh Action it was demanded, how they ought to be dealt with who had communicated in the Sacrament and Prayer with Ebbo, because the Canons had ordered, that such ought to be Excommunicated. especially if they knew that he was deposed. Erpuin shewed, that according to the Canons they might be favoured so far as to enjoy Communion still, if they acknowledged their fault.

Hereupon, in the Eighth Session, the King desired of Hincmarus, that the Clerks which had been Ordained by Ebbo, and those who had Communicated with him, should be granted Lay-communion, which the Council consented to, and when they had begged pardon of their fault, and acknowledged it, it was allowed them. Thus was the Judgment of this Affair managed in the Council, as the Acts of it relate more at large, the substance of which is contained in the first of the Canons.

Hincmarus being desirous to make this Sentence irreverfible, used his utmost endeavours to get it confirmed by the Pope. And to this end wrote several Letters to Leo IV. but he refused to approve the Acts of this Council, because they were not sent by some of the Bishops who were at the Council, and because he had heard that some of the Persons who were deposed had appealed to the Holy See. Nevertheless Hincmarus was still urgent to have the Judgment confirmed, and the Clerks who were concerned in this matter carried their Complaints to Rome, infomuch, that Leo IV. having regard to what Pope Nicolas had written about it, sent the Bishop of Spoletum his Legate, to hold a Council in which the Case should be decided between the Parties at difference, upon Condition nevertheless, that if the Deposition of the Clerks were confirmed, they should have liberty to appeal to Rome. This was not executed, but Leo being dead Hincmarus addressed his Successor Benedict, and having desired the confirmation of those Priviledges granted by the Popes to the Archbishops of Reims, prayed him also to confirm what had been done against Wulfadus and the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, shewing him in what manner that Judgment had been passed. Benedict answered him, That if the Business were so managed as he had related, and as it was set down in the Acts of the Council, he would confirm their Decision with the Apostolick Authority, and would make it to remain in force.

The Confirmation of the Judgment of the Council of Soissons by Leo IV. and Benedict.

Pope Nicolas, who not long after succeeded Benedict, confirmed the Priviledges granted to Hincmarus in the same form, but afterwards being changed in his affections towards Hincmarus, and being solicited by Wulfadus and his Fellows, he resolved to review this Affair, and to write to Hincmarus to shew those Clerks some favour, to restore them, or to have their Cause re-examined in a Council of Bishops which should meet at Soissons, and at which Remigius Arch-Bishop of Lyons, Ado Archbishop of Vienna, and Wemlo of Sens should be present, with the Arch-Bishops and Bishops of France and Neustria, where Hincmarus and the Bishops of his Province should meet, and Wulfadus and the Clerks in the same Cause, should be summoned: That the whole Matter being Examined, they should determine as they thought fit concerning the Restoration of those Clerks, but if they shall appeal to the Holy See, or desire to be judged there, both Parties should come to Rome, or send their Deputies after the Council, which should begin the 16th of August. In fine, That it ought not to be pleaded in excuse, that those Clerks having not appealed in the year ought not to be received; for besides that this exception is not in the Canons which speak of Appeals to the Holy See, those Clerks did Appeal to Pope Leo within the year concerning the Judgment given against them, as appears by a Letter of that Pope which he had by him. Wherefore he Exhorts Hincmarus not to be severe with those Clerks. He answers also to what might be alledged, that he had the Grants of the Holy See, by which this Judgment was confirmed, by saying, that if he read them attentively, he would find, that the final Decision of that Controversie was reserved to the Holy See, which maintains the Rights of other Churches without lessening its own. This Letter of Pope Nicolas's is dated April 2. Indiēt. 14. anno 866. Hincmarus at the same time wrote a Letter to Herard Arch-Bishop of Tours, and to other Arch-Bishops that were to be at that Council, and prayed King Charles the Bald to call it together. This Prince answered, that he would cause the Council to be holden, but withall, that he had designed to make Wulfadus Arch-Bishop of Bourges, in the place of Rodolphus who was lately dead; that he had been chosen by the Bishops and People of the Diocess, but that he dare not let him be Ordained before his restoration, till he had written to him about it; that he desired he might be Ordained Priest, and then Bishop, or if he would not do it till the Synod was met, that he would permit the Government of that Church to be left to him. The Pope wrote to this Prince, that he should not do any thing concerning Wulfadus till his Cause was Examined and Judged in the Synod.

Pope Nicolas's Judgment about Wulfadus.

This Synod therefore met in Aug. 866. Hincmarus Arch-Bishop of Reims presented Four Petitions or Memoirs to it in his own defence. In the first he shews, that Wulfadus and those that had been Ordained by Ebbo after his Deposition were declared deprived of their Holy Orders by the Judgment of a Council of 5 Provinces, and by the Judges they themselves had pitched upon; That afterward he had himself, by the Order of the Council, given an Account of the Matter at Rome, and that the Judgment of the Synod had been confirmed there by Pope Benedict, and also Nicolas; That he did not envy the Happiness of these Clerks in the least; That he was troubled they were degraded after such a manner, and wished they might be restored, but he neither dare, nor could do it after the Judgment of the Synod, it being expressly forbidden by the Canons, and Decretals of the Popes, who had several times declared, that they could not themselves annul the Canons made by the Councils, and approved by their Predecessors. The Second Memoir concerns the Person of Ebbo. Hincmarus proves by the Popes Letters, that Ebbo owned his Crime, and was deposed by 44 Bishops, whose Judgment was afterward confirmed and approved by Pope Sergius, who had ordered him to content himself with a Lay-Communion, and since he was not afterward Canonically restored, he ought not to be looked upon as a Bishop after his Condemnation, and that at this time it ought not in the least to be questioned, because this Judgment being passed in 835, he had a prescription of above 30 years against him. They alledged, that notwithstanding his Deposition he had continued to execute his Episcopal Function to his Death. Hincmarus replies, that this unwarrantable Action was of no use to him, and that the number of those that approved it could not justify his Carriage, which was so opposite to the Laws of the Church; That it was contrary to all the Canonical Rules for him to exercise all the Offices of a Bishop in the Church of Mainence, for the Canons do not permit in any case whatsoever a Bishop who is deprived of his own Diocese to exercise the Episcopal Function in another. Hincmarus then shews, that his own Ordination was Canonical and Lawful, saying, that after the Deposition of Ebbo Fulcus took care of the Church of Reims for 9 years, in which time Ebbo did not claim his Dignity again, nor make any opposition to him. That Noto had done the same for a year and a half, without any demand of restoration from Ebbo. That as for himself he was afterward Ordained in the Synod of the Province of Reims held at Beauvais, being desired by the People and Clergy of the City, and by the Bishops of the Province, and that he was Consecrated by his Arch-Bishop Bishop, and by the Bishops of the Province, with the consent of the Abbot and Monks of the Monastery of which he was a Member. That he was put in possession of it without any opposition from any Man. That his Ordination was approved by the Bishops of France, who wrote about it to Pope Sergius, and confirmed by an Edict of King Charles the Bald. That all these Acts were sent to Leo IV. Sergius being dead in the mean time. That Lotharius himself having in vain solicited Pope Sergius to have Ebbo restored, agreed to his Ordination; That the Holy See had allowed it, and Leo IV. had granted him the Pall, and had writ to him several Letters; That Pope Benedict and Pope Nicolas had confirmed him by granting him his Privileges. Lastly, That he was not obliged to enter into any dispute about it with any Man, since Nicolas had not required of him an Account of his Ordination of him. Lastly, having confirmed that which had passed in the Affair of the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, it belonged to the Bishops to direct what they thought just and regular to satisfy the Pope; That as for himself he would not oppose what they did; That if it were necessary he would explain the Business more at large, and would shew them the Reasons, why they suspended these Clerks at the Synod of Meaux, and degraded them quite in the Council of Soissons. Then he presented to the Synod the Acts of the Council of Soissons, with those of the Synod of Bourges, and the Privileges of the Popes Benedict and Nicolas.

Hincmarus also presented a 3d Petition, in which after he had set down such Canons and Passages in the Popes Letters, as made it appear, that sometimes Clemency had been used towards them whose Ordinations were dubious, he consented for Peace sake, and to satisfy the Pope, that some gentle Method might be found out to receive and promote to Holy Orders those who had been Ordained by Ebbo, yet with a due care that this fact might not prejudice the Canons of the Church, nor the Judgment given against them and against Ebbo.

The Fourth Memoir of Hincmarus was presented to the Council, but not read, for fear of offending some Persons in the Council. It shews, That it was against his will, that he was forced to declare, that Wulfadus, after he had been condemned by the Council of Soissons, without the consent of the Bishops of that Council, without any authority from the Holy See, and without consulting the Church of Reims, had left the Province wherein he was Baptized, had received the Tonsure of a Clerk, and had executed the Office of a Reader, to go into the Church of Langres, which was then vacant, that he might be Ordained a Bishop there. That he had possessed himself of the Revenues of that Church, which according to the Council of Chalcedon, ought to have been kept by the Steward for the next Bishop. That having been removed by the Order of the Synod, he had made an Oath that he would never attempt the like again, nor undertake any Ecclesiastical Function for the future. That he had delivered this Declaration in Writing in the presence of Pardulus Bishop of Laon, Gombertus Bishop of Eureux, and Aeneas Bishop of Paris, before the King, and several Judges chosen by the Synod. That an Oath and Declaration had been required of him, as the Popes had decreed, to prevent a change of his resolution. And that it was for the same cause, that he had desired Pope Nicolas to confirm the Judgment given against him in the Council of Soissons, which had been already confirmed by his Predecessor Benedict. That he did not say this out of Malice, or with a design to do Wulfadus any Injury, nor to hinder the effect of the Popes good will towards him, but only to inform the Council fully of what had passed in that Affair.

After so full an Information, the Bishops of the Council were of the Opinion, that the Synod of Soissons had judged rightly; That Hincmarus had good reason not to restore these Clerks in contempt of the Decrees of that Council; That they might nevertheless be restored without injuring the Authority of the Council of Soissons confirmed by the Holy See, by granting them to continue in their Orders by Favour and Dispensation, and so succeed the Bishops when they died. But they thought it not convenient for them to do it by their own Authority, and judged it best for the Pope to do it by his. Wherefore they wrote to him, and assured him, that they had followed and executed his Orders; and that it might not be thought that they had revoked what was decreed in the Council of Soissons, Herardus Arch-Bishop of Tours made a solemn Protestation in the Council in all their Names, Names, that they would never alter their Opinion, but only would consent; that the Judgment which had been given in strictness of Justice, might by a merciful Charity be moderated, and sweetened. Seven Archbishops were at this Council, viz. Hincmarus of Reims, Remigius of Lyons, Trotarius of Bordeaux, Herardus of Tours, Wenilo of Rouen, Egilo of Sens, and Liubert of Maience, and 28 Bishops of France, among whom was Rothadus Bishop of Soissons, who Subscribed the Letter sent to the Pope about the Affair of Wulfadus and his Fellows. Hincmarus wrote in his own Name to Pope Nicolas to excuse himself, that he had not immediately restored those Clerks, because he dare not Disannul what had been done in a Synod of five Provinces, but that he had submitted to the Synod as he order'd him, and had consented to the Accommodation that his Brethren had found out agreeable to the Canons of the Council of Nice, made concerning those who had been Ordained by Meletius; That he did not conceive it necessary for him to send a Deputy in his stead, since Egilo went in the Name of the Council, and the Pope had not enjoined him to come to Rome, or send his Deputies, unless there were an Appeal from the Judgment of the Synod, either on his own part or Wulfadus's. He beseeches him to confirm what the Council had done, and assures him, that he wished no ill to Wulfadus, and other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, who were but nine in all, as well Canons and Monks, as City and Country Clergymen. Charles the Bald wrote also a Letter to the Pope, in which he commends Hincmarus for his Obedience, approves the Method which the Council had taken, to refer the Restoration of Wulfadus to the Pope, and gives him notice that he had, in the mean time, left the Care of the Church of Bourges to him. The King also desired of the Bishops of this Council to Crown his Queen Hermintruda, which was granted him, and the Ceremony was performed by them at the same time in the Church of S. Medardus.

Egilo Archbishop of Sens was sent with these Letters, the Acts of the Council, and a Petition sent by Hincmarus, which is not met withal among his Works, in which he gives the Sum of all that he had alledged in the Council concerning the Deposition of Ebbo, and recites several Authorities out of the Popes Letters, to shew, that he ought not to blame, or condemn, what has been done against that Archbishop, nor Annul the Judgment given against Wulfadus, or the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, but only restore them by an Act of Grace.

Pope Nicolas being desirous to Disannul all that had been done in the first Council of Soissons; was not at all pleased with this Judgment, but returned a large Answer to the Bishops, in which he much blames the Transactions of that Council, and says, That the Acts of it are full of Falsities, and that they were never Confirmed at Rome after a full knowledge of the Cause; That Pope Leo, his Predecessor, had ordered that the Matter should be re-examined, and for that end sent his Legat to be present at the Tryal, but it was never Executed, and Pope Benedict's Confirmation was obtain'd by surprize by Hincmarus, and by a false relation of it; and besides, 'twas not Definitive, or without a Reserve; That he had advis'd Hincmarus to receive those Clerks, and in case he would not, he commanded that a Synod should do it; That he was mightily pleas'd that there was no difference in the Council, but they had unanimously agreed to restore Wulfadus, and the other Clerks; That all he complain'd of was, that since they had left their Restoration to him, they had not given him a full account of that Affair, and all that concern'd it; That they ought to have made a Declaration at large, of all the circumstance of Ebbo's Deposition, and Restoration, of his second Deprivation, and Translation to another Church; That he wish'd they had done it in that Cause, and would do it in all others, about which he should order a Council to be held. He approv'd of Hincmarus's submission, but could not but smile at his assertion, That 'twas not he that had suspended them, or declared them fallen from the Orders, since he knew what he had done in his Province against them, and how eagerly he had Prosecuted that Affair at Rome. He subjoins; That the Matter being not sufficiently cleared, or examined, he could not pass his definitive Sentence upon it, but because these Clerks were Deposed contrary to the Canons, they ought to be restored, and resettled for the present, till Hincmarus can produce what he hath against them, and prove that they have been lawfully Deposed. He complains, That they had made one of those Clerks a Bishop at the same time that they pretended to leave the Judgment of the Matter to him, and declares, That he will not yield to his Ordination till the thing is ended. Lastly, In the Business of Ebbo, he says, That 'tis no wonder that Pope Sergius would not receive him to his Communion, because he was Condemned, and had not Appealed to the H. See about his Condemnation, nor had his Cause been fully discovered to him, or examined. He speaks the same things to Hincmarus in his Letters written to him at the same time, but more especially blames his Carriage, and Administration, in many sharp reflexions; and concludes, telling him, That he takes it ill that he makes use of the Pall on such occasions as were not allowable. In a third Letter, he thanks King Charles the Bald for the satisfaction he had given him, in making the Bishops of France unanimously join in the Restoration of those Clerks, but could not blame Hincmarus. Lastly, In his fourth Letter he Congratulates Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, for their Restoration, and Exhorts them to be subject to Hincmarus; and tells them, That he would allow them a Years time to prosecute that Affair at Rome, if they thought fit. These four Letters bear Date Dec. 7. 866. [These Letters of Pope Nicolas are extant Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 268. and 480. They are also Printed with a Collection of his Epistles Published at Rome 1542. Fol.]

By what has been said, it is evident that the Bishops of France would not bring these Causes to Rome, nor be oblig'd to appear there themselves to maintain the Justice of their Sentence, nor would endure it to be Disannul'd, or blamed in the least; the contrary to which, Pope Nicolas pretended pretended to do. He required, that the Councils which Judged any Causes at the first Hearing should be called by his Authority ; That both the Accused and the Accusers, had liberty of Appealing to Rome, before and after their Sentence ; That all Synods should give him a large and full Account of their Proceedings before they passed Sentence ; That in case of Appeal, the Holy See might put the Condemned into the Places and Condition they were formerly in, conditionally, and then the Judges should be obliged to come, or send their Deputies to Rome, to maintain their Judgment, where the Cause shall be Examined a-new, as if it had never been decided. From this time the Bishops of France, who were most Learned, and best Skilled in the Canons, to evade the Pretensions contrary to the Canons, which tended directly to the utter ruining of the Episcopal Authority, and overthrow of all Church Discipline, and that without quarrelling with the H. See, Judged all Ecclesiastical Causes that came before them in their Synods ; and that their Judgment might be of greater Authority, they caused the Contending Parties to choose their Judges, because, according to a Maxim of Law, It is not Lawful to Appeal from the Sentence of those Judges whom they had Elected. Lastly, They caused that Judgment to be Executed, and in case the Persons Condemned referred themselves to Rome, they would send the Pope their Reasons, and require his Confirmation, or rather Approbation of their Judgment, but tho' often cited never would go to Rome, nor send their Deputies with a Commission to act in their Names, to call any Matter in Question, but left it to the Pope to do as he pleased, without opposition. And if it so happened, that they were obliged either for the good of the Church, or for Peace sake, or in Obedience to the Will of that Prince, to do as the Pope would have them, they protested that it was without any Abrogation of their Sentence, which was Valid and Just, but only to shew Mercy to the faulty. Thus they behaved themselves in this Cause. Hincmarus, first of all, caused those Clerks to present their Petition in Writing, and to leave it to the Synod of France : He then made them choose their Judges by agreement, after he had withdrawn from the Tryal. After the Judgment was passed he had it executed, and confirmed by the Pope ; but at last, Nicolas I. being solicited to it by Wulfadus, and being desirous to have that Cause re-examined in a Synod, Hincmarus ordered the matter so, that not only their Decree was kept in force, but was confirmed without any offence to the Pope, who had resolved to restore these Clerks, or to the Emperor, who favoured Wulfadus ; For he perswaded the Bishops not to deal so rigorously with Wulfadus and his Fellows, as in Justice they might, and to consent to their Restoration, if the Pope desired it. This shewed a great deal of complaisance to the Pope, in leaving the thing to his dispose, in respect to the H. See, but it was not what the Pope desired ; He would have had the Synod, which he called, to have quite Disannulled what was done at Soissons, and himself to be made Judge in that Affair ; and upon an Appeal, both Parties should have come to Rome to Contest about it. And for this Reason it was that he would not determine the Matter definitively, but satisfied himself to Restore Wulfadus, and the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo, conditionally.

The Letter of the Council of Tr. yes to the Pope against Ebbo.

Before Nicolas's Letters were brought by Egilo, Charles the Bald, who had so great a favour for Wulfadus, and would have him Ordained Archbishop of Bourges by all means whatsoever, sent his Son Carolomannus, Abbot of S. Medard, to have him Ordained and Installed, which was done in September, by some Bishops who were not very well Skilled in the Laws of the Church, which Wulfadus had provided, and Carolomannus had scared into it. It was Aldo Bishop of Limoges who Consecrated him ; and some have said, that that Bishop, in the midst of the Ceremony, was taken with a Fever, of which he Died soon after. Egilo being returned with four Letters from Pope Nicolas in the Year 867, Charles the Bald called a Council at Troyes, at which were the Archbishops of Reims, Tours, Rouen, Bourdeaux, Sens, and Bourges, with those 14 Bishops who were present at the Council of Soissons the Year before ; in which, some Bishops favouring Wulfadus to please Carolus Calvus, would encounter Hincmarus, but he defended himself so well, that they only resolved to satisfy the Pope to send a Synodical Epistle, containing a large Relation of what had passed in the Deposition of Ebbo, his pretended Restoration, and the Ordinations of Wulfadus, and others, who had been Consecrated after his Deposition. In it they relate, how the Children of Lewis the Godly would have deprived him of his Estate, and for that end had made use of Ebbo, and some other Bishops, who having obliged that Prince to confess some forged Crimes, had put him in a State of Penance, and deprived him of his Authority ; How afterwards, when Lewis the Kind was again restored by the Authority of his Bishops, Ebbo had left his See, and fled ; how he was Apprehended, and carried to the Emperor by Rothadus Bishop of Soissons, and by Ercaricus Bishop of Chalons ; how he had himself Signed, and Approved the Restoration of Lewis the Kind ; and owned, that he was unjustly, and contrary to the Canons, put to Penance ; after which manner having acknowledged his fault in Writing at the Council in Thionville held 835, in which Year Lewis the Kind Died ; how afterward Lotharius being come out of Italy into France, Ebbo met him at Worms, conducted by the Abbot Boso in the Monastery, where he then abode ; How Lotharius having given order that he should be Restored, he went to Reims, and began to Exercise his Episcopal Function in the presence of the Bishops of the Province, without any contradiction from them ; How in that time he had Ordained Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, about whom the Controversie was, who were told. That he was Canonically restored to his Church ; How after he had enjoyed peaceably, one Year, the Archbishoprick of Reims, he withdrew himself into the Kingdom of Lotharius, when King Charles had passed over the Seguana, and Conquered the Country ; How great Service he had done Lotharius, who gave him two Abbeys, and had employed him in several

Affairs,

Affairs, and sent him to Rome with Drogen Bishop of Metz 844, to Pope Sergius, who would not acknowledge him for a Bishop; How having refused to go Ambassador into Greece, he fell into Disgrace with Lotharius, and was turned out of his Abbeys; How afterwards retreating into the Empire of Lewis of Germany, he was made Bishop of Hildesheim in Saxony, where he Exercised his Episcopal Function; How in 845, Charles had called a Synod at Beauvais to have a Bishop Ordained for the Church of Reims, which had been vacant ten Years, yet Governed by the Abbot Fuicus, and after by Norbo; How Hincmarus had been Canonically Elected and Ordained Bishop, and his Ordination had been confirmed by Gontaldas, whom Pope Sergius had appointed at the Solicitation of Lotharius to regulate that Affair. They joined to this Relation all that they had Written to the H. See about that Matter, and all that the Pope had given them in Command, declaring to him, that they approved the Restoration of the Clerks Ordained by Ebbo; and consented, that they should Exercise their Office. Lastly, to gratify the Emperor Charles, they required the Pall for Wulfadus, Ordain'd Bishop of Bowges. This Letter was dated Nov. 867, and Sealed up with the Archbishop's Seals, and given to Astardus Bishop of Nantes to be carried to the Pope; But Charles the Bald made him deliver it to him, broke the Seals, Read it, and Wrote another to the Pope, which was more favourable to Ebbo, relating every thing that was for him, and concealing what was against him; He says he was the Son of a Person that belonged to the Kings Treasury; that having his liberty, he had entred into the Ecclesiastick State, and was made the Kings Library-keeper; That after the Death of Charles the Great, in the time of Lewis the Kind, Wulfaratus Archbishop of Reims being Dead, and it being left in the power of the People to choole whom they would Bishop, they first chose Gillemarus, but he being presented to the Bishops to be examined, was found incapable of it; wherefore the Emperor propounding Ebbo as a Person of Merit, the People agreed to choole him; That in the first Rebellion of Lewis the Kind's Sons, Ebbo continued Loyal, but the second time he had engaged himself, and the Party of Lotharius and acknowledged his fault publicly in the Church of S. Steven at Metz; That to prevent his Deposition, he had sent to the Empress Judith the Ring that she had given him; That that Princess was employ'd to pacify her Husband Lewis the Kind, and to solicit for Ebbo; That nevertheless, some Bishops had perswaded him to confess his fault, and after that Confession, had advised him never more to exercise his Priests Office; That the Emperor had written to Pope Gregory to confirm his Deposition, and had received his Letter thereupon, but what was in it they knew not, yet Lewis the Kind did not seem satisfied by it, because he did not make another Archbishop upon it, which he would immediately have done, if the Pope had confirmed the Deposition of Ebbo; That after the Death of Lewis the Kind, Ebbo was acknowledged by all the Suffragan Bishops. Archbishop of Reims; That they had all communicated with him, and all that had been Ordained Bishops in his absence had received the Ring and Crozier from him, with Letters of Confirmation. This is the account that Charles the Bald gave the Pope in particular about the Deposition of Ebbo, and after excuses himself for having caused Wulfadus to be Ordained, before he had received the Popes Answer, and demanded the Pall for him, and commends the condition of the Bishops oppressed by the Britains to him. - Hincmarus had also written a private Letter to Pope Nicolas, in Answer to that which he had received from the Pope, full of reproof, and angry reflexions: In it he defends himself with much submission, but as much smartness. He tells him, that he had found in the Letter written to himself, and in that to the Bishops of the Council of Soissons, many reproachful imputations, which he deserved for his Sins; That if he were present with him, he would do as S. Benedict ordered his Monks to do, when they found their Prior offended with them, cast himself upon the Earth at his feet, but what he could not do with his Body he would do with his Mind and Heart, according to the Advice of S. Gregory, who bids us to have Patience, and Charity in our Hearts towards our Neighbour, who is at a distance from us. In fine, that he had executed the Popes Command in restoring Wulfadus, and the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo. After he hath thus humbled himself, he assures him that he was much troubled to see him so angry with him, but he imputes that Charge to the false Reports he had received of him, and owns, that had he been really guilty of those things he is accused of, he should have deserved to be dealt withal more severely, but his Conscience testifies to him, that tho' he be a great Sinner, he is not such an one as the World hath represented him. He says, That he was heretofore accused to Pope Sergius, and Leo, that he had not that respect he ought for the H. See, but he shewed, by his obedient Carriage, how submissive he was to the H. See, and how far from that ambitious Spirit which was charged upon him, as well as from cruelty and falshood; That neither his own Church, nor the Neighboring Churches, ever complained that he was subject to those Vices, and beseeches him never to believe that he hath had any design to delude him, or oppose his Orders, or despise his Admonitions; That as to Ebbo, he thought it not convenient to lay open his faults, lest any Man should think that he insulted over the Dead, or would revive an Affair that had been ended and determined above 30 Years. Nevertheless, to satisfy the Pope, he tells him, how he had declared himself unworthy of his Priesthood, without being constrained by violent means to it, or engaged by fraud. He takes notice, that of all the Bishops who had Deposed him, there now survived but two, viz. Rothadus and Erpwinus. He then describes the manner how he was Ordained into his place; how Pope Sergius being solicited by Lotharius to it, had Named Gontaldas Archbishop of Rouen to examine his Ordination; how Ebbo, when he was Summoned to the Synod by Gontaldas, dare not appear; whence it was concluded that Ebbo was never restored, and should remain Deposed from his Priestly Office and Dignity ; and that having lost it in his Life time, he should not recover it after his Death. He next gives him an Account of the business of Wulfadus, and the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo after his Deposition ; and because Pope Nicolas chiefly insisted upon this, That Pope Leo had not confirmed the first Judgment given against them at the Council of Soissons, Hincmarus gives him the particulars of all that had passed between him and Pope Leo in that business, viz. That Pope Leo had written to him that he could not confirm what had been done in that Synod, because the Council had not sent their Deputies to him, nor were his Legates present at it, nor had the Emperor writ any thing to him about it ; and because 'twas said that Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, had Appealed to the H. See. That, besides this, Lotharius had importuned him not to confirm the Judgment of the Council of Soissons ; That the Bishops hearing that Lotharius concerned himself in that Matter, had written to him, and that he had nominated two Bishops of Italy to look into it in a Council, which was called by the Authority of the H. See ; That after this, that Prince had sent his Deputies to Rome to Pope Leo, who died as they were in their Journey to him ; That being arrived there in the Papacy of Benedict, that Pope had granted him a Grant to confirm the Judgment of the Synod of Soissons ; that since that, neither the Bishop of Spoleum, Nominated by Lotharius, nor any other Bishop, had held any other Synod about that Affair, but that which was lately called by the Authority of Pope Nicolas ; He defends himself against that Accusation that the Pope laid against him, that he had falsified Benedict's Letter of Privilege, and assures him, that the Copy which he had sent him was a true one, as he will find, if he compares it with the Original Draught, which is in the Registry of the Church of Rome. He adds, that he had not required of the H. See any other special Privileges, but what were usually granted to all Metropolitans, and were anciently granted to the Metropolis of Reims, but because his Province, and also his Diocese, was partly in one Kingdom and part in another, he thought it necessary to have his Privileges renewed, because men had great regard to them, and carnal men being awed by such marks of distinction, respected him the more. Lastly, as to the Pall, he assures him, that he never used it unless upon the great Festivals of the Passover and Nativity, because on the other Holidays of the Year, tho' 'twas allowed for him to wear them, yet he was obliged through urgent business, and the Affairs of Church and State, to be absent from his Cathedral Church. In fine, that he desired the Pall for no particular use, because the Pall is an Ornament which is suitable for all Metropolitans, as a mark of the Dignity or Virtue of him that wears it. Hincmarus had composed this Letter before the Council of Troyes, immediately after he received Nicolas's Letter, but it was not sent in that form, for the Bishops of that Council having given him a large relation of the business of Ebbo, he cut off the beginning of his Letter, and wrote a shorter beginning with his own Ordination, and the business of Wulfadus. Astardus Bishop of Nantes, the Deputy of the Council to go to Rome, was also entrusted with another Affair by the Council of Soissons. 'Tis thought commonly to be of that of 866, but it was another Council held there in 867, for Astardus, who was the Bearer, went to Rome in that Year only ; and Pope Nicolas in his Answers to the Synod, and Bishops of the Council of Soissons in 866, makes no mention of any thing written in this Letter. The Bishops of the last Council tell him, how the Churches of Tours and Nantes were much annoyed by the Britans, who would not come to the Synods of the Province to which they belonged, nor acknowledge the Metropolitans and Bishops of France, pretending to govern themselves ; That they valued not the Petitions that had been made to them ; That they had encroached upon Nantes, and attempted the same upon the Bishopricks of Tours, Angers, and Mans ; That almost all the Churches of Neustria had endured much by their Cruelty ; That they had Deposed the Bishops of Dola and Vannes, and put other Bishops in their place ; Then they pray the Pope to do them Justice, to give Astardus a favourable Audience, to reduce the Britans to good Order, and to write to their Duke, either to submit to King Charles, or else to make use of the Sword of Excommunication. This Letter is dated Aug. 16.

The business of Astardus.

Adrian's
Answers about Ebbo

When Astardus came at Rome he found Pope Nicolas Dead, and Adrian settled in his place, to whom he presented the Synod and Kings Letters. Adrian returned this Answer to the Bishops of the Synod of Troyes, That tho' they had omitted some things as to the Restauration of Ebbo, yet he commends their Zeal ; That he was glad that Wulfadus's Innocency had been proved so clearly ; That he approved of his Promotion to the Archbishoprick of Bourges, and granted him the Pall ; That he desired him to put Pope Nicolas's Name into all their Dypsticks, and to oppose all that the Greeks might say, or attempt against this Pope. This Letter is Dated Febr. 11. 868. He sent an Answer also to the Letter of the Bishops of the Council of Soissons, in the beginning of which it evidently appears, that the Letter before-mentioned was not written by that Council of Soissons held in 866, but in another which met there in 867, before the Council of Troyes. He tells them, that he much pitied the condition of Astardus, who was deprived and dispossessed of his Bishoprick and Orders ; that he should be put (incardinari) into the first vacant Church, to exercise his Episcopal Function there. He says, that he had written about it to King Charles. And indeed, in the following Letter which is directed to that Prince, he Answers first to the Letter which he had written to him concerning Ebbo, telling him, that 'tis to no purpose to examine the matters concerning that Bishop, who is now Dead. He thanks him for the Protection which he had given the Churchmen, which the H. See thought fit to restore. He grants the Pall to Wulfadus, and recommends Astardus to his Care to be put into the next vacant See, which was not less than his own. He also recommends him for the same reason to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, and Herard Archbishop of Tours, in private Letters to them : He commands this last to give Astardus an Abby, which he had heretofore in his Diocese, and tells him, him, that he had written to Solomon Duke of the Britans, and his People, to exhort them to do him Justice; and desires him to be fully assured, that if they should send any one to Rome on their part, they should not obtain any thing to prejudice his Rights. He grants by another Letter the Pall to Aetardus, to comfort him for the loss of his Diocess. Thus ended the Contest between Hincmarus and Wulfadus, with the other Clerks Ordained by Ebbo. [These Letters of Pope Adrian are Printed among his other Epistles, which are 26 in all, in Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 896.]

The End of the Fourth Contest.

C H A P. V.

An History of the several Contests that Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims had with his Nephew Hincmarus Bishop of Laon.

Hincmarus engaged in another business against his Nephew Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, which had no better effects than the former. He had by his Interest and favour made this Nephew Bishop of Laon, which is subject to his Metropolis, in 859. This Man instead of being subject and devoted to the will of his Uncle, would govern according to his own humour, and being grown into favour at Court, accepted an Office there, and obtained an Abby. This displeased the Arch-Bishop of Reims, who did all he could to oblige him to quit them, and reproved him for leaving his Diocess to go to his Abby without his permission, although it was forbidden by the Canons to Bishops to leave their Province without the consent of their Metropolitan.

The Bishop of Laon fearing the Presence of his Uncle, dare not be at the Synod of Bishops met at Cambray for the Ordination of a Bishop, although he was summoned. In 868 Hincmarus Bishop of Laon engaged himself in a Business with Charles the Bald. Having some Contests with certain Lay-men about the Estate of the Church, and principally with a Lord called Normannus, to whom the King had given a Benefice, i. e. some Lands belonging to the Church of Laon, with the consent of this Bishop Hincmarus himself, who had himself solicited him, and procured it for him, as one of his Friends, but afterwards repenting of what he had done, and being desirous to get it again, had Excommunicated that Lord. He began to discuss the Affair privately before the Commissioners, among whom were some Bishops, but it happened that the Son of Luido accused the Bishop of Laon before the King, and the Lords of his Council, of having deprived him of a Benefice of his Fathers, (i. e. of a certain Mannor belonging to the Church, which had of ancient times been possessed and enjoyed by his Father) although to retain the possession and enjoyment of it he had paid a Fine to the Church, and had gotten a grant of him. The King complaining of these Actions to Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, he answered his Majesty with so much Impudence, that the Prince fell into a great passion against him, and gave him many ill words. He then summoned him to his Council, but Hincmarus humbly shewed him, that he could not appear, and at the same time sent a Letter to Rome to accuse Normannus, and to request the Pope to take this Matter upon him, and procure that he might come to Rome. Hincmarus hereupon was condemned for his Default by the Kings Council, and all the Revenues of his Bishoprick were seized on. The King also put him out of his Office at Court and his Abby. And although Hincmarus Arch-Bishop of Reims was very angry with him, yet he endeavoured to assist him on this Occasion, and wrote a smart Letter to Charles the Bald, in which he affirms, that what he had done against Hincmarus was altogether unjust; That it was never heard of, that a Christian Prince should confiscate the Revenues of the Church. Whereupon he recites several Laws of the Emperors and Decrees of the Councils and Popes to prove, that 'tis not allowable for any Man to invade the Church Revenues. Then he presented to the King a Memoir, which contained several Canons, to shew, that Bishops ought not to appear before Lay Judges in Matters Ecclesiastical. The King answered, that the Kings his Predecessors had compelled the Bishops to give an Account before the Lords of his Council of the Benefices they would put their Officers out of. Hincmarus replied by another Writing, that that Custom was an Abuse, which was reformed by the Capitularies. The King being at Pistis in Normandy, he held a Council there. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon presented a Petition to the Bishops assembled, requiring them to settle him in his Revenues, or suffer him to shift for himself at Rome, but the Matter was accommodated by Hincmarus Arch-Bishop of Reims, and the Bishop of Laon was restored to his place, after he had begged the Kings pardon, and so he retreated immediately into his Diocess. Charles the Bald commanded him several times to come to him, but he would not obey the Order, but designed to fly into the Kingdom of Lotharius, who had promised to receive him into his protection. He had also the boldness to write to King Charles, that he had rather live out of his Kingdom, than to be represented such an ill Man as he was reported to be in it. The King then commanded his Domestick Servants to come to him, some obeyed, but he detained the rest. After this the King a second time sent two Bishops to him, and some of his Guards, to bring them either by perswasion or force. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon having heard that some Soldiers were coming to him, pronounced Excommunication against those that did meddle with the Revenues of his Church. The two Bishops which Charles the Bald had sent, having put Hincmarus in mind of the Oath which he had made to the King, could not perswade him to go with them to him, and therefore therefore returned after they had obliged such Persons of his Family as were freed by an Oath to appear. Hincmarus of Laon holding on his course, issued out an Excommunication against several Persons in the Arch Bishoprick of Reims, and in other Archbishopsricks and Dioceses, not sparing the King Charles himself, which was a Cause of great Scandal to the whole Church and Kingdom. Nevertheless Hincmarus Arch-Bishop of Reims found out a way to compose this Matter, and to hinder the Bishops who were provoked, from bringing it before a Synod, and to reconcile his Nephew with those he had Excommunicated; but this did not put an end to this Business, for Hincmarus of Laon, a Man of an untractable temper, enraged King Charles again, who thereupon called an Assembly at Verbery, Apr. 24. 869. in which that Bishop was accused; and seeing himself ready to be condemned, he required leave to go to Rome, and remove his Business thither. But King Charles instead of granting it, stopped him for some time, upon which he immediately Excommunicated, or rather Interdicted his Priests and Clergy, and forbade them to celebrate their Office, administer Baptism, yea, even to Infants in danger of Death, to give the Communion even to dying Persons, or Bury any Person in his Dioceses, till he shall return, or they receive a Letter from Rome to order the contrary. The Arch-Bishop of Reims having heard of this Prohibition by some of the Clergy of the Church of Laon, who came to complain to him, wrote immediately to his Nephew to take off the Interdict, and to the Clergy of Laon, that they ought to exercise their Function, and administer the Sacraments, without any regard to that dangerous and unlawful Excommunication. He sent them also some Rules taken out of the Canons to direct them how to behave themselves. The Bishop of Laon not regarding the Advice of his Metropolitan, he wrote to him a second time more smartly, and enjoined the Clergy of the Church of Laon to do their Duty. He wrote also again a third time to the Bishop of Laon, who was let at liberty, after he had taken an Oath to be faithful to King Charles. But to justify himself, he gathered several Extracts out of the false Decretals attributed to the ancient Popes, in which it was said, that Bishops ought to be tried by the Holy See, at the first Examination, if they demanded it.

rels of the marus's about the business of Nivinus.

Some time after this, Pope Adrian wrote to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, and King Charles, to compel Normannus to restore immediately to the Church of Laon the Lands he was in possession of, telling him, that if he did not do it, he would Excommunicate them, and to suffer Hincmarus Bishop of Laon to come to Rome to fulfil his Vow he had made of going thither, and to take care of the Church of Laon in his absence, which provoked them both against the Bishop of Laon.

In the mean time Lotharius II. King of Lorraine, being dead in Italy, Aug. 8. 869. Charles possessed himself of his Kingdom, and being accepted by the Grandees of the Country, he was Crowned by Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, Sept. 7. in the same year. In the beginning of the year 870, Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims expelled out of his Dioceses a Person named Nivinus, being accused of debauching a Nun, and carrying her away, His Nephew not only received Nivinus, but put him in possession of an Estate he had in another Dioceses, and gave him in recompence of what he had lost a Pension out of the Revenues of the Church of Laon. Hincmarus wrote, Feb. 13. 870, to him, and tells him, that he ought not to receive either him or his Brother Bertricus, whom he had expelled out of his Dioceses for several Crimes, of which he was found guilty. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon returned him an Answer, That he had always avoided to speak or write to him of such things as he had acted contrary to his Judgment, but he was obliged to be plain with him in reference to the Excommunication of Nivinus, and could not but tell him, that he thought that he ought not to deal with that Person as if he had been regularly accused, and could not or would not make his defence, or had been convicted of the Crime, because when he had obtained a time of him to clear himself, although he had no Accusers, and was come upon the day appointed to vindicate his own Innocence by the Testimony of Credible Persons, he neither found him, nor any Person in his stead to be his Judge; but without a Legal Hearing he was commanded to depart out of his Dioceses. He finds fault with Hincmarus for believing false reports so easily, and assures him, that it was not true that he had received the Estate of Nivinus, or allowed him a Pension out of the Revenues of the Church. He also defends himself strongly against the suspicion which Hincmarus had entertained against him, that he sold the Goods of the Church. He confesses that Nivinus had a great while ago offered him a part of his Estate adjoining to his, but he would not accept of his gift, whereupon he soon after gave them to another Person; and alleges several Canons to prove, that he ought not to have passed so rash a Sentence. Lastly, he says, that he thinks Bertricus ought not to be looked upon as an Excommunicated Person, because the Archbishop of Reims could not Excommunicate him who was not of his Dioceses, and had neither been put to publick Penance, nor condemned by a regular Sentence.

Adulphus.

Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims sometime after this sent another Request to his Nephew, in which he had a more favourable Answer. The Bishop of Laon had employed a certain Priest named Adulphus in a Commission, who did not discharge his trust well, but being reproved for it by his Bishop, spoke disrespectfully to him, and withdrew himself. Hincmarus angry at this, sent the Priest Clarentius to tell him, that he was Excommunicated, but he stopped his Ears, and would not hear the Sentence, and then fled to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims. Afterwards being desirous to return to Laon, the Doors of his Church and Cloyster were shut against him, to his admiration. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims interceded for him, and desired his Nephew to receive him, and restore him to his place, or if not, at least to receive him into Communion. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon answered him, that that Priest had fled very unfitly, and without any necessity, telling him, that that he would never have any thing to do with him. That although he had behaved himself so ill to him, yet in respect to what he had written, he would restore him to his Prebend and House, and would permit all that would to communicate with him, upon condition that he shall not be allowed communion with himself till he received him upon his trial, or had satisfaction. This Letter of Hincmarus is dated the 19th, and the Answer the 27th of April, in the same year 870. [This Letter with some others of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims is Printed, with the Works of Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, by Sirmondus at Paris 1645. Vol. 2.]

At the same time Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims and Hincmarus Bishop of Laon quarrelled about another matter. There was a Chapel in the Diocese of Laon belonging to a Benefice of the Church of Reims, in which there was ordinarily a Priest to officiate, who was presented by the Incumbent of the Benefice. Sigibert, who had the Benefice, had presented one named Senatus, a Servant of the Church of Reims, and Hincmarus would set him at liberty, that he might be Ordained by the Bishop of Laon. This Clergyman, though he was not in Priestly Orders, had yet officiated in that Chapel for 4 years. Then the Bishop of Laon sent thither two Priests of his Company, but after a while he removed these Priests, and would have a Priest only to bear the Titles, and that the Inhabitants should go to a Parish of the Diocese of Laon governed by Hermerardus. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims desired his Nephew, either to Ordain Senatus, or to put into that Church another Priest whom he should appoint to bear the Title. Instead of satisfying his Uncle, he gave him an angry and harsh answer, thinking himself abused by some admonitions which he had given him in his Letter, with the authority of his Uncle and Metropolitan. He first of all accuses him as the Author of his imprisonment. Then he tells him, that he can't give him a full answer as to the business of Hermerardus, because he had not heard it canonically and regularly; That he did not remember what decision had been made in that business, but would inquire of those that had been present, and remembered it; That he did not positively require the Priest Adulphus to be present at the Synod to be held at Laon on the 15th of that month; That he wondered, that he did not send again sooner, since he had granted what he had desired; That as to Senatus, 'twas not true that he had consented that that Clerk should have the Church in debate, but on the contrary had told him, that he would deal with the Church which the Archbishop of Reims had in his Diocese, as he had done with that which the Bishop of Laon had in his; That he had a Complaint against Sigibert for putting that Clerk into the Church that belonged to Hermerardus; That Sigibert had answered, that he did it with the consent of his Officers, and particularly of Adulphus; That he had answered, that if Hermerardus would relinquish that Church, well, if not, he would proceed as in Justice he might; That not being able to persuade Hermerardus to recede from his Right, he had given notice to Sigibert by a Man that belonged to him; That afterward he took that Church from Senatus; That Hermerardus had desired to determine the Lands in a Synod; That he had advised Sigibert to accommodate the Matter; Lastly, That he could not approve of the Ordination of Senatus, and since it was faulty at first, because he was a Servant, he ought not to confirm it, nor promote him to a superior degree of Orders.

Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims being met with several other Bishops, at the Palace of King Charles in Gondeville, in the Diocese of Tola, Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, instead of saluting him as he did the rest of the Bishops, would not so much as take notice of him. Wenilo Archbishop of Rouen asking him why he would not live peaceably with his Metropolitan, he answered him, that he could never be friends with him heartily, because he had not burnt the Writings which he had sent to him concerning the Excommunication which he had issued out against his whole Diocese; adding, that he did but follow his Example in Excommunicating, because he had Excommunicated a Village in his Diocese belonging to the Bishop of Laon, because the Inhabitants had refused to pay him their Tenth, but payed them to the Church to which they belonged, so that several Infants died unbaptized, and several Noble Persons without the Sacraments. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims replied to Wenilo, that that fact was not true, and that that Recrimination was a tacit confession of his fault and in short, that he desired nothing more, but that the Writings on both sides might be examined by a Synod. Wenilo relating this Answer to Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, he said, that he had not the Papers that had passed between them, but gave him the Papers which began with the Verses directed to Carolomannus, which was the second Collection of some Extracts of the Popes Decretals, and Canons to settle the Judgments of the Causes of the Bishops at Rome in their first Examination. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims having read these Papers with a great deal of Earnestness, made an Answer to them, which he sent to Wenilo, to be given to the Bishop of Laon. He waited for an Answer, or expected that he would have sent him the Writings which he complained of, that they might be examined, but Hincmarus Bishop of Laon would do nothing.

When they went from hence, the King came to Attigni, where he held a Synod in May, at which the Deputies of the 10 Provinces of France were present. Here they first gave the Ambassadors of Germany audience about the Division of the Empire. Then the Business of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon was brought upon the Board. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims after he had delivered him 55 Articles to serve for an Answer: As to the Collections he had made out of the Decretals, and to all that he had said and written against him, presented a Petition to the Council, in which he related to the Bishops all that he had done to conquer the Obstinacy of the Bishop of Laon. He was also accused in the Council by the Bishops, who complained of the unjust and rash Excommunications which he issued out against their Diocesans; by the King, That he had broken the Oath of Allegiance giance which he had made to him; and by the Lord Normannus, That he had put him out by force of Arms of the Benefices which he was in lawful possession of. Hincmarus of Laon, that he might get free from this Business, demanded that he might be judged by the Holy See, but not being able to gain that point, he delivered a Writing, in which he promised submission to his Metropolitan Hincmarus, and took a new Oath of Allegiance to King Charles, but he desired that Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims should give him a Writing to oblige himself to maintain him in the Privileges that belonged to him, and to defend him. Frotarius Archbishop of Bourdeaux was the Mediator of this Peace. But since the Accusations of Normannus and his Wife, who complained of their ill usage, and that they were unjustly deprived of the Benefices they had enjoyed, and also of some others to the same effect, did yet stand unsatisfied, Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims chose for the Judges of that Affair Aldardus Bishop of Nantes, Ragenelmus Bishop of Noyon, and John Bishop of Cambray. These Judges Examined that Matter before the King, and were of Opinion, that the Bishop of Laon ought to restore some of those Benefices, but they did not give their Judgment upon the day prefixed, but put it off to another day to give sentence. Then Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, seeing that the Affair would not go well for him, escaped away in the night. What passed afterwards, I shall give you an account of, when I have given an Abridgment of the 55 Articles which Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims presented in the Council to his Nephew, as an answer to all that he had written and said against him.

Articles.

In the beginning of this Work he puts some Verses, as an answer to those which Hincmarus Bishop of Laon had put before his second Collection of Canons, and as this Bishop had taken this for the subject of his Verses, That Men might freely appeal to the Holy See, so he made it the subject of his, that according to the Canons all the Bishops of a Province ought to be subject to their Metropolitans, and sharply reproves his Nephew for not giving him the respect due to him.

In Art. 1. he explains the business about the Chapel, where the Bishop of Laon accused him for Excommunicating the Inhabitants because they would not pay the Tithes. He says, that the Chapel, which was in the Country of Attolia, had been a long time before subject to the Priest of the Church of the Village of Juigny; That Bertierus, sent by the Bishop of Laon to take care of that place, had hindered them from paying their Tithes to the Priest of the Parish, and had employed them as he pleased; That the Priest Aufoldus, who was to take care of the Diocese of Reims, where this Chapel stood, had demanded Justice several times against Bertierus, and when he could not obtain it, he forbid celebrating Divine Service in that Chapel till the Inhabitants should pay their Tithes to their Curate according to the ancient usage, in which if they would hearken to him, they might come to the Church of Juigny, but that Baptism and the Communion was denied to no Man, neither did any Man die in that time without receiving the Sacraments. Having thus cleared himself as to that matter, he proves by a long possession, that the Chapel of the Court and Lordship of Attolia did belong to the Territories within the Diocese of Reims.

In Art. 2. he reproves the Bishop of Laon for getting an Abby, and taking an Office at Court without his leave, and proves, that by the Canons such things are not allowable to Suffragan Bishops without the consent of their Metropolitan; as also for Excommunicating Amalbertus of the Diocese of Reims, being accused of Impotency by his Wife, who was taken out of the Bishoprick of Laon.

In Art. 3. he reproves him for Excommunicating Persons not of his own Diocese.

In Art. 4. he relates what had passed about the Writings in the Conferences with Wenilo.

In Art. 5. he answers the threatening Speeches which the Bishop of Laon had given out, that he could withstand his Metropolitan, and valued him not, because the Holy See had already disannulled two Sentences passed by him, viz. those against Rothadus and Wulfadus. As to the former, after he hath produced several Canons to prove, that Metropolitans and a Synod of the Province had right to Judge the Bishops at the first Tryal, although the Holy See might afterwards restore them if it thought fit; He says, that the Pope did not find fault with the Judgment in France given against Rothadus, but through his great Wisdom, he had desired them to restore that Bishop who had implored his help. That as to the Second Judgment he was not concerned for it, being none of the Judges, and that since the Holy See would not join with so rigorous a Sentence, he had consented to his Pleasure and the Will of the King. That he had fully cleared himself to Pope Nicolas, and that his Successor Adrian had through his goodness put away all displeasure and anger about that matter. In fine, he says, that he had always done with alacrity what the Holy See had desired of him, to avoid all differences, being persuaded, as St. Leo says, that the Pope hath some reason to mitigate the severity of the Laws, on condition that they should ever after beware of it, and keep to the due Execution of the Canons.

In Art. 6. he inquires into the truth of what Hincmarus Bishop of Laon had said to several Persons concerning his Uncle, That he had loosed those whom he had bound, had deposed those whom he had ordained, I will cause that he or I will never sing Mass more; Hincmarus shews, that it did not become him who was his Inferior to speak so of him, and vindicates the Right of Metropolitans, and the difference between them and other Bishops. It belongs to them to call Synods, and all their Suffragans are bound to come to them, or send their Excuse, and if they do not so, they may punish them; That the Accusations against any Bishop ought to be brought to them, and they may appoint Judges for the Accused, or consent to them that are Elected. It belongs to them to Ordain the Bishops of their Provinces, and those that are not Ordained with their consent, ought not to be acknowledged for Bishops according to the Council of Nice, whereas, if a Bishop be Ordained with the consent of his Metropolitan, and other Bishops of the Province, except one or two, his Ordination is accounted good. If a Bishop Dies in his Province, it belongs to the Metropolitan to Name a Visitor of the vacant Church. A Bishop ought to Sign the Regulations and Canons which his Metropolitan presents to him, if they contain nothing in them contrary to the Faith. He can't make any changes or alterations in the Lands of his Diocess, without the consent and advice of his Metropolitan. Men may appeal from the Judgments of the Bishop to the Metropolitan; if he hath Excommunicated any Person, and will not receive him again, he may be Absolved by his Metropolitan in a Synod of Bishops. Lastly, The Metropolitan hath a care of all the Province, and all those that have any Ecclesiastical Matters may apply themselves to him, and he can take cognizance of them; A Bishop hath only the Government of his own Diocess, in which he may Ordain Priests and Deacons; if he hath any differences with another Bishop, they can't take the Bishops of another Province for Judges; he can do nothing in the general Affairs of a Province without his Metropolitan; In dubious Causes he ought to assist him, he ought not to go directly to Rome; If he will go out of his Province, he must first obtain leave of his Metropolitan. Nevertheless, if he hath any Accusation against his Metropolitan, he may demand Judges of the H. See, according to the Council of Sardica. Lastly, The Metropolitan may cause the Canons, and Constitutions of the Church, to be put in Execution in all the Province, without assembling any Synod, or consulting the Bishops, and if he finds any thing opposite to them, he may reform it immediately, because in so doing he is the Author of no new Laws, but the Executer of the old only.

In the 7th Article, He reproves Hincmarus Archbishop of Laon, for going out of his Diocess without his consent, and flying from the Judgment of his Metropolitan and the Bishops of his Province.

In the 8th Article, He accuses him for sending the Pope's Letters directed to the King and himself, by such Archbishops as were at a distance from him, whereas he ought to have sent them by his own Messengers.

In the 9th Article, He reproves him for having Excommunicated a Monk of S. Dennis, which the King had put in a Monastery in the Diocess of Laon, and would not be perswaded to revoke that Excommunication.

In the 10th Article, He answers the Collection of Decretals made by Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, and because he grounded the Authority of these Records upon a passage of S. Leo, who says, that we are obliged to obey the Decrees of his Predecessors, made and promulgated concerning the Orders and Discipline of the Church, quæ de Ecclesiasticis ordinibus, & Canonum sunt promulgata disciplinis. He explains the signification of this expression, and affirms, that it ought to be understood of the Laws taken out of the Canons, and which they have published in their Decretals, and not of the private Decrees which they have made, and which are not agreeable to them; whereupon he cites several Sentences of the Popes, which declare, That we ought to observe the Canons.

In the following Articles, as far as the 16th, he treats of the Order and Subordination in general, which ought to be among the Bishops.

In the 16th Article, He treats in particular concerning the Subordination of the Church of Laon to that of Reims: He says that this Metropolis had eleven Churches under it, before S. Remigius erected the Castle of Laon in that Bishoprick; That the Bishoprick of Laon owes its Erection to the Church of Reims, and that it hath always been subject to it; That the Authority of S. Remigius is in his Successors, and that this Metropolis hath been dignified with several Privileges by the H. See.

In the 17th, He cites several passages in the Pope's Letters against those Inferiors that exalt themselves against their Superiors.

In the 18th and 19th, He shews that several have destroyed themselves through Pride and Vanity, by explaining H. Scripture according to their own fancies, and by governing according to their own humor, without following the Tradition of the Church.

In the 20th, He shews that the Discipline of the Church may change and alter: He speaks of the first six General Councils, whose Authority he acknowledged. As to the seventh he says, That 'twas not received in France, and cites a passage of the Caroline Book concerning the General Nature of Synods. Afterwards, he heaps together many Historical Facts, in which he is mistaken in giving credit to the Supposititious Letters of Marco and Felix.

In the 22d, He explains S. Gregory's words in his Letter to Theodistus, that they ought not to be Absolved who are Excommunicated by the Church; and maintains, that they ought to be understood of those only that are Excommunicated for Just Reasons, because we ought not to think that Unjust Excommunications are made by the Church.

In the 23d and 24th Articles, he says, That the Roman Church hath not received the 9th Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, in that which respects the Permission, which it gives to a Clerk, who hath any thing against his Metropolitan, to apply himself to the Bishop of Constantinople. In the last of these Articles, he rejects the Collection of Canons, which was said to be given by Pope Adrian to Angilram.

In the 25th and 26th, He shews that there is a difference to be observed between the Decisions of General Councils and the Letters of holy Men and Popes; That 'tis absolutely necessary to obey all all the Decisions of the Councils, but the same subjection is not due to all that is contain'd in those Letters.

In the 27th, He shews that Hincmarus Bishop of Laon is not exempted from answering, for saying, That he was stopped; and by pretending that he hath Appealed to Rome.

In the 28th, He says that 'twas an injury to interdict his Priests and Clerks without any Accusation, or they were either Convicted of their Crimes, or Confessed them. To prove this, he produces a great number of Canons, which prescribe the Order to be observed in Ecclesiastical Judgments, and what ought to go before the condemnation of every Person.

In the 29th and 30th, He shews that Superiors have right to declare no Excommunications which are manifestly irregular and contrary to the Laws of the Church, such as that was by which the Bishop of Laon forbade to administer Baptism to Infants, and the Sacrament to Dying Persons, contrary to the Decrees of the Church, which do not allow the Sacraments to be denied to any Persons in their Necessity. He sets down in this Article many good Rules about Excommunication.

In the following Article he says, 'tis great Inhumanity to deny Burial to the Dead.

In the 34th, He shews, by several passages out of the Popes Letters, that about Matters evident, or already decided, 'tis not necessary to call a Synod, nor Appeal to the H. See, and that the things already Ordained and Decreed should be put in Execution.

In the 35th Article he proves, That the H. See Judges with the Bishops, and the Bishops with the H. See; That no Man can put a restraint upon Metropolitans, nor hinder them from judging the Affairs of their Province, much less in that which is already Ordained, and Decided by the Councils. He adds, that in these things there is no need of consulting, or calling together the Bishops of the Province.

In the 36th Article, He examines the Subscription of the Instrument of the Bishop of Laon, by which he Excommunicated those that would not obey the Decrees of the Popes contained in his Collection. He says, that if he affirms that this Collection contains any thing singular in it, and contrary to the Constitutions of the Council of Nice, and the other Councils received and approved of by the Church, he is himself Excommunicated by endeavouring to Excommunicate others, and so hath separated himself from the Church's Unity with those he hath caused to Sign it.

In the following Articles to the 43d, he gives him wholesome Advice, and assures him in the 40th, that he was no cause that he was out of favour with the King.

In the 43d, he vindicates himself from the Calumny that the Bishop of Laon had cast upon him, in accusing him of falsifying the Quotations which he cited. He speaks of the business of Nivinus, he says that his Crime was publick and certain, that all the World knew that he had Debauched the Nun, and had conveyed her by Night out of the Monastery into his House; That the thing being discovered, the Nun had undergone her Penance in the Convent, and afterward he had conveyed her away; That he had done all he could to make him acknowledge his fault, and oblige him to do Penance, but instead of undergoing Penance, he had affronted and abused him; whereupon he Excommunicated him, and expelled him out of his Diocess.

In the 44th and 45th Articles, he exhorts his Nephew to come to an agreement, lay aside all Animosities and Enmities, and to take mild Methods to gain the Kings favour without going to Rome.

In the 46th and 47th, he reproves him for bragging he was never Conquered.

In the 48th he says, 'tis very dangerous for a Man to be too fond of his own Opinion.

In the 49th, he Advises him not to abuse the Talent that God hath given him.

In the 50th, he reproves him for not suffering any to say, that he hath received any kindness, or good turn, which he hath not deserved.

In the 51th, he accuses him of receiving Presents from his Clergy, and proves, that it is forbidden by the Canons. In the 52th, he accuses him of being arrogant, proud and vain.

In the 53th, he gives him advice about his Gesture, and the motions of his Body, which were indecent.

In the 54th, he exhorts him not to misuse his health of Body, or Pleasures of the World, in the flower of his Age. Lastly, he concludes this Work with Elisha's Words to Elisha, I have done for you all I was able. He adds, that he believes, tho' he shall not profit by his Advice, that it will not be in vain, before God, to him that gives it. He prays to God to grant to him, to will, say, know, and do what he hath commanded, and to make his Nephew to hear favourably, and do what is convenient for him, and that both of them may will and do what he hath commanded, and persevere in the observance of his Commandments.

The sequel of the Affair of Hincmarus of Laon, after he left Attigni.

We will now return to the remaining part of the business of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon: After he was gone from Attigni, as we said before, he wrote a Letter to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, which was given him the 12th of July by one of his Deacons named Ermenoldus, in which he beseeches him, that since he had appealed twice to the Pope, as they themselves acknowledged, he would get leave of the King to let him go thither. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims returned him no Answer, whereupon he wrote directly to the King, and having excused himself for not coming to him, because he had a Fever, he prays him earnestly to let him go to Rome, that having performed his Vow, he may be recovered from his Fever. The King answered Bertricus, who brought brought him the Letter, that 'twas a wonder that the Fever, which kept him from Court, should not hinder him from going to Rome; that he should come to him, and if he had any just cause of going to Rome, he would permit him. The King also commanded him to give a Benefice to one named Eloi. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon having received this Answer, sent Edo, Provoit of the Church of Laon, to carry a Petition to the Archbishop of Reims, in which he tells him, 1. That he greeted him, and prayed for him. 2. That he was persuaded that he was sensible that he was Persecuted, and that he did share in his Sufferings. 3. That the King had taken away the Revenues of the Church of Laon, and given them to Normannus, which he knew when he withdrew from Attigni. 4. That some other Persons had possessed themselves of the Lands belonging to the Church by the Kings Order, who had required him to restore a Benefice to Eloi, who had forcibly gotten it. 5. That he intreated him, who was his Uncle and Archbishop, to obtain of the King that he might have a free Administration of the Revenues of his Church, and to order and dispose of them, as he thought fit; He promises in this Juncture to obey him, come to him, and follow his Directions, protesting, That if the King will not grant him this favour, he never will obey him more, nor never come in his presence; That he will fly to the H. See, and use his Authority by Excommunicating those who have invaded the Goods of the Church, as it is allowed in the Constitution of the Bishops, which he had sent him. This Constitution was made up of certain Canons of the Council held in 860 at Toussi, in the Diocesis of Tela, which Decreed, among other things, that those who violently seized upon the Goods of the Church, should be Excommunicated for their whole Lives, nor should obtain Communion at their Death, nor have a Christian Burial; That the Princes and Judges should find out such Persons as corrupted Virgins and Widows dedicated to God, upon Penalty of being expelled out of the Church, and deprived of Burial; That those that have taken away any of the Church Revenues, or Goods, should restore them double, treble, or fourfold, according to the thing they have taken.

A Petition of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon.

Altho' the Name of Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims be among the Subscriptions to the Canons of this Council, yet when he received this Writing, he said he had never heard of any such Constitutions, and that the Bishops who were present at that Council said the same thing: He says, that these Constitutions are unreasonable, and contrary to the Laws of the Church, and judged by the Subscriptions, that those acts were false, because he found the Names of some Bishops that were not there, and two Bishops of the same See at the same time, viz. Two Bishops of Auxerra, Christianus, and Ablo, and two Bishops of Noin, Immo and Raginelmus, who succeeded him. He adds, that his Seal was among others there, altho' he was sure that he had not set his Seal to that Act.

This Petition of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon was given to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims at Pontigen, July 16. by Heddo; He represented his Nephew's Petition to the King, and got the Bishops then at Court to second him in it, viz. Remigius, Harduicus, Odo, and Willibert. The King answered, That he thought the Bishop of Laon might be satisfied with what was said at Attigni; That he had taken more than belonged to his Church out of the Estate which the Prince was willing to give him, so that he might re-enter upon the Land of Pauls; but as to the other Revenues about which the Contest was, he must wait till the Matter could be Regulated, and Commissioners be sent on both sides to the places to examine what doth really belong to the Church, that it may be restored to it. As to the Benefices of which he speaks, Hincmarus answers him, That he had deprived the Lawful Heirs of them, to whom he himself had once granted them; and that the Judges, which he had chosen, had determined that he ought to restore them; that he would stay but till some Articles were decided before he fled, and would not wait till Sentence were pronounced; That he might return, and bring with him the Arrest, by which the King had given, or restored to the Church of Laon, the Lands in question, and would do him Justice. In fine, that he had sent him a Writing of that which was done in the Council of Joussi, which he never saw, and of which the Bishops of that Council never heard, and which was not agreeable to the Original he had. Lastly, he advises him not to Excommunicate Normannus, or any others, rashly, nor go to Rome till 'twas examin'd in a Provincial Synod, whether his Appeal to the H. See were regular.

The Answer to the Bishop of Laon's Petition.

Hincmarus Bishop of Laon returned a long Answer to this Letter of Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, in which he tells him, That he did not desire to enjoy the Revenues of the Church to put them to a bad use, but to employ them as the Canons prescribe; and that it could not but trouble him much to see the Revenues, which were intended for the Subsistence of himself and Clergy, to be taken away, and given to a Person to whom his Predecessor would never grant a Church-Farm; That another had got a Farm granted him, which use to furnish the Church with Candles; and several others were given to such persons, who had done no Service to the Church a long time, and could be no ways profitable to it; That the King never spake a word to him, of that which Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims mentioned to him; and that he only told him, that he heard he had taken more Grounds in the Lands of Pauls than belonged to him, or were granted by the Letters he had sent him; That he would have them; That he was willing that he should enjoy what was contained in these Letters, except the Farms in the possession of Angarius, who was his Man, upon condition, nevertheless, that they should restore them to him, if he found that they belonged to the Land of Pauls; That the King had delayed to restore them to him, but he was put upon doing it by the Advice of Hincmarus; That he had not unjustly seized upon, and kept those Farms, but they have belonged above 60 Years to the Land of Paulls; That he had enjoyed them ever since the King had restored those Lands, six months since, till Ansgarius had obtain'd them of the King, without any cognizance of the Cause, and without examining his Claim. As to the Judges, which he says were Named by him, it is true that the King ordered the Archbishop of Reims to Nominate some Bishops who should examine the Affair of those who complained that they were deprived of their Benefices; That Hincmarus having Named them, he did appear before them with one Clergy-man and Lay-man of his Church; That Regenard having preferred his complaint first, he did shew his Reasons why he deprived him; and whereas, among other things, he had accused him of not paying the Service due, the Judges required him to take an Oath that it was so, and that Regenard should lose his Benefice. Whereupon Hincmarus Bishop of Laon complains, that the Judges regarded Temporal more than Spiritual Causes, because being also accused of spoiling the Farms, and having abused the Revenues of the Church, they did not condemn him to make any Restitution. The second that made his complaint was one Grivon, who being accused of spoiling a Wood which his Father had Planted, he defended himself by saying, 'Twas not so, and that 'twas some Peasants that had wasted it against his knowledge; and that Hincmarus had deprived him of his Benefice only because he would not go to Rome; That when Hincmarus maintained the contrary, and produced his Witnesses, they put off the Judgment of that Affair till next Week. He then confesses, that he withdrew himself, but says 'twas to avoid the Persecution intended against him; That all his Family was Banished; That they favoured the Lord Normannus, who was Excommunicated both by the Pope and himself; That they would not permit him to go to Rome, but had taken away the Revenues that belong to his Church. As to the Constitution of the Synod of Toussi, he says, that he received it of Harduicus Archbishop of Bisuncon, who was present at it; and that it was written by two of his Deacons; and that he remembers well, that 'twas made in that Council; That 'tis true, that he had composed another Letter, but finding it too long, he thought it best to Sign this which was shorter, and, as it were, an abridgment of the other. Lastly, he enlarges upon the Popes Decretals; he affirms that they do not contradict one another, and that the Bishops, who desire to be judged at Rome, at the first Examination ought to be sent thither. He complains of his Archbishop, that he had been no help to him since he desired to be sent thither, but, on the contrary, opposed his Interests. This is the Answer that Hincmarus Bishop of Laon gave his Metropolitan; but having no mind to have to do with him, nor those Ecclesiastical Judges that he had Nominated, he resolved to request Secular Judges of the King, two months after he retired from Atigni. The King appointed Helmingarius, Hotarius and Orsio, who were Court-Officers. These Judges altered, and re-examined the things that had been decided by the Ecclesiastical Judges, and were more favourable to Hincmarus of Laon than they had been, for they made the Lord Normannus to leave his Benefice; and others, who had gotten possession of the Benefices in contest through the flight of Hincmarus, to resign them to him again. Things being thus ordered, Hincmarus of Laon returned to Court, and never spake more of going to Rome.

A new Contest between Hincmarus of Laon and the King. Hincmarus, Archbishop of Reims, was very angry that his Nephew had so well acquitted himself before the Lay-Judges, contemning the Authority of his See, and the Judges he had appointed; wherefore he wrote to him with a great deal of Passion. Nevertheless, the Judgment given for him was Executed; but not long after, Hincmarus of Laon engaged in a fresh Quarrel with King Charles upon the account of Caroloman. This happened thus: Caroloman, the Eldest Son of King Charles, was Baptized in the Church of Reims, and devoted by his Father to be a Churchman, having been Shaved, and afterwards received all the Orders, as far as a Deacon, from the Hands of Hildegarius Bishop of Meaux; But because he was forced to embrace a Profession, which displeased him, he resolved to make his escape, and being got away, he conspired against his Father. He was accused in the Synod of Atigni, and condemned as a Rebel, and thereupon being deprived of his Abbies was put in Prison. Having appealed to Rome, the Pope wrote in his favour, and a little after he was set at Liberty. But in the Year following he began his Quarrel again, took Arms, gathered Troops, and Plundered the Country. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, in the absence of the King, who was gone into Burgundy, assembled the Bishops of his Province immediately, and after he had admonished him four times that he should lay down his Arms, he declared him Excommunicated, and all his Soldiers, which were the greatest part of the Province of Reims, if they did not reform, and do Penance before the 11th of March. Hincmarus sent this Letter of Excommunication to Remigius Archbishop of Lyons, and to the Bishops of his Province, and wrote on purpose to Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, to require his consent, under Hand, to this Excommunication, but he gave him no Answer to it; wherefore he wrote a second time more earnestly to him. Then he answered, That he would not give his consent to it, because he had not answered his desire made to him by Eddo, which he ought to have added in that Act. Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims replied, That Eddo had never spoke to him about it, and that he had not any thing to add. Nevertheless, he desired him to tell him plainly what he would have added, promising that he would do it if it were reasonable, being always ready to learn of others, follow their advice, and reform any thing that was amiss. In the rest of the Letter, he speaks with softness to his Nephew, and shews that he is greatly displeased with his Disobedience. 'Tis Dated Aug. 19.

On the 5th of May, a Clergy-man of Laon called Teutlandus coming to Reims, the Archbishop ordered him to bid his Bishop to send his consent immediately to the Excommunication of Caroloman.

man. Lastly, Hincmarus Bishop of Laon being admonished a 6th time by a Letter from his Metropolitan, answered, That he wondred he should desire his consent to that Excommunication, since he had not taken his Advice in issuing it out. He also complains, that his Uncle had sent his Summons by the Clergy-men of his own Church, and that he had pronounced a Benediction in the Diocess of Laon upon some of the Confederates of Caroloman.

On the 14th of May, Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims cited the Bishop of Laon to a Synod, which was to be held, that he should answer to the complaints and accusations brought against him; but he, instead of giving a civil answer, wrote a Letter full of Invectives and Affronts, in which he accuses him of betraying, and delivering him up, when he was apprehended, and of being his Enemy ever since he opposed him in his putting a Bishop into Rotbadus's place, till he should receive the Popes pleasure about that Affair. Nevertheless, Adrian wrote two Letters in favour of Caroloman to the King his Father, to the Bishops of France, and the Lords, in which he forbids the last taking Arms against Caroloman, and the others to Excommunicate him. These Letters bear date July 13. but they did Caroloman no service, as we shall shew anon. This Pope wrote also to Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, March 25. to call a Synod for the Reformation of Abuses in his Diocess; and under this pretence Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims cited Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, in the Name of the Pope, and by his Authority, to the Synod which was to be holden at Douzi, Aug. 5. The Act says July 5.

The Council being assembled at Douzi, King Charles presented a Bill to them containing several heads of Accusation against Hincmarus Bishop of Laon; the beginning of it is lost. In that part which remains, he accuses him for Writing to Rome against him, at the same time when he acknowledged in France, that he had not meddled with any of the Revenues of the Church; for going out of his Kingdom into Lotharius's; for not coming to him when he had commanded him, and for hindering his Servants to come to him; for Writing a second time to Rome against him; for flying from Attigni after he had Sworn Allegiance to him. Lastly, for Arming his Servants to hinder the Governor of the Province, that he might not apprehend certain suspicious Persons which were at his House, to send them to the Council, but let them escape. When this Bill was read, the King desired, that since the Bishop of Laon, who had been cited by his Metropolitan to appear before the Council, did not come, they would search what the Canons and Laws decreed concerning those heads of Accusation brought against him, and if he came to the Synod, that the differences between him and his Metropolitan should be Judged and Determined.

Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims presented another Petition to the Synod, in which he briefly relates all that had passed between him and Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, the causes of complaint he had against him, the heads of Accusation that he charged him with, and the consequence of the whole matter, setting down under every Article the Decisions of the Popes and Councils, shewing wherein the Bishop of Laon had offended, and the punishment he deserved. He defends himself, against the Accusation, that he had betrayed him, and produces three Letters written at the time he was seized, to shew that he had no hand in his Imprisonment, but had disapproved it. He also justifies himself against the Accusation, that he had no respect to the Judgment of the H. See, and slighted its Authority, and treats of what passed at Attigni about that matter. Lastly, He concludes that Hincmarus Bishop of Laon having been Summon'd three times by the Council and not appearing, ought to be condemned for his Contumacy, notwithstanding the Appeal he had made to the H. See, because it is irregular, and he hath not prosecuted it.

The Bishops of the Council desiring some time to Answer the King's Request, made a Collection of the Canons, Laws, and Testimonies of the Fathers, upon every head of the Accusation contain'd in that Bill, concerning the false Oaths, and Perjury, the Sedition and Violence he had used, concerning the alienating of the Revenues of his Church, the Calumnies he had written to Rome against his Prince, his Disobedience and Rebellion, and for having made many of the King's Subjects to fly.

This Memoir was read in the Council, and Hincmarus, Bishop of Laon, summoned again to the Council. But he answered, That he had Appealed to the H. See. The Bishop of Soissons, who Cited him, told him, That he ought to appear at the Synod, and if it were necessary for him then to appeal, they would suffer him to prosecute it. Hermemarodus also was cited by the Synod. These Citations having been repeated three times, at last Hincmarus appeared before the Council; but Hermemarodus would not come. They then read to him the King's Bill, and a Letter from the Pope sent to him, in which he was ordered to be obedient to his Metropolitan, with an allowance of an Appeal to the H. See, if there were just Cause.

The next day, he was summoned to the Council, to answer to the Accusations brought against him by the King. On the 14th of August he came; and Hincmarus, Archbishop of Reims, having ordered him to answer to the King's Petition, he said, That he was deprived of all his Revenues, and would not answer in that Synod: And taking up his Papers, he began to read the Canons concerning Bishop's Appeals. The Council ordered him to answer the Accusations brought against him, giving him Liberty afterwards to appeal to the H. See, if he would. He persisted in his first Answer That he was deprived of his Revenues, and would not answer. They asked him, who had deprived him? He answered, his Clergy-men knew: And one of them being asked about it, answered, that it was the King; who immediately said 'twas false, and accused Hincmarus of arming his Servants to hinder that his Governour might send several Persons accused of Treachery to the Council, Council, of saving them, of flying himself, and carrying with him the Sacred Vessels and Ornaments of the Church of our Lady at Laon, which made him so backward to make his Defence: That since he came to the Synod, he had prepared him an House where his Servants might lodge, but he chose rather to abide in his Court near the Church: That he had ordered Bernard to treat him civilly, and take care of his Goods and Papers: That they had brought them to him, with a Golden Cross set with Stones, and several things belonging to the Church. The King proved the Facts by Witnesses, though the very Clergy of the Bishop of Laon owned them. He was accused of having taken away and given a Chalice, with a Patten of Gold set with Stones, to a Priest, to hide for him, which the King had given to the Church of S. Maries at Laon; of having taken away the Relicks and Deeds of the Church of Laon, with a Golden Cross; so not only enriching himself with the Goods of the Church of Laon, but suffering his Servants to convey them away.

Hincmarus, Archbishop of Reims, having summoned him to answer these Accusations, he said, he would not answer before him, because he had something against him, and therefore appealed to the H. See. Hincmarus answered him, That he ought not to decline his Judgment, since he had often reproved him, and admonished him, but had not yet judged him, and so he could not appeal to Rome; because by the ancient Canons, no Appeals can be made thither, but after Judgment: Wherefore he ought to answer, and should be tried without any Prejudice to the Privileges or Judgment of the Pope, as it is decreed by the Council of Sardica, That he might appeal to Rome after the Judgment of the Provincial Synod. Hincmarus, Bishop of Laon, said, That he would not answer, nor accept his Metropolitan for his Judge, because he had advised the King to take him Prisoner. Hincmarus, Archbishop of Reims, having prayed the King to speak the Truth, the King protested with an Oath, That he did it without the Consent of the Archbishop of Reims, and added, That had it not been for the Respect he had for him, he would have imprisoned him above two years ago for his Insolencies; and that if he had not kept his Lords from it, he had been set upon in his Palace, and stabbed or beaten to death. Hincmarus, Archbishop of Reims also prayed Ado and Hildebaldus, who were present when the Bishop of Laon was apprehended, to speak what they knew; who both of them testified, as well as two Priests and Earls, That it was done without the Privy of the Archbishop of Reims.

After this, Hincmarus, Archbishop of Reims, read over again the King's Request, and interrogated him about every Article; but he would not answer: But all the heads were proved against Hincmarus, Bishop of Laon, either by Writing or Witnesses; and being required three times to answer, the Archbishops of Besancon, Bordeaux, Bourges, Trèves, Rouen, Sens, and the Bishops of Troyes, Tongres, Meaux, Mets, Chartres, Beauvais, Tournay, Poitiers, Cambray, Orleans, Chalons, Solfens, Verdun, and Paris, with the Rural Bishop of Tongres, were of opinion, That he ought to be deposed, without Prejudice to the Judgment of the H. See, salvo per omnia Apostolica Sedis Judioio. Hincmarus, who gave his Opinion last, was of the same Judgment. This Sentence was sealed by these Prelates and some Priests. The Name of the Bishop of Lyons, Remigius, is found among the Subscriptions; but he was not at this Synod. The Bishops of the Council wrote a Letter to Pope Adrian, in which they tell him, That they were forced to depose Hincmarus, Bishop of Laon, as he will understand by the Acts of the Council, which they sent him. Beside the Crimes therein set down, they accuse him of having converted to his own use, or given away, several of the Ornaments of the Church of Laon, to have stirred up many Seditions, to have excommunicated and abused Amalbertus. They desire the Pope to confirm their Judgment, or if he thought fit to review it, (which they could not think necessary) That he would appoint Judges, either of the same or neighbouring Provinces, and if he pleased, send his Legate to be present at the Judgment, as it is appointed in the Council of Sardica; upon condition nevertheless, That Hincmarus shall not be restored to his Dignity, till his Cause be examined and tried anew in the Province; because as yet they had not departed from the Rights of the Gallican and Belgick Churches. They declare, That if he restores him, and sends him into France, they'll never trouble themselves with him, but let him live as he list without communicating with him. They recommend, in the last place, to him Astardus, who was desired by the People and Clergy of Tours, that he might be made Bishop of that Church by his Authority, altho' they could do't themselves. This Letter is dated Sept. 6. 871.

Hincmarus wrote also in his own Name to Pope Adrian; He begins his Letter with the business of Astardus, and after speaks of the Condemnation of the Bishop of Laon. He excuses himself, that he did not maintain him in the business with Normannus, because he was injured, and the case was not that which he had related to the Pope. He laments that he ever Ordained him, and says, That after he had done all he could to reclaim him, and found him incorrigible, he was forced to leave him, and suffer him to be condemned. Lastly, He gives the Pope an Account of the business of the Priest, who was Deposed for endeavouring to kill, and actually wounding with a Spear, another with whom he was Travelling in a Journey, after he had made himself Drunk with him.

Pope Adrian having received the Letter of the Bishops of the Council, returned an Answer, That he approved their Election of Astardus for the Bishoprick of Tours, but he disapproved the Judgment given against Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, contrary to his Appeal, to be Judged at Rome; He orders that he should come with his Accuser thither, and forbids them putting any other Bishop in his place, till his Cause be Examined and Tried a-new. This Letter bears Date Dec. 26.

He

Hincmarus's Letter to Adrian.

Adrian's Answer.

He also wrote at the same time two Letters to Charles the Bald. In the first, which he intended to be publick, he complains, that he had taken his Petitions, which he made to him, ill, and exhorted him to accept them favourably. He orders him to send Hincmarus, and his Accusers, to Rome, assuring him, that he would not consent to his Deposition till that were done. He approves the Promotion of Adardus to the Archbishoprick of Tours, without depriving him, nevertheless, of the Right which he hath to the Reversion of the Diocess of Nantes. He exhorts the King to see, that all the Révénues of the Church of Tours be restored that belong to it, as also the Monasteries, which according to the Canons are subject to that Bishop.

The second Letter, which was private and secret, was wrote with more mildness and assurance, but he insists more particularly upon this, That the King had not received his Admonitions with all possible subjection, and that he had enriched himself with the Revenues of the Church. In the rest, he pretends a great deal of Friendship to him, commends his Piety, blames the carriage of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, and seems to think him faulty, and justly condemned; but nevertheless, hopes he will send him to Rome, that after he hath heard him, he may appoint him Judges, or send his Legates to the place to have him Judged before them there.

King Charles being offended at these two Letters of the Pope's, as also at a former, which the Pope had written to him, full of reproachful Language to his Person, which he exhorted him to bear patiently, and take in good part, writ sharply to him, and shewed himself angry for being treated in such a manner; and because he had ordered him to send Hincmarus immediately to Rome. Hereupon he accuses him of Worldly Pride, in ambitiously claiming a Dominion in the Church; and says, That he did not know before that a King, whose Office is to punish Evil doers, and revenge Crimes, was obliged to send the guilty to Rome, after they were condemned and convicted; That he should know, that the Kings of France are not the Bishops Vicegerents, but absolute Masters of their Country; That he doth not find that the Popes, his Predecessors, did ever write in that fashion to the Kings of France. Then he recites several expressions of the Popes, and shews by many Ecclesiastical Laws, that no Canon obliged him to send Condemned Bishops to Rome, but on the contrary, that Ecclesiastical Causes should be Judged and Determined in the Province where the Matters were acted. Lastly, He advises him not to write to him more in such a strain, nor to the Bishops and Lords of his Kingdom, unless he will have his Letters and Messengers slighted, which he wrote to him saith he, because of the respect he did bear to him, and because of the design he had to be subject, as he ought, to the Vicar of St. Peter, the Prince of the Apostles, lest he should force him, against his Will, to do otherwise than he intended. In fine, that he knew that he ought to follow, and to hold to that which was approved by the H. See, when 'tis found agreeable to the H. Scripture, Tradition, and the Laws of the Church, but rejected the claim which was grounded upon Forged, and ill-composed Pieces.

K. Charles's Answer to the Pope.

Nor did the Bishops of France write with less Resolution to the Pope about that Affair, they boldly rejected the pretences the Pope had, that Hincmarus should come to Rome and be Judged; and maintain'd, that the Judgment given against that Bishop ought to be Executed; And in effect it was done, and the Church of Laon became vacant de facto & de jure, altho' the H. See would not confirm the Judgment of the Synod of Douzi. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon was put in Prison, and two years after his Eyes were put out, as Caroloman's were; a very usual punishment at that time for such as were found guilty of Rebellion. Charles the Bald being afterwards Crowned Emperor by * John VIII gave him an Account of the Judgment given at the Synod of Douzi, and desired the confirmation of it from him, which he granted, writing to Hincmarus, that upon the Relation of the Emperor he approved the Judgment, he, and other Bishops of France, had given against Hincmarus of Laon; after whom, Henedulphus was Ordained Bishop of Laon, in pursuance of the Decree of his Election made March 26. and 876.

of their Popes, for though they allow their Popes too many Women, yet they will not endure to hear of a Woman to be a Pope.

* This Pope, according to Platina's reckoning, which is accounted the truest, is John IX. for John VIII. is Pope Joan, of which the Romish Church is so much ashamed, that they have blotted her out of the Catalogue

After the Death of Charles the Bald, Hincmarus Bishop of Laon was set at Liberty, who hearing that Pope John VIII. was retired into France, held a Council at Troyes, he went thither and Presented a Petition, in which he complained, That being carried to the Council of Douzi by force, deprived of his Goods, accused by K. Charles, he was condemned by the Archbishop of Reims, although he had Appealed to the H. See; that since that time he had been put in Chains, and his Eyes were put out. He begged of the Pope to do him Justice, and pass an equitable Sentence upon that Matter, which was referred to him. He alledged, That the Bishops of the Synod of Douzi had condemned him very unwillingly, that most of them were very much troubled at what they had done by the impulse of Hincmarus Archbishop of Reims, who advised them to it by Writing. Nevertheless, by the Acts of the Council, and the Letters written by them, it doth appear, that they condemned Hincmarus Bishop of Laon with a full consent and agreement, and never did repent that they had done it.

The Council of Troyes.

Nevertheless, the Petition of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon was approved in the Council of Troyes by some Bishops, and King Ludovicus Balbus did not oppose it; But Pope John VIII. judging that it would be a very difficult thing to reverse the Sentence of the Council of Douzi, ordered that Henedulphus should continue Bishop of Laon, although he himself desired that he might retreat into a Monastery, but allowed Hincmarus liberty to Sing Mass, and to have a Pension out of the Revenues nutes of the Bishoprick of Laon. Whereupon some Bishops took him, and having Cloathed him with his Episcopal Vestments, they led him to the Church with Singing, and cauted him to give the Benediction. He died not long after, and his Unkle Hincmarus made Prayers to God for him after his Death.

C H A P. VI.

An Account of several other Ecclesiastical Affairs transacted in France, in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

The Divorce of the Queen
ga.

H*incmarus*, besides the private Affairs, had also a share, as I before intimated, in all the most Important Affairs both in Church and State, which gave him occasion to exercise his Pen in divers Controversies. That which made the greatest noise of all, was the Divorce of the Queen Theutberga, and Lotharius III. King of Lorrain; She was the Daughter of Hubert Duke of Outrelemonstou, and allied to Charles the Great. Lotharius being fallen in Love with another Woman, endeavoured to dissolve his Marriage, and made this the pretence, That Theutberga had committed Incest with her own Brother; He forced her to confess it, and so dissolved his Marriage by the Advice of some Bishops in an Assembly held 860 at Aix la Chapelle. Since these Bishops had given it out that Hincmarus approved of this Divorce, he thought himself obliged to testify his Detestation of it in Writing. This Paper was made in his own, and all the Bishops Names of the Province of Reims, and directed to Kings, Bishops, and all Christians. He first gives this reason of the Dedication, That altho' the Church of Rome ought principally to be consulted in Matters obscure and dubious, yet it is convenient to Address himself to the whole Church, when the ancient Truth is attacked by some Novelty; That the Matter about which he treats is of so great importance, that Kings and Princes, Magistrates and People, ought to give great attention to the Truth of the Judgment, Consent of the Bishops, and the Lenity, Patience and Goodness of the King. Lastly, That he addressed his Speech to Kings, who ought to be an Example to the People; To the Bishops, who are obliged to Teach what Christ hath commanded; And to all the Faithful, who ought neither to approve, nor favour any Man's faults. After this Preface, which he hath adorned with several passages out of the Fathers, to authorize and explain these Maxims, he Answers the Reasons that are brought to maintain the Divorce of Lotharius and Theutberga; The first and chief was the Incest, which that Queen was accused to have committed with her own Brother, by whom she is said to have conceived, and afterward procured her Abortion. She denied that she was guilty of any such Crime, and since no Proof or Witnesses could be produced for her, it was resolved by the Lay-Judges, with the Advice of the Bishops, and consent of Lotharius himself, that she should Name a Man that should undergo the Trial of hot Water; Accordingly it was put in Execution, and the Man received no hurt, so she was declared Innocent even by the Judgment of the King her Husband. Some time after this Accusation was again renewed, and certain Bishops were Summoned to the Palace of Aix la Chapelle, of which the chief were Thietgaldus Archbishop of Treves, and Gombierus Archbishop of Cologne (the former the Unkle, and the other the Brother of Waldrada, whose Sister Lotharius desired to Marry;) They made Theutberga to own that she was not fit to continue Lotharius's Wife; She called Gombierus for a Witness, to whom she had confessed it, and required him to tell the Reason of it before the other Bishops. Hincmarus, after he hath thus recited the Articles of that business, he shews, that the Præmonitions that the Bishops gave the Queen, that she should not accuse her self of any Crime she was not guilty of, do evidently prove, that they knew she was to accuse her self; After which he says, that the secret Crimes which are discovered in Confession ought not to be divulged, nor ought any Person to be condemned for his secret Crimes. He also relates the Declaration of Gombierus, Jan. 8. who assured the Council, that the Queen had confessed to him that she had suffered an Abuse, tho' against her consent; The Judgment of the Bishops, Adventius and Thietgaldus was, that if this were true she ought not to cohabit with Lotharius; The Council of the Abbot Egilinus was the same; and the Extract of the Acts of the Session of that Synod held Febr. 14. (at which, besides Gombierus and Thietgaldus, were Wenilo Archbishop of Rouen, Frotaricus of Tongres, or Liege, Flatton of Verdun, Hildegarius of Meaux, and Hilduinus) which contains a Declaration in Writing, which the Queen gave the King her Husband, in which she owns, before God and all his Angels, that her Brother Hubert had abused her. 'Tis then said, that the Bishops did conjure the King to tell them, whether he had obliged her either by force, or threats, to make this Declaration, and he protested that he had not, and that he was much troubled at it; Then the Bishops asked the Queen again whether it were true, and she boldly said it was; whereupon they Judged, that she ought to be put to Publick Penance, to atone for the Incest which was now become publick by her Declaration. Hincmarus says, that Pope Leo forbids this sort of Confession by Writing, as to what respects the Church; That Lotharius, who seemed to be troubled at this, was inwardly pleased, and was the Author of this Stratagem ; That the Queen having accused her self in Judgment in the presence of the King, and his Lay-Judges, ought not to be put to publick Penance ; that she was not regularly condemned, and therefore they had the less reason to Divorce her to readily from her Husband, and allow him to Marry another.

He then shews, that this Cause was much different from Ebbo's, because he had chosen his Judges, before whom he regularly and judicially owned his Crime ; and besides, that there is a great deal of difference between Deposing a Bishop and parting Man and Wife, the Union between Husband and Wife being much more near and close than that between a Bishop and his Church ; That if a Bishop, Priest, or Deacon, own their Crime, although it be false that they have committed it, they ought to be Deposed according to the Council of Valence, but a Wife cannot be parted from her Husband for the same reason ; That Bishops may leave their Churches, but a Woman can't depart from her Husband.

It was farther said, That the Archbishop of Reims had consented to what was done in that Assembly, and had conferred about it with Adventius. Hincmarus Answers, That it was not true ; that Adventius had indeed spoke to him of it, and invited him to be at the Synod, or send thither, but he gave him his answer in Writing, before he parted from him, that he could not do it, because he had not consulted the Bishops of his Province ; and that he wrote to him after such a manner, as did shew, that he did not approve of that Divorce. Before he enters upon a particular discussion of this business, he produces several Authorities concerning the manner how a Lawful Marriage ought to be contracted ; he treats of the Reasons of a Separation between Man and Wife, which are, according to him, the desire of their Salvation, to live Continently : And Adultery, for which the Lay-Judges part Man and Wife, with the consent of the Ecclesiastick, and the Church, put the Guilty to publick Penance, if the Crime be known. He adds, That in the Case in hand, the Separation was neither for the love of Continence, nor for publick and certain Adultery, but only on meer Suspicion, and that this Matter should have first have been examined by Lay-Judges, and then the Bishops should have done their Duty, and used the Authority of the Church. He brought an Example of a Case that happened in the Reign of Lewis the Kind, how a Woman of Quality, Named Norbilda, presented to a General Assembly of the Estate a Petition against her Husband Argembert. This Prince bid her apply her self to the Bishops, who should put her over to the Lay-men, that they might judge of that Matter, and enjoined her to follow their Judgment, reserving to themselves a Power of putting, either her or him to Penance, who should be convinced of any Crime.

After the Judgment by hot Water was found favourable to the Princess Theutberga, they that accused her said that these sort of Proofs were forbidden ; Hincmarus endeavours to maintain them by Authority and Use, and affirms, That the Man named by the Queen to undergo the Proof of hot Water, not being so much as burnt or scalded, it was a Miracle that could not be done to Authorize a Lye. He adds, That since this Judgment was not certain, and they could not accuse the Person so cleared, they ought not to make use of a secret Confession for that end.

It was also asked Hincmarus, if it were not possible that the Queen might have to do with her Brother, and conceive by him, without losing her Virginity ? He laughs at this Proposition, and says, That if she were a Virgin when she was Married, it was foolish to accuse her of being Defiled, and imagine that she had conceived before her Marriage. He sent back this Question to the Lay-Judges with another, viz. Whether if a Woman, who hath not lived honestly before Marriage, but after lives honestly with her Husband, deserves to be condemned to Death for her former Lewdness, and whether it be not more fit to Pardon her ?

They also asked, Whether the King having had to do with another Woman, after he heard that his Wife had committed this Crime, was not guilty of Adultery ? He answers, That he could not deny it but that he was guilty, altho' at last his Wife were found guilty of the Crime for which he suspected her, because he had done it before the Sentence of Divorce was passed. He adds, That tho' a Man be engaged by Oath to live with another Woman besides his Wife, or a Woman with another Man besides her Husband, they ought not to observe that Oath.

They also asked him, If it were true that Sorcerers could make a Man and his Wife to hate each other Mortally ? He affirms that they can, and proves by several Relations that there were such Magicians and Sorcerers, and that the Devils could, by the permission of God, possess Men, make them Mad, and torment them. He owns, that if it were found, that according to the Civil and Ecclesiastical Laws, the Marriage of Theutberga were invalid, she might be Divorced, and the King Marry another ; but he maintains, that till his Wife be declared unworthy to be so by the Judgment of the Lords, and Advice of the Bishops, he ought not to think of Marrying his Concubine. Lastly, After he hath confuted several pretences alledged for the maintenance of the Divorce of Lotharius and Theutberga, he concludes, that the Bishops ought to oppose such disorderly proceedings, and if they did it not, or did encourage them, they were highly blameable before God.

Notwithstanding this opposition made by Hincmarus, there was a Synod held in 862 at Aix la Council of Chapelle, in which the Bishops assembled allowed Lotharius to Marry another Woman ; whereupon Metz. he immediately Married Waldrada. This business made a great noise, and being carried to Rome, Pope Nicolas wrote about it to K. Charles, who desired an opportunity to Quarrel with Lotharius, and deprive him of his Kingdom, but Lewis of Germany endeavoured to compose the Matter, and

at Rome.

Lotharius referred it to the Judgment of the States ; Then having Appealed to the Pope, two Legats were Named to hold a Council, where two Bishops of Lewis's, and two of Charles's Kingdom met them, that they might judge of this Matter : This Council was held at Metz June 863. In it Lotharius went about to confirm his Marriage by the Artifices of Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, and by corrupting the Popes Legats. Gonthierus and Thietgaldus had the boldness to bring the Sentence to Rome, but Pope Nicolas, instead of confirming it, called a Council, in which he declared the Judgment of the Synod at Metz null and void, Deposed Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, and declared, That all the Bishops, which concurred in that Sentence, had incurred the greatest Punishment, which he resolved to inflict on them, unless they changed their Opinion.

Gonthierus and Thietgaldus stoutly defended themselves, and sent a Letter against Pope Nicolas's Sentence to all the Bishops, with a Protestation, That they had signified it to him, in which they declare him Excommunicate, because he had, as they said, gone contrary to the Canons, favouring persons Excommunicated, and separating himself from the Society of other Bishops merely through Pride ; But the other Prelates of Lotharius's Kingdom excused themselves to the Pope ; Thietgaldus also begged Pardon, but could not obtain Absolution so long as Pope Nicolas lived ; but Gonthierus, Archbishop of Cologne, could never be brought to beg Pardon. Lotharius himself did all he could to appease the Pope, who desired, that Waldrada should come to Rome in Person, and receive Absolution ; She promised him, and went twice into Italy, but repenting as often of her submission, returned back again ; wherefore the Pope having called a Synod Excommunicated her, and wrote several sharp Letters to Lotharius the Younger. Afterward he sent a Legat into France Named Atsenius, who addressing himself to Lewis of Germany, called a Synod, in which Lotharius was forced to take his former Wife, but as soon as the Legat was gone he began to use her ill, and to enter a Process against her for Adultery, so that she was forced to put her self under the Protection of King Charles ; The Pope was very much concerned at it, and Excommunicated Waldrada a-new.

The business of Judith and Baldwin. At the same time, there were two other Matters of like nature Debated between Hincmarus, the Bishops of the Kingdom, and Charles on the one part ; and Gonthierus, and the Bishops of Lotharius's Kingdom on the other. The one was about Judith the Daughter of K. Charles, the Widow * of the King of England, who was taken away from Senlis by Earl Baldwin, who was fled into the Kingdom of Lotharius ; and the other concerning Ingeltrude the Wife of Boson, who had left her Husband, and was fled into the Diocess of Gonthierus. As to the first of these, it was soon ended by the intercession of Pope Nicolas, for Earl Baldwin, whom he had Excommunicated at the Solicitation of K. Charles, coming to Rome with Judith, cast himself at the Popes feet ; at which he was so much moved, that he wrote several Letters to King Charles, his Queen Hermenruda, and the Bishops, to obtain their Pardon ; by which means the King consented to the Marriage, and so it ended.

The business of Boson. As to the Wife of Boson, Gonthierus wrote about her to Hincmarus, An. 860. propounding the Question thus to him : If this Woman come to me, and tell me that she hath committed Adultery, desiring that I would protect her from Death, which she is afraid of from her Husband, ought I to put her to publick Penance in my Diocess at a distance from her Husband, or shall I send her again to her Husband, making him promise that he will not put her to Death ? Hincmarus Answers, That he ought not to put another Man's Wife to Penance who belongs to another Diocess, nor Protect her ; That Boson doth not accuse her of Adultery, but complains, That she hath left him, and promises that he will do her no harm ; So that all you can do upon this occasion is this, That the King of the County, whether she is fled, should make her return to her Husband, but withal, taking such security of her Husband as is usual to be given for those who have put themselves under the Protection of the Church.

The business of Count Raimond. There was also another business of the like nature, in which Hincmarus was engaged ; Count Raimond had Marry'd a Daughter to a certain Lord Named Steven, who would not live with her as his Wife, under a pretence that she had had a Carnal knowledge of one of her near Relations, but would not tell who it was. E. Raimond wrote a Letter of Complaint about it to the Synod held at Toussi 860, whereupon Steven was Summoned to the Synod, where he propounded the business, and told them, That whereas in his Youth he had had a Carnal Knowledge of one of the near Relations of the Daughter of Earl Raimond, it happened that he desired to have her in Marriage, and obtained it ; but afterward calling to mind what he had formerly done, he went to a Confessor to know whether he might not do Penance for his Sin in private, and Marry the Earls Daughter, as they had agreed ? The Confessor Answered, No ; and shewing him a Book, which he said was a Book of Canons, by which it was Decreed, That he that hath had any Carnal Knowledge of the Womans Relations, whom he would Marry, must not Consummate the Marriage with her ; That afterward falling under the Displeasure of the King his Lord, he was forced to leave the Kingdom, without breaking of the Contract with Raimonds Daughter, or Marrying her, so that it was put off for some time ; That afterward he was constrained to Marry her publicly, but for fear he should Damn his Soul, he would not have any Carnal Knowledge of her. This he assured the Council, with an Oath, that it was true, and that he did not do it for Interest, or because he loved another Woman ; declaring, That he was ready to follow the Judgment of the Bishops, if they could satisfy him that his Honour and Salvation might be alike secured, in giving contentment to his Father-in-Law and Wife. The Synod resolved, that it was necessary to call a Council of Bishops and Lords, at which the King himself should be present; That the Lords should examine the business, and the Bishops conclude it. Steven accepted this condition, and Hincmarus was employed by the Council to search into the Truth of the Matter, by which he was obliged to write to the Archbishops of Bourges and Bordeaux, and the Bishops of their Provinces. He tells them, that they ought to bring Raimond's Daughter to the Assembly, and inquire of her, whether it was true that her Husband had no Carnal Knowledge of her; That it ought to be searched into, whether Steven did not say this that he might leave his Wife; That he ought to Name the near Relation he had known; That he ought to Swear it was true; and if it did appear to be true, that he had really done so with any of her near Relations, they should be parted, and Steven should be put to publick Penance.

In 842, Nov. 1. Hincmarus held a Council at Reims with the Priests of his Diocese, in which several very useful Consultations were made. They Decreed and Ordered that all Priests should know how to explain the Creed and Lord's Prayer, and be able to repeat by heart the Preface and Canon of the Mass, and recite distinctly the Psalms, Hymns, and Athanasius's Creed; That they should know how to Administer Baptism, Absolve Penitents, and Anoint the Sick; That on every Sunday they should Consecrate Water, and burn Incense after the Gospel and Offertory; That they should distribute the Holy Bread to all those that would not Communicate; That they should read the 40 Homilies of St. Gregory; That they should know the Kalendar, and how to Sing, and should Sing the Service; That they should take care of the Poor and Sick; That they should not Pawn the Holy Vessels; That they should not Bury any Man in the Church, without permission from the Bishops, and should demand nothing for Burials; That they should take no Gifts of Penitents; That when they meet at Feasts they should be sober; That when they meet at Conferences they should not make any Feasts, but be contented with Bread, and two or three Glasses of Wine, and no more; That Fraternities should be upheld for Piety-sake, and none should be suffered to promote Feasting and Revels; And lastly, That when any Priest Died, no Man should get possession of his Church without the Bishops Order.

He gave also, at the same time, to the Prebends and Deans that were to visit his Diocese, some Articles of Enquiry, viz. What Titles every Priest had; and by whom he was Ordain'd; What is the Revenue of his Living, and how many Houses in his Parish; In what condition the Ornaments of his Church are, and how the Relicks are Preserved; If there be a place to throw the Water in, with which the Vessels of the Altar and Ornaments are washed; If the Holy Oils were kept Locked up; If there be a Clergy-man that keeps School; In what case the Church is, and whether it be in good Repair; Whether the Tithes be divided into three parts, and an Account be given of two of them to the Bishops; Whether there be any Church-Wardens; Whether the Church Revenues be improved, and no private advantage made of them; If the Clergy live orderly, and do not familiarly converse with Women, frequent Ale-Houses; How those that are vicious should be reprov'd, and for what Crime they may be Condemned and Degraded.

In 857, which was the 12th Year of Hincmarus's Bishoprick, June 9. he held another Synod, in which he added some other Rules, which ordered, That Publick Sinners should be put to Penitance in Publick by the Authority of the Bishops, to whom the Curates are obliged to send them; That if they do not present themselves to receive them, after they have been advertised of it by the Priests, they shall be Excommunicated within 15 days; That they shall require nothing for Burials; and no Man shall Celebrate Mass but upon a Consecrated Altar, or Table. He also made some other Constitutions in 874, in July, Commanding, That Priests, Curates, and Prebends, should reside in their Benefices, and not retire into Monasteries; That they should take nothing to make Church-Wardens, and should allow those that are chosen a part of their Tithes, to be employed about the Buildings, and Ornaments of the Church; That Priests should not be familiar with Women, nor enrich themselves with the Revenues of the Church; That they should give nothing to Patrons to be Nominated to any vacant Church.

These are the Constitutions which Hincmarus made for the Priests, but lest the Archdeacons, who are to put them in Execution in their Visits, should not give them in Charge to the Curates; he made, July 877. an Order, in which he forbids them to go their Visitations with many Attendants, or Horses, to require or exact any thing of them, to stay long with them; Not to meddle with the Division of Parishes, to make the Ancient Churches to be still subject to their Parishes, in which there have always been Priests; to suffer no Man to have a Chapel without the permission of the Archbishop, to Discharge no Penitents through favour before they have done their Penance, nor to Ordain any Persons not duly qualified, or to settle any Deans without the Authority of the Bishops.

After these Constitutions follows, in the Works of Hincmarus, a Recital of the Ceremonies and Prayers used at the Coronation of Charles the Bald for the Kingdom of Lotharius, Celebrated at Mez by Hincmarus, Sept. 8. 869. as also at the Coronation of Lewi, Dec. 8. 877. and of Judith the Daughter of Charles, when she was Married to Ethelwolfe King of England, An. 856. as also of Queen Hermentrude, celebrated at Soissons.

Hincmarus also, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, gives various Instructions to Princes out of the Fathers, which he lays down as undoubted Truths, viz. That God makes good Kings, and permits bad ones; That a good Prince is the greatest Happiness of the People, and a bad one their greatest Misfortune; That a Wise Government is the greatest Proof of great Power; That a King should choose Wise, Experienced, and Virtuous Men; That nothing is better than for Rulers to know how they ought to Rule; That it is most profitable, that good Kings have the greatest Kingdoms; That Necessity only should make them make War; That War is Lawful, if it be Just ; That God gives the Victory to whom he pleases ; That they ought to be Prayed for that Dye in Battels ; That Kings serve God by making Laws for his Honour ; That they are obliged to compel Men to do good, and punish them justly ; That they may sometimes shew favour, but they should be careful they do it not unfully ; That they should be continually upon their Guard, that they be not surprized by their Favourites or Flatterers ; They should have no Wicked Men about them, nor Pardon their Relations ; That they ought to mix Justice with Mercy. After he hath thus spoken of a Prince, as endued with Kingly Powers, he then lays down the Virtues of a Prince considered as a Christian, which is nothing but a Collection of Texts of Scripture, and Sentences of the Fathers, concerning the Duties of a Christian Life. He hath also a third Letter to the same King, concerning the Nature of the Soul ; He holds that it is Spiritual, not confined to a place, and doth not move locally, altho' it changes its Will and Manners. He also moves this Question, Whether we shall see God, in another World, by the Eyes of our Body, or only by the Eyes of the Soul ?

Hincmarus's Advice to Lewis is of Germany.

In the Year 858, Lewis, Emperor of Germany, entred Charles's Kingdom to Invade him, while he was gone to War against the Britans and Normans ; Hincmarus, and the other Bishops of his Diocesis, whom he had told the States that they must stay at Reims, sent a Remonstrance to him, in which they tell him plainly, That he was Unjust to his Brother, in entring into his Kingdom in an Hostile manner, exhorting him to make Peace with him, to turn his Arms against the Pagans, to preserve the Privileges of the Church, and suffer no Man to Rob it of its Revenues ; to restore those Monasteries of the Monks which are in the possession of Lay-men, to take care that the Monks live according to their Rule, and that the Revenues of Hospitals should be disposed of rightly by the Overseers, with the Authority of the Bishops. He then gives him some Directions how he ought to Live and Reign, and how he ought to govern the General Synod of France.

His Advice to King Charles.

In 859, Charles being ready to march against Lewis, Hincmarus wrote to him to hinder the Disorders and Pillaging which the Soldiers use to make. He also admonishes the Church-men at Court, by another Letter, to hinder the Soldiers, which were used to Pillage, to do it again. Lastly, He admonisheth the Priests of the Diocesis of Reims to Excommunicate them, who, after Admonition, should continue to Pillage any.

A Remonstrance to Lewis of Germany.

In 875, after the Death of Lewis King of Italy and Emperor, Charles the Bald being gone into Italy to be Crowned Emperor, and possess himself of Italy, Lewis of Germany falls upon France to give him a Diversion ; Hincmarus presents him with a long Petition full of Quotations of the Fathers, to stop him in this Enterprize, and was effectual.

The manner of proceeding against a Priest.

The same Year John Bishop of Cambray was written to by Hincmarus, who gave him Directions how he should deal with the Priest Humoldus, who was suspected of an unlawful familiarity with a Woman. He says, That the Custom of the Province hath been to make inquiries about the Priest who is thus charged and defamed, that their Witnesses must be Sworn, and Interrogated concerning his frequent converse and familiarity with Women ; That after the Deposition of 6 Witnesses, there ought to be a 7th to prove the Fact ; That if there be no Witnesses, but it be only a Common report, the Priest must clear himself by the Oath of 6 of his Neighboring Priests.

The Condemnation of a Priest.

Some time after, in 878, he condemned a Priest of his Diocesis himself, Named Goldbaldus, who was accused of conversing with a Woman ; the Fact was proved, but the Priest fled from Judgment. The Instrument of this Priest's Deposition is among Hincmarus's Works. In the same year he Excommunicated * Soucherus and Hardoisa, who Married their near Relations, and would not be parted from them.

Hincmarus's Book against Ansegisus's Priviledge.

In the year 876, Pope John VIII. Named for his Vicar in France and Germany, Ansegisus Archbishop of Sens. This Priviledge being prejudicial to the Church of Reims, and the Authority of Hincmarus, he wrote a large Treatise to defend the Rights of Metropolitans against the new pretences of these Vicars ; And in particular, glories much in the Rights and Priviledges of the Church of Reims. He cites a Letter of Pope Hormisdas, in which he makes Remigius his Vicar in France ; and a Bull of Benedict, which asserts, That all Persons in the Province of Reims are subject to their Metropolitan, and that no Man can go before any other Judges, without prejudice to the Right of the H. See. He adds, That he would not refuse to meet at a Synod of several Provinces, provided that it be called either by the Pope, or Emperor, because the first General Councils were called by the Emperors ; and S. Gregory himself bids the Kings of France to assemble Synods in their Realms. He observes, that Boniface Bishop of Maience, whom the Pope had made his Vicar in France and Germany, had never encroached upon the Rights of the Metropolitans ; That Drogon Bishop of Metz, having obtained the same Prerogative of Pope Sergius, could not enjoy it, because they, who sustained any loss by it, would not acknowledge him.

The Council of Pontigon.

Ansegisus's Letter of Priviledge was brought to the Council held June 19. at Pontigon, where the Popes Legats were met to represent the Pope. The Emperor, who was present, asked the Bishops what they had to say against the Pope's Bull. They answered, They were ready to obey it, so far as was consistent with the Right of their Metropolitans, according to the Canons and Decrees made and confirmed by the Popes, agreeable to the Laws of the Church. The Emperor, and the Pope's Legats, urged them to approve the Priviledge granted to Ansegisus without any restrictions, but they persisted in the Exception, only Frotarius, Archbishop of Bourdeaux, Answered as the Emperor desired, being willing to be Translated to Bourges, because his Country was Ravaged ; The Emperor insisted on it, That the Pope had Named Ansegisus to keep his place in the Synod, and he had set him above all the Bishops of his Realm, on the side of the Pope's Legats. Hincmarus exclaimed against it, and publicly complained, That they had done a thing contrary to the Canons of the Church. The Question was revived again in another Session, July 14. in which the Bishops protested, That they would obey the Popes Letters in the same manner that their Predecessors had obeyed his Predecessors, according to the Constitutions. This Answer satisfied the Emperor and Pope's Legats somewhat more, but the business being again Debated in the last Session, they explained themselves in the same manner that they had done in the first Session; so that Ansegisus could gain nothing more of them.

In the same Synod Hincmarus, and the other Archbishops, were forced to take an Oath of Fidelity openly to the Emperor. This Action much displeased Hincmarus, so that he made several Observations upon the Terms, in which the Oath was expressed; but that which troubled him most was, That his Fidelity seemed to be questioned, in requiring of him a new Oath of Fidelity, who had for so many years served his Prince faithfully. The same year he composed a Writing, to shew that the Land of Neuills belonged to the Church of Reims.

In the year 877, Hincmarus wrote a Letter to the Pope in the Name of Charles the Bald, about the Appeals of Priests to the H. See. Several Priests justly and Canonically condemned by their Bishops went to Rome, and surreptitiously obtained Letters of Absolution. This abuse freed Criminals from punishment, weakened and disannulled the Bishops of Authority, and quite destroyed the Order and Discipline of the Church; So that to stop the course of these Actions, the Emperor wrote a Letter to the Pope, in which, after a Collection of Canons which respected the Judgment of the Bishops and Priests, he prayed him to observe them, and conform to the Council of Sardica in the Appeals of Bishops; and as to Priests, they ought by the Canons to be Judged by their Bishops, and can't Appeal from the Judgment of their Bishop and Metropolitan. In the end, he prays the Pope to admonish the Bishops that they be moderate in their judgments, and not suffer themselves to be transported either with Passion or Pride.

Charles the Bald died a little time after, and left for his Successor his Son Lewis Balbus, or the Stammerer, who was Crowned by Hincmarus, Dec. 8. 877. Soon after this Archbishop sent him a Paper of Directions how to govern his Realm; He advises him to prevent all disagreements among his great Men, to assemble them, and take their Advice in Government, to put in Execution the Ordinance made by his Father concerning the Honour of Bishops, and Privileges of Churches, to keep his Subjects in Peace and Unity, to oppose the Inroads of the Britans, and hold Friendship and Correspondence with the Kings his Cousins. He exhorts him to pray to God, that he may attain an Heavenly felicity, administer Justice, and live like a Christian.

About the same time, upon the occasion of the Election of the Bishop of Beauvais, he wrote a Treatise of the Duties of a Bishop and his Functions, which are to Sing the Publick Service of the Church, Consecrate the Chrism, to Administer Baptism according to the Tradition of the Church, and to take care that the Priests also Baptize; to Ordain Priests, Deacons, and other Orders of the Clergy, at the time set apart by the Church, to call Synods of Priests, to go to Provincial Synods, and to assist at the Ordination of Bishops, when they are invited, or to send a Priest and a Deacon to excuse him; to govern his Clergy, and furnish the Church with all things necessary; to have Hospitals to receive the Poor and Passengers, to have a care of the Monasteries in his Diocese, and the Country-Parishes, to Preach the Word of God to the People, to Confirm, impose Publick Penance, Absolve those that have gone through with it, to have a care of all the Revenues of his Church, to serve the Prince in his Wars for the Defence of his Church, to make a good use of the Church-Revenues, to know and observe the H. Canons.

Lewis the Stammerer dying in 879. left two Sons, Lewis and Caroloman; These two Princes having many Enemies lying upon them, had need of the Emperors Protection, who was Charles the Gross. Hincmarus wrote to him, to thank him for the kindness he seemed to have for these young Princes, and to desire him to Protect the Church, and to appoint these Princes some Counsellors and Tutors, who might have a care to Educate them well, and to teach them all Virtues necessary for Princes.

At the beginning of the Reign of Lewis III. the Church of Beauvais having been vacant some time, Hincmarus, and the Bishops of his Province of Reims, being met in S. Maries Church, proceeded to the Election of a Bishop, and chose Odo. The Clergy and People of Beauvais had before chosen two, one after another, but they were rejected as incapable, by reason of their Ignorance and corrupt Manners. The Bishops, who had chosen Odo, had wrote to the King, to pray him, that he would leave the Election of their Bishops to their Metropolitan, and the Bishops of their Province, with the consent of the People and Clergy, and after they would present the Bishop chosen to him, that he might put him into the Possession of the Revenues of the Church, which was under his Protection; And when this is obtain'd, he shall be Ordain'd by the Bishops. The King pretending to Name him whom he would have, who was already chosen, refused to grant the Bishops Request, and wrote to Hincmarus, That his Intention was to govern and dispose both Ecclesiastical and Civil Matters, and desired him to be obedient to him, as he had been to his Predecessors; And that he would have the Church of Beauvais given to Odacer, in whom the Votes of the People concurred with him. Hincmarus answered him, That the Election of Bishops ought to be left to the Bishops, Clergy and People; that he ought not to force them to choose the Person he had Named to them; That the Ecclesiastical Laws, which give power of Electing Bishops, were revived in the Ordinances of the Kings his Predecessors; That he was not Lord over the Church Revenues, to dispose of them as he pleased. He puts him in mind of the Profession he made at his Coronation to protect the Church; That as for Odacer, he could never endure that he should be Bishop of Beauvais; and if he put him in possession session of the Church, he would not permit him to execute the Orders of his Priesthood in his Diocese; That he ought not to be Ordained, although he was chosen by the Suffrages of the Clergy and People of Beauvais unanimously, because they having Elected two unfit persons successively, the Right of Election was fallen to the Bishops.

King Lewis having again earnestly solicited Hincmarus by a second Letter to grant his Request, and to approve of the Election of Odacer to the Bishoprick of Beauvais, he answered him with greater resolution than before; and when Odacer was put in possession of the Revenues of that Church against his will, he Excommunicated him by a Circular Letter directed to all Priests, and all the Faithful of the Church.

Hincmarus's Advice to Caroloman.

Lastly, Lewis being Dead, and Caroloman only remaining King of France, Hincmarus, according to his Custom, sent an Instruction to him how he ought to govern himself. It is written with Gravity and Authority. He inserts the Duties of the Kings Servants, and Counsellors of State.

Hincmarus's Writing against Rapes.

It is not certain to what King Hincmarus Dedicated his Letters against Rapes, a Vice common in those Ages; He proves, both by the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws, that that Crime ought to be punished severely; that Marriages with Ravish'd Women are forbidden, and that Kings ought neither to tolerate them, nor compel Fathers to consent to them.

Hincmarus's Treatise about Proofs.

He hath also made a Treatise about the Proof by Water, sent to Hildegard Bishop of Meaux, either when Men, to prove their Innocency, are dipped in Scalding Water without burning, or when they cast themselves into Cold Water, and yet Swim on the top of the Water; and endeavours to justify this Custom, but the greatest part of his Reasons are meer Sophisms, which are destroyed by the Principle which forbids us to tempt God.

His Absolution by Letter.

He hath also a Letter written to Hildegard Bishop of Soissons, who being Sick, had sent him a General Confession of his Sins in Writing, praying him to give him his Letters of Absolution. He writes to him again, That by the Apostolick Authority he Absolved him of all his Sins, and prayed God to forgive them to him by the Grace of his H. Spirit, to deliver him from all Evil, to keep him in perpetual Peace and Safety, and guide him to Eternal Life. These are the terms in which he gave him Absolution; To which he also added, That not being able to come to him and pronounce it himself, he hoped his Ministers and Priests would do it: And tells him, That he had sent by one of them the H. Oil, with which being Anointed, he shall receive Remission of his Sins. He exhorts him also to make, besides this General Confession, a particular one to God, and a Priest; and adds some Precepts about a true Conversion.

The Form of Episcopal Ordination.

The Form of Episcopal Ordination which he sent to Adventius Bishop of Mets, is very remarkable. He says, That the Bishops of the Province ought to meet the Saturday before the Bishop Elect is to be Ordain'd, and there openly Read the Decree for his Election, and the Bishops must demand if their Votes are unanimously for him, if he hath all Virtues requisite for a Bishop, and no Man hath any thing to say against him. Then they ought to Ordain him according to a Canon of the Council of Carthage. That on the Lords-Day, the Bishops, Clergy, and People, ought to meet in the place where the Metropolitan useth to Ordain. That the person Elected ought to go out of the Vestry Cloathed with his Pontifical Vestments, and take the lowest Seat among the Bishops. That the Metropolitan shall begin the Service as far as the Gloria. That after the Gloria, he shall Read the Prayer for the Consecration; and when that's ended, he shall Exhort the People to Pray for him, who is to be Ordain'd, and for them that Ordain him. That taking him by the Hand, he shall kneel down before the Altar with all the Bishops his Associates, while they read the Litany. That when the Agnus Dei is begun to be Sung, they shall rise up. That the Metropolitan shall take the Gospels, and lay them upon the Neck and Shoulders of him that is to be Ordained; That that Book shall be held by him that Consecrates him, and two other Bishops: That all three of them shall lay their Hands upon the Head of the Person to be Ordained, and he that Consecrates him shall read the Prayer. Then he shall go on with the Service, and when he comes at the places marked with the Crosses, the Bishop, that Consecrates him, shall take the Vessel of Holy Oil in his Left Hand, and taking some of it with his Thumb of his Right Hand, shall make Crosses upon the Crown of the Head of the Person that is to be Ordained, Reading the Prayers in that place. This being done, and all the Congregation saying Amen, they shall take the Gospels from the Neck of him that is to be Ordain'd, put the Agnus upon his Finger, and give him the Pastoral Staff; After which, he shall take his place among the Bishops, viz. The first, if he be a Metropolitan, and the last if he be a single Bishop. Then they shall read the place in the Epistle to Timothy, where he speaks of the Qualifications of a Bishop; and when the Service is ended, they shall lead him to the Episcopal Chair, from whence he shall return into the Vestry, and then shall come out again to Celebrate the Sacrament. Then they shall give him a Testimonial of his Ordination.---

* Hincmarus's Treatise against the Translation of Bishops.

* Hincmarus opposes the Translations of Bishops in a Writing compos'd upon that Subject, upon the occasion of the Translation of Altardus Bishop of Nantes to the Archbishoprick of Tours. He proves, that according to the Laws of the Church, and the Tradition of the Apostles, the Translation of Bishops is forbidden, altho' in some cases these sort of Translations are permitted for the good of the Church. The only Lawful Reasons for Translations, according to him, are these, The Necessity of Preaching the Gospel, and the Peoples refusing to accept a Bishop. As for the Persecution of a Bishop in his Diocese, he shews, that it is not a sufficient reason for Translation; and that according to the Law and Canons, a Bishop persecuted, or driven out of his Diocese, ought only to remain in another in the Quality of a Bishop but there is no necessity he should be a Titular Bishop in another Church. As to the particular case of Altardus, that he might have remained in the vacant Church, where the Council permitted him to remain

main

main without removing to the Church of Tours, and that 'twas not heard of that he might be Archbishop of Tours, and yet retain the Right which he hath to the Church of Nantes. Actardus excused himself, because he had not sufficient Revenues in the Church of Nantes to live Honorably according to his Quality, but Hincmarus says, that that pretence is by no means a lawful excuse, but on the contrary, proves his Covetousness, and to much the more, because he had elsewhere Abbies, and an Estate sufficient for his maintenance and expence. There are in this Treatise a great many excellent Citations out of the Fathers, and some very good Precepts against the Covetousness and Ambition of Bishops.

His Treatise of the Accusations and Judgments of Priests, is a Collection of the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws upon that Subject; in it he shews, what Persons may accuse Priests, the quality, and number of the Witnesses, the Judge before whom they ought to be accused, which is the Bishop, the Judgment from which they may Appeal to the Metropolitan, the common Subjects, for which they may be accused, the manner how they ought to clear themselves when there are no Witnesses nor Proofs against them. He confutes the Opinion of some Persons, who held, that a Priest, or Bishop, could not be accused by their Inferiours. He shews the falshood and impertinence of a Decree taken out of the forged Acts of Pope Silvester. He owns, that for causes Civil and Pecuniary, a Clergy-man may be summoned before a Lay-Judge, and ought to answer before him by his Attorney. Lastly, He is of Opinion, that the Estates of Clergy men, all Ecclesiastical Revenues, and Oblations of the Faithful, do belong to the Church. He orders, that all Bishops Officers should be careful to inform them, whether that part of the Lenths, which ought to be distributed to the Poor, be appropriated to the Church, and whether they take any Presents of any Man not to put them in the Registers of the Church, nor require of them any sort of Service; whether they do not put in their Kindred; And lastly, If they look after the Poor and Infirm of their Parishes.

Hincmarus's Treatise of the Judgment of Priests.

Hincmarus applies the Laws, which he had laid down for the Judgment of Priests, to the particular Fact of a certain Priest called Tautfrid, who had taken away the Ornaments of the Church: He shews, first, That he ought to be Judged in his Province, either by his Bishop, or by a Council; That if he hath confessed, or is convicted of having conveyed away the Ornaments, he should be condemned to make Restitution, Deposed and Excommunicated: If it be found that he hath rejected the Judgment of the Church to have recourse to the Prince, he ought also to be Excommunicated, and Deposed, according to the Canons of the Councils at Aniotech and Carthage; That if he confesses, or be convicted to have sworn falsely to his Neighbors in his own behalf, he ought to be condemned as a Perjured person, and that he ought not to be excused, by saying, That he was forced, or by putting another sense upon his Words, because God can't be deceived by such Equivocations; and that we ought not so much to consider the Words of him that Swears, as what is meant by him that imposes the Oath.

The Process against Tautfridus.

The relation of the Vision of Bernoldus is worth our notice, because of the circumstances of what happened to that Person, being fallen Sick, made his Confession, received Absolution, Unction with the Holy Oil and the Communion of the Body and Blood of J. C. That afterward he fell into such a condition, that he could not speak, nor take any thing but a little Water, and when he had remained thus 3 days, on the 4th day about Noon, he became utterly senseless, but coming to himself about Midnight, he called for his Confessor, who being come, and having made such Prayers as are usual upon such Occasions, he told him he had been in another World, and had seen 41 Bishops in a certain place, among whom were Elbo, Paradulus, and Aeneas, who seemed to him to be mangled, and black, as if they had been burnt, quaking sometimes for cold, and sometimes scorched with heat; That Elbo calling him to him, said to him, Since you have a permission to go into the other World, we pray thee to do us this Service, as to bid the Priests and Laymen of our Diocese to Pray, and offer Sacrifice, and give Alms for us; That Bernoldus answering, that he knew not where to find them, they ordered a Person to conduct him, who brought him to a large Palace, where there were a great number of Bishops; That returning from this Walk, he came to the first Bishops, whom he found in a better condition, and more merry than they were the first time, who told him, That he had freed them from the Evil Guardian they had, and had put them into a state of rest; That afterward he saw the Emperor Charles in another place, who charged him to tell Hincmarus that he was in torments for not following his good Advice, and that he prayed him to help him, and deliver him from those pains by his Prayers; That after this, he was carried into a place full of Light, where he saw Hincmarus ready to Sing Mass, and that being discharged of his Commission, at his return he found Charles in a light place, and in a good condition; That he also met with Jesse, and saw several poor Souls tormented by the Devils in Lakes of Fire; That he also saw Earl Atharim, who charged him to bid his Wife pray to God for him; That he was dismissed by a Man of an honest countenance, who Exhorted him to abound in good Works, that he might have an happy Station in another World, and promised him that he should live 14 years. That Bernoldus, after he had related these things, received the Communion, and then Eat and Drank. Hincmarus hearing of this, (and believing it true, because he had read such like Visions in S. Gregory's Dialogues, and heard, that the like had happened to a certain Monk named Wetinus, in the Reign of the Emperor Lewis the Kind (or Godly) he took an occasion from hence to Exhort all the People of his Diocese to live well, and recommended it to them to Pray for King Charles, and for all others, whom this restored Person had seen, Interpreting, what they had said in this sense, that if they did what they desired, they should receive the comfort which they longed for.

The Vision of Bernoldus.

Towards the end of Hincmarus's Works is a Piece added concerning the Repentance of King Pepin; This Prince being delivered by the Lords of Aquitain to his Brother Charles, and confined to the Monastery of S. Medard at Soissons, An. 832. made his escape out of that Monastery, and fled to the Normans, who then Ravaged France, but was taken again. Hincmarus consulting with himself how he ought to be dealt with, made this Treatise, and in it concludes, that he ought to be Exhorted to make a Sincere and General Confession of all his Sins in secret, and publicly acknowledge his fault in leaving his Monastery, being Perjured, and made no better than an Heathen, and do his publick Penances; that then he may be reconciled, receive the Clerical Tonsure, and put on a Monks Habit, promising to live regularly for the future. And after this he may take the Communion, but must be treated civilly and kindly, and left at liberty in the Monastery, yet the Monks ought to observe strictly, that he doth not relapse into the same fault, nor escape, as he hath already done from the Monastery of S. Medard, and as Carlo-man had done from the Monastery of Corby.

Several Letters of Hincmarus.

At the end of Hincmarus's Works are some fragments of his Letters taken out of Hodoardus: The first is taken out of a Letter written to King Charles the Bald, concerning the manner how he ought to administer Justice to the Bishops; The second is out of a Letter to Lewis Emperor of Germany, about the Ordination of Bertulphus to the Archbishoprick of Treves; This Church had been a long time vacant, and Hincmarus Ordained Bertulphus to it. Lewis of Germany was angry at it, as an encroachment upon the Rights of his Kingdom, and an intrusion upon a Church that did not belong to him; wherefore Hincmarus wrote to him to excuse himself, and says, that he undertook that Ordination for the good of the Church; that he thought, since there were not Bishops enow in the Province of Treves to Ordain a Metropolitan, it belonged to him, who was the next Archbishop, to do it; and so much the rather, because the Churches of Reims and Treves were looked upon as Sisters, and the Custom in the Councils was, that the most ancient of those two Churches should have the Precedency of the other. That, indeed, he had not concerned himself with that Ordination, but by the entreaty of the Church of Treves, by whom Bertulphus was generally approved of; That he was resolved to maintain what he had done, and to defend the validity of this Ordination; That so long as he lived he would acknowledge Bertulphus Archbishop of Treves, unless he were Canonically Deposed; That Waldo, who had invaded that Church, should never be acknowledged by him for a Lawful Bishop, and if he persisted in his Claim they would condemn him.

In another Letter written to the Monks of S. Dennis, he forbids them to sell their Tythes, and convert the Price of them to their own advantage. In the 4th, directed to an Earl, he forbids him taking any thing for his Nomination to a Church, and tells him, That if a Person capable of a place be presented to him, he will Ordain him, if he will vouch that he hath given nothing for it, if not, he shall put in another. He complains, that there was a Person put into the Register of the Church who had given a Present to have his Name written into it.

In the fragment of the 5th Letter, he assures Hermengardis, Lotharius's Queen, that he never was unfaithful to the Emperor her Husband.

The 6th is an Admonition to the Nuns about the Election of an Abbeſs [for the Monastery of S. Croſſe.] The last is a fragment of a Treatise of Hincmarus's, intitled, Ferculum Solomonis, taken out of Durandus Abbot of Troarn, who says that this Treatise of Hincmarus's was in Verse; That which we have in the end of the first Tome of this Author's Works is in Prose, and seems to be a second part of that Work. The first is lost, and we have not spoken of the other, because it contains nothing in it but some Mystical Notions and Meditations.

There are two other Treatises of Hincmarus's of the same Nature, the one upon these words of the Psalmist, Herodii Domus Dux est illorum; and the other upon the Mystical Name which he had given to the Council of Nice, in which he affirms, That it deserves that Name, because the number of 318, which was the number of the Bishops present at it, is a Mystical Number.

By what we have said of the Life, Actions and Writings of Hincmarus, it is plain that he was better Versed in the Canons and Discipline of the Church, than in the Studies of Ecclesiastical Doctrines; He had read the Writings of the Councils well, and had made Collections of the Passages of their Writings, and Canons, upon all sorts of Subjects; He knew how to use them dexterously, and convert them easily to his own advantage; He was a great Politician, and knew very well how to use the Laws of the Church to bring about his Intentions and Designs; The French Church is much beholding to him for his vigor in defending her Liberties, and the Dignity of her Bishops and Metropolitans, against the attempts that the Popes had made upon their Rights, yet without depriving the H. See of the respect and subjection that was due to it; He found out a way to oppose the unjust Pretences of the Court of Rome, without making a Schism, or slighting the H. See.

But it was not against the Popes only, that he maintained the Rights of the Church, he also defended them against the Kings, and tho' he was much in favour, yet he courageously defended his Rights, by telling them freely what was their Duty. Some persons may, perhaps, blame him for intermeddling so much with Affairs of State, but this may be sufficiently justified by the usage of France in his time, where the Bishops were looked upon not only as the Spiritual Pastors of the Church, but as the Principal Members of the State.

His Style is fitter a great deal for Precepts and Instructions, than for Works of Doctrine or Eloquence, for 'tis clear and plain, but neither smooth nor elegant; the faults which are to be met withal in reading his Works are recompensed by abundance of excellent Rules and Authorities for the Government of the Church; There is no Author, where we meet with such plenty and so well Authoriz'd, and from whom we can know the Rights of the Church so well; Altho' he doubted of the falshood of the forged Decretals of the Popes, yet he Quotes them often, but 'tis usually when they are agreeable to the Common Right, for when they disagree he rejects them, and grounds himself chiefly upon the Canons of the General Councils, or other Councils received and approved by the Church, and upon the Decretals of the Popes, which are agreeable to that Discipline.

A Part of his Works were Printed at Mayence, [by the care of John Busseus] in 1602. and at Paris in 1615. by Cordeſius, [who added several Tracts of Hincmarus to the former Edition] but Father Simondus put out a much larger Edition in 2 Vol. in Folio, Printed at Paris by Cramoisy in 1645. Since F. Celler Published in 1658. four little Pieces of his against Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, [with Learned Notes of his own, and joined to them the Council of Douzi] which are also inserted in the 8th Tome of the Councils, with some new Letters of Hincmarus about the same business.

C H A P. VII.

The History of the Controversie upon the Eucharist Debated in the Ninth Century.

THE Famous Controversie of the Church of Rome with the Lutherans and Calvinists, upon the Eucharist, has made Men more attentive to all Controversies formerly raised about that Mystery. The Ninth Century affords us one, no less Important than Abuse. It cannot be deny'd, that there were Great Contests in this Age about the Eucharist, occasioned by the Book of Paschasius Radbertus, Concerning the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; but the Difficulty is, to know the True State of the Question: And that's the thing which lies now upon me to Clear, by giving a Faithful Account of the Authors that have Written upon this Subject, as well as of their Writings. I shall begin therefore with Paschasius Radbertus, whose Book has occasioned the Debate upon this Subject.

Paschasius was a Native of Soissons. Who, being from his Infancy forsaken by his Relations, was brought up by the Charity of the Nuns of our Lady of Soissons, in the out-parts of their Abbey. He became afterwards a Monk in the Monastery of Corbey, then under the Government of St. Adelardus, Brother of Theodrada the Abbess of our Lady of Soissons, who had taken care of Paschasius in his youth. He proved a very Studious Man, Managed divers Conferences, and Writ several Books. In short, having got a great Name both by his Learning and Vertue, he was chosen Abbot of Corbey, Anno 844; but would not take upon him the Order of Priesthood, and contented himself with that of Deacon, which he had taken when he was a private Monk. Some Difference hapned betwixt him and the Monks, which made him quit his Charge; and he spent the rest of his Life in Reading and Writing of Books. He died in the year 865.

His Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, was Written when he was yet a Monk; and that during the Exile of his Abbot, to whom he gives in his Preface the Name of Arsenes, and whom he calls another Jeremy. It has been a received Opinion, that it was Adelardus, who was Exiled Anno 814. But it is plain, by the Dialogue made by Paschasius upon the Life and Actions of St. Adelardus, that it was not Adelardus, but Wala, whom he called by the Names of Arsenes, and Jeremy. Which Wala was Exiled in the beginning of the Troubles raised by the Division that hapned betwixt the Emperor Lewis, Surnamed the Godly, and his Children, of which Paschasius himself takes notice in that Book, which made Father Mabillon conjecture, that this Book of Paschasius was not Written till the Year 832; notwithstanding that, in a Manuscript of the Abbey of Corbey, it is said, that this Abbot Arsenes is Adelardus, Sanctus Adelardus; which words seem to be foisted in, and are not to be found in other Manuscripts.

This Book Concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, bore likewise the Title of A Treatise of the Sacraments; for it is not true that Paschasius Writ two Books with those two different Titles, but one Book with both Titles, as it appears by some Ancient Manuscripts. By other Manuscripts we find, that it was Dedicated to an Abbot named Placidus, which is confirmed to us by the Testimonies of Sigebertus and Trithemius. This Placidus was the Famous Varinus, Abbot of the New Abbey of Corbey in Saxony, as it appears by a Letter of Paschasius, to be seen in the beginning of this Treatise, in the Manuscript of Amcey, published by Father Mabillon; who informs us besides, that this Book was Compos'd for the Instruction of the Saxons, who were not as yet well Instructed in the Christian Faith. In it, having first prepared their Minds to believe the Ineffable Mystery of the Eucharist, by demonstrating, that God by his Omnipotency may bring to pass many things Supernatural, and to us Incomprehensible, he says, That * no Man ought to doubt of its being the Body of Jesus Christ, and that his Flesh and Blood be really there; and shews, that none ought to be ignorant of so great a Mystery, daily Celebrated in the Church, and such as ought to be Received by the Faithful. Which they cannot do Worthily and Effectually, unless they can discern the Excellency of the Mystical Body and Blood of Jesus Christ from what they perceive by the Taft. That it is called Sacrament; either because under the Species of a Visible Sign, God is pleas'd to Work some Secret Thing, or because the Holy Ghost does Consecrate the Visible Sign, and under the Veil of Outward Signs does Work some Mystical Thing for the Salvation of the Faithful. That all Sacraments in general may be defin'd to be an Earnest or a Pledge of Salvation, by which, under a Visible Representation, the Holy Ghost works in an Invisible manner. That such are in the Church, the Sacraments of Baptism, Chrism, and that of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; therefore called Sacraments, because under the Visible Species the Flesh is Consecrated by a secret and Divine Vertue, so that they are in effect Inwardly, what they are thought to be Outwardly by Faith. That in Baptism we are Regenerated by the Holy Ghost, and afterwards, by the Power of Jesus Christ, nourished with his Body and

[* No Man ought to doubt, &c.] Although in this sum of Radbertus's Book de Sacramento Corporis & Sanguinis J. C. there be many Expressions that manifest the Ancient Doctrine of the Spiritual Presence in the Sacrament onely: yet it must not be deny'd, but that he speaks very plainly of the Substantial Conversion, and stands up stoutly for it; yet that this was a New Doctrine, and a strange Notion in the Church, appears by the General Opposition made to it by the Learned Men of the same Age, viz. Rabanus, Scotus, Bertram, &c. the sequel of the Controversie will manifest.]

Blood; and that we ought not to wonder, that the Holy Ghost, who has Formed our Saviour's Body in the Virgin's Womb, should, by an Invisible Power, change the Bread and Wine, though there appear no Visible Change, because it is done Spiritually and Invisibly: That by the Consecration of this Mystery, the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are truly Created, Produced, and Sacrificed in a Mystical Manner. That it is not to be deny'd, but that there is some Figure in this Mystery, being 'tis a Mystery, but that the Figure does not hinder the Reality. That what appears outwardly is a Figure, but the inward a Reality, because the Body and Blood of our Saviour are made of the Substance of the Bread and Wine: So that this Mystery is both Figure and Verity; a Figure of the hidden Truth, and a Verity, not perceivable indeed by the Senses, but believed by Faith. That the Ancient Figures differed vastly from this, they being but a Shadow and Image of what we really Injoy by Receiving this Mystery, the real Flesh and real Blood of Christ our Saviour. That those who do not dwell in Christ, that is, who remain in sin, take the Sacramental Elements out of the Priest's hand, but do not eat and drink Spiritually the Body and Blood of Christ. That, in fine, the Church is the Body of Christ, that all the Faithful are Members of his Body, and that the Eucharist is daily Consecrated to be the Body of Christ, but that those only, who are his Mystical Members are allowed to Receive it. That from this Food some receive Life, others Death; it being Life to such as are Members of Jesus Christ, and Death to such as are Members of the Devil. That we must raise our Mind to God, and Believe that after the words of Consecration, 'tis the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, that very Flesh which was Born of the Virgin, and died upon the Cross. That Christ himself is upon the Altar, Offering, as High-Priest, our Vows and Supplications to the Lord. That the Angels are present at this Sacrifice, in which our Saviour once Sacrificed upon the Cross for the Salvation of Mankind, is daily offered in a Mystical manner for the Atonement of the Sins we daily commit, to Discriminate the Good from the Wicked, to dwell Corporally in such as have received Baptism, that they may dwell in him, and to Nourish the Faithful: That therefore he is called Bread, because as the Bread nourishes the Body, so the Body of Jesus Christ nourishes the Soul of the Faithful: That he is also called Wine, because as the Wine is made of the Juice of several Grapes, so we are Justify'd by the Graces and Spiritual Influences which flow from him, who is the True Vine, of which the Faithful are but Branches. That it is the very Blood which ran out of his Side at his Death and Passion; and that for that Reason it is, that we mingle Water with the Wine, because out of his Side there came both Blood and Water. That others say, Water is mingled with the Wine, to joyn together the Water of Baptism, and the Blood which was the Price of our Salvation. That, whether the Consecrating-Priest be a good or bad Man, we ought to Believe, when we receive the Eucharist from his hands, that we equally receive the Truth of the Mystery; because the Consecration is not made by the Merit of him that Consecrates, but by the Power of the Creator, and the Virtue of the Holy Ghost; and that it is Jesus Christ who Baptizes, as it is he, by whom, through the Virtue of the Holy Ghost, the Eucharist becomes his Flesh and Blood. That the Priest is not the Creatour of Christ his Body, but that he Prays to God the Father by his Son; that he Offers Gifts unto him, before the Consecration, and Prays him to Accept of them; and that he makes this Offering in the Name of the Church and of the Faithful. That, although this Sacrament has neither the Taste nor the Colour of the Flesh and Blood, yet by the strength of Faith and Reason our Soul receives 'em as such; and that as we have received in Baptism the Image of our Saviour's Death, so we receive in this Sacrament the Likeness of his Flesh and Blood; so that there is truth in this Mystery: and yet the Heathens cannot Reproach us, that we Drink the Blood, or Eat the Flesh of a Dead Man.

† The Body and Blood of our Saviour visibly appear'd.] This Fabulous Apparition Hospinian de Sacr. l. 4. p. 1. p. 325. tells us, is plainly foisted into the Original Manuscript, and doth so plainly differ from the Style and Doctrine of the rest of the Treatise, that it is easily discernible to a moderate Judgment, that the Chapters 38 & 39, wherein it is, are added by the Monk who put it out, or by some other, who would promote the Doctrine of Transubstantiation by such Legendary Tales.

That, to evidence these Truths, either to such as called them into question, or to those who had a tender love for these Holy Mysteries, the † Body and Blood of our Saviour have sometimes visibly appeared upon the Altar, particularly to a Priest who had desired it ardently. That the Consecration of this Sacrament is made by the energy of the words of Jesus Christ. That, howsoever this Mystery be the Flesh and Blood of Christ, it may nevertheless be call'd Bread and Wine, by reason of the Effects they produce. For as the Terrestrial Bread is a support to our Temporal Life, so this Spiritual Bread yields unto us a Spiritual and Heavenly Life; and as Wine doth rejoyce the Heart of Man, so does this Heavenly Drink rejoyce the inward Man. That by receiving the Flesh of Christ we receive his Divinity, and that we receive both his Body and Blood, because they cannot be separated. That, though our Saviour did Administer this Sacrament to his Apostles after Supper for some Mystical Reasons, it was nevertheless the Practice of the Catholick Church to receive it Fasting. That it is not requisite however to forbear eating till the Eucharist be digested, according to the Injunctions of some Apocryphal Books. That, though this Sacrament nourishes our Bodies, we ought chiefly to consider the Spiritual Effects of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, as nourishing our Souls in a Spiritual manner; so that it is frivolous to fear that this Sacrament goes into the draught as our Terrestrial Food, or that it mingles it self, and is digested with it. That we ought not to believe, that Christ is to drink Wine during his Reign of a Thousand years, as some have imagined. And lastly, that, though Good and Bad Men receive the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, yet we must believe, that this Sacrament is Salvation to the first, and Damnation to the last. Thus I have, in few words, summed summed up Paschasius his Doctrine upon the Eucharist from his aforesaid Treatise*; To which he adds several Considerations, with Allegorical and Mystical Reflections, and towards the Conclusion some Passages out of S. Hilary, S. Austin, S. Ambrose, S. Gregory, S. Leo, S. John Chrysostom, and Beda, for the Confirmation of it.

A long time after this Treatise was published (for it was Written in 831. before Paschasius was Abbot of Corbey, and what we are going to say hapned but about the latter end of his Life, towards the Year 864.) Fredegardus, or Frudegardus, a Monk of the New Abbey of Corbey, for whose Monks Paschasius had Compos'd this Book, having met with some Men of a different Opinion, and himself entertaining some Doubts upon this Subject, did freely Write unto him his Thoughts upon the Matter. In Answer to which Paschasius Writ him a† Letter, wherein he explained and confirm'd what he had laid down in his Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour. There he says, That, notwithstanding the Scruples of those Persons, he had good Reason to maintain, that it is the very Flesh of our Saviour which is given to us in the Eucharist, the same Flesh that was Born of the Virgin, and the same Blood that was shed upon the Cross. Otherwise, says he, How can this Sacrament confer Eternal Life and the Remission of Sins, were it not the Flesh and Blood of him who is Life and Salvation? Fredegardus did own it to him, that he had been of that Opinion; but that having Read in the Third Book of the Christian Doctrine, Writ by St. Austin, that these words of our Saviour, This is my Body, This is my Flesh, are a Figurative expression, and a Figure more than a Reality, he could not tell how to Reconcile that with his former Sentiment. And the rather considering what that holy Father seems to say, That it were a horrible thing to believe, that Christians eat the same Body which was Born of the Virgin, and drink the same Blood that was shed upon the Cross. To which Paschasius Answers, That it is not inconsistent with good Sense, to say, That those words of our Saviour are a Figurative Expression, because there is a Figure in this Mystery, and that the Real Body and Blood of Christ are really found in it, but in a Mystery and Figure, as our Saviour is called the Character and Figure of his Father, though he is really God. That he has sufficiently explained it in his Book, by asserting, That the Eucharist is both a Figure and a Real thing. That St. Austin himself did own it, and that he agrees in that Point with St. Ambrose, St. Cyprian, and Eusebius Emesenus, some of whose Passages he quotes. Whence he infers, That it is the Doctrine of the Fathers, though many doubt of it, who cannot apprehend how, the Bread remaining visibly intire, it can be said, that it is the Body and Blood of Christ. But that they would have other Thoughts of it, should they but consider, how five or six Loaves could be Multiplied into an infinite Number; and as those Loaves were Multiply'd by the Power of God, so Christ's Flesh is multiply'd, and the abundance of his Flesh and Blood diffused in the Sacrament. That we say likewise, That Christ is daily Sacrificed upon our Altars, though he Died but once for the Salvation of Mankind, because we believe it to be done Spiritually, but not without the Sacrament: Which is not reiterated, by causing Christ to Die again; but he is Mystically Sacrificed every day for us, that we may receive in the Bread what was nailed to the Cross, and drink in the Cup what ran out of our Saviour's Side. For walking by Faith, our Belief ought to be Spiritual, not Carnal. Upon which he quotes a passage of St. Gregory, and another of the Council of Ephesus, and then invites Fredegardus to Read over his Treatise attentively. Not, says he, that there is any thing extraordinary in it, being contrived for the meanest capacity; but because he heard that Treatise had stirred up many to apply themselves to the Knowledge of this Mystery, teaching them to entertain Notions worthy of our Saviour, whose Body is Incorruptible, because Spiritual, and that all things that are done in the Sacrament are also Spiritual. He tells him, That 'tis that Spirit who gives Life to those who receive it worthily; and that those who want Faith, or receive it unworthily, eat and drink their own Damnation. To his Letter he subjoyns an Abstract of his Commentary upon the 26th Chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel, wherein he explains the words of the Institution of the Eucharist, and opposes those who give it only a Figurative Sense, as if the Words import'd nothing but the Figure and Vertue of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, and not his Real Flesh and Blood. Then he tells him, that he thought himself obliged to explain that passage more at large, upon the Information he had received, that some People found fault with what he had formerly Written upon that Subject. Which Doctrine he confirms by the Testimonies of St. Ambrose, St. Hilary, and the Council of Ephesus, together with some Expressions in the Canon of the Mass.

Although Paschasius in his Book followed the Doctrine of the Church, it having been the Opinion of all the Orthodox before him, That the Body and Blood of Christ were actually present in the Eucharist, and that the Bread and Wine were changed into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Yet it was not usual in those Times to say positively, That the Body of Christ in the Eucharist was the same that was born of the Virgin, and Assert it so plainly. This is the Judgment of Father Mabillon, which he expresses in these words; Quippe ante Paschasii Librum de Corpore & Sanguine Domini consitebantur Catholici omnes Christi Domini verum Corpus verumque Sanguinem revera existere in Eucharistia; itemque Panem & Vinum in illa converti; at nemo Paschasii tempore illud Corpus esse idem quod ex Maria Virgine natum est tam directe asserere auditus fuerat. These Expressions, says the same Author again, are indeed to be found in the Ancient Fathers; but this Age was either ignorant of those Passages, or did not take notice of them. Id quidem antea ex Patribus tradiderant non pauci, sed ignota erant illo ævo, aut certe non observata eorum hæc de re Testimonia. Paschasius therefore, adds Father Mabillon, teaching this Doctrine in his Book so positively, gave occasion for some eminent and learned Men to oppose his Opinion. These † Paschasius his Letter to Fredegardus.

The State of the Question betwixt Paschasius and his Adversaries. are his Words, Quapropter cum Paschasius in Libro suo tam fidenter & asseveranter illud docuisset, hujus rei Novitate, ut sibi videbatur, commoti sunt quidam Viri docti haud incelebres, qui scriptis editis hanc ejus sententiam acriter impugnarunt. Paschasius maintained it by a Passage of S. Ambrose, in his Book of Mysteries; whence he concluded, that the Sacrament of the Eucharist was the very Flesh of our Saviour, born of the Virgin, crucified, and raised again from the Dead. Which Expression, being made publick, was disliked by Rabanus, Ratramnus, and an Anonymous Author in the time of Paschasius, then in the next following Age by Erigerus. They look'd upon Paschasius as one that receded from the express Words of S. Austin and S. Jerom, who said, our Saviour's Body might be taken in two or three manners, and they could by no means approve of such Expressions. Their Controversie was not about the real Presence, which they owned with Paschasius, but only about the Expression it self. Paschasius maintained, that not only the Body of our Saviour was really in the Eucharist, but also that Christians ought plainly to say, that there was no Difference betwixt the one and the other. His Adversaries on the other side, to whom this Expression appeared too harsh, as if there were no Figure in the Eucharist, and the outward Species were the very Body of our Saviour, were disgusted at it. So that the state of their Controversie was not, whether Christ's Body was truly and really in the Eucharist, but whether we ought to say that he was there in the same manner as he was born, crucified, and raised from the dead; whether he was there without Veils, or Figure; or whether the outward Signs that appeared to our Senses were the Body and Blood of Christ. 'Tis true, Paschasius owned the Figure in the Eucharist, as they did the real Presence. But his Adversaries represented him as one that denied the Figure; and he thought his Adversaries disowned the real Presence, or at least that they had some Objections against it. Thus the whole Controversie betwixt them was merely about Expressions, and for want of a right Understanding.

[† Not about the Real Presence, but only about the Expression.] Although Transubstantiation be not plainly asserted in this Controversie, for it was not yet come so far as to determine how Christ's Body was present in the Sacrament, whether In or Trans, or Sub, or Con; yet this Dispute laid the Foundation for it, though our Historian would persuade us 'twas but a verbal one only. Yet the Opposition of such learned men as appeared against Radbertus, do plainly intimate more, who would not fight with Shadows. These Expressions had a plain Tendency to a great Error: for though both Parties acknowledged a Real Presence, yet herein was the Difference; Radbertus was for a carnal and bodily Presence, Bertram, Scotus, &c. were for a spiritual and figurative Presence; according as the Ancient Fathers had always held: which is not less real than the other. And if we keep in mind this Distinction, Radbertus and Bertram are as far from agreeing as Truth and Error.]

The first Author who opposed Paschasius was Anonymous.

The first Author that writ against Paschasius was a nameless Author, whose Writings upon this Subject Father Mabillon found in a Manuscript of Gemblours, at the end of Erigerus his Treatise, with this Title, Dicta cuiusdam sapientis de corpore & sanguine Domini adversus Ratbertum. This Author says that, as all the Faithful ought to believe and confess that the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are one and the same Flesh, so they ought to believe that of the Bread is made his real Flesh, and of the Wine his real Blood, by the Consecration and Virtue of the Holy Ghost. Yet he opposes Paschasius his Expression; viz. Quod non sit alia caro Christi quam qua nata est de Maria, & passa in Cruce, & resurrexit de Sepulchro; and says, that the Notion was perfectly new, he never read, or heard of it, and wonders S. Ambrose should make use of it. But he opposes S. Austin to him, who says that our Saviour's Flesh is not eaten with our Teeth, such as it was upon the Cross, or as after it rose from the Dead. And, to reconcile S. Ambrose with S. Austin, he says, that our Lord's Body in the Eucharist does not differ in Nature, but in Species, from his Body born of the Virgin; meaning (as he explains himself) that it is really the same, though in another state, and under another form, viz. under the Species of the Bread and Wine. So fully convinced was this Author, that Paschasius believed our Saviour's Flesh to be in the same manner, and as visibly in the Eucharist, as upon the Cross, that he charged him with this impious Assertion, that as often as Mass is celebrated, our Saviour suffered as really as he did upon the Cross. Father Mabillon affirms, that this anonymous Book is Rabanus's Letter to Egilo; but he brings no certain Proof for it. The Title is different, nor is the Treatise made in the form of a Letter; so that I am apt to think it another Thing. However, 'tis certain Rabanus has also found fault with Paschasius his Expressions: for, besides Erigerus his Authority, who joyns him with Ratramnus, as one of Paschasius his Adversaries, Rabanus himself, in his Letter to Heribaldus, speaks on that Subject in these Words; Some Men, says he, not having true Sentiments upon the Sacrament of the Body and Blood, assert, that that very Body and Blood of our Saviour, which was born of the Virgin, and in which our Saviour suffered Death upon the Cross, is the same Body we receive at the Altar; which Opinion we have confuted, as much as in us lay, in our Letter to Egilo the Abbot, wherein we teach what ought to be believed concerning Christ his Body. 'Tis true, these very Words, Idem esse quod sumitur in Altari, are not in the Manuscript; but Monsieur Baluzius has inserted them, upon the Credit of Erigerus. And, whatever Additions or Alterations might be made, 'tis plain, Rabanus did by no means approve of Paschasius his way of expressing himself; yet this is no Argument but that he believed Christ's real Presence in the Eucharist. For in the tenth Chapter of the tenth Book of Orders he expressly says, that the Bread is changed into the Body of Christ, and the Wine into his Blood, and looks upon this Change as a very great Miracle. Who could believe, says he, that the Bread could be changed into the Flesh of Christ, and the Wine into his Blood, if our Saviour himself had not said it, by whom both the Bread and Wine were created, and all things made of Nothing? 'Tis much more easie for him to make one thing of another, than to make all things of Nothing. In his Book of the Institution of Clerks, he says, that the visible Creatures being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, pass into the Sacrament of the divine Body. And in his Manuscript Commentary mentary upon Joshua, he says, That the Flesh and Blood of the unsported Lamb are offered every day on the Altar, for the Nourishment of the Souls of the Faithful who receive the same, that the Shadow of the Law being past, the Truth of the Gospel may come to light by Jesus Christ himself. Whereby it appears that Rabanus did not in the least oppose the real Presence of Christ's Body in the Eucharist, but only disproved Paschasius his Expression, which he thought seemed to intimate that the outward Signs of the Sacrament of the Eucharist, which our Eyes see, and our Hands feel, are the very Body of our Saviour.

There is another anonymous Author, whose Work is quoted by Erigerus, and inserted in the 12th Tome of Dacherius his Spicilegium, who speaks to the same purpose. As there is nothing (says he) but what is true and real in Christ, so there is nothing in the Mystery of his Body and Blood, which is consecrated into what it was not, by virtue of the blessing and the Word of God, that can be false or deceitful; and those Gifts being thus consecrated, are changed by an invisible Power into what they were not before, as the Water was changed into Wine at Cana, but that this being a spiritual Change, is not perceptible but by Faith. Meaning, that the * Species of Bread and Wine remain, and that the inward Change, though real and effective, is not perceived by our bodily Eyes, but by Faith.

[* The Species remain, and the Inward Change, though real, is not perceived by our Eyes, but by Faith.]

Mr. Du-Pin in representing this Controversie, uses the words, Species, Accidents and Form, to express the Elements of the Sacraments to us, that he may make the Romish Doctrines appear in the Venerable Robes of Antiquity, and so describes the Real Change, all along, as if it were Corporal; but if we attentively observe the words of the Author, we shall find that Bertram, and those of his Sentiments, allowed no Material, but Sacramental Change in the Elements. Christ's Body and Blood were present Effectively and Really, but not Bodily, and Substantially, or Transubstantially, as the Romanists hold; and in this sense it is, that we Protestants, agreeable to all true Antiquity, as Casaubon says, Credimus in Eucharistia presentiam, non minus quam ipsi Papicolas, veram.]

But nothing gives us a clearer Insight into the State of the Question, then under debate, than the Book of the Body and Blood of our Lord, which passes commonly under the Name of Bertram: But because some question whether he be the Author, it will not be improper, before we relate what is said therein to the present purpose, to examine whose Work it is, whether of Ratramnus himself, a Monk of Corbey, or of some other Author. The First Impression of this Book was at Collen, Anno 1533, by the care of the Protestants of Germany; which made it the more odious to many Catholics, who, without a due examination thereof, lookt upon it as a Book that countenanced the Error of the Protestants in the point of the Eucharist. Some there were, as amongst others, Sixtus Senensis, and Despandus Santonenfis, who gave it out for spurious: But, some Ancient Manuscripts of it being found, that supposition ceased. Some undertook the Defence of this Treatise, others conceived there were many things in it fit to be Corrected, and others gave it quite over. But, however Divines were divided in those days, upon the Doctrine of this Book, still they agreed in this, that Bertramus and Ratramnus were the same, though Bertramus is the most commonly used, and to be seen both in Sigebertus and Tritheimius. Arch-Bishop Usher is the first that quoted him under the Name of Ratramnus, taking it for an undoubted Truth, that Bertramus and Ratramnus were the same. But Maresius being Asked his Opinion concerning this Author, by Father Dacherius, Writ to him a Learned Epistle, inserted into the Second Tome of his Spicilegium, that came out in 1657, in which he maintains, That the Book bearing the Name of Bertramus, is not Ratramnus's; but that it is the Book of Johannes Scotus Erigena, who did certainly Write a Treatise on the same Subject, in which he seemed to oppose the Reality of our Saviour's Body in the Eucharist. This Opinion was followed by Father Paris, a Canon Regular of S. Genovefa, eminent both for his Learning and Piety, in the Discourse he made upon this Subject, and which he put at the end of the First Tome of his Book, called, The Perpetual Tenour of our Faith: and of late by Father Harduin, in his Treatise of The Sacrament of the Altar. The Principal Reasons on which they ground their Conjectures, are these. 1. What Authors have said of the Book of Johannes Scotus, concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, does agree with the Book that bears the Name of Bertramus. Affelin tells us, That it was a little Book, wherein he endeavoured to prove, That what is Consecrated upon the Altar, is not really the Body and Blood of Christ; for a Proof whereof, he alledged several places of Scripture, which he explained contrary to the true meaning of them, and quoted, amongst other things, S. Gregory's Prayer in these words, Perficiant in nobis tua, Domine, Sacramenta, &c. to which he added next, Specie geruntur ista, non Veritate. All which agrees with Bertramus his small Book, wherein the Author seems to design to disprove the Reality of Christ's Body in the Eucharist. In order to which he alledges several Passages taken out of the Fathers, and, amongst others, that very Prayer of S. Gregory, with this Gloss, Dicit quod in Specie geruntur ista, non Veritate. Berengarius, speaking of Scotus his Book, tells us, That it was Written by the Order of Carolus Magnus; and Bertramus his Book is thus Dedicated, Ad Carolum Magnum. 'Tis own'd, that Charles the Great is the same with Charles the Bald: But, since the Title of Great was not commonly given to this last, 'tis unlikely (some think) that two Authors should have Dedicated it to him: So that Bertramus his Book must be the same mention'd by Berengarius. 2. 'Tis alledg'd, That the Book of Johannes Scotus, and that of Bertramus never appear'd together; and that the Authors who quoted the one, never quoted the other. 3. 'Tis affirm'd, that the Style, Genius, and Character of Bertramus his Book, is the same with that of Scotus; that there is the same Spirit of Confusion and Contradiction which appears in his other Works, and the same Disagreement from the Doctrines generally rally received in the Church. The Arguments are in due form. The Conclusion of Bertramus his Book is very like unto the Preface of Scotus's Book of Predestination; and the Conclusion of his Fifth Book of the Division of Nature. These are the Conjectures of Learned Authors, which indeed seem very strong, and might have made their Opinion very probable, had not the Learned Father Meillon brought positive Proofs to the contrary, such as are not grounded upon mere Conjectures; but upon Matter of Fact. Who, in the first place, insists upon the Authority of a Manuscript of the Abbey of Lobbes, Written above 800 years since; wherein is found the Book of the Body and Blood of our Saviour; and, next to that the two Books of Ratramnus, touching Predestination. One bearing this Title, Incipit Liber Ratramni de Corpore & Sanguine Domini; Jussisti, gloriose Princeps. The other this, Incipit Liber de Predestinatione Dei, Domino gloriose atque precellentissimo Regi Carolo, Ratramnus. Which Inscriptions are confirmed by an Ancient Catalogue of Books of that Library made in 1049, with these words in it, Ratramni de Corpore & Sanguine Domini Liber I. Ejusdem de Predestinatione Dei ad eundem Libri II. It is an unquestionable Evidence, that the Book bearing the Name of Bertramus is really his; that this Manuscript which is of the same Century, bears his Name in the Title, and his Books of Predestination, are joyned unto that of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which proves it to come from the same Author. The same Father does assure us besides in his Travels into Germany, that he saw another Manuscript of above 700 years standing, with the very same Supercriptions.

Secondly, 'Tis worth our Observation, that the Anonymous Author of Father Cellot doth attribute to Ratramnus Abbot of Cervey, and to the Author of the two Books concerning Predestination, That of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, under the Name of Bertramus. And, if that Anonymous Author was Contemporary, his Testimony in this Case must needs be decisive. Now that Author was Erigerus, Abbot of Lobbes, who succeeded Fulcuin in that Dignity, Anno 890, and died in 907, as Father Meillon proves by an Ancient Manuscript; wherein the Anonymous Book, published by Father Cellot, bears the Name of Erigerus. And it appears besides by the Chronicle of Lobbes, that that Abbot had Written upon that Subject. This is observable moreover, that the said Author, speaking of Ratramnus his Book concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, says, That it was divided into a Hundred Chapters, the same Division that is found in the forelaid Ancient Manuscript of Lobbes. Which makes it a strong Presumption, that it was the very same Manuscript which Erigerus had.

Thirdly, In two Ancient Manuscripts of Siebert, instead of Bertramus, we read Ratramus, or Ratramnus. In Trithemius he is called Betrannus, or Ratramnus. Which Names do not differ much from that of Ratramnus, afterwards smoothed into Bertramus. But that which is the most decisive in this case, is, what those Authors do say, viz. That the Author of the Book touching the Body and Blood of our Saviour, did also Write a Book concerning Predestination, Dedicated to Charles the Bald. Scriptor, says Siebert, Librum de Corpore & Sanguine Domini, & ad Carolum Librum de Predestinatione. Trithemius makes him Author of several Works, of all which he found (as he says) but one Book De Corpore & Sanguine Domini; and another, Ad Carolum De Predestinatione. Now, the Book of Predestination, Written by Johannes Scotus, was not dedicated to Charles, but to Hincmarus and Pardulus; whereas Ratramnus his Book was Dedicated to that Emperour. We must therefore conclude Ratramnus to be the Author of the Book concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

These Positive Proofs are sufficient to destroy all opposite Conjectures, which, how plausible soever they may appear, are not altogether solid. For why might not both Ratramnus and Scotus Write a Book upon the Eucharist, as they did upon Predestination; And what should hinder both their Works to be much of the same length? They might be each of them consulted by the Emperour Charles the Bald about the Eucharist, as they were about Predestination. Why could they not both be of the same Opinion, as Ratramnus and Goteschalchus chanced to be of the same Judgment about this Expression Trina Deitas? 'Tis not to be wonder'd at, that both of 'em should have made Collections of Passages out of the Fathers, seeing it was the common Practice in their Time, and the usual way of those two Authors. Why is it urged, that they have not both alledged S. Gregory's Prayer, Perficient tua, Domine, &c. being it was a common Testimony? The Gloss of Ratramnus upon that Prayer, differs from that of Scotus. Who, according to Affelin, had Written, Specie geruntur ista, non Veritate. Ratramnus does not say so; but explaining the words of the Prayer, Dicit (says he) quod in Specie geruntur ista, non Veritate, id est per Similitudinem, non per ipsius rei Manifestationem. Which words, Specie geruntur ista, non Veritate, were the Comment Scotus made upon it; whereas here the Words of the Prayer are explained by the next Words, not in the least disagreeable to the Catholick Faith. As to the Dedication, Why might it not happen that two Authors should be of the same Mind, in giving the Title of Great to Charles the Bald? Besides, that in the Manuscript of Ratramnus his Book in the Abbey of Lobbes, there is no such thing to be found as Prefatio ad Carolum Magnum Imperatorem. And, when this Book was composed, Charles was not yet Emperour: So that the Title must needs be added afterwards. But there are other Instances of this Epithet of Great, given to Charles the Bald. The second Reason grounded upon a Pretence, That they who were acquainted with Scotus his Book, knew nothing of Bertramus's, is confuted by what has been already alledg'd, That in the Ninth and Tenth Centuries Ratramnus his Book was Transcribed under his Name, and quoted by Erigerus, that of Scotus by Aldrevadus. In the Eleventh, the Book of Ratramnus was Transcribed by Siebert, and Scotus his Book by those who Writ against Berengarius.

garius. To conclude, the last Reason is a groundless Errour. So far is it from being true, that Bertramus his Book is of the same Style and Character with those of Scotus, that on the contrary it is most uniform both in Style and other Circumstances with Ratramnus his other Works, whereof any Reader may be a competent Judge. Thus much as to what concerns the Author of the Book, that bears the Name of Bertramus. Let us now proceed to the Subject Matter of it.

The Question, upon which Charles the Bald asked his Opinion, is thus stated by him. While The Opinion (says he) amongst the Faithful, some say there is no Veil or Figure in the Mystery of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, which is daily celebrated in the Church, but that it is done by a plain Manifestation of naked Verity; and others on the contrary maintain, That the Body and Blood of our Saviour are contained therein under the Figure of the Mystery, and that what appears to our bodily Senses, differs from what our Faith perceives in it; the Church is divided by these different Opinions, and a way made to a kind of Schism. So that here is the true State of the Question, Whether or no there is any Figure in the Eucharist, if it be without any Veil, and whether the Body itself and Blood of our Saviour be perceived by our outward Senses. Your Majesty, says he, desires to be satisfi'd, whether the Body and Blood of Christ be made in a Mystery, or in Truth; that is to say, whether it is so made, as that there is some Thing secret and hidden, not to be perceived but by the eyes of Faith; or whether our outward eyes do outwardly perceive what the inward sight does perceive inwardly in it, without any Veil of the Mystery, in such a manner, that the whole of it does manifestly and openly appear. Those are the words of the first Question. So that the Question is not, Whether the Body and Blood of Christ be in the Eucharist, that being taken for granted; but whether they be there without Veil, so as to appear to our outward Eyes. For 'tis in this Sense the Author takes the Word Verity, and opposes it to Figure. 'Tis a naked Verity, without Veil or Mystery, such as is perceived by our outward Senses, and doth exclude all manner of Figure.

The other Question proposed to Ratramnus, is, Whether that very same Body we receive be that which was born of the Virgin Mary, which Suffer'd, and was put to Death, which was Buried, and Rose again from the Dead, then Ascended into Heaven, and now sits on the Right Hand of the Father everlasting. That is to say, Whether his Body be in the same manner in the Eucharist, as it was and is in those Places, and whether it be there in as visible and palpable a manner. For, to prove that it is not so, he says, That the Body of our Saviour, in its natural state, is under the form of a humane Body, with Bones and Sinews, and all the Lineaments of a Man's Limbs; Whereas in the Eucharist 'tis under another Form, not supported by Bones and Sinews, nor with that Distinction of Limbs, in such a state as makes it incapable of proper Motions, or to give any sign of Life.

To those two Questions Ratramnus answers distinctly, in the two Parts of his Book. But, that his Opinion of the State of the Question may be the better understood, he gives first the Definitions of what he calls a Figure and a Verity. A Figure, says he, is, when there is some Obscurity, and that under some certain Veils another Thing is exhibited. A Verity, on the contrary, is a manifest Demonstration of the Thing, without the covering of any Image or Figure. This being granted, he maintains, That if the Mystery of the Body and Blood of our Saviour were made without any Figure, it could not properly be called a Mystery, because that cannot be called a Mystery, wherein there is nothing hidden; nothing but what is perceived by our outward Senses; nothing cover'd with any Veil. That that Bread which is made the Body of Christ, by the Ministry of the Priest, shews Outwardly one Thing to the Senses, and, at the same time, insinuates into the Minds of the Faithful, that there is another Thing Inwardly. Outwardly it appears to be Bread, as it was before; we perceive its Form, the Colour, and Taste; but we believe, that Inwardly it is some Thing much more precious and excellent, because it is a divine and heavenly Thing, that is to say, the Body of our Saviour which is exhibited therein, which does not fall under our outward Senses, but is by the eyes of our Souls seen, received and eaten. The same he says of the Wine, and our Saviour's Blood; and concludes, that the Bread and Wine are, by a Figure, the Body of Christ; that is to say, That we do not see any Flesh and Blood, but Bread and Wine, though after the Mystical Consecration it is no more called Bread and Wine, but the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. To which he adds, that, If there were no Figure, as some maintain'd, and that the whole Truth might be plainly seen, there would be no room for Faith, and then 'twould be no Mystery, because it hath nothing in it that is secret.

Next he shews, that the Change which is made in the Eucharist is not made visibly, and to our outward Senses. *For, says he, 'tis not a Change of a Thing that was not into one, that is; seeing the Bread and Wine were before, they were changed into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Nor is it a Change of a Thing that is, into one that is not, seeing the form of the Bread and Wine appears the same to our eyes. Nor lastly, the Change of one Thing into another by a change of qualities, the qualities of the Bread and Wine remaining still the same. Whence he concludes, That those who believe no Figure in the Eucharist cannot explain that Change, and must own that there is nothing in it, which was not before. Nevertheless, says he, 'tis something else, for the Bread and Wine are made the Body and Blood of our Saviour. And here he charges his Adversaries home, asserting, they must either own, that the Change which is made in the Eucharist is not an outward Change; or, to deny, that it is the Body and Blood of our Saviour, Quod nefas est non solum dicere, sed etiam cogitare, the very thought of which is criminal. But they granting, says he, that the Body and Blood of Christ are in the Sacrament, which cannot be without a Change for the better, and that Change cannot be made Corporally, into that which falls under* 'under our outward Senses, but Spiritually; it necessarily follows, that it must be made in Figure, because under the Veil of the Corporeal Bread and Wine, the Spiritual Body and Blood of our Saviour are really present, and do conjunctly exist. But we must not therefore imagine, that they be two Existences of two different Things, viz. Body and Spirit. For, on the contrary, 'tis but one and the same Thing, which, in one respect, is the Species of the Bread and Wine; and, in another respect, is the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Now this Bread and Wine, as they fall under our outward Senses, are Species of Corporal Creatures. But, if consider'd, in relation to the Power which has rais'd them into a kind of Spiritual being, they are the Mysteries of the Body and Blood of our Saviour. By their outward Superficies falling under our Senses, they are Creatures subject to Change and Corruption; but, if we look upon 'em with relation to the strength, and effect of the Mystery, they confer Life and Immortality on those who receive them.

This he explains by the Similies of Baptism and the Manna, which indeed are not altogether parallel, but such as may be, in some sense, apply'd to it. For, as in Baptism, there is an outward Sign that falls under our Senses, and an inward Grace apprehended by Faith, so there are in the Eucharist the Species of Bread and Wine that fall under our Senses, and the Invisible Body of our Saviour. And, as the inward Grace and Virtue of Baptism for the healing of our Souls is also real and true, so the Body of our Saviour Christ is really and truly present under the Species. As to the Manna, this Author seems to be singular in his Opinion about its Conversion into the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which he affirms in very ardent Terms; but he was forced to do it, the better to adapt his Simile to the Subject in hand; which is a further Proof, that he owned a real Change in the Eucharist. Next to that he quotes that place of Scripture out of St. John's Gospel, Chap. 6. If you do not eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood. Upon which he makes this Observation, That our Saviour does not say, That, to eat his Flesh, it must be cut in pieces, such as it was Crucified, or that his Blood must be drunk in the same manner as it was shed upon the Cross; but that the Faithful shall truly receive by this Mystery the Bread and Wine converted into the Substance of the Body and Blood of Christ. Thus is clearly explained the Reality of the Body of Christ, and the Change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Afterwards he quotes several Passages out of S. Austin and S. Isidorus, upon which he observes, 'That the Bread and Wine are changed into the Body and Blood of Christ, not in a Visible, but in an Invisible manner, by the Operation of the Holy Ghost; and that they are therefore called the Body and Blood of Christ, because they are not lookt upon by their outward appearance, but as they are made by the Divine Spirit; and that by an Invisible Power they become quite another Thing than they appear to our eyes. That Part of the Eucharist, which is outward and visible, feeds our Bodies, whilst the inward and invisible feeds and gives Life to our Souls.

Lastly, He concludes this first Part in these words; By what hath been said hitherto it plainly appears, that the Body and Blood of our Saviour received in the Church by the Mouth of the Faithful, are Figures, if consider'd by the visible and outward form of the Bread and Wine. But, if consider'd by their Substance, hidden to our eyes, that is, by the Power of the Divine Word, they are indeed the Body and Blood of Christ. Therefore, according to the visible Creature, they are a Food for our Bodies; but, by the Power of a Mightier Substance, they nourish and sanctify the Souls of the Faithful.

After this, he comes to the Second Question, which he expresses in these words; Whether the same Body which was Born of the Virgin Mary, which Suffered, and was Buried, and sits on the right-hand of the Eternal Father, be the same which the Faithful daily receive in the Church by the Mystery of the Sacraments. The first Author he quotes upon this Question is S. Ambrose, a passage out of whose first Book, De Sacramentis, he sets down; and, out of it, he draws this Conclusion; That, what we receive corporally, that is, what we touch with our Teeth, swallow down, and goes into the Belly, is not the Thing that feeds our Souls; but that it is the Living Bread, the Body of Christ, which is perceptible only to our Faith. Which shews, that this Question agrees to the former, and that it does not lie in this, to know, Whether the Body and Blood of our Saviour be received in the Eucharist; but how it is received, and in what manner it is there, whether without any Figure or Veil, and whether it be that very Thing we feel, or break, &c. And here he repeats his Argument drawn from the Change, which must be Inward and Invisible, seeing it is not Outward and Apparent. Thus continuing to alledge Passages out of S. Ambrose, he starts this Objection; Those (says he) who are not of my Opinion, do object and say, That what we see is the very Body of our Saviour; and that which we drink is his Blood; and that we ought not to inquire how it comes to pass, but that 'tis our duty to believe it to be so. To which he makes this Answer, That this Opinion is reasonable, and that we ought firmly to believe, that it is the Body and Blood of Christ; but that therefore we believe it, because we do not see it; for, could we see it, we should not say, I believe, but I see it. That it is not the Eye of the Body, but Faith, that perceives it; and that what is seen is not in Specie, but in Operation, and effect, the Body and Blood of Christ; that is to say, That the Body of Christ does not appear in it under a Humane shape. Therefore, adds he, S. Ambrose says, That we ought not to mind the Course of Nature, but the Power of Christ, who changes what seemeth good unto him, and in what manner he pleases, who created those Things which were not, and changes what he has created into what it was not before. To be virtually the Body of Christ, according to our Author, is to be so really, but not visibly, because under another form or appearance. For, as he says afterwards, 'tis Bread in Specie; but, in the Sacrament, the Real Body of Christ: In Specie Panis est, in Sacramento verum Christi Corpus. 'Tis the Body and Blood of Christ, but not in a corporal manner. Corpus Christi, sed non corporaliter; Sanguis Christi, sed non corporaliter.

The difference he makes betwixt the Body of Christ in which he suffered, and that in the Eucharist is, that the first was had under no form, but its own. It was what it appeared to be to the Eyes and to the Feeling; what the Jews saw upon the Cross, and afterwards in the Grave. His Blood, in the like manner, was invisible, not cover'd with any Veil. Whereas his Blood which the Faithful drink, and his Body which they eat, are quite another Kind of Thing, both in the Sign and the Thing signify'd. The corporal Flesh that was born of the Virgin, and crucify'd, consisted of Bones and Sinews, had Limbs and Parts distinct from each other; shewed Signs of Life, and had proper Motions. But the Spiritual Flesh wherewith the Faithful are fed Spiritually, according to the outward form, consists of grains of Wheat, and is made by a Baker's hands, no part of it distinct from another. It does not appear living, or animated, is not indued with any proper and natural Motion, and its virtue of conferring Life is the effect of a Spiritual Power, of the invisible and efficacious Power of God. What it appears Outwardly to be is quite another Thing from what it is thought to be Inwardly. To which he adds, That the Bread of the Eucharist is not onely a Figure of our Saviour's Body, but observes by the bye, that it is also a Figure of the Body of the Faithful, and that the Water mingled with the Wine does likewise represent it in a Spiritual manner. In fine, to demonstrate it further, that the Species of Bread and Wine are not the Body of our Saviour, he says, That his Body in Heaven is Incorruptible, Eternal, Indivisible; but that the Sacrament is Corruptible, and Divisible, in its outward and sensible Parts, though Incorruptible in that Part of it which is perceptible to Faith. From whence he draws this Conclusion, Therefore what appears Outwardly is not the Thing it self, but the Image of it, and what the Soul perceives and apprehends in it is the Truth of the Thing.

All which he proves by several Passages of S. Austin, by the Prayers of the Mass, and other Passages, from which he does still infer, That the Body of Christ in the Eucharist differs from that which was Born of the Virgin, that Suffered, and Rose again from the Dead, yet not in Substance, but in Appearance. Lastly, Directing his Speech to the Emperour, he declares, That he has clearly proved by Places of Scripture, and by the Fathers Writings, that the Bread and Wine which are called the Body and Blood of our Saviour are a Figure, because a Mystery; also, that there's a Difference betwixt the Body of Christ in that Mystery, and that which suffer'd Death and was Buried. That here it is Invisible, not being perceiv'd but by Faith; whereas being unveil'd upon the Cross, it was known, and fully discover'd by the Outward Senses. That the Mystery of the Eucharist is likewise a Figure of the Elect People of God. And Lastly, that the Bread and Wine called, and being in effect the Body and Blood of our Saviour, do represent our Lord's Death and Passion. That from some Expressions of his one ought not to infer, That the Faithful do not receive the Body and Blood of Christ in the Mystery of the Sacrament, because Faith does not receive what the Eye perceives, but what is believed by Faith, and that it is a Spiritual Meat and Drink which feeds our Souls in a Spiritual manner, and yields unto them a Spiritual Life, according to our Saviour's saying, 'Tis the Spirit that quickens, the Flesh profiteth nothing.

Johannes Scotus, as well as Ratramnus, was likewise consulted upon the same Question by Charles the Bald, and Writ a Book on the same Subject; In which he Argued against the same Expressions oppos'd by Ratramnus. But 'tis apparent he went farther than he, delivering such Things as were contrary to the Doctrine of the Church upon the Real Presence. Which Hincmarus charges him with in the 31st Chapter of his Treatise of Predestination; wherein speaking of him and Prudentius, he says, That they set on foot new Tenets, contrary to the Faith of the Church; and amongst others, That the Sacraments of the Altar are not the real Body and Blood of our Saviour, but onely a Commemoration of his Body and Blood. But this cannot be justly attributed to Prudentius, who never was lookt upon to be guilty of any Errour in this Point; but onely to Scotus, whose Book was afterwards quoted by Berengarius, and condemned by the Orthodox. Hincmarus Wrote this in 859, which shews, that the Consultation of Charles about the Eucharist hapned before that year, and serves to fix the Epocha of Ratramnus and Scotus's Book upon this Subject.

Amongst the Authors of the same Century that have but cursorily treated of this Matter, Amalarius, Florus, and Druthmarus speak of it like Ratramnus. But Haimo Bishop of Halberstadt, and Remigius Monks of Auxerre, follow Paschasius's way of speaking, and even go beyond his Bounds, denying, after S. John Damascene, that the Eucharist may be called a Figure of the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

Expressions of other Authors of this Age upon the Eucharist.

About the latter end of this Century, Erigerus Abbot of Lobbes Wrote against the same Proposition which Ratramnus had attempted to overthrow; but still maintaining the Real Presence in the Eucharist. Siebert and the Author who continued the Chronicle of Lobbes, speaking of him, observe, That he had Collected many Passages out of the Orthodox Fathers against Paschasius Radbertus, touching the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Yet 'tis certain, that Erigerus is so far from condescending directly with Paschasius, that he doth in effect excuse him, and defend his Cause by the Authority of several Fathers, declaring, That he onely failed in this, that he did not quote word for word the Passage of S. Ambrose, but gave the Sense onely. He charges him not with Errour, but with Simplicity; and observes, that he did not deny but that there was a Figure in the Eucharist. It appears however, that he favours the Opinion of Ratramnus and Rabanus, and that he does not approve of Paschasius's his Expression, viz. That it is the same Flesh which was Born of the Virgin that is in the Eucharist, being perswaded, that though it is the same, yet it ought to be con-sider'd as different, because 'tis in a different state. And for this reason it is that he makes a Collection of Passages out of the Fathers against Paschasius, wherein mention is made of two or three Bodies of Christ, by reason of the different states of his Body. The same Expressions are moreover to be found in the Sermons of Alfricus Archbishop of Canterbury, who seems to have copied Ratramnus.

This Way of Explaining the Mystery of the Eucharist was so far from being condemn'd in the time of Berengarius, even by his Adversaries, that Lanfrank makes use of it in the Dialogue he made against him. Wherein he owns, that one may say of Christ's Body in the Eucharist, that it is the same which was born of the Virgin, and yet not the same; that it is the same, as to the Substance, Property, and Virtue of its true Nature; and not the same, if we consider the Species of Bread and Wine. After the same manner Algerus does reconcile the Fathers, who seem to differ in their Opinions on this Matter. The Holy Fathers, says he, have observed this Duplicity, not of Substance, but of Form, when speaking of the Body of our Lord in the Eucharist, they say, that it was the same which was born of the Virgin, and in some sense not the same; the same in Substance, and not the same in Form. Fulbertus Bishop of Chartres makes the same Distinction in his Epistle to Einarthus.

[* Many of the Ancient Fathers speak as Paschasius.] It is confessed, that many of the Ancients did use many Hyperbolical Expressions about the Sacrament, much like Paschasius's, but it was to stir up Reverence to their Holy Mysteries, and convince Men that the Elements were not mere Bread and Wine, not dogmatically to assert a Carnal Presence; for in their Doctrinal Discourses about it, they speak only of a Spiritual and Figurative Presence.]

But we ought to observe, that Paschasius's mode of Expression was not new, as his Adversaries affirmed. Witness * many of the Ancient Fathers, who speak in the same manner: As amongst the Greeks, S. Ignatius, Athanasius, Chrysostom, Cyril of Jerusalem, Cyril of Alexandria, the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus, Anastasi Sinaita, S. Gregory of Nice, S. John Damascene; and amongst the Latins, S. Hilary, S. Ambrose, and S. Austin himself in his Discourse to the Neophytes; besides many others, who deliver Propositions equivalent to that of Paschasius. So that Paschasius cannot justly be charged with Innovation, either in the Thing it self, or the Way of expressing it. And his Adversaries seem to have fall'n upon him undeservedly, the more because he rejected the Conclusions they drew from his Expression, and own'd that the Eucharist was both Figure and Reality, and that it contained the Body of Christ under the Veil and Species of the Bread and Wine.

The Question of Stercoranism.

Another famous Question about the Eucharist was started in this Age; viz. Whether any part of the Eucharist be evacuated, as our other Food? They who stood for the Affirmative being called by the odious Name of Stercoranists. To understand clearly the state of this Question, we must remember the Eucharist consists of two Things, one inward and hidden, the other outward and sensible. The first is the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which are present in the Sacrament after an invisible manner; and the other consists of the Species of Bread and Wine, which appear to our outward Senses. None ever did believe that the invisible Body and Blood of Christ was subject to the same Conditions with our other Nourishment, or produced the same Effects. But because the Species of Bread and Wine under which 'tis contained feed our Bodies, we say without any scruple, that the Body and Blood of Christ are converted into our Substance, and feed our Body. This Expression was ever used in the Church. And some Fathers have proved the Resurrection of our Bodies, because it is not to be thought, says S. Irenaeus, that our Flesh being fed with the Body and Blood of our Saviour, should remain for ever in a state of Corruption.

But if the Body of Christ has a nourishing property, 'tis not the Body it self by its own proper Substance; but it is by the outward Signs, the Bread and Wine, which nourish us by the Matter which God hath made as it were a Vehicle to us of the Body and Blood of Christ which in our Faith and Minds took up before the place of the material Bread and Wine. But notwithstanding that the Church has made no scruple to say, that the Body and Blood of our Saviour is converted into our Substance, and nourishes us by the Species of Bread and Wine, it was ever thought indecent even to think, much more to assert, that it was liable to the same Evacuation as our common Food, and that any part of it should go into the Draught. The first that seems to have took notice of this Question is Origen, whose Decision of it is in these Words, that this Food consecrated by Prayers and the Word of God goes down into the Belly, and so into the Draught, as to the Matter it does consist of, meaning the Species of Bread and Wine, not as to what it is made by Prayer. The Author of the Sermon of the Eucharist, which is in the fifth Volume of the Greek and Latin Works of S. Chrysostom, seems to differ in his Opinion. Is that Bread, says he, which you see with your outward Eyes? Is that Wine? Has that food the same fate as other sorts of food? God forbid, and let none of you have such Thoughts of it. This Author seems to affirm, that the Body of our Lord is the very Species that we see; and does formally deny it to be liable to the same Condition with our common Food. S. John Damascene embraces this Opinion in the 14th Chapter of the 4th Book of the Orthodox Faith; adding however, that the outward Species of the Eucharist is converted into our Substance. Paschasius is of the same Opinion, and says 'tis a Weakness to think that any part of this Mystery is under the same Laws with other Food. Frivolum est ergo, says he Chap. 20. sicut in Apocrypho Libro legitur, in hoc mysterio cogitare de Stercore, ne commisceatur in alterius cibi digestionem. And he asserts, that all passes into our Flesh and Substance, without any Evacuation. Ratramnus indeed does own, that the spiritual Body of our Saviour is not under the same condition with other Food, and will not so much as have it said that it feeds our Bodies, seeing it is Food for our Souls. But he affirms, according to his Principles, that the visible and outward Species are under the same Laws with all other Food. This is all that is said by those Authors upon that Question.

But

But Amalarius treats of it on purpose in his Letter to Gontardus a Monk, who took Exception at his spitting presently after his receiving of the Eucharist, supposing he might then spit out some part of our Saviour's Body, the fear of which kept other Priests from spitting at such a time. To which Amalarius answers, that being a phlegmatick Man, he could not long forbear spitting, and that he hoped, that for his Infirmary sake God will not deprive him of the Body of Christ his Saviour as the Nourishment of his Soul, if it be but pure and humble before him, and that what he must needs eject for the Health of his Body, will be no prejudice to his Soul. These are his Words, Et quod excundum est propter Sanitatem Corporis, faciat exire sine dispendio Animæ. To justify himself more at large, he thoroughly handles the Question, and makes this Observation, that the Body of Christ is upon Earth as often as he pleases; that nothing but an ill Disposition of the Mind can make the Body incapable of receiving it; so that tho' any part of Christ's Body should come out of his Mouth, unknown to him, one ought not therefore to think him irreligious, or that he despised the Body of our Saviour, nor think that his Body went to any place where God would not have it; that our Saviour's Body quickens our Souls; or rather, is the Life of our Souls; and therefore we do not take its Life away, tho' we part with it. To conclude, he says, 'Tis needless to enquire, whether our Saviour's Body, after it is received with an upright Intention, be invisibly raised up into Heaven, or kept in our Body till its Burial; whether it be exhaled into the Air, or issues out of the Body with the Blood, or through the Pores, the Lord saying, that whatever comes into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, and from thence into the Draught; but the chief thing that we ought to mind is, that we do not receive it Judas-like, with a treacherous Heart, that we do not slight it, but distinguish it (as we ought) from common Food. Thus Amalarius propounds the Question, without deciding it, and does not declare his Opinion in the Matter.

Amalarius
his Opinion upon the Question of
nism.

Heribaldus Bishop of Auxerre having propounded the same Question to Rabanus Archbishop of Mentz, the Archbishop returned him this Answer; "As to your Question concerning the Eucharist, Whether being consumed and voided out of the Body as other sorts of Food are, it re-assumes the Nature it had before its Consecration upon the Altar? This Question, says he, seems to me superfluous, because our Saviour himself says in the Gospel, That whatever comes into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, and from thence into the Draught. The Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour is made of Things visible and corporeal; but it works Sanctification and the invisible Salvation both of the Body and Soul. There is no ground to think, that what is digested in the Stomach should return into its former state, a Thing avouched by no Man as yet. Here Rabanus supposes, that the Species of Bread and Wine in the Eucharist are under the same Laws and Contingencies with our common Food, and that they do not re-assume their proper Nature which they had before the Consecration. For it is plain, that he does not speak of our Saviour's Body, but of the outward Species of Bread and Wine.

Some Authors that were more scrupulous, fancied this Opinion unsuitable to the Dignity of the Mystery, and that it was more decent to think, either that the Species are annihilated, or that they have a perpetual Being, or else are changed into Flesh and Blood, and not into Humours or Excrements to be voided. 'Tis the Opinion of an anonymous Author, quoted by Erigerus under the Character of a certain Learned Man, whose Work is inserted in the second Volume of Dacherius's Spicilegium. "This Author distinguishes two Things in the Eucharist; viz. the invisible Body of our Saviour, which is spiritual Food to the Soul; and the outward Food, which nourishes the Body: And telling us what becomes of this, he opposes two contrary Places of Scripture; one of our Saviour, teaching us, that whatever goes into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, and thence into the Draught; and the other of the Apostle, that makes a great Difference betwixt the Eucharist and other sorts of Food. The first Place makes no Exception at all of the Sacrament; but the second teaches us to distinguish it from our usual Food. That indeed it is eaten and swallowed down in the same manner as our usual Food, putting it into our Mouths, and conveying it down into the Belly; but when 'tis come thither, none but the Lord knows how he disposes of it. For we know, says he, that it may be consumed by a spiritual Power, that it may be kept for ever from Corruption, because God may do what he pleases with his Sacrament. But God forbid it should be subject to be conveyed into the Draught, or capable of being digested, corrupted or consumed by Heat, or altered by any other Cause, &c.

Erigerus makes a more strong Opposition against the Opinion of Rabanus, and says, 'twas a scandalous Thing for Heribaldus to propose such a Question to him, but more scandalous for Rabanus to have minded it, and most scandalous to have solved it as he has done. He declares himself against him, affirming that the Symbols of Bread and Wine are not voided out of our Bodies, nor changed into useless Humours or Excrements, but into our Flesh and Blood, to be raised again from the Dead.

Guitmondus was of the same Opinion with Erigerus, affirming, That, though a Man may be nourished by the Species of the Eucharist, yet no part of it is turned into Excrements. That they are never putrified, corrupted, or any way altered, whatever they seem to be, either to try the Faith of the Elect, or to punish the Neglect of those who keep 'em too long. That no Vermin can gnaw 'em, no Beast eat them; and, if such a thing happen, the Sacrament is, by Miracle, conveyed to some other place. Now, to obviate this Objection, That if a Priest should Consecrate one great Loaf, or several Loaves, a Man might live upon it, and shall void his Excrements in the usual manner, he declares, that in this case the Sacrament is also miraculously conveyed away, and an Unconsecrated Loaf substituted in the room of it by the Angels, or by the Evil Spirits, to cheat the Hereticks, Heresicks. Agemas speaks much to the same purpose, and holds, That the Species do not come out of our Bodies by Excrements, but are annihilated. He says, I am sure, that Excrements are not made of the Species eaten, and will not allow 'em to be converted or partially, burnt, or mixed in the least, though they seem to be. Lastly, He joins the thing with an Eloquent Reason. That the Eucharist is liable to the same Laws and Contingencies with other sorts of Food, because they say, That the Fast ordained by the Church is broken by the Communion; and calls on therefore by the Infamous Name of Stercorranism. Which Heresy is got from Cardinal Beaulieu, who lays the same Thing to the charge of Nicetas Paphlagon. But he builds upon him that Opinion, as a consequence of his Assertion, that the Fast was broken by the Eucharist, and not as a Doctrine formally asserted by him. The Truth is, there is nothing of that in the Writings of Nicetas, who blaming the Latins for Celebrating the Mass in Lent upon other days than Sunday and Sunday, says, Their Practice is not well-timed, because Celebrating the Mass at the Third Hour, which is the time appointed to Offer this Sacrifice, they cannot keep the Fast till the Ninth Hour. Afterwards he quotes some Canons, to prove the Unreasonableness of this Custom, and censure the Practice of the Greeks, who Offer this Sacrifice on Saturdays and Sundays only at the Third Hour, and Communicate on other days at the Ninth Hour, upon the Probability of Fasting. So that Nicetas does not say positively, That the Fast is broken by the Eucharist, and, though he would say so, it would not follow, that he believed it subject to the same Laws and Contingencies as our usual Food, for that one might believe, that to ease one from the trouble of Fasting, and feed the Body in any manner of way, is not factum to break the Fast, which is not the Thing intimated on by Nicetas, or the Greeks. Who believed, the Celebration of the Sacrifice broke the Fast, for that it is an Action full of Joy and Solemnity. This is the Reason given for it by Basilius, upon the Fourth Canon of the Council of Laudicea. "To offer, says he, the Sacrifice, is to Celebrate a Feast, and express the Solemn Joy of the Church; and to do this, is not to weep or fast. Besides, Nicetas does suppose, that presently after the Celebration of the Mass it is lawful to eat, and consequently that the Latins having finished in the Morning that Celebration of the Mass, broke the Fast presently after. In which particular he errs; for the Latins did not Celebrate Mass in Lent at the Third Hour, but in the Evening, and so broke their Fast but late. However, neither Nicetas nor the Greeks did ever say, That the Body and Blood of Christ were under the same Laws as common Food; nay, 'tis probable, they did not believe, that the Species of Bread and Wine went into the Draught, this great Doctor S. Paulinus Damaſcene having taught the contrary. As for Agemas, he accused them of Stercorranism, only upon the Credit of Hilary, whose words he does but Transcribe. And Hilary charges Nicetas with it by a Consequence that has failed, and which does not necessarily follow. It does not appear, that there has been, since that time, any further Contest with them upon this Point; and amongst the Errors which the Latins afterwards condemned in Michael Cerularius, there is no mention made of this. Therefore this Error can by no means be proved upon the Greeks.

The State of the Question among the Latins.

Now, to come back to the Latins, we have sufficiently proved, that there was no difference amongst them about the Flesh and Blood of our Saviour contained under the Species, that none was so much Instructed as to think, that that Mystical Flesh and Blood were subject to the same Laws and Contingencies with our usual Food; but that they had debated amongst them this Scholastical Question, What becomes of the Species of Bread and Wine? and that many of them being of Opinion, That it was Indecent to conceive, that they were subject to the same Laws and Contingencies with our common Food, would not have it thought, that any part of it were converted into Excrements, or voided out of the Body, and therefore conceived that they were either Annihilated, or Converted into the Substance of our Flesh, so be Raised again from the Dead. This Opinion, which had the Vogue in this and the following Centuries, has been since rejected by our Schoolmen, who doubt not but that the Species of the Eucharist may be corrupted and converted into another Substance, God by his Infinite Power producing another * Matter in stead of that which is [* Another Matter.] What a many Transubstantiations must follow upon the first Forgery. Converted into the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

Transubstantiation on the Altar creates another in the Belly, lest Christ's Body should be subject to Indecent Evacuations. So necessary it is to fall into many Absurdities to maintain one usual Error.]

[To what is said in Page 73. Palschius is of the same Opinion, and says, 'Tis a weakness to think, that any part of this Mystery is under the same Laws with other Food, this Note the Author hath added at the end of the Book, viz. This is not without difficulty, for Palschius says well. Privatum est ergo, sicut in Apocrypha libro legitur, in hoc mysterio cogitare de stercore. But this will bear two Interpretations; That it is a frivolous opinion to believe, That the Essential part of the Eucharist passes or returns; or, It is a frivolous question to trouble our selves about, whether it passes or not: since we need not to fear its mingling with other Aliments. I rather think that Palschius is of the latter opinion; for though he Asserts, That the Eucharist nourishes our Body, he does not intend that we should, by that word, understand a Carnal Nourishment of our Bodies, but a Spiritual Nourishment of our Souls. See the inner Passage in Palschius's Treatise, Chap. 20. and the 71 Page of this Work.]

C H A P. VIII.

The History of the Controversie about the Manner in which the Virgin Mary brought forth Christ.

Paschasius and Ratrammus had another Controversie about the Manner in which our Saviour came out of the Virgin's Womb. Ratrammus being informed, There were some in Germany that maintained, Our Saviour did not come out of the Virgin's Womb per virginis juniam vulve, sed menstruose de secreto ventris incerto tramite; he thought such an Opinion dangerous, conceiving it followed from thence, that Christ was not truly Born, but Issued from the Virgin, quod non est nasci, sed erumpi. He therefore oppos'd it in a small Treatise, [Entitled, De partu Virginis] published by Father Dacherius, in the Second Volume of his Spicilegium; wherein he owns it as an undoubted Truth, That Mary lived all her lifetime a Virgin, ante partum, in partu, & post partum; but confutes those who believed, That our Saviour came not into the World per Semitam Vulve, but some other Way. He brings in against them several Places of Scripture, and Passages of the Fathers, which prove, That Christ came out of the Virgins Womb; yet he owns withall, that he came out per Vulvam clausam, as he came into the Place where his Disciples were met, through the Door, and not through the Wall, yet without opening the Door.

Paschasius Ratbertus, who had been Abbot of Corbey, and who was then but one of the Private Monks (as appears by the Title he assumes in his Epistle Dedicatory) thinking that Ratrammus, heretofore his Monk, but who perhaps had, before this, quitted that Abbey, had deliver'd, in his Treatise, such Things as seem'd prejudicial to the perpetual Virginity of Mary; and that he had dispos'd Men to believe, That she had brought forth our Saviour into the World in the same manner as other Women bring forth Children, aperta scilicet Vulva; did put out a Book of our Saviour's Birth against that of Ratrammus, wherein he Confutes him, without Naming of him, and charges him with the foresaid Error; rejecting withal that Error of Ratrammus his Adversaries, quod Christus non fuisset natus. Therein he chiefly answers to S. Ambrose and St. Jerom's Passages, which might breed some Difficulty. This Book is Dedicated to the Abbesss and Nuns of Soissons. And whereas he calls the Abbesss Matrona Christi, that gives us to understand, it was Theodrada, and not Emma that succeeded in 846, because, as is observ'd by Father Mabillon, that Title was onely betow'd upon Abbesss that had lived in a Married state.

This Answer of Paschasius proving Ineffectual with the Followers of Ratrammus his Opinion, so as to convince them of their Error, who affirm'd on the contrary, That they had done no injury to the perpetual Virginity of Mary; He Wrote another Book upon the same Subject, of which we have but a Fragment left. These are the two Treatises published by Feu-ardentius, * under the Name of Ildephonius of Toledo, which Father Dacherius has restored to their true Author upon the credit of several Manuscripts, and caus'd them to be Printed in the 12th Volume of his Spicilegium.

Ratrammus had another Controversie with a Monk of the same Abbey of Corbey, who had assert-ed, That all Men were of one Substance, and had but one Soul. This Opinion was ground-ed upon a place of S. Austin's Treatise, Of the Quantity of the Soul; but he held it immediately from one Macarius, the † Scot, i. e. an Irish-man. Ratrammus sent him a Letter, to make him quit that Opinion. But this Monk, in his Answer, persisting still in the same, Odo, Bishop of Beauvais, who had been Abbot of Corbey, order'd Ratrammus to Confute that Monk's Book, which he did; and made it appear, in Writing, to Odo, that Macarius his Opinion was unwarrantable. This Treatise has not yet appear'd in Print: but Father Mabillon, from whom we have this Information, saw it in a Manuscript of the Monastery of S. Eligius near Noyon.

1101. with them, and gave that Countrey the Name, as the Two most Learned Prelates, Dr. Usher, and Lloyd, have fully proved, in their Books de Prim. p. 734. and an Hist. Account, &c. p. 7.

* By Feu-ardentius.] The first Treatise of Paschasius is the second Treatise of Ildephonius, beginning with these words, Quamvis omnium Ecclesiarum Virginitas, &c. But from Page the 35, where these words are in the Margent, hic aliquid desideratur, you must go to Page the 42d, Line 13, where the Remainder of this Treatise is found; though Feu-ardentius has published it as another Discourse. This second Treatise of Paschasius is the Sermon which begins Page 47.

Inter Sancturum, &c. The end of the first Treatise may be part of this; being of the same Style, upon the same Subject, and likewise Dedicated to the Nuns. But the other Sermons attributed to Ildephonius, upon the Assumption, the Nativity and Purification of the Blessed Virgin, belong to another Author of later date than Paschasius, being either of the Twelfth, or the Thirteenth Century.

A Judgment upon Ratramnus.

Ratramnus had yet another Controversie about the Expression of Trina Deitas, and Writ a Book against Hincmarus, to justify it; which Book is lost. Lastly, He attempted to Confute the Objections of the Greeks against the Latin Church; his Treatise upon this Subject is yet extant, and we shall speak of it in its proper place. He lived till towards the latter end of this Century, and got himself such a Name, that there was no Question debated in his Time, but Ratramnus was desired to Write upon it.

The Fortune of Ratramnus his Book; concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

His Book of the Body and Blood of our Saviour was Printed the first time at Colen, in 1532. under the Name of Bertramus; and afterwards at Basil in 1550. They that were employed in the Censure of Books, in Execution of a Decree of the Council of Trent, did put it amongst the Prohibited Books. Afterward Sixtus Senensis, Despensens, and Genebrardus Santonensis, lookt upon it as a Book forged by Oecolampadius. Pope Clement the VIII. did likewise reject it as an Heretical Book; wherein he was followed by Bellarmino, Quirogo, Sandaval, and Alanus. Yet notwithstanding, the Divines of Louvain making, in the year 1671, an Index Expurgatorius for Flanders, did not absolutely Prohibit it, but onely till it were Corrected. This Opinion was followed by Possévin, and some others. Cardinal Perron did not think it spurious, though he was no Friend to the Doctrine of it. In 1657. Monsieur de Marca laboured very hard to make it pass for Scotus his Book, in the Letter annexed to the Second Volume of the Spicilegium: Which, in process of time, became a common Opinion, defended by Father Paris, in his Dissertation at the end of the First Part of his Book of Perpetuity, &c. Yet it does not appear, that the Author of this Book was altogether of that Opinion, or that he offer'd to decide who was the Author of that Treatise. But he made a Discourse upon that Author's Opinion; wherein he plainly shews, that he did not directly oppose the Real Presence; though at the same time he owns, there are some Passages apt to make one believe, that he was no Favourer of it. Father Paris his Opinion in this case soon became the most prevalent amongst the Roman Catholics, whilst the Protestants maintain'd firmly, that that Book was Ratramnus's. But in 1680, Father Mabillon did clearly convince the Roman Catholics of their Prejudice in this case, by proving in his Preface to the Second Volume of the Fourth Age of Benedictine Writers, that the Book was Ratramnus's; and defended withall his Doctrine as Orthodox. Which Book was afterwards (viz. Anno 1672.) Printed at Paris, according to the Manuscript of Lobbes, with a Translation into French, by a Doctor of the Sorbon, who Writ the History of the Fortune of this Book, and defended its Doctrine in his Preface. Father Mabillon having thus both by streßs of Argument, and the Authority of the Manuscripts by him quoted, reclaimed the best part of the Roman Communion from their Mistaken Opinion of Monsieur de Marca, and Father Paris, yet Father Hardouin stood it out against him; and in his Book of the Sacrament of the Altar, Printed in 1689, endeavour'd to prove, he had a Design of destroying the Real Presence. The Protestants took care to have this little Book of Ratramnus, at divers times, Printed and Translated. There are extant some old Translations of it, Printed in 1558, and 1560; and a New one, published in 1653. [But the Best of these is that which was Printed at London 1686, with an Excellent Preface, vindicating Bertram from all Popish Objections, with much Reason and Learning.]

The Editions of the other Books of Ratramnus.

The other Treatises of Ratramnus have not been so well known, nor so often publish'd, and have not appear'd in publick before this Century. His two Books concerning Predestination were Printed in the Collection made by Father Manguin of the Authors of the Ninth Century, upon Grace, published in 1650. [Tom. I. p. 29. and are since put in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. XV.] and his two other Works, viz. That of our Saviour's Birth of the Virgin Mary, and the Four Books against the Greeks, were put out by Father Dacherius. That of our Saviour's Birth, in the Fourth Tome of his Spicilegium, which came out Anno 1655; and the Four Books against the Greeks, in the Second Tome of the same Collection, Printed in 1657.

Johannes Scotus Erigena.

Johannes (a) Surnamed Scotus, or Erigena, from Ireland his Native Countrey, had likewise a great share in the Contests about the Eucharist and Grace. He came into France about the beginning of the Reign of Charles the Bald (b.) And being a Man of Parts and Learning, a good Peripatetick, and well skilled in the Greek Language, which few People were then well acquainted with in these Parts, (c) he got himself a good Fame, and was accord-

(a) Surnamed Scotus, or Erigena, from Ireland his Countrey.] All the Ancients assure us, that this Author was a Scot. Hincmarus speaking of him, L. 1. de Prædest. c. 31. has these words, Auctor jactatur à multis Joannes Scotigena. Anastasius the Library-keeper, Joannem imò Scotigenam. And Pope Nicholas, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, Quidam ut Joannes genere Scotus. The other Authors of that Time that Wrote against him, call him John Scot, or simply Scot. And 'tis well known, that in those Times Ireland, not Scotland, was called by the Name of Scotia. Trithemius gives him the Name of Erigena, or Eringena, which imports the same with Scot; Ireland, in the Language of his Country, being called Eri, or Erin.

(b) He came into France in the beginning of the Reign of Charles the Bald.] In 851. he had already raised his Reputation so high, that he was consulted about the Question of Predestination, as we have already observed; which is an Argument, that he was come hither before that Time, that is, about the beginning of Charles his Reign. But 'tis not likely that he did not come with Alcuinus to Found the University of Paris, or that he was a Disciple of Beda, as some Authors have pretended, because he died not till about the year 870.

(c) He became in a little time very eminent.] Pope Nicholas says of him, That he was a noted Man in the University of Paris. These are his words, Au certe Parisiis in Studio cujus jam olim capital fuisse perhibetur. Certain it is, that Charles had a singular esteem for him, by whom he was Consulted about the Question of the Eucharist; as he was by Hincmarus and Pardulus, about the Doctrine of Predestination, &c.

dngly regarded by the King, who had a particular respect for Learned Men. But, having introduced some Errors, for which he was Cited by Pope Nicholas I. who Writ to Charles the Bald to send him to Rome, or to expel him from the University of Paris, in which he made a good Figure, he took a dislike to France, and (d) withdrew into England about the year 864, where he died (e) about the year 874. (f) He seems not to be the same with Johannes Scotus Abbot of Etheling, who was Grimbaldu's his Companion, and Master to Alfred.

One of the Principal Works of Johannes Scotus Erigena, was his Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Which Book is lost, makes it were that which bears the Name of Ramus, the Improbability whereof we have sufficiently proved. In that Treatise he asserted, that concerning the Sacraments of the Altar were not the real Body and Blood of Christ, but onely a Remembrance of both. This Doctrine he did not fully explain. But, if we may give credit to Asselin, and Blood that was the Drift of it. The Book was Dedicated to Charles the Bald, who had commanded him to Write on this Subject. And Berengarius quoted this Author, as one that had Taught the Doctrine he had stood for, wherein his Adversaries did not contradict him. But they condemned the Book of John Scot, as containing Berengarius's Error; and it was attainted for that Reason by the Synods of Vercelli, Paris and Rome, by which means it might come to be lost. It was Written against by Aldrevaldus, a Monk of the Abbey of Fleury, who mustered against it a Collection of Passages out of the Fathers, inserted into the 12th Volume of the Spicilegium.

John Scot Writ moreover two Books about Predestination; Five Books of Natures, or about the Division of Natures, and a Book of Vision. We have already spoken of his Books of Pre-
The Books of Natures by John Scot;

(d) Withdrew (or Flew) into England.] Quare & Hæreticus putatus est, says Simeon Dunelmensis, cujus Opinionis particeps fuisse dignoscitur Nicolaus Papa, qui ait in Epistola ad Carolum, Relatum est Apostolatu nostro, &c. Propter hanc ergo Infamiam tadtut eum Francie, &c. Matthew of Westminster, and William of Malmesbury speak much to the same purpose. Pope Nicholas I. being dead in 868. if Scot was forced by his Letter to return into England, he must have gone thither towards the year 864; which however does not agree with the Testimony of those Authors, who affirm, That he was called thither by King Alfred, who did not begin to addict himself to Learning till after the year 880, and that he was Companion to Grimbaldu's, who quitted France not till after that year; it appearing by a Charter, that he was yet residing in his Abbey, Anno 880.

(e) About the year 874.] Anastasius the Library Keeper, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, dated the 10th of the Calends of April, Anno 875. speaks of him, as of a dead Man. Which is another Argument against those Mens Opinion, who make this Scotus a Tutor to King Alfred, and Companion to Grimbaldu's. What Death he died, is a Thing very uncertain. The forementioned Historians, and many others, say, That he suffer'd Martyrdom, and that he was slain by Children, that Stabbed him to Death with Pen-knives. But William of Malmesbury, the first who related this Story, which was convey'd from him to the rest, speaks dubiously of it. 'Tis true, he relates certain Verses, made in honour of John the Sophister, Written upon a Monument of Malmesbury-Church, where it is said, That he died a Martyr; but there is no certainty, whether that John the Sophister be the Person we speak of, or another Man. But this is certain, that neither Berengarius, nor his Scholars, who have so much magnified John Scot, never contended for his Martyrdom: Nor does it appear, that those Authors who were Contemporary with him, or that Writ soon after his Death, did ever give him the Title of a Martyr. 'Tis possible, the Abbot of Etheling's Death, who was Stabbed by some Assassins imploy'd by his Monks, might be apply'd to John Scot; so that, by disguising the Story in some measure, he might be supposed to be the Man who was with Pen-knives Stabbed by Scholars. And, by dating his Martyrdom on the 4th of the Ides of November, the day on which another John Scot, a Bishop, was killed, Anno 1060, three distinct Johns will be blended into one, with the Epithet of Sophista proper to our Scot; that of Martyr proper to the Abbot of Etheling, and the Day of the Bishop's Death. However we Read in the Book of English-Martyrs, and also in a Roman Martyrology Printed at Antwerp in 1586, these Words, Eodem Die (speaking of the Fourth Day of the Ides of November) Sancti Joannis Scoti, qui Graphiis Puerorum confossus Martyrii Coronam adeptus est. But there's no such Thing to be found in all the other Roman Martyrologies. The Reason why I date not his Death before the year 874, is, because in some Greek and Latin Verses, Written upon an Ancient Glossary, bearing the Name of John at the head of it, he speaks of Pope John, who was not raised to the Papal See till towards the end of the year 872. And if those Verses be his, 'tis like he was then come back into France.

(f) He seems not to be the same with Johannes Scotus Abbot of Etheling.] The Reasons which induce me to believe, that our John Scot was not the Abbot of Etheling, are these: First, That the Abbot of Etheling was an East-Saxon, a Saxon of Germany, or at least of Essex, and John Scot an Irish-man. Secondly, The first was called into England by Alfred, and came thither with Grimbaldu's after the year 880; whereas John Scot withdrew from France into England upon a Disgust, and died before the year 875. Thirdly, The Abbot of Etheling was both Priest and Monk, which we do not read any where of John Scot; and he was himself so far from owning it, that he calls himself only Serous, or extremus Servorum, or extremus Sophia Studentium. But 'tis certain that he lived at Court, as appears by the Epistle sent him by Pardulus, and by his Preface to the Book of Predestination. Fourthly, The Abbot of Etheling was slain by some Assassins in his Abbey-Church towards the year 895. being then a strong Man, and one that could defend himself, as Asserus avers it, who relates his Death, and says, That he stood in his own Defence, quod bellicosa Artis non expers esset; whereas our Scot was dead long before: but put the case he had lived till then, he could not then be a strong Man, or able to make any Defence. Fifthly, William of Malmesbury makes a Distinction of those two Johns; but he mistakes in his Supposition, that they were both called into England by Alfred. Asserus, a Contemporary Author, makes mention but of one Scot called into England by Alfred, destination. The Five Books of Natures are Written by way of Dialogue, and in the same Style, that is, after a Scholastick abstruse manner. The Natures he divides into four Kinds, one that creates, and is uncreated; another that creates, and is created; a third that does not create, and is created; and a fourth which neither creates, nor is created. In the three first Books he treats of the three first Kinds of Nature; and in the fourth and fifth he explains the Return of the created Natures into the Nature uncreated. In the Second Book he handles the Controversie betwixt the Greek and Latin Churches, about the Procession of the Holy Ghost. He tells us, That God has created in his Son, from all Eternity, the Promogential Causes of all Things, the Goodness by himself, Essence by himself, &c. That the World was Created after Man had sinned; and that, if Man and Angels had not sinned, God would have created no Sensible and Material World. He asserts, That our Saviour's Manhood was perfectly changed into his Godhead, after his Resurrection. That the Malice and Punishments of the Infernal Spirits shall cease one day, and come to a period. That, after their Fall, they were clothed with Aereal Bodies. That the Damned shall enjoy all Natural Comforts. That all Creatures whatsoever shall be at last Transformed into the Humane Nature. That our Bodies shall be turned into our Souls at the Day of Resurrection. And lastly, That all Things shall be converted into their Primogential Causes, and return into God. So that, as before the World was Created, there was no Being but God, and the Causes of all Things in God; so after the end of the World, there will be no Being but God, and the Causes of all Things in Him.

These Books, which are in Manuscript in the Library of S. Germain des Prez, were Printed at Oxford in 1681. The Book of Vision doth still remain a Manuscript. Father Mabillon has found one in a Monastery near S. Omar; and says, That John Scot Argues in that Book about the very same Question which is debated in the 30th Letter of Lopus Abbot of Ferrara.

Joh. Scot's Translations.

John Scot Translated into Latin the Works Fathered upon S. Denys, the Translation whereof he Dedicated to Charles the Bald. Pope Nicholas I. Writ to that Prince about it, and desired it of him. Anastasius the Library-Keeper having perused it, found he had followed his Author too close, and that he had not taken a sufficient care to shun Obscurity. This Work, with Anastasius his Letter, is in a Manuscript of the Library of the Jesuits-Colledge at Bourges [and part of it has been Printed with S. Denys his Works, at Colen, in 1536.] Scot has also Translated some Comments of Maximus upon the Books of St. Denys; and his Translation of Maximus his Comments upon S. Gregory Nazianzen was Printed at Oxford in 1681. Trithemius makes mention of a Commentary upon St. Matthew's Gospel, and of a Book of Offices composed by John Scot.

What we have hitherto said of John Scot, is a sufficient Proof, that he had some Tincture of Learning, and that he was skilled in Logicks and Metaphysics. But it is plain on the other side, that he had a Thwarting Disposition, that he was but a weak Arguer, and a sorry Divine.

Paschasius his Works.

To Conclude, what relates to the Subject Matter of this and the foregoing Chapter; all we have to do is, to speak of the Works of Paschasius Ratbertus, upon which we have been hitherto silent.

He attempted a Commentary upon St. Matthew's Gospel, when he was yet a Monk, that is, before the year 844. being chosen Abbot, the Duties of his Place made him discontinue it. Yet he began the Fifth Book, where he had left off, and proceeded as far as the Ninth, while he was yet Abbot. Having eased himself from the Burden of that Station, he went on with the rest more undisturbed. However he suspended it yet a while, his Time being taken up with other Works. And then it was he Writ a Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy, and an Explication of the 44th Psalm. But he took in hand the Eleventh Book again, at the latter end of his Life, so that the Letter to Fridegardus was not Written by Paschasius till about that Time.

Paschasius his Commentary upon St. Matthew's Gospel is very large. In it having explained the General Sense of every particular Place, he makes long Moral Reflexions, taken, for the most part, out of the Works of the Holy Fathers. The first four Books are Dedicated to Gontlandus a Monk of S. Riquier; and the last, to the whole Body of Monks in that Abbey.

the 45th.

The Explication of the * 44th Psalm is Dedicated to the Nuns of our Lady of Soissons, in Acknowledgment of the Benefits he had received from them. The same is divided into Three Parts. The first is upon the Title of the Psalm, as in the Septuagint, For the Beloved; and in the Hebrew, For the Lilies, or, For the Flowers. Whence he takes occasion to enlarge upon the Praise of Virgins. In the Second Part, he Expounds that part of this Psalm, which exalts the Beauty of the Bridegroom, and applies it to Christ. In the Third, he applies to the Church what is there said of the Bride. To expound the Letter, he makes use of the Commentary attributed to St. Jerom; often comparing together the Hebrew Text, Symmachus his Version, and that of the Septuagint.

His Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy is much more Allegorical than the former. Here you will find Mysteries upon the Hebrew Characters, the Use of which is onely for Distinction. 'Tis a tedious Work, divided into Five Books, and Dedicated to a Monk called Odilmanus Severus. Therein he deplores the Vices and Licentiousness of his Age; as, amongst others, Simony, the Covetousness of several Priests, the Corrupt Lives both of the Regular and Secular Clergy, who minded too much the Concerns of this World, the Usurpation of Church-Lands, and Grinding of the Poor. With Grief does he mention likewise, in the Fourth Book, an Invasion made by Pirates, who had committed great Depredations to the very Gates of Paris. Which ought to be understood of the Normans, who, in the year 856, or 857. burnt the Church of S. Germain in the Fields,

These are Paschasius his Works, which have been collected and published by Father Sirmondus, and Printed at Paris in 1618. Since which time Father Ducherius has published in the 12th Volume of his Spicilegium a Treatise of our Saviour's Nativity, Dedicated to Theodrada, Abbess of the Abbey of our Lady of Soissons, who died in 846. In which he asserts, That our Saviour coming into the World, came out of the Virgins Womb, by penetrating her Substance, and without any Opening.

To Conclude, Father Mabillon has put out two Books of Paschasius, containing the Life of S. Wala, Abbot of Corbey. The first he composed when he was a Monk, towards the year 856; And the second, after the Decease of his Friend Severus, about the year 859. By this we learn several Particulars of the unjust Deposing of Lewis, Surnamed the Godly, and the State of the Church of France. The Life of Adelardus is also attributed to him.

Paschasius was a Man of great Piety and Learning. He Writes in a clear, neat and elegant Style. He was well-read both in Ecclesiastick and Prophane Authors. He had withall pretty good Parts of his own; onely it may be said perhaps, that he was a little too Myrtical. His Book upon the Eucharist is an accurate and elaborate Piece. His Encomium was made in Verse by Eugemoldus, and is to be seen in the beginning of his Works. He died upon S. Riquier's Day, towards the year 860.

CH A P. IX.

The History of the Contest betwixt Photius and Ignatius, about the Patriarchal See of Constantinople.

Ignatius was Son of Michael Curopalata the Emperour, Surnamed Rengabis, and of Procopia, Daughter of Nicephorus the Emperour. Michael, who succeeded his Father-in-Law, Anno 811. had not sat full two years upon the Throne, when he was forced to resign the Empire into the hands of Leo the Armenian. He had Three Sons, Theophilactus, Stauratius, and Nicetas. The first two he had admitted to Govern with him; but Stauratius happened to die, before he had quitted the Empire. Theophilactus was shaven, and turned, with his Father, into a Monastery, and so was Nicetas, his youngest Brother, then but Fourteen years of Age. Theophilactus, upon his coming into the Monastery, had his Name changed into Eustratus; and Nicetas, into that of Ignatius, the Prince we now speak of. Leo the Armenian, being resolved to secure unto himself the Empire he had got by Treachery, Banished Michael, his Wife and Children, and sent them into several Islands, parting them from one another, and keeping them under a strict Guard; and his Two Children he made Incapable of Raising Issue to the Family, to which the Imperial Crown did of Right belong. He declared against the Use of Images, and turned Nicephorus the Patriarch out of his See of Constantinople, to make room for Theodosius, an Enemy of Images. Leo having quietly enjoy'd the Empire some Months above Seven years, was slain by Michael, Surnamed Balbus, or the Stammerer, who raised to the See of Constantinople, after the Death of Theodosius, Anthony, Surnamed Byrsodepsa, who was Metropolitan of Perga. Theophilus, Son of Michael the Stammerer, succeeded his Father, Anno 819. and raised John Iconomachus to the See of Constantinople, in the room of Anthony. At last Theophilus dying in the year 841. the Government fell into the hands of Theodora, as the Guardian of Michael, Son to Theophilus. This Prince expelled John from his See of Constantinople, and caused Methodius to be Ordained again, who was Four years possessed of that See. After his Death, Ignatius, who, till that time, had lived a Monastick Life in the Isles of Hiatres, and Terebinthus, by him Peopled with Monks, was raised to that Dignity in 847. He had been ordained Priest by Basil, Bishop of Persea. At that time there was a Brother of Theodorus, Uncle to Michael, called Bardas, who had a great share in the Government. This Man was desperately in Love with his Daughter-in-Law, with whom he held a secret Commerce. Ignatius offended at so great a Lewdness, Rebuked him for it, with a freedom suitable to his Character. And observing Bardas still persisting in his Wicked Course, he refused to give him the Sacrament upon the Twelfth-day. Bardas, a Mighty Man, and of a Cruel Temper, Incensed at his Refusal, took his time to break out into an open Resentment of it. Not long after this, designing to rid himself of Theodora, who shared the Empire with him, he perswaded Michael, That it was time for him to Reign by himself; and advised him to send away his Mother and Sisters into some Monastery. The Emperour, following his Advice, commanded the Patriarch to see that Business done, who refused to obey that Order. Which Refusal made way for Bardas to Accuse him as an Abettor of the Rebellion of a certain Person, who pretended to be a Son of Theodora by another Husband. Michael, in the mean time, caused his own Mother and Sisters to be shaven, and shut up into a Nunnery; afterwards turns out Ignatius, and Banishes him into the Isle of Terebinthus, requiring him several times to Resign; but although he could not obtain it from him, yet he put Photius in his place.

Ignatius

Photius his Character. This Photius was descended from a Noble Family of Constantinople, and Nephew of Tarasius the Patriarch. He was raised to the Chief Dignities of the Empire, being made Principal Secretary of State, Captain of the Guards, and Senator. He was both a refined Statesman, and a Person of profound Learning. So great a Grammarian he was, and so well-versed in Poetry, Philosophy, Physick, and other Sciences; and (as the Author of the Life of the holy Patriarch Ignatius observes it) so great a Master of Eloquence, that he might pass, without contradiction, for the greatest Man of his Age in point of Learning, and might even be compared with the Ancients. In short, he had all the Parts requisite for an able Man; a happy Genius agreeable to a Studious Life, and a good Estate to get him a good Library of Books; but, above all, so great a desire to raise his Reputation, that it made him pass whole Nights in the course of his Studies: And, whereas he aimed at the Patriarchal Dignity, he diligently apply'd himself to the Reading of such Ecclesiastical Writings as might fit him for it.

Photius his Ordination. He was yet but a Layman, when he was chosen Patriarch. But, that he might be, as it were, Gradually raised to that Dignity, he was made Monk the first Day, Reader the next, and the following days Sub-Deacon, Deacon and Priest. So that in the space of six days, he attained to that Dignity, which fell out on Christmas-Day, Anno 858. He was Ordained by Gregory Asbestas, formerly Bishop of Syracuse, but Degraded at Rome, whereupon he withdrew into Constantinople. Ignatius, unwilling that he should assist at his Ordination, had forewarned him not to appear in the Ceremony, and signify'd unto him his desire, that his Affair should be examined, and Judgment pass'd upon it, before he held any Correspondence with him. Which Gregory being much offended at, he, from that time, declared himself Ignatius his Enemy, and Separated from the Church, with Peter Bishop of Sardis, Eulampius of Apamea, and some other of the Clergy. Whom therefore Ignatius the Patriarch cited before him, and caused to be Excommunicated. They Writ against him to the Pope, who required of Ignatius, that he would send some Person to Rome to give him a full Information of that Affair. Ignatius did accordingly send one Lazarus; and the Point being duly examined by the Direction of Pope Benedictus, the next Successor to Leo, Ignatius his Sentence was approved of by the Holy See. The Schism however continued during the Eleven years Ignatius was in the Bishoprick of Constantinople, who could not reduce Gregory, nor those of his Party, to their Duty; because he had so great an Interest amongst the Grandees, and with Photius in particular.

Ignatius Expelled and Deposed. The Metropolitans, subject to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople, acknowledged Photius; but they extorted from him a Promise in Writing, that he should respect Ignatius as his Father, and should by no means persecute him. Yet, notwithstanding this Promise, Two Months after Photius was raised to that See; Ignatius his Friends were secured, and himself accused of a Conspiracy against the Government. He brought an Information against him, and removing him from the Isle of Terebinthus, whither he had withdrawn himself, he was convey'd to another Island called Hiera, from thence to Bernera, and afterwards to Numera, where he was very ill used, bound with Chains and cast into Prison. From thence he was carried to Mitylene; and, whilst he was there, Photius having called a Council together, Pronounced his Deposition, and an Anathema against his Person.

Pope Nicholas his Letter upon the Ordination of Photius. Photius having thus secured himself in his Patriarchal Dignity, was not fully satisfied; but being desirous to get this Sentence Confirmed by the Bishop of Rome, sent two Bishops to Pope Nicholas. Whom he pray'd to send two Legates to Constantinople, to re-establish the Church-Discipline, and utterly extirpate the residue of the Sect that oppos'd Image-worship, being resolv'd to compell them to approve of Ignatius his Deposition. For he did not formally desire of the Pope the Approbation of it, but he gave him to understand, that Ignatius had voluntarily quitted the Patriarchal See, by reason of his Age and Craziness, and had withdrawn himself into a Monastery belonging to a certain Island, and that he was in great esteem both with the Princes and People. Upon this Request, Pope Nicholas sent two Bishops to Constantinople, viz. Zachary and Radoaldus, with the Character of Legates a latere, with full power to Regulate the Business of the Iconoclasts, and to Inform themselves so far onely of Ignatius his Deposition, as to make the Report thereof to the Holy See. At the same time he Writ both to Michael the Emperour, and to Photius himself, about the Deposition of Ignatius. In his Letter to the Emperour, he expresses his Dislike, that Ignatius had been Deposed without consulting the Holy See about it, and that a Lay-man was put into his Place, contrary to the Canons of the Church, and the Decrees of the Popes. He therefore declares to him, That he cannot give his Assent to Photius his Ordination, before he is fully informed by his Legates of the whole Matter of Fact; That he desired, Ignatius should be Cited before them and the Council, to ask him the Reason, Why he left his Flock; and to inquire whether his Deposition was made Canonically; And that, when he should have a True Account of Things, he would decide the Matter by an Apostolick Decree, according to the true Merit of the Cause. Next, he recommends the Worship of the Images of Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and Saints, proving the Lawfulness of it by the Tradition of the Church, and some Instances out of the Old Testament. To which he adds, That as Altars are Sanctify'd by Benediction, and as the Bread, after Consecration, is, in reality, the Body of Christ, and the Wine becomes his Blood; so the Wood, whereof a Cross is made, is but common Wood, before 'tis brought into the Form of a Cross; but when it has once receiv'd that Form, it becomes Holy, and the Horreur of Devils, by reason of our Saviour's Figure upon it. He exhorts the Emperour, to restore to the Pope the Authority he formerly had, by his Vicar the Bishop of Thessalonica, over the old and new Epirus, over Illyria, Macedon, Thessaly, Achaia, the Two Dacia's, Mosia, Dardania, and Prevalitania. And, to assert it as his Right, he sent to the Emperor some Letters of his Predecessors. He farther requires the Restitution of the Papal Patrimonies in Calabria and Sicily; and that the Arch-bishop of Syracuse might be Ordained by the Holy See. Lastly, He tells him, that he sends him, as Legates, Radoaldus Bishop of Porto, and Zachary of Agnania; whom he desires him to receive with a Respect suitable to their Character; to give them frequent and favourable Audiences, to give Credit to their Informations; not to suffer 'em to be ill-intreated, and to send them back under a safe Guard. These are, in short, the Contents of Pope Nicholas his Letter to the Emperor. That to Photius is shorter; wherein he expressed, how joyful he was to understand by his Letters the Steadfastness of his Faith, but that he was grieved on the other side, to see such Violations made of the Canons of the Church, in the Business of his Promotion, being, as it were, all at once raised from a Layman, to the Dignity of a Patriarch; wherein he had transgressed the Canons, and the Decrees of the Popes, so that he could not Approve of his Ordination, before he were fully informed by his Legates he had sent to Constantinople of his Morals, Conduct, and Affection to the Doctrine of the Church; And that, when he should be fully satisfy'd about it, he would Honour him according to his Station, and give him real Proofs of his Brotherly Love. These Two Letters, dated Septem. 25th. 860. being this Pope's second and third Letters, were given to his Legates, upon their departure for Constantinople.

Whilst an Answer was expecting from Rome, Ignatius was Re-manded to the Isle of Terebinthus, where he suffer'd much from the Emperor's Officers, and by an In-road the Scythians made into it, who Plunder'd the Island and all the Monasteries; so that he was constrained to withdraw himself into a private House at Constantinople.

The Pope's Two Legates being come to Constantinople, the Emperor called a Council thither in 861. which consisted of 318. Bishops, the Pope's Legates assisting at it. Ignatius was Cited to appear at this Council by the Commissioners, to Answer to the Charge exhibited against him. He demanded of those Officers that came to Cite him, Whether he must appear in a Bishop, Priest, or Monk's Habit? They being startled at it, could give him no Answer, But that he should hear from them about it the next day; when they came back to him, and Cited him a second time, in the Names of Zachary and Radoaldus the Pope's Legates, to appear before the Synod in the Habit which he thought in his Conscience most proper for him. Upon which he put on his Patriarchal Vestments, and Marched forth, attended by Bishops, Clerks, Monks, and a world of People, towards the Church, wherein the Assembly was. Being come over against S. Gregory's Church, at a place where a great Cross stood upon a Marble-Pillar, in the middle of the Street, a Noble Man, sent by the Emperor, came to tell him, That if he did not appear in a plain Monk's Habit, 'twould go near to cost him his Life. Laurentius the Priest, and the two Stephens, did likewise forewarn him, not to come in his Pontifical Habit. Ignatius forced to obey, was dragged alone into the Synod, Habited like a Monk. He was no sooner come in, but the Emperor fell upon him with Opprobrious and Virulent Language; but after a while, being a little cooler, he commanded him to sit down on a Wooden Bench. He begged leave to Salute Radoaldus and Zachary, which was granted him. He asked them who they were, and what their Commission was? To which they Answer'd, That they were Legates from Pope Nicholas, to take Cognizance of his Affair. He farther Asked them, Whether they had any Letter from His Holiness for him? They Answered, They had none: supposing they had not to do with a Patriarch, but with a Man Deposed in a Provincial Synod. Then he charged them to Expel the Adulterer, who had, by Force, possessed himself of his See; declaring withall, that, If they had not Power to do it, they had none to be his Judges. They Answer'd, That they had Power from the Emperor to be Judges in his Affair. Whereupon Ignatius was pressed by the Courtiers to make his Resignation, by which the Metropolitans were awed that solicited his Restauration. Thus was the first Day spent in Heats and Contests, so that the Assembly was Adjourned to another Day. Mean while Ignatius was pressed very hard to a Resignation, which he would never yield unto. Being cited again to appear before the Council, he Answer'd, He would not appear, and that he would never own for his Judges Men that appeared so visibly prepossessed against him; who were so far from expelling Photius, that they did daily eat at his Table, and to whom he had sent Presents before their Arrival. That he Appealed to the Pope, and was willing to submit himself to his Judgment. Those who stood for him required the same Thing. To make out the Justice of his Demand, he alledged Imocent's Letter to Chrysostom, and the Canon of the Council of Sardinia, touching the Review of the Bishop's Causes. Which notwithstanding, being pressed to appear in the Council, he urged, That those who had caused him to be Summoned thither did not understand the Canons, nor the Practice of the Church, that a Bishop must be Cited by two Bishops, not (as he was) by two Persons, one a Lay-man, the other a Deacon. But his Arguments not being able to prevail against Violence, he was forced into the Council; wherein appeared against him several Witnesses, Deposing, That his Ordination was Invalid, because he was Chosen by Favour: He rejected those Witnesses, as produced by the Emperor; adding, That if he were not Arch-bishop, the Emperor was no Emperor, nor any of those Bishops truly so, for that they had been all Consecrated by him. He said further, That Photius being an Adulterer, was no Member of the Church; and that he could not set himself up to Rule, and Feed Christ's Flock. First, Because he was one of those that were Condemned and Excommunicated. Secondly, Because, of a Lay-man he was made a Patriarch so suddenly.

The Council of Constantinople against Ignatius.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Because he owed his Ordination to an Excommunicated and Deposed Bishop. Fourthly, Because having given a Promise in Writing, That he would never molest him, he had broken his Oath within 40 days after his Intrusion. To which no Answer was given: but, in stead of it he was pressed again to Resign, which he constantly refused. So that the Assembly broke up this second time, as the first, re infecta. In the following Sessions, the Emperour caused no less than 72 Witnesses to be heard; who Deposed, That he was not raised to the Patriarchal See according to the Canons; but, with much Bribery, and by the Emperour's Favour. Whereupon was Read the Thirteenth of the Apostle's Canons, which Ordains, That if any one becomes a Bishop by the Secular Power, he ought to be Deposed. In fine, after a long deliberation, the Council Pronounced his Deposition; and bringing him before them, his Pontifical Habit was put on, and he was presently Devested of the same.

Image-worship was another Thing debated in, and Confirmed by this Council; The Acts whereof were accordingly divided into two Parts, one about Images, and the other about Ignatius his Deposition. Therefore perhaps the Greeks call it, The First and Second Synod; or, if we rather give credit to Zonaras, and Balsamon, 'twas because the Resolutions taken at the first Sessions being not set down in Writing, by reason of some Troubles, another Sitting was appointed, in which the Determinations of both were reduced into Writing. These two Authors give us an account of XVII. Canons made in this Assembly.

The Canons
of the Council of

The First is, To prevent an Abuse in the Foundation of Monasteries. For many of the Founders retained the Property thereof, and disposed of Monasteries as of their other Estates. To prevent which disorder, 'tis ordained by this Canon, That no Monastery shall be erected, but with the Bishop's Advice and Consent, who is to Consecrate it; That an Inventory shall be made of the Situation, and Appurtenances of the Monastery, and all that belongs to it, which shall be kept in the Archives of the Bishoprick; And that it shall not be lawful for the Founder to make himself Superiour of it, or to make any other that he thinks fit, without the Bishop's Concurrence.

The Second Canon is levelled against those who put on a Monk's Habit, without observing the Rules and Constitutions of a Monastick Life. To redress which Grievance, 'tis ordained by this Canon, That a Monk shall do nothing but by the Superiour's Direction, to whose Rules he is subject, and in whose Monastery he shall be bound to live.

The Third enjoyns the Superiours to make an Inquiry after such Monks as have left their Monasteries, and to shut them up again.

The Fourth prohibits the Monks to quit their Monasteries, either to retire themselves into Secular Houses, or to change Monasteries; leaving the Bishops a full Power to Remove them, if they think it necessary.

The Fifth imports, That the Monks Habit shall be given onely to such as have been proved Three Years, except in case of Diseases, which may allow of a shorter Time; or when such as are admitted, have formerly led a kind of Monastick Life in the World, it is sufficient, in this case, to keep them in the State of Novices Six Months.

The Sixth Canon declares, That Monks ought to have nothing of their own; that, before they turn Monks, they may freely dispose of their Estates; but after they are entered, the Monastery has the sole and intire Property of all they have, and they are disabled from using, or disposing of it as their own. That in case it be discovered, that any of them has retained an Inheritance to his own proper use, it ought to be Sold, and the Money given to the Poor. All which Regulations extend, by Act of the Council, not onely to Monks, but in like manner to Nuns.

The Seventh forbids all Bishops to Found Monasteries at the Charge of their Dioceses. Which was to prevent the Ruin of Bishopricks, the Bishops in those Times being apt to bestow all their Cares and the Incomes of their Bishopricks, upon Erecting and Founding of Monasteries.

The Eighth is against such as voluntarily assumed to themselves the Office of Bishop, or caused themselves to be made such, without an Urgent Necessity, as in case of Disease. And such it Condemns to be Deposed, if Clergymen; and if Laymen, to be Excommunicated.

The Ninth is against those who strike and abuse others.

The Tenth ordains, That those shall be Deposed who shall take upon them to convert into Prophane Uses, Vessels, or Sacred Vestments, made use of at the Altar.

The Eleventh forbids all Clergymen to take upon them Secular Impleys, or Offices.

The Twelfth forbids to Celebrate, or Administer the Sacraments in private Chappels, without the Bishop's Consent.

The Thirteenth prohibits all inferiour Clergymen to separate from their Bishop, before he be Tried and Condemned by his Judges.

The Fourteenth contains the same Prohibition to Bishops; in relation to their Metropolitan.

By the Fifteenth the same Thing is ordered to be observed, in relation to the Patriarch; except in case of Heresie, if the Patriarch do publicly Teach it. In which case those that forsake his Communion, before the Judgment of the Synod, ought not onely not to be Deposed, but are worthy of Praise for so doing. Which ought to be understood of a manifest and condemned Heresie.

The Sixteenth enjoyns, That no Bishop shall be Ordained in a Church, the Bishop whereof is still living, unless he has voluntarily Resigned his Bishoprick, or has been Deposed in Due Form. But, if a Bishop do forsake his Flock, and absents himself Six Months from his his Church, without a lawful occasion, he ought to be Deposed, and another put in his place.

The Seventeenth forbids to raise a Lay-man or a Monk immediately to the Episcopal Dignity.

These are the Canons said to be made by this Council. The first appear to have been made Indirectly against Ignatius; but the two last do plainly condemn the Conduct of Photius. Which might suggest a belief, that they were made by another Synod; but that 'tis usual with Men to appear most severe against those Disorders they themselves have been guilty of.

Photius was not satisfy'd in Deposing Ignatius, and stripping him unhandſomly of his Sacerdotal Habit; but to extort a Resignation from him, he caus'd him to be shut up in a close narrow Prison, where he received very ill usage. And there he was forced to make a Cross over a Writing, the Contents of which were, That he own'd himself unworthy of being a Bishop, and that he had not been duly raised to the Patriarchal Dignity, but with Bribing and Favour; and that he was not the Lawful Possessor of it, but an Usurper. This Signature being thus extorted from him, he was left undisturbed in the Palace of Pose. Mean while he drew a Petition, by way of Appeal, to the Pope; wherein having represented his Case to His Holiness, as it is related here, he begs of him that he will Commiserate him, and lend him his helping Hand, in Imitation of his Predecessors Fabian, Julius, Innocent, Leo, and all those that have laboured for the Propagation of the Faith and Truth.

The Persecution of Ignatius.

But Ignatius his Adversaries, not contented with his forced Resignation, perswaded the Emperor, That it was fit he should Publickly Read it himself in the Church, and Anathematize himself. In order to which, upon a Whitſunday, his House was beset with Guards. Which Ignatius perceiving, made his Escape in a Country-man's habit, with Baskets, and got over into the Islands, where he absconded, shifting frequently his Habitation, for fear of being discover'd. In August following there hapned an Earthquake at Constantinople, which the People attributed to the Persecution of Ignatius. For which reason, the Princes were forced to Promise, That he should no more be molested, nor any harm done him for having concealed himself, or to any Person or Persons that had concealed him. Which Promise being made publick, Ignatius discovered himself, and was sent back into his Monastery, there to live in quiet. Whereupon the Earthquake ceased, and the Bulgarians were converted.

Zachary and Radoaldus being returned to Rome, declared onely to the Pope, by word of Mouth, that Ignatius had been Deposed, and Photius Raised in his stead to the See of Constantinople, but concealed from him the share they had in it.

Two days after came an Ambassador, named Leo, from the Emperour, with two Volumes, containing the Acts of the Council at Constantinople; one concerning Ignatius his Deposition, and the other about Images. He also brought a Letter from the Emperour to the Pope, wherein he desired his Assent, under his own hand, to the Deposition of Ignatius, and the Promotion of Photius. At the same time a Monk, by Name Theognostus, came to Rome from Ignatius in a Layman's habit, who informed the Pope of what had passed. The Pope, far from doing what the Emperour desired of him, Wrote immediately a Letter to all the Patriarchs, wherein he declared his Dislike of Ignatius his Deposition, and Photius his Intrusion. He Wrote likewise to Michael the Emperour, that he would never yield his Consent to the Deposition of Ignatius, nor the Ordination of Photius. And, whereas, to justify this last, Nectarius and S. Ambrose were alledged as two Presidents, being made of Lay-men Bishops; he makes it out, that they had a particular Calling, and that they had not been Ordained to thrust a Bishop out of his See. He answers farther to the same Instances, and that of Tarasius, in the Letter he Writ at the same time to Photius, that it is for the good of the Church, through Necessity, or by a particular Inspiration of God, that the Laws of the Church have been dispensed with upon such Occasions; but that none of those Reasons could take place in his Ordination. He complains, that Photius refuses to own or observe the Popes Decretals, because they condemn his Ordination. He does acknowledge, that some Churches may have particular Customs different from those of Rome. But he maintains withall, that this Way of Ordaining a Lay-man Bishop, contrary to the Canons, and the General Laws of the Church, ought not to be tolerated. His farther Complaints are, That his Legates were not used with that Respect he expected; that they had been detained a long time without the freedom of speaking to any one, and that they had been forced by Threats to consent to the Deposition of Ignatius, and the Intrusion of Photius. These three Letters are under the same Date, viz. March 18th, 862.

Pope Nicholas his Letters upon the Deposition of Ignatius.

The Pope having sent them to Constantinople, and other parts of the World, a Council was called by His Holiness at Rome, in order to have this Business thoroughly examined. The Pope knew not at first how much his own Legates had contributed to the Deposition of Ignatius, and thought they had been forced to it. But, hearing that they had been corrupted by Photius, and that they themselves had Deposed Ignatius, and owned Photius, he thought himself bound, for the Vindication and Honour of the Holy See, to call this Synod. Radoaldus did not appear, but Zachary did; who being convicted to have had a hand in the Deposition of Ignatius, and to have acknowledged Photius as the Lawful Patriarch, he was Deposed and Excommunicated. He afterwards did acknowledge his Fault, declaring, That he had acted contrary to the Orders he had received from the Holy See, by Consenting to the Deposition of Ignatius. Radoaldus being absent, his Condemnation was put off till another time.

A Council held at Rome upon the Ordination of Photius.

This Council did also take into their Consideration the Difference betwixt Ignatius and Photius, and Confirmed Image-Worship, as may be seen by the Six Articles inserted into the Seventh Letter of Pope Nicholas.

The First declares, That Photius being of a Lay-man Ordained a Patriarch by Gregory of Syracuse, for having Invaded the See of Constantinople, and thrust out Ignatius the Lawful Possessor thereof; for having held Communion with Persons Excommunicated by the Holy See; having Corrupted the Pope's Legates; having Banished and Persecuted the Bishops who would not acknowledge him, is therefore degraded from his Sacerdotal Office, and all Orders Ecclesiastical, by the Authority of God, of the Princes of the Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, of all the Saints, of the Six General Councils, and by the Judgment of the Holy Ghost; And if, after this Judgment, he continues in possession of that See, he is Excommunicated, with all such as shall Abett him, or hold Communion with him.

The Second contains the like Sentence of Deposition against Gregory of Syracuse, and a Communion against him, if he continues to raise Troubles against Ignatius; and such as hold Communion with him are hereby declared Excommunicated.

In the Third Article, All such as Photius has promoted to his Orders, and have held Communion with him, after his Instruction, are declared to have been unlawfully Ordained, and their Orders to be void accordingly.

The Fourth enjoyns the Restauration of Ignatius, though he never was truly Deposed, nor justly Condemned or Degraded; and declares, that all Persons that shall hinder him from assuming again his Sacerdotal Habit, from performing the Duties of his Place, or from the peaceable enjoyment of his See, shall be Deposed and Excommunicated.

The Fifth enjoyns, That all Persons Exiled upon this account, be Restored to their several Stations; and Declares, all that shall obstruct it to be Excommunicated.

The Sixth confirms what had been Decreed by the Popes touching the Images of Jesus Christ, the Holy Virgin, and the Saints; and pronounces an Anathema against John of Constantinople and his Followers, who Taught, That they ought to be broken, and trampled under our feet.

To these Six Articles, Pope Nicholas adds two Decisions, made in a former Synod, against those who held, That our Saviour's Godhead had suffered upon the Cross. By the first it is determined, that our Saviour indeed suffered in his Flesh, but that his Godhead remained Impassible. And by the Second pronounces an Anathema against those who shall say, That our Saviour suffered in his Godhead.

Radoaldus, whose Judgment was put off, being returned into Italy from France, the Pope sent some Bishops, to summon him to appear at the Synod. But he concealed himself so well, that they could find him no where. Anno 863. he came suddenly into Rome, where he combined for some time with the Pope's Enemies; but durst not stay till the Synod sat, which was put off by reason of the Troubles. He fled from Rome, spoiled his Church, and took Sanctuary in another Diocese. But in the Year 864. he was Deposed and Excommunicated in the Synod which then sat, with Threats of Anathema, if he held Communion with Photius.

Pope Nicholas his Letter to Michael the Emperour.

Michael the Emperour having received the Pope's Letter, sent him a very sharp Answer, expressing his Discontent. To which the Pope made a long Reply, Consuting Article by Article, what the Emperour had Written. Who complaining as if he had been ill-used by the Holy See, tho' since the Sixth Council, no Emperour of the Greeks had honoured the Holy See so much as he had: The Pope makes him this Return, That he has not Abused him in any manner, but onely Warned and Rebuked him, as Bishops ought to doe; and that, if his Predecessors did not bear the Honour that was due to the Holy See, 'twas because most of them were Hereticks, when those that were good Catholics had always a Veneration and Respect for the Holy See. The Emperour, speaking of the Legates, he desired the Pope to send him, had used the Word to Command. Which hard Expression the Pope could not digest, and therefore brought in several Instances of Emperours, who Writing to the Popes, had used the words to Pray, or to Desire; and says, That in the Letter sent him by Michael, he himself had used the word to earnestly Intreat, Obsecramus. Nor does he pass by the Epithet of Barbarous, given by the Emperour to the Latin Tongue; but tells him very seriously, That he ought to have spoken better of a Language made by God himself, made use of in the Inscription of the Cross, and in which God is worshipped amongst the Latins. To which he adds, That he who glories in being the Emperour of the Romans, should not despise the Roman Tongue. The Emperour had signify'd in his Letter, That he had not required the Legates to be Judges a second time in the Cause of Ignatius. And the Pope makes him this Return, That the Event is a Proof, that was his Design; that, for his part, he had given them no Power but to get an Information of the Matter, and make him the Report thereof, but not to give Judgment in the Case. That those who had Condemned Ignatius, were his Enemies, or Excommunicate, Persons either Suspected, or Accused, and so could not be his Judges; and that they were all Inferiours to him, having consequently no Power to Sit upon, much less to Depose him. Upon which last Head he does much enlarge, endeavouring to prove by Instances, as well as by the Authority of the Popes and Councils, that the Patriarchs of Constantinople can be brought to no Judgment but the Pope's. He maintains, That the Emperour could not call a Synod, and much less bring his Officers thither.

The Emperour had sent him word, That the Council by which Ignatius was Deposed, was as Numerous as the Nicene Council. To which the Pope Answers; That it is not the Number, but the the Merit and Worth of the Bishops assembled in Council, which ought to be regarded; That no Patriarch was present at this, and all the Bishops were Suffragans of Constantinople; That the Small Number ought to be no prejudice, provided they act from a Pious Principle; and a great Number availeth nothing, if Ungodliness be at the bottom of their Proceedings. That on the contrary, the greater the Number of the Wicked is, the more easily they may compass their wicked Designs. The Emperour had Writ, That he desired Legates onely upon the account of Images. And the Pope makes him this Return, That he made it onely his Pretence, and that his Aim was to make use of them against Ignatius. But he declines an Answer to what the Emperour had Alleged against the Privileges of Rome, and contents himself to say, That they are Divine and Perpetual; That they may be Assaulted, but not Overthrown; That they were not granted by Councils, but owned and respected. The Emperour had demanded of him Theognostus, and some other Monks of Ignatius's his Party, who had taken Sanctuary at Rome. But the Pope refused to deliver them up. He affirms and proves, by the Example of S. Athanasius, and the Testimony of Pope Julius, that he had a Power to Cite both Photius and Ignatius to Rome, and to be Judge of their Difference. Yet he is willing, if they cannot come in Person, to receive their Deputies. He wishes that Photius should send him, on his part, the Bishop of Syracuse, with others left to his Choice; and names the Deputies that shall appear in behalf of Ignatius. He consents that the Emperour shall send thither Officers from him, and says, The Business shall be Judged at Rome by his Council.

In another Letter Written to the same Emperour, Nov. 13. 866. and sent him by Legates, he exhorts him to yield to his Reasons. He gives him an account, how Zachary and Radoaldus were Deposed, for having exceeded their Power, in Condemning Ignatius. He complains, That the first Letter he had Written had been Counterfeited, and makes it appear, that the Council held against Ignatius had not proceeded in a Legal Manner; and that he should have been Reinstated before his Cause was Judged. He requires from the Emperour, that he would cause that Injurious Letter he had sent him, to be Burnt, and threatens with Excommunication the Inditers of it.

At the same time he sent to the Clergy of Constantinople an Account in Writing of what had passed at Rome about the Concern of Photius and Ignatius; Photius in particular he charges with several Things, in a Letter directed to him. In another to Prince Bardas he expresses the Dissatisfaction he lies under, to see those Hopes frustrated which he had entertained of him; and advises him to Recollect himself, and to protect Ignatius. Whom he informs on the other side of what he had done for him; and comforts him in his Condition. Theodora the Empress he praises in another Letter, exhorting her to Patience, and assuring her that he would do his utmost to restore Ignatius. He intreats Eudoxia to protect him, and desires the same of the Senators of Constantinople. Thus you have the substance of the Sixteen first Letters of Pope Nicholas, collected by himself, and sent into all Parts, to inform the whole World of this Affair, and of his Conduct in it.

But whilst Pope Nicholas laboured hard to Reinstat Ignatius in his See, Photius and Bardas were no less active and industrious to bring him to a fatal end. Photius suborned a Man, and caused him to be Intercepted with two Counterfeit Letters; one to the Pope, subscribed by Ignatius, and the other under the Pope's Name to Photius. Whence he took occasion to Impeach Ignatius for keeping Correspondence in the West, and Writing thither against the Emperour. Whereupon Ignatius was Apprehended, who remained in Custody, till the Letter-bearer was manifestly proved to be an Ill Man, and an Impostor. After this he had some Respit; till Bardas, frightened by a Dream, in which he saw the Patriarch imploring the Pope's Assistance against him, kept him under so strict a Guard, that he could not so much as say Mass, or speak to any Man. At last Bardas was slain, in April, Anno 866. by the Emperour's Order, who set up Basilus Caesar in his place the 26th following, being Whitsunday.

Photius, resolved to be revenged of the Pope, exasperated as much as in him lay, the Emperour against him, and perswaded him to call a Council, in order to Condemn the Pope, as the Pope had Condemned him. He Summoned to Constantinople all the Bishops of his Patriarchate, and set up others, who pretended themselves to be sent as Deputies from the other Patriarchs. Pope Nicholas was Accused before this Council, his Deposition pronounced, and his Person Excommunicated. This done, Photius solicited the Emperour Lewis King of Italy, and the Princess Engelberg, to declare themselves against the Pope, promising to procure him the Imperial Crown of the East, should they but Expel that Pope from his See. The Acts of this Council he sent into the West by Zachary. But, soon after this, Michael the Emperour was slain by Basilus his Order, who thereupon was Declared Emperour, Sept. 23d, 867.

The first Thing Basilus did, after he had settled himself upon the Throne, was the Expulsion of Ignatius, Photius, and Reinstaturation of Ignatius. He sent Orders for Zachary to Return, banished Photius Re-instated into a Monastery, sent for Ignatius to Constantinople, and Reinstated him in his See, Novemb. 23d, 867.

This is Observable in the Life of this Patriarch, that he came now into his Church, whilst the Priest Offering the Sacrifice, was Singing these Words in the Quire, Giving Thanks unto the Lord. Ignatius being in Possession of his See, Excommunicated presently Photius, those that had been Ordained by him, all his Followers, and such as held Communion with him. He likewise begged of the Emperour, that he would Summon a General Council, to remedy those Evils the Church did lie under. And several Deputies were immediately dispatched to the Pope at Rome; John,

Other Letters of Pope Nicholas upon the Affair of Ignatius.

Ill Treatment made to Ignatius.

The Council of Photius against the Pope.

John, Bishop of Pergos, from Ignatius; Peter of Sardis from Photius; and an Officer, Named Basilus, from the Emperour. Peter of Sardis perished by a Ship-wrack, in the Gulf of Dalmatia; the other two had better luck, and came safe to Rome. Where they found Pope Nicholas dead, and Adrian raised into his Place, who received them very graciously. They shewed him the Acts of the Councils held by Photius against Ignatius, and Pope Nicholas I. Adrian called a Synod, which Condemned them to be Burnt, and Excommunicated Photius a second time. Next he presented to them two Bishops, by Name Donatus and Stephen, for his Legates, to Act in his Name in the Council to be held at Constantinople.

The Council of Constantinople, being the VIII. General Council.

This Council was Summoned by Basilus the Emperour in the Third year of his Reign, and the Second of that of Constantine Ind. 3. Anno 869. of the Common Account. They met in the Church of S. Sophia, on the right side, where the Catechumeni were commonly instructed. In the midst of the Assembly were placed the Holy Gospels, with a Cross. It began the Fifth of October, and ended the last day of February following. During which time they had Ten distinct Sessions. As to the Number of Bishops assisting thereat, it vary'd very much. At first it consisted onely of the Pope's Legates, viz. Donatus Bishop of Ostia, Stephen Bishop of Nepi, and Marinus a Deacon, Thomas Arch-bishop of Tyre representing the Patriarch of Jerusalem, and Ignatius Patriarch of Constantinople. With them did 12 Bishops sit, by their Order, who had firmly adhered to Ignatius his Cause and Interest. In the Second Session they admitted Ten Bishops, who begged Pardon for having sided with Photius. The Third consisted onely of 23 Bishops, and the Fourth of 21. In the Fifth there was Two Metropolitans, to wit, of Ephesus and Cyzicus, who had not been in the former; but on the other side some of the Bishops that had been in the former, did not appear in this. The Sixth consisted of Thirty seven Bishops, their Number increasing as the Bishops that had stood for Photius came in and subscribed a Writing, whereby they rejected him, and owned Ignatius. The next Two were not more numerous. But the Ninth, at which Joseph was present, as Deputy from the Patriarch of Alexandria, was composed of above 60 Bishops; and the last of above 100, who all subscribed to the Decisions of the Council. At all their Sittings there were Senators, Noblemen, and Officers of the Emperour, with Babanes at the head of them, who spoke to the Bishops in the Name of all. The Emperour was there in Person at the Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Sessions. Constantine came thither with him at the Ninth, at which were present also Anastasius the Library-Keeper, and Eberard, as Ambassadors from Lewis Emperour of Italy, besides Two Ambassadors from the King of Bulgaria. Almost all the Bishops were of Asia, Thracia and Greece.

The first time they sat was October the 5th. The Pope's Legates, Ignatius Patriarch of Constantinople, a Deputy from the Patriarch of Jerusalem, Thomas, Metropolitan of Tyre representing the Patriarch of Antioch, that See being then Vacant; and the Noblemen being met, they sent for the Bishops in, who had been persecuted for the Cause of Ignatius, being 12 in Number, viz. Five Metropolitans of Greece, and Seven Bishops, who accordingly took their places in the Council. Then Babanes, the Chief of the Noblemen, Read aloud the Emperour's Exhortation to the Council; wherein he declared, That having purposed to put an end to the Differences that troubled the Peace of the Church, he had sent for Legates from the Bishop of Rome, and Deputies from the other Patriarchs, to hold an Oecumenical Council; that he exhorted the Bishops to come with a Spirit of Peace, and to seek out Remedies for the present Evils. Whereupon Babanes, turning to the Pope's Legates, desired them, in the Bishop's Name, to declare unto them whence they came, and what Power they had. They answered, That it was never done before in any Synod, to examine the Power of the Pope's Legates. To which Babanes reply'd, That what he did was not for want of Respect to the Holy Apostolick See; but because the late Legates Radoaldus and Zachary had deceived them, by abusing their Power. This Reason being allowed of, they presented the Pope's Letter to the Emperour; which was Read in Latin by Marinus the Deacon, one of the Legates, and turned into Greek by Damian a Clergy-man, the Emperour's Interpreter. In this Letter Adrian, having Congratulated Basilus, concerning his Elevation to the Imperial Throne, Commends his Design of restoring Peace to the Church, and his Application to the Holy See to find out a Remedy for the Evils the Church of Constantinople did lie under: He approves of what he had done in the behalf of Ignatius, and against Photius; and returns him his Thanks for his proceeding in that Matter, according to the Judgment of the Holy See, and the Modern Bishops. As to those Bishops, and other Persons, that had Troubled the Peace of the Church, and continued to hold Communion with Photius, after his Condemnation, he says, They ought to be differently used according to the difference of their Faults, which he leaves to the Judgment of his Legates and Ignatius. And, whereas the Emperour had desired, they should not be proceeded against to the utmost rigour; He tells the Emperour, That he is very much concerned at it, because not onely by the Judgment of Nicholas his Predecessor, which he has Subscribed to, but also by the Laws of the Church, they ought to be most severely Punished, without any hopes of their Restauration. However, for Peace-sake, and to save a great many Men, his Opinion was, That Moderation might be used, and some favour may be shewed them, as has been practised on the like occasions by the Popes his Predecessors, of which he gives some particular Instances. That therefore he desires the Meeting of a Council, wherein his Legates shall preside; who, upon their knowledge of the Persons and their Faults, may be competent Judges thereof. That a Declaration of Abhorrency shall be made against the Council held against the Holy See, and all the Acts thereof shall be Burnt.

He likewise exhorts the Emperour to make all the Bishops subscribe to the Decrees made in the Synod of Rome against Photius, and for Ignatius. In conclusion, he prays him to send him back four Monks, fled from Italy into Constantinople; and recommends unto him his Legates, together with John Bishop of Silea, Ignatius his Deputy, and Basilus his Envoy. He prays him to excuse their long Tarrying, as being none of their Fault; for he could not possibly dispatch them sooner, having upon him the Care of so many Churches.

This Letter being Read, the Deputies of the other Patriarchs were likewise desired to read their Letters, that Information might be had both of their Qualities and Power. Elias, Deputy of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, said, They could not be ignorant who they were, and that they might know it by the Emperour's Exhortation; However, to satisfy the Desire of the Assembly, he declared, That Thomas Bishop of Tyre represented the Patriarch of Antioch, during the Vacancy of that See, being the first Metropolitan of that Patriarchate, and consequently had no occasion to bring Recommendatory Letters; and that he spoke for him, because he could not speak Greek without some difficulty. As for himself, that he had a Letter from Theodosius his Patriarch to Ignatius, which had been already read, and might be read again. The Contents of which Letter were, That he durst not before Write unto him, or send any body to him, for fear of incurring the Suspicion and Persecution of the Prince of the Saracens, whom Jerusalem was then subject to, and who treated the Christians with a great deal of Humanity, suffering them to Build Churches, and to have a Free Exercise of their Religion, without any Violence or Hardship put upon them; but, that having receiv'd his Orders to Write to him, he sends him Elias to Represent his Person, a Man of Eminent Parts, able to give a sound Judgment of Things under debate; that the Prince of the Saracens appointed Thomas Bishop of Tyre to bear him Company; and that he desires him to obtain from the Emperour the Liberty of some Saracens who were his Prisoners, whereby the Saracens Anger might be appeased, who otherwise threatned the Christians.

Then was Read the Paper sent by the Pope to be Subscribed by all the Bishops, containing an Excommunication of all Hereticks, particularly of Photius, and all the Opposers of Image-worship, with a general Approbation of all the Proceedings against Photius, and Gregory Bishop of Syracuse, by the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, a Condemnation of all that had been done by Photius against the Holy See; and lastly, an Acknowledgment of Ignatius as the Lawful Patriarch. This Form was approved of by all the Bishops, and the Deputies from the East. Thomas and Elias said, They agreed to it, and desired to hear it Read. The like Form was drawn up at Constantinople, before the Legates came thither, and contained Six Articles. In the first, they acknowledge Ignatius as the Lawful Patriarch. In the second they declare, That all the Bishops who had stood by Ignatius, and therefore Deposed by Photius, ought to be restored to their respective Sees. In the third, they give it, as their Opinion, That all Priests, or other Clerks Ordained by Methodius, or Photius, who joyned with Photius, and are returned into the Church since his Expulsion, may be admitted and restored, after they have performed such Penances as shall be laid upon them. In the fourth, they declare Photius Degraded from his Sacerdotal Office, and incapable of Restauration, and do farther Anathematize him, in case he do not submit to the Pope's and their Judgment. In the fifth, they declare Gregory, Bishop of Syracuse, Condemned and Deposed, and all that have been Ordained by Photius unworthy of the Sacerdotal Office. In the last, They recommend the Execution of these Things, declaring they have, in all Points, conformed themselves to the Judgment of Pope Nicholas, and Excommunicating all Persons that do not submit to His and their Judgment. Which Articles were approved of by the Pope's Legates, and the whole assembly in General. Whereupon the Pope's Legates, and the Deputies from the Patriarchs of the East, being Asked by the Commissioners, Why they had Condemned Photius in his absence; They gave their Reasons why they refused either to see or hear him, together with the Reasons which had induced them to own Ignatius, whom all the Patriarchal Churches had acknowledged to be the Right Patriarch. This done, the Session concluded with Acclamations for the Emperour, the Empress, and the Patriarchs.

In the Second Session, the Pope's Legates, Thomas of Tyre, Elias the Deputy from Jerusalem, and the Twelve Bishops that had firmly adhered to Ignatius, being met with the Emperour's Commissioners, Paul, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Constantinople, said, That the Bishops that had stood for Photius Pray'd to be Admitted. Which being granted, they declared, That they had been Ordained by Methodius, or by Ignatius; acknowledged their Error in siding with Photius, Begged Pardon for the same, and presented a Petition, the substance whereof is as followeth. That having been drawn in by the Artifices of Photius, or prevailed upon by the fear of Persecution, and the Punishments he had threatned them with, and inflicted upon Ignatius his Friends, they had been forced to own and support him; that they Acknowledged their Fault, and begged pardon for it; protesting, They should never adhere to Photius, or any of his party, as long as they should continue in their Obstinacy. This Petition of theirs being presented, the Pope's Legates declared, That they received them. The Form was read unto them; who, having approved of, and subscribed unto it, their Petition being laid upon the Gospel and the Cross, they presented it to Ignatius the Patriarch, who restored unto them their Pontifical Habit, and then they took their places in the Council. Though the number of the Bishops be not expressly mention'd, yet Ten of them are named in this Session.

The Priests Ordained by Methodius and Ignatius, who had sided with Photius, were likewise admitted; who, having presented a Petition to the same purpose as the former, and subscribed to the Form, were also restored. The same was done with the Deacons, Sub-Deacons, and other Clerks, these Penances being inflicted upon them all. That they that eat Flesh, should forbear it, together with Eggs and Cheese; and they that eat no Flesh, should abstain from Eggs, Cheese, and Fish, on Wednesdays and Fridays, and eat nothing but Pulse with Oyl, and a little Wine; to fall upon their knees Fifty times a day; to say a Hundred times Kyrie eleeson, My God, I have sinned, forgive my sin, O Lord; to repeat the Sixth, Thirty sixth, and Fiftieth Psalms, until Christmas-day; and to forbear, till that day, all Sacerdotal Function. Thus ended this Session, with the usual Acclamations.

In the Third Session, which was held on the 11th of October, the Pope's Legates, the Deputies from the East, the Commissioners, and 23 Bishops being met together, the Arch-bishops of Ancyra and Nice, who had been Ordained by Ignatius and Methodius, and had favoured Photius, were Summoned to subscribe unto the Form, in order to be Restored. But they declared, That having sufficiently suffered for having formerly Subscribed, whether to good or ill purpose, they were resolved to Subscribe onely to the Profession of Faith they had Subscribed unto when they were Ordained, and pray'd the Council to be satisfy'd with their Resolution. After this, the Emperour's Letter to Pope Nicholas was read, wherein he signify'd unto him the Deposing of Photius, and intreated him to let him know, how he should deal with those who had espoused his Quarrel, or had been Ordained by him, expressing his desire, That they should be pardoned who came in first to Acknowledge their Fault. He gave him notice withall, that he sent Deputies from Ignatius and Photius, with Basilus one of his Gentlemen-Ushers, that he may order Things in their Presence as he shall think most expedient, or send them back with Commissioners from him, that he may know his clear Intention.

This Letter was followed by another from Ignatius to the same Pope; In which, having Exrolled the Holy Apostolick See, and commended the Emperour's Zeal, he says, That he sends him a Metropolitan and a Bishop, to express his Thankful Acknowledgment, to give him a faithful Account of all Passages, and know of him what Measures he must take in the present juncture, concerning the Bishops of Photius his Faction; Whom he divides into two Classes, viz. those Ordained by himself, and those Ordained by Photius. He puts amongst these Paul Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, who opposed him at first, but afterwards returned to his Duty. With this Letter was Read Pope Adrian's Answer, in which this Pope having promised Ignatius the Patriarch, that his Affection for him shall not fall short of his Predecessor's, and praised God for his Restauration; he gives him, for a Standard, the Decree given by Pope Nicholas against Photius and Gregory; and, confirming the same, declares them Degraded of all Sacerdotal Offices, and not to be regarded as Bishops, no more than Gregory and Photius, who took upon him a Power he had not; Gregorium Syracusanum & Photium Tyrannum, & eos quos idem Photius in Gradu quolibet Ordinasse putatus est, ab Episcoporum numero, vel Dignitate, quam usurpative ac fiste dedit, merito sequestrantes. To prove Photius his Ordinations to be void, he gives these following Reasons. First, Because Photius was like Maximus, and his Ordination, or rather Intrusion, in all points like unto his. Secondly, Because Pope Nicholas his Predecessor had so Decreed it. Thirdly, Because Photius being a Great Man, a Courtier, a Novice, an Intruder, an Adulterer, Excommunicated, having no lawful Power, could not consequently confer it upon his Followers. A Maxim which he afterwards confirms, as owned by Photius, and those of his Party. He therefore requires that the same Rigour be used, with relation to those who had been Ordained by Photius, and even to Paul himself, who was recommended unto him by Ignatius, who (says he) must expect an everlasting Reward for the Persecution he had suffer'd, besides the Temporal Rewards of the Church, and the Honour he has acquired by his Sufferings. As to those who had been Ordained by Methodius, or Ignatius, he commends the Zeal of those who had withstood Photius, and suffer'd constantly for the Cause of Ignatius; but, for the rest, who submitted to Photius, either of their own accord, or by force, he declares, That, provided they come in, and Sign the Form he sends by his Legates, they ought to be Pardon'd, and left in possession of their Church-Dignities, notwithstanding their Opposition against the Patriarchal Dignity, and the Holy Catholick See. Yet he declares withall, That those who assisted at the Illegal Council held at Constantinople against the Holy See, should be incapable of Pardon, were not the Compassion of the Holy See invaded by them as great as their Demerit. He exhorts Ignatius to see the Articles drawn up at Rome against Photius and his Council Subscribed unto. Lastly, He commends John of Silea his Charity and Zeal for Ignatius. This Letter being read, was highly Commended by all the Bishops, and so this Session ended with the usual Acclamations.

The Fourth Session was held Octob. 13th. In which two Bishops were Accused, Theophilus and Zachary by Name, who were both Ordained by Methodius, and continued obstinate in Photius his Party. These Bishops being called into the Council, required that the other Bishops that stood it out for Photius should also be called in. There was some time a Debate upon the matter, whether or no they should be admitted. But the Pope's Legates did at last consent, That Three of them should be called in in the Name of the rest, to hear the Sentence passed against them. When they were to be called in, they had all withdrawn themselves, except Theophilus and Zachary. Who being come before the Council, maintained, That Pope Nicholas had Communicated with them. The Legates convinced them of Falshood, by Nicholas his Letters against Photius, which they caused to be read. Thomas and Elias made it appear likewise, That they had never owned Photius for a Patriarch. Which appearing undeniable, Theophilus and Zachary were pressed upon to Subscribe to the Form against Photius. But they would not so much as hear of it, and so were turned out of the Council. This is the Sum of what passed in this Session.

In the Fifth, held Octob. 20th, Paul, the Emperour's Charter-Keeper, had ordered Photius to be brought before the Council. Some Lay-men being sent to know of him, Whether he was willing to appear? He answer'd, That he came not willingly, but was carry'd by force. The Bishops however order'd, That he should come in. He protested against it, refused to Answer the Questions made unto him, and would, by no means, acknowledge his Fault. Pope Nicholas his Letters, containing the Sentence passed against him, were Read, and the Deputy of the Church of Jerusalem protested again, That the Patriarchs of the East had never owned him, exhorting him to do Penance. This done, the Pope's Legates declared him Excommunicated; and the Council did approve of it. He was exhorted to do Penance, and to acknowledge his Fault, there being no Refuge left for him, now that Rome and the East had declared against him. To which he Answer'd, That his Plea was not of this World. He was again warned to think seriously of his Case, and had time given him for it.

The Emperour himself was present at the Sixth Session, which was held Octob. 25th. Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Syria, made him a Compliment. After which a Memoir of the Pope's Legates was Read, containing the substance of what had passed against Photius. Then were called in the Bishops Ordained by Photius, and Pope Nicholas his Letter to Michael the Emperour was Read. Upon which the Council told them, That they ought to forsake Photius, and submit to their Judgment, who had declared his Ordinations void. They endeavour'd to defend Photius his Ordination, and their own, against the Decree of Pope Nicholas, by some Instances of Bishops Condemned or Rejected by the Popes, who, notwithstanding, were owned to be lawful. To which the Emperour himself gave this Answer; That those Bishops had been owned and defended by other Patriarchal Sees, whereas Photius was forsaken by all; that he pitied their Case, and exhorted them to submit themselves to the Mercy of the Council. The Pope's Legates told them, That if they would subscribe to the Form, and doe Penance, they should be received into the Church-Communion; and, at the same time, Answered to the Instances by them alledged, to shew, that the Pope's Decisions concerning Condemned Persons, had not been always followed. After this, the Emperour caused a long Exhortation to be Read, directed to those who were of Photius his Faction, whereby they were exhorted to submit themselves, and had Seven days time to consider of it.

The Seventh Session was held Octob. 29th, in the Presence of the Emperour. The Time allowed to Photius, to consider what he would do, being elapsed, he was called in, with Gregory Bishop of Syracuse. Marinus the Deacon, one of the Legates, caused his Crozier to be taken away from him; and the rest of them advised him to subscribe unto the Form, that he might be received as a Lay-man, into the Church-Communion. In stead of returning them an Answer, he directed his Speech to the Emperour, wished him a long Life, and declared he had no Answer to give to the Legates. Being asked by Babanes, Whether he had any thing else to say? he answer'd, That Question might have been spared, had they but minded what he had told them a few days since, and that he exhorted them to doe Penance themselves. The Council was Incensed at this Answer of Photius; whereupon the Bishops Ordained by him, or who adhered still to him, were immediately called in, and the Form brought from Rome offered unto them to set their hands to it. But all the Arguments which the Bishops and the Emperour himself did make, to induce them to it, proved insignificant. Pope Nicholas his Letter to the Bishops of the Patriarchate of Constantinople, and the Clergy of that City, containing the Sentence passed against Photius and his Adherers, was Read unto them; together with Adrian's Letters to the Emperour, to Ignatius the Patriarch, and the Acts of the Synod held at Rome, under that Pope against Photius, in the presence of the Deputies sent from Constantinople. Which Acts begin with three Discourses of the Pope to the Council; the first containing a Compendious History of the Intrusion and Attempts of Photius. In the second, the Pope requires the Condemnation of the Acts of the pretended Council of Photius against the Holy See. And the third contains a Complaint of his Presumption, in passing a Judgment against the Pope, whom he pretends to be liable to the Judgment of no Man, which he proves by the Instance of Symmachus: And, in answer to the Example of Honorius, who was Anathematiz'd by the Eastern Bishops after his Death; he says, That he was Accused of Herefy; for which cause onely 'tis lawful for Inferiours to resist their Superiours, and forsake their Errours; and that neither the Patriarchs, or Bishops, could have set up for his Judges, if the then Bishop of Rome, as first Bishop, had not himself consented to it. To which he adds, That the Council of Ephesus had Censured and Condemned John of Antioch, for his attempting to pass Judgment against S. Cyril Patriarch of Alexandria, whose See precedes that of Antioch. Which Maxim was approved of, and confirmed by this Council, praying the Pope to Pardon those who should acknowledge their Fault, and return to their Duty, and to regulate that Matter in the presence of the Deputies sent from Constantinople. Upon which the Pope declared, That all the Acts of the Council held by Photius against the Authority of the Holy See, ought to be utterly destroyed, and thrown into the fire; That all the Assemblies he held against Ignatius, ought likewise to be had in detestation; That he reiterates and confirms the Sentence passed against him by his Predecessor, yet willing to admit him, as a Lay-man, into the Church-Communion, if he will but consent to all the proceedings of the Holy See against him, and condemn his own against his Predecessor; That he grants Communion to all such as have given their their Consent or Approbation to that Council, provided they approve of what was done by the Holy See. And, whereas the Name of Basilius the Emperour is put into the Acts, he declares, That it was falsly put in, being assured, that Prince had always had a great Respect for the Holy See; For which reason he declares him a most Orthodox and Religious Prince. Lastly, That he Excommunicates all Persons that shall in time to come adhere to, or approve of the Acts of that Council, and that shall not approve of the Decrees of the Holy See. Which Judgment was Signed by more than Thirty Bishops of Italy. Nine Cardinal-Priests, the Arch-Deacon of Rome, and Four Deacons.

These Acts of the Roman Synod being Read over in the Council of Constantinople, Nicetas said, That, seeing Photius refused to submit, he thought it fit that the Excommunication pronounced against him should be Reiterated. Ignatius the Patriarch having made a Speech thereupon to the Council, Stephen, Deacon and Notary, pronounced several times the Anathema against Photius, and made several Acclamations to the Prosperity of the Emperour, the Empress, the Pope, and the Patriarchs Deputies.

The Eighth Session was held upon the 8th day of November; the Acts of the Council of Photius against Pope Nicholas being first burnt by the Emperour's Order. There appeared Three Persons bearing such Names as Photius had given to the pretended Deputies from the Pope and the Patriarchs. Who declared, That they had not subscribed to those Acts, and knew not what they were about. Being pressed to pronounce an Anathema against those that had subscribed thereunto, they did it. This done, one Theodorus Erithimius, an Iconoclast, being summoned to appear at the Council, was called in. The Emperour pressing him to own the Lawfulness of Image-worship, to convince him thereof, asked him, Whether he honoured his Image upon a Medal? He protested, That he had for it all the Respect and Veneration which he ought to have. If then, said the Emperour, you respect the Image of a Mortal Man, much more ought you to honour the Image of Christ, of the Virgin, and the Saints. Theodorus being puzzled with this Objection, desired Time, but he was pressed to declare. The Decree of Pope Nicholas, relating to Images, was read to him, yet he refused to yield. Three others, Iconoclasts, acknowledged their Error, and pronounced an Anathema against all such persons as should refuse to honour Images. Theodorus, and all other Iconoclasts, were Anathematized by the Council, which repeated again their Excommunication against Photius and Gregory. And so ended this Session, with the usual Acclamations.

The Ninth Session was held Feb. 12th, in the year following. There was admitted a Deputy from the Patriarch of Alexandria, who brought a Credential Letter from him to the Emperour; in which he signify'd, that he could not give his Judgment in the Difference betwixt the two Patriarchs of Constantinople, because by reason of his Remoteness he had no certain Information of it; that the Bishops, and other Clergy-men, under that Patriarchate, were the more proper Judges; that there was formerly two Patriarchs of Alexandria, when Narcissus having withdrawn himself into the Wilderness, another Patriarch was Ordained in his place; that Narcissus being returned, he Ruled some time with him, after whose Decease, Alexander, Bishop of Jerusalem, was chosen to Govern together with Narcissus the Church of Alexandria. After the reading of this Letter, this Deputy (named Joseph) was admitted as Vicar of the Patriarch of Alexandria; and was asked, Whether he was informed of what related to the Ordination of Ignatius, and the Deposition of Photius? His Answer was, That he was not onely informed of the Matter, but had himself examined all passages relating to it, and approved of the same; and, to assure the Council of it, he tendered a Writing, which was read in full Council; whereby he formally declared his Opinion in the Thing. Next, the Witnesses were called in, who had appeared against Ignatius in the Synod held before Zachary and Radoaldus. One of them, called Theodorus, was examined first of all; who confessed, That he had been forced by an express Order of Michael the Emperour, to swear falsly, and to Depose against the Ordination of Ignatius; that he had confessed his Fault to an Abbot, who had therefore imposed upon him a Penance, which he had performed. But, being asked, Whether the Party who had laid that Penance upon him was a Priest, or not? he answer'd, He knew nothing on't; but that he was an Abbot, and had great confidence in him. In short, he owned this Council to be Lawful. Another Witness, named Leo, did also averr, That he had Falsly Deposed against the Ordination of Ignatius. Being asked, Whether he had done Penance for his Fault? he answered, He had not; but, if any were laid upon him, he would submit to it: Declaring, That he owned this Council to be Lawful. But being asked, Whether he did Anathematize Photius, and all those against whom the Council had pronounced an Anathema: Who am I (says he) to pronounce an Anathema? This is onely done, adds he, in case of Heresie, whereas Photius is Orthodox. Wherefore, says he, should I then Anathematize him? The Patriarchs Legates answer'd, That his Actions were worse than Heresie it self. Upon which Leo did Anathematize him, and all those whom the Council had Anathematiz'd, when he saw that it might be done for other causes than Heresie. Eleven Witnesses more were Examined, who all confessed, They had been compelled to bear False Witness against Ignatius. Some of them had done Penance for it, and those who had not, received it from the Council. As to the other False Witnesses then absent, they had a General Penance laid upon them, To be Two years out of the Church, two years with the Hearers without receiving the Communion, and to abstain from Flesh and Wine during these four years, except Sundays and Holy-days; to stand up Three years with the Faithful, performing three times a Week the like Abstinence; and were declared Excommunicated, unless they came to acknowledge their Fault, Faults, and submit to that Penance. 'Tis true, the Council left it to Ignatius the Patriarch, to moderate, as he should think fit, the Rigour of the Penance.

After this another Business was brought in before the Council, relating to some Officers of Michael the Emperour, who had took upon them to wear the Sacerdotal Habit, and to perform the Office of a Priest; one named Theophilus, the Emperour's Master of the Horse, having laid the Gospels upon their heads, and said Prayers in derision of Ordination. Theophilus was dead; but three of those Officers were found guilty of this Sacrilege. Who being brought before the Council, the Patriarchs Legates obliged them to confess their Crime, the Enormity whereof they exposed unto them; and they freely submitted to what Penance should be laid upon them. Lastly, The false Deputies of the Patriarchs, whose Names Photius had put in the Acts of his Council, were examined before the Deputy of the Patriarch of Alexandria.

In the Tenth Session, at which assisted both the Emperours; the last day of February, the Canons were read that were to be Authorized by this Council.

The First confirms the Canons and Rules set down by the Apostles, by the general and particular Councils, and by the Holy Fathers and Doctors of the Church.

The Second exacts a due Observation and Execution of what had been Decreed by the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, upon pain of Deposition of Clerks, Delinquents, and Excommunication of Lay-men.

The Third requires the same Adoration to our Saviour's Image, as to the Book of the Gospels; because, as our Salvation is to be obtained by the words contained in that Holy Book; so in Images, we learn by the Features and Colours, what the Scripture Teaches by the Letters; and therefore they ought to be honoured according to ancient Tradition, with Worship relating to the Original; and as we honour the Gospel, and the Figure of the Cross, so ought we to honour the Virgin Mary's, and the Saints Images. This Canon ends with an Anathema against such as shall not do it.

In the Fourth Canon, the Council condemns Photius, and declares, That he never was a Bishop; That those Ordained, or raised to any Church-Dignity by him, shall be degraded; that the Churches Consecrated by him, or those whom he had Ordained, shall be Consecrated anew; and that all the former Acts of his Sacerdotal Functions shall be null.

By the Fifth, 'tis prohibited to ordain a Man, who leaves the World and turns Monk, in order to become a Bishop, or Patriarch, though he has continued some considerable time in each degree of the Orders. And as to those who left the Secular Life without any such Ambition, it is Ordained, that none shall be raised to that Dignity, till they have been Readers the space of one year, Sub-Deacons two years, Deacons three, and Priests four years. A Time not requisite to observe, in respect of those that have been, from the very first, Clerks or Monks.

The Sixth pronounces an Anathema against Photius, for having Intruded False Deputies, and against all those who shall hereafter Impose thus upon the Publick.

By the Seventh, it is prohibited to suffer any Person, condemned by this Council, to Paint Images, or Teach in the Churches.

The Eighth contains a Prohibition to the Patriarch of Constantinople, to exact Declaratory Subscriptions from Bishops, that they shall own him for their Patriarch.

By the Ninth it is determined, That those who have thus Subscribed for Photius, are not bound to stand to it.

By the Tenth it is prohibited to separate from the Patriarch's Communion, or to refuse to Name him in the Celebration of the Holy Mysteries, before he has been Condemned in a Council, how conspicuous soever be his Crimes. Which extends likewise to Bishops, in relation to their Metropolitans, as it does to these in relation to their Patriarch.

The Eleventh pronounces an Anathema against such as hold, That Man has Two Souls.

The Twelfth doth injoin the Deposition of Bishops, that shall prove to have been chosen by the Intrigues or Violence of Princes.

By the Thirteenth 'tis Order'd, That the Principal Dignities of the Church of Constantinople shall be conferred upon such Clerks of that Church, as have served in lesser Offices, and not to Strangers, or Persons having Secular Employments.

The Fourteenth provides for the honour of Episcopacy, by enjoying the Bishops not to meet Great Men and Princes at a distance from their Churches, or to Light when they meet them, or to Prostrate themselves before them.

The Fifteenth prohibits all Bishops; upon pain of being Deposed, to Sell, or Alienate what belongs to their Churches, and pronounces an Anathema against the Purchasers or Retainers thereof. If a Bishop erects a Monastery out of his Church-Revenues, he ought to leave it to the Church. But, if it be out of his own Revenues, he may dispose of it; provided nevertheless, that it shall not become a place of Habitation for Lay-men.

The Sixteenth is to prevent the Impiety of such as take upon them, in Derision, the Priestly Habit. Which Sacrilege is strictly forbidden by this Council, enjoying, That if any Emperour, or Prince, should attempt for the future to do any such Thing, he shall be therefore liable to a Penance, and Anathematized, if he refuse to submit to it; And if the Patriarch of Constantinople, or his Suffragan Bishops, should wink at it, they shall be Deposed; And that all those who shall prove to have been any ways Instrumental in such an Impiety, shall do Penance, and be excluded during the space of Three years, from the Communion of the Church, viz. one year in each degree of publick Penance.

The Seventeenth renewing the Sixth Canon of the Nicene Council, concerning the Rights and Prerogatives of the Patriarchs, declares, That both at Rome, and in the Patriarchates of Antioch and Jerusalem, the Patriarchs shall be Impowered to Summon to their Councils all the Metropolitans whom they Ordain, or Confirm, by giving them the Pallium, and likewise to Reprove and Correct them. That it shall be no lawful Excuse for the Metropolitans to alledge, That their Princes will not give them leave to go out of their Dominions, or that they are bound to hold a Synod twice a year, because they ought to perform the Good of a Whole Diocess, that is, of several Provinces, procured by a Patriarchal Synod before that of one Province. That it is needless for Princes to be present at those Synods, because it does not appear, that they have assisted at any but General Councils. It is therefore ordered by this Council, That the Metropolitans which are Summoned by their Patriarch, and shall not appear Two Months after his Summons, shall be Excluded from Church-Communion; and Deposed, in case they continue a whole year in their Obstinacy.

The Eighteenth doth pronounce an Anathema against all those that shall take away from any Church her Rights or Privileges, obtained by the Grant of Princes, or enjoy'd during Thirty years.

The Nineteenth prohibits all Metropolitans to remove from their own into other Diocesses, abusing their Authority, to consume the Revenues of the Churches of their Suffragan Bishops. Yet it enjoyns; That Hospitality shall be used towards them, when they shall be obliged to go through any Diocess; but that they shall be provided only of such Things as shall be found there; that they shall proceed on their Way, without making any long stay, or exacting any thing, either from the Bishop, or Church. For, if all Bishops be bound to use their Revenues with Parsimony, and not spend them for their own use: How great is their Fault, who improverish, or burden the Churches of other Bishops?

The Twentieth enjoyns, That those who are in possession of Church-Lands, paying Rent for the same, shall not be turned out by force, and without a due Course of Law, for want of Payment, but shall be summon'd; and, if in Three years time they pay not what they owe, application shall be made to the Judges, that by vertue of a Judgment, the Church may be put into possession of her Land.

The One and twentieth declares, That all due Respect must be shewed to Patriarchs, and all Attempts to turn them out of their Sees are unlawful; That the Pope of Old Rome ought to be Honoured and Respected in the first place; and next to him the Patriarchs of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch and Jerusalem. That none ought to attempt to Write against the Pope, under pretence of some Crimes, which they falsely impute to him, as Photius, and, before him, Dioscorus, have done; that all those, who, in imitation of them, shall cast any Obloquy, by word of Mouth, or in Writing, against St. Peter's Holy See, the Prince of the Apostles, shall be Condemned, as those two Hereticks are; and that if any Prince attempt to Depose him, he shall be Excommunicated. But if a General-Council being met, there happens any Difference with the Bishop of Rome, he ought to be conferred with about the Matter, and his Answers be had, to make the best of it on either side, and no rash Judgment to be passed against the Supream Bishop.

By the Two and twentieth it is ordered, That Princes and Great Men shall have no hand in the Election of Patriarchs, Metropolitans, or Bishops, but shall receive him whom the Bishops have Chosen. Yet if any Lay-man be invited to joyn his Assistance in the Election, he may lawfully do it.

The Three and twentieth charges the Bishops not to give away what belongs to other Churches; nor to Ordain those Men Priests or Clerks in Churches, that have no Dependency upon them, nor to perform their Functions in any other Diocess, without the leave of the Bishop of the Place.

The Four and twentieth is against the Metropolitans, that send for their Suffragan Bishops to perform their Functions, while they are taken up with Secular Impleys. The Patriarch is ordered to punish them; and, if they persist in their Delinquency, to Depose them.

The Five and twentieth declares, That all Bishops and Priests, Deacons and Sub-Deacons, Ordained by Ignatius, or Methodius, who still adhere to Photius, shall be Deposed, and made Incapable for ever of all Sacerdotal Functions; but, if they Repent hereafter, they shall be received into the Church-Communion, but not restored to their Dignity.

The Six and twentieth allows the Freedom to any Priest or Deacon, Deposed by his Bishop, to Appeal to his Metropolitan; who shall send for the Bishop, and Examine the Clerks Case in a Synod, in order to confirm or annul the Judgment given against him. It gives likewise to Bishops, Judged by their Metropolitans, the liberty of a Recourse to the Patriarcha, as the Judge of the Causes of the Metropolitans within his Patriarchate; and excludes both the Provincial Bishops and the Neighbouring Metropolitans, from taking any cognisance thereof.

The Seven and twentieth, being the last of all, enjoyns all Bishops to make use of their Pallium at proper Times and Places; and not to abuse it through pride or ambition, by wearing it at all Times, and using it in all their Functions; and that all such as have been Monks shall keep some Marks of their Profession.

These Canons being read, the Legates proposed, That the Definition of the Council should be Read, which contained a Confession of Faith, or a Symbol of a pretty large extent; an Acknowledgment of the Seven first General Councils; the Condemnation of some Hereticks therein condemned; the Condemnation of Photius, and the Approbation of what had been Enacted in this Council. This Definition being unanimously approved of by all the Bishops, the Emperour Asked, Whether any one amongst them had any thing to say against the Canons and Decrees of this Eighth General Council, because whoever should oppose them, after the breaking up of the Assembly, should be condemned to Banishment. At the same time he exhorted the Bishops to give wholesome Instructions to their Flocks, and all Clergy-men to keep Peace amongst them, and not to depart from the Council's Decisions. The Lay-men he charged to forbear Disputing about Church-Matters, the Cognizance whereof belongs to the Patriarchs, Bishops, and Doctors of the Church. Which Exhortations were approved of by all the Bishops. Lastly, The Pope's Legates proposed, That the Acts of this Council should be Subscribed unto, and Invited the Emperours to do it in the first place. But Basilus answer'd, That he ought not to Subscribe, but after the Bishops, in Imitation of Constantine; yet, seeing they did him that Honour, he was willing to Sign next to the Deputies of the Patriarchs. So Donatus Bishop of Ostia Signed first; next to him the other Deputies from Rome, then the Deputies of Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, and Constantinople; and next to these the Emperours Basilus, Constantine, and Leo; and, lastly, all the Bishops, every one according to his Rank. Five several Copies were Subscribed unto. The Officers and Noblemen who had assisted at this Council, declared their Abhorrence of all the Actings of Photius against Pope Nicholas and Ignatius the Patriarch; and that they freely submitted to the Decisions of the Council. Which was accordingly Recorded by the Registers; and so the Council broke up, with the usual Acclamations.

The Pope's Legates did not Subscribe, till after a Review made of all the Acts, by Anastasius the Library-Keeper, who was well-skilled in the Greek Tongue; Who, having observed, that the Commendations given in Pope Adrian's Letter, to the Emperour of the West, were razed out, they made a Scruple to Subscribe, and complained of it. The Greeks, unwilling to own the Emperour of the West, refused to have them Inserted; and, to palliate the Matter, alledged, That in a Council, God's Praise onely, not the Commendations of Princes, ought to be mentioned. A Pretence not very taking from Persons that continually repeated their Acclamations in Honour of the Emperours. This Debate however obliged the Legates, fearful to do any Thing that might displease the Pope, to Subscribe, with this Restriction, that they gave their Consent to the Acts of this Council.

The Council afterwards caused Circular Letters to be drawn, to Acquaint the whole World with the Condemnation of Photius, and the Restauration of Ignatius. One was particularly directed to Pope Adrian, full of Thanks and Approbation of the whole Proceedings of the Holy See in this Matter. The Emperours Writ likewise Two Letters about this Council; one to the Patriarchs, to let them know the Success of their Meeting; and the other to the Pope, full of Thanks and Commendations.

Ignatius the Patriarch Writ in particular a Letter to Pope Adrian, wherein he prays him to Consent, That the Readers Ordained by Photius might be admitted into Holy Orders, and desired favour for Paul, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Constantinople, and for Theodorus Metropolitan of Caria.

The Council being ended, some Bishops of the Patriarchate of Constantinople went to wait on the Emperour, and complained, That the Church of Constantinople was made too much subject to the Church of Rome; adding, That the Uncertainty that was observed in the Legates Subscriptions, might give occasion to alter what was passed, and that they could not recover their Liberty, if they did not recover the Forms they were fain to subscribe unto. Whereupon those Forms were taken out of the hands of those to whom the Legates had committed the care of them; and they found it exceeding difficult to recover them, though they made use of the Interest of the Ambassadors of the Western Empire, who pressed it so hard upon the Emperour, that he found himself obliged to get them returned into their hands. Three days after this, the Emperour sent for the Pope's Legates into a place where Ignatius the Patriarch, and the Deputies of the other Patriarchs were met together. An Envoy of Bulgaria, Peter by Name, was called in; who acquainted the Assembly, That the Prince of Bulgaria was very joyful to learn, that they had met in Council for the good of the Church; and, that he Thanked the Legates of the Holy See of Rome for having Writ to him in their Way hither. After these Complements, he asked the Patriarchs Vicars, in the Name of the Bulgarians, What Church they must be subject to? To which the Pope's Legates answer'd immediately, That the Bulgarians had been first Instructed in the Christian Faith by the Church of Rome, which had sent unto them Bishops, and Priests, according to their desire. The Envoy owned, That it was true, the Bulgarians had first apply'd themselves to the Church of Rome, which they had owned hitherto; but that this was the Time to decide with the Patriarchs Legates, to which of the Two Churches it was most reasonable they should submit themselves, the Church of Rome, or that of Constantinople. The Pope's Legates answer'd, They had made an end of those Things they were sent for; and that they could not regulate any Thing farther, or consent to any Regulation prejudicial to the Church of Rome, concerning such Matters as they had no power to Treat of: But, the whole Countrey of Bulgaria being full of Latin-Priests, their Opinion was, That they ought to submit themselves to no Church but that of Rome.

The

The Deputies of the Patriarchs of the East asked the Bulgarians, Whose Country Bulgaria was, when Conquer'd by them? Whether they had, at that time, Greek or Latin Priests? To which they answer'd, That they Conquer'd it from the Greeks, amongst whom they found Greek Bishops. Whence the Patriarchs Deputies inferred, That those Bishops were Ordained by the Patriarch of Constantinople. But it was reply'd by the Pope's Legates, That, though they were Greeks, it did not follow, that they were Ordained by the Patriarch of Constantinople; that the Difference between Lay-men did not make any confusion in the Ecclesiastical Order; and that the Latin Church had Greeks in several places who were subject to her. The Deputies of the Patriarchs retorted, They could not deny but that Bulgaria was a Member of the Greek Empire, which the Legates granted; but affirmed withall, That the Division of the Church does not agree therein with that of the Empire. Being asked, Upon what they grounded the Right of the Church of Rome, They answer'd, First, That it was plain by the Decretals of the Bishops of Rome, that the Two Epyrus's, Thessaly and Dardania, to which the Bulgarians gave the Name of Bulgaria, had formerly belonged to the Church of Rome. Secondly, That the Bulgarians had voluntarily submitted themselves to the Holy See. Thirdly, That the Holy See had sent unto them Latin Priests and Bishops, and that they had yet actually a Latin Bishop. That the Right of the Church of Rome being so well grounded, and her Possession so long, she ought not to be deprived of it. The Deputies of the Patriarchs asked them, Upon which of those Pretences they grounded themselves. To which they answer'd, They did not own them for Judges, who were under the Holy See; and that they had no power to Treat of this Matter. Notwithstanding which Protestation, the Deputies of the Patriarchs made this Decision; That it was unreasonable for the Romans, who disowned the Greek Empire, and were Confederated with the French, to pretend to a Right of Ordination in their Emperor's Dominions; and therefore their Judgment was, That that part of Bulgaria which formerly belonged to the Empire, and had received Greek Priests and Bishops, should be restored to the Church of Constantinople. The Pope's Legates on the other side declared, That they made void that pretended Judgment given by the Deputies of the East, and Conjured Ignatius the Patriarch to forbear sending Priests or Bishops into Bulgaria; and presented to him, at the same time, a Letter from Pope Adrian upon that Subject. Which being read by Ignatius, not without some reluctancy, he answer'd in general terms, That he would not ingage himself in that Affair.

The Pope's
Legates taken by the
ans.

The Emperor, although he was provoked by the Opposition of the Pope's Legates, concealed, for some time, his Relentment. Having treated them sumptuously, he dismissed them with Rich Presents; but took no care to provide for their Safety, and sent them away without a Convoy. So that they were intercepted by the Sclavonians, who seized upon all they had, and (amongst other Things) of the Authentick Acts of the Council. In short, they were very ill treated, and kept some time in Captivity: But, being at last released, upon pressing Letters from the Pope, and the Western Emperor, they returned to Rome at the latter end of the year. They gave the Pope an account of their Voyage, and deliver'd unto him Ignatius his Letter, and some Writings they had recover'd from the Bulgarians, with those they had put into the hands of Sippo, Minister of State, and Anastasius the Library-keeper, which fell not into the same danger, but preserved, and brought the Acts of the Council intire to Rome.

Pope Adri-an's Letter.

Pope Adrian was very well pleas'd with the Transactions of the late Council, but no less dissatisfied with what had pass'd since, as he expressed it in the Letter he Writ to the Emperor, dated Nov. 10. 871. In which, having praised their Piety and Zeal, he makes great complaints of their neglect of his Legates, as to their safety, being left, without a Convoy, to the Mercy of Barbarians, by whom they were stript, made Captives, and very ill used. But that which touches him most to the quick, is the business of Bulgaria, complaining of the Attempt made to extort it from the Jurisdiction of the Holy See, and that Ignatius has had the confidence to Ordain a Bishop, in order to send him thither. To which he adds, That, if they continue in that Resolution, he must vindicate his Right, and make void the Ordination of all such as shall perform any Episcopal or Ecclesiastick Functions in that Countrey by the Mission of the Bishop of Constantinople. As to Ignatius his Requests to him, he declares, That he cannot alter any thing in that Matter, nor derogate from the Ordinances of his Predecessors, or the Council; for, it was not the practice of the Popes to abuse (according to their Fancy) the Decrees of their Fathers, as did some Greeks, who used the Pope's Decrees as long as they favoured their Designs, but laid them aside, when they found them contrary.

New Troubles upon the account of Bulgaria.

This however hindred not the Greeks from taking possession of Bulgaria, and turning out of it the Latin Priests and Bishops. But the Popes did not lose all hopes to recover it. In order to which, John VIII. next Successor to Adrian, sent in the year 878. Two Legates to Constantinople. viz. Peter and Eugenius; the first, Bishop of Ancona, this of Ostia. The pretence was, To bring the Church of Constantinople into a peaceable temper, then still divided by the Faction of Photius. But he charged them to go to the Prince of Bulgaria, and Writ, at the same time, a very positive Letter to Ignatius the Patriarch, the substance of which was, That he now warn'd him the Third time to yield up Bulgaria to the Holy See of Rome, and Thirty days after the Receipt of this Letter, to call from thence all Bishops, Priests, and other Ecclesiastics by him Ordained. If not, he would Exclude him from the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ, as long as he persisted to keep that Countrey under his Jurisdiction; and, if he continued in his Obstinacy, he would declare him Deprived and Fallen from the Patriarchal Dignity, wherein he had been kept by the Favour of the Holy See. At the same time the Pope Writ Two Letters to Michael King of the Bulgarians.

Bulgarians, Exhorting him to submit to the Church of Rome; and required of Count Peter, that he would use his utmost endeavours to persuade that Prince to it. Lastly, He commanded all Greek Priests, and Bishops, then in Bulgaria, to withdraw themselves within the space of Thirty days, declaring them Deprived of their Functions, if they refused to do it within that Time.

Photius, relying upon this Division between the Pope and Ignatius, attempted his Restauration; and, having by his Artifices procured the Emperour's Favour, with the Assistance of Theodorus Santarabenus, he returned to Constantinople, Ignatius yet living. 'Tis said, This Patriarch offer'd him to Write in his behalf to all the Bishops under his Patriarchate, and procure, that he should have his Absolution, provided, he would forbear all Sacerdotal Functions; but Photius refused it, being resolved to attempt his Restauration to the Patriarchal Dignity. Thus, in stead of Reconciling himself with Ignatius, he Declared against him, and Ordained in Magnaurus his Palace, Ignatius yet living. But this Patriarch dying, Octob. 23d. 878. Photius went into St. Sophia's Church with Armed Men; forcing a great many Bishops, Clerks and Monks, to Communicate with him, and to own him as their Patriarch; Deposing, and Persecuting all that refused; turning out all that had been Ordained by Ignatius, and restoring them to their respective Stations, after he had Re-ordained them. At the same time he took care to confer the principal Dignities of the Church upon his own Creatures. And, to prevent all Opposition on the Papal side, with Threats and Presents he prevailed with the Two Legates, to tell publickly, both the Clergy and People, That they were come to Depose Ignatius, and to declare Photius their Patriarch.

Photius returns into Constantinople, and is restored.

To bring the Holy See to consent to Photius's Restauration, Basilius the Emperour sent Ambassadors to Pope John the VIII, to desire of him, That he would receive Photius into his Communion, and own him as Patriarch. Three Monks were also sent to desire the same Thing, in the Name of the Patriarch of Jerusalem; and Photius sent Theodorus Santarabenus, to bring about this Accommodation. Who were all well received, and had a favourable Audience from the Pope. The Eastern Emperour, whose Forces began then to be considerable in Italy, promised him to secure the Coast of Campania from the Irruptions of the Saracens, and to yield him up Bulgaria. To justify the Restauration of Photius, the Necessity of it was urged, for the good of the Peace, and the Re-union of Mens Minds. To which his Partisans added, That Ignatius himself was for it; and a Paper was produced, under his Name, whereby he desired the Pope's Consent to it.

Pope John the VIII. gives his Consent to Photius's Restauration.

The Pope, in Answer to the Emperour, sent him word, That Ignatius of happy Memory being dead, he consented, by reason of the present Necessity, and for the good of the Peace, that Photius should be owned as Patriarch, provided that he gave Satisfaction, and begged pardon before a Council; That he declared him Absolved, with all the Church-men of his Party, from all Censures and Condemnations against them; and that he thought it convenient, to have him Re-instated in the See of Constantinople; but that he expected, no Lay-man or Courtier should, for the future, be raised to the Patriarchal Dignity of Constantinople; and that Cardinal-Priests, or Deacons of that Church, should be chosen for that See. To which he added, That he granted this, but on condition that Bulgaria should be Resigned up to him, and that the Patriarch of Constantinople should make no Claim to it. Lastly, He exhorted the Emperour to own, and bear respect to the Patriarch, and to endeavour the Re-union of the Bishops, and the whole Clergy with Photius; Declaring all those Excommunicated, That should refuse to hold Communion with him, after Three several Notices. This Letter, bearing date the 16th of August, 879, was carried by one Peter, a Priest, who was sent to Constantinople, with the Deputies come from thence. He had also, under his Care, a private Letter to Photius, wherein the Pope expressed unto him, the Joy he received by the Re-union and Peace of the Church of Constantinople, and his consent to his Restauration, provided that he begged Pardon in a Synod, and restored Bulgaria to the Holy See. Other Letters he was charged with, one directed to the Clergy of Constantinople; another to the Patriarchs of the East, upon the same subject; and a Third, directed to those who should refuse to hold Communion with Photius, wherein he warned them to acknowledge him as their Patriarch; if not, that he had charged his Legate to Excommunicate them.

He Writ in particular to the Two Legates he had sent to Constantinople, and let them know he was not satisfy'd with their rash Approving of Photius, without his Order or Knowledge; that however he joynd unto them Peter, Cardinal-Priest, that they might labour together for the Peace of the Church, according to the Letters and Instructions he had given him. By which Instructions, they were to make their first Visit to the Emperour, and deliver him the Letter they had for him; the next day to visit Photius, and give him his Letter, with Salutations from him, and a Declaration of the Command they had received from him, to own him, for Peace-sake, as Patriarch, and to make all the Churches own him, provided he received all those that should be willing to hold Communion with him, though his Adversaries before. That a Council should be called, in which they should preside with the Patriarch, and the Deputies of the Patriarchs of the East, and wherein should be present the Metropolitans and Bishops of the Patriarchate of Constantinople. In it he order'd, That there should be Read his Letter to the Emperour, and the Bishops be asked, Whether they approved of it; which done, they should declare, That the Holy Father having the Care of all the Churches, and being desirous to procure Peace amongst them, had sent them thither to make up their Breaches, to Reconcile those that were at Variance, and Raise up them that are Fallen; That they might all with one accord Glorifie the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Then they were to propose the following Canons, viz. That after Phocas his Decease, no Lay-man should be raised to the Patriarchal Dignity; that Photius should send no Patriarchum into Bulgaria, nor make any Ordination there. 'Tis very probable, the Pope had enjoined Photius to beg pardon of the Council, as is mention'd in the Pope's true Letters. But this Article is not found in the Memoir which we have onely from Photius, nor in the Letters of Pope John the VIII, which he caus'd to be Read in the Council, and out of which he had razed this Article with some others, as he had added unto it an Article against the Eighth Council, to be found also in this Memoir, falsify'd by Photius in the like manner. All this was done by the Pope in a Synod held at Rome, consisting of 17 Bishops of Italy, 4 Cardinal-Priests, and Two Deacons, whose hands are to be found at the end of this Memoir.

Peter being arrived at Constantinople in 879, Photius summon'd thither a full Council, to which he gave the Name of the VIII. Oecumenical Council; which, by his Account, consisted of 383 Bishops. The first thing he declared, at the Opening of the Assembly, was, That Pope John the VIII. had received him into his Communion; first, by his Two first Legates, Paul and Eugenius; next by Peter the Priest, whom he had sent purposely for it. Whereupon John, Bishop of Heraclea, complain'd, That the Church of Rome had occasion'd all the Troubles befallen to the Church of Constantinople, blaming the Conduct of the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, and exalting that of John the VIII.

In the Second Session, held the 16th of November, the Pope's Letters to the Emperour and to Photius were read. But so falsify'd, that what concerned Ignatius was razed out, as were also the Injunction to Photius, to beg pardon before the Council, some advantageous Expressions about the Holy See, and what related to the Restitution of Bulgaria. Which was supply'd with high Commendations of the Emperour and Photius, and the Condemnation of the Eighth Council. These Letters being read, Photius extolled his kindness which he pretended himself to have to Ignatius the Patriarch, and promised that he would honour his Memory. After this, a Letter from Michael the Patriarch of Antioch, upon this subject, was read; wherein he required also the Condemnation of the Eighth Council. Then was called in Thomas, Arch-bishop of Cæsarea, the onely Deputy from the East, that had Assisted at the Eighth Council. Photius caus'd him to Renounce what he had both said and done in that Council. The Letters from the Patriarchs of Jerusalem and Antioch to Photius, were likewise read; wherein they gave him very high Commendations, and own'd him as Patriarch. This Session ended with the reading of a Letter from Abramius Arch-bishop of Amydus, who Writ very sharply against the Eighth Council.

In the Third Session, held Nov. the 18th, the Letters from Pope John the VIII. to the Church of Constantinople, to the Bishops of that Patriarchate, and to the Patriarchs of the East, were read. In which, expressing his desire to procure the peace of their Church, the Bishops of that Patriarchate declared thereupon, that they had Peace amongst them, before the coming of that Letter; and some mention being made of Bulgaria, they judg'd it reasonable that Affair should be referred to the Emperour, the Bounds of the Empire being concern'd therein. A Letter from the Patriarch of Jerusalem to the Emperour was likewise read, wherein having deplored the Miseries and Calamities of his Church, he pray'd that Prince to assist it with his Princely Charity. Lastly, The Pope's Instructions to his Legates, an Abstract whereof we have already made, came also to be read.

In the Fourth Session there appeared a Deputy from the Patriarch of Antioch, who brought some Letters from that Patriarch, and that of Jerusalem, both Written in the behalf of Photius. Wherein they declared, That the Deputies, who had assisted at the Eighth Council, in the Name of their respective Churches, had been sent by the Saracens. These Letters being read, the Noble-men came in who had assisted at the said Council, and expressed their sorrow for what they had done, being (as they pretended) impos'd upon by the false Deputies of the Patriarchs. Five Articles were read, which were propos'd in the Name of the Pope's Legates. The first, about the restitution of Bulgaria to the See of Rome; The second, that for the future no Lay-man should be elected Patriarch of Constantinople; The third, that no Clerk of another Church should be chosen; The fourth, to abrogate the Council held against Photius; And the fifth, that those should be Excommunicated who refus'd to hold Communion with Photius. All which Articles, except the first about Bulgaria, were approved of by the Council.

In the Fifth Session, held Jan. the 26th, 880. Photius complain'd; That the Church of Rome seem'd unwilling to receive the Seventh General Council. But the Pope's Legates having satisfy'd the Council in that Matter, it was decreed unanimously, That that Council should stand for the seventh Oecumenical.

After this, Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Syria, was summon'd to appear, for refusing to hold Communion with Photius. Whereupon the Pope's Legates required a Canon to be made, disabling Photius from receiving such as had been Excommunicated or Deposed by the Bishop of Rome, and the Bishop of Rome from receiving those that had been Condemned, or Excommunicated by Photius: This was the first Canon. The second was made upon the Remonstrance of Photius, and Order'd, that Bishops that turned Monks, should not retain their Bishopricks, and disabled them from the Recovery thereof. A third Canon was added, against such as should Imprison, or abuse Bishops. This done, the Acts of the Council were sign'd by the Legates, and all the Bishops.

May the 10th, they met together in the Emperour's Palace, in whose presence was read the Symbol, or Creed of the Council of Constantinople, with a Prohibition to add any thing to it; which which was against the Latin Creed, to which was added the Filioque. Basilus the Emperour; with the Princes his Sons, subscribed to this, and disapproved, by his subscription, all that had been Transacted against Photius.

May the 13th, the Bishops met again in the Great Church, to whom was read the Creed agreed upon in the last Meeting, and repeated Anathema's pronounced against all persons that should either add to, or take any thing from it. Thus you have an Abstract of the Acts of this Council, published by Baronius, and taken out of the Acts themselves, the Manuscripts whereof are to be found in the Vatican Library, and that of the Colonna's.

The Pope's Legates returned to Rome, with Letters from the Emperour and Photius to the Pope; to whom they made their Report of Photius his Restauration, and of the peaceable State wherein they had left the Churches of Constantinople. The Pope, in his Answer, Congratulated the Emperour for it, and returned him his Thanks, at the same time, for his Care in sending Gallies for the Defence of the Territory of Rome against the Saracens; for his restoring to the Church of Rome S. Sergius his Monastery in the Neighbourhood of Constantinople; and, lastly, for having restored Bulgaria to the Sec of Rome. He prays him to continue his Good Will to that Sec; and adds, at the end of the Letter, That he allows of the Acts of the Council at Constantinople for the Restauration of Photius; but, if his Legates had any way trespassed upon his Orders, he disowns all such Actings, and declares them void. This Letter bore date, August the Thirteenth, 880.

He also Congratulated Photius upon his Restauration, for which he told him he was obliged to the Holy See; but blamed him for refusing to make a Publick Acknowledgment of his Fault, and beg the Council's Pardon. He enjoyns him to submit himself, and be faithful to the Holy See; and ends his Letter with the same Clause contained in that to the Emperour: Which shews, that he was not, as yet, fully informed of all those Things the Legates had consented to. And indeed, when he understood how they had been surprised, he went up to the Chaire of his Church, from whence he fulminated his Excommunication against all Persons that should not receive the Condemnation of Photius; and, having Deposed his Legates, he sent Marinus, who had been twice already Legate in the East, to Repair the Mischief done by the late Legates. Marinus being arrived at Constantinople, did strenuously maintain what had been done under Pope Nicholas, and in the Eighth Council against Photius, refusing to consent to the Abrogation of the Acts of that Council. The Emperour incensed at his Presumption, in Disannulling what the other had Ratified, caused him to be cast into Prison; and having kept him there the space of Thirty days, thinking that Mortification would make him change his Mind, he sent him back to Rome, where his Confinement was soon required. For Pope John dying in the beginning of the year 882, he was Chosen to be his next Successor on the First of February.

Being raised to that High Station, the first Thing that he did, was, to Condemn Photius again; to declare void all the Episcopal Functions he had took upon him; and to Abrogate all the Acts of the False Council of Photius. His Pontificate having lasted but one year and odd days, he had for his Successor Adrian, the Third of that Name, to whom Basilus the Emperour made present Applications, to get him to own Photius. But this Pope, on the contrary, did openly declare against him, and Confirmed what his Predecessor had done. Basilus, provoked by this Denial, Writ Adrian a Letter full of Invectives against the Bishops of Rome, but chiefly against Marinus; affirming, That he could not legally be Chosen Bishop of Rome, because of his being Bishop of another Church. This Letter was deliver'd to Pope Stephen the Vth, who succeeded Adrian in 885. Stephen made a Sober, but Smart Answer to the Emperour; in which he tells him, That he wonders how he could Write in so violent a Style to his Predecessor; for he could not be ignorant, that the Sacerdotal Dignity was not any way subject to the Regal Power; That, though the Emperour represented Christ upon Earth, 'tis onely in respect to Civil and Temporal Things; And that, as God has given him a Supream Power over the Things of this World, so has he given, by St. Peter, to his Successors, a Supream Authority over Spiritual Things. That it was the Emperour's part to destroy with the Sword the Impiety and Barbarity of Tyrants; to doe Justice to his Subjects; to make Laws; and to have Armies both by Sea and Land; but that the Care of Christ's Flock is committed to the High-Priests; a Dignity as much above that of Kings, as Heavenly Things are above Spiritual. He exhorts him to follow the Pope's Decrees, and to respect their Dignity. He charges with Blasphemy all that have offer'd to Calumniate his Predecessor Marinus, and sharply rebukes him for his giving credit to such Calumnies. He asks him, By whom he was Constituted a Judge of the Holy High-Priests? And how he knows that Marinus was not a Bishop? He excuses his being Translated, by several Instances. Moreover, he affirms, That the Pope is not liable to any Man's Judgment; and says, That Pope Sylvester caused a Declaration of it to be made by his Legates in the Nicene Council: A Fact that cannot be proved. He justifies all the Proceedings of Marinus and his Predecessors against Photius, exhorts the Emperour to put him out of his See, and to fill his Place by another Patriarchy. He complains of the ill usage Marinus had at his Court. Lastly, He commends the Emperour for designing one of his Sons for the Sacerdotal Office; and requires his Assistance for the defence of Rome and all Italy, both by Sea and Land, against the Descents and Inroads of the Barbarians.

This Letter came to Constantinople after Basilus's Decease, and was delivered to his Son Leo, Photius who succeeded him in 886. This Prince was an Enemy to Photius, upon a Jealousie he had that Photius had made use of Santarabem to put him out of his Father's favour, who had forced him again.

to a private Life. Glad therefore of this Opportunity, at his Accession to the Imperial Throne, to be revenged of his Enemies, he presently turn'd out Photius, and banished him into a Monastery in Armenia; caused Santarabenus's Eyes to be put out, sent him into Exile to Athens, and caused Stephen, his own Brother, to be chosen Patriarch of Constantinople. Which Election was approved of by Stylian Bishop of Neocæsarea, and by the other Bishops that were Photius's Adversaries: who in their own Names, and the Names of the Clergy of Constantinople, together with the Abbots and Monks of the Empire, sent a Letter to Pope Stephen. In which having related all that had passed from the beginning, in Photius's Case, and how Leo the Emperour had no sooner ascended the Throne of his Father, but he presently turn'd him out; and by that means delivered them from the Miseries they groaned under for not submitting to him; they earnestly entreat him to pardon those who had held Communion with Photius a second time: by which Indulgence, he would save a world of people, proving that it had been practised by the Church upon several Occasions. However they acquaint him, that they would not suffer the Bishops of Photius's Faction to perform any Sacerdotal Functions, whatever Permission they pretended to have from the Holy See, till they had a certain Account of the Pope's pleasure in it; and that the rest who had submitted to Photius, and were compelled to do it, were the more excusable. The Emperour writ also to the Pope; but only acquainted him by his Letters, that Photius had withdrawn himself of his own accord, and had embraced a private Life.

Letters from Pope Stephen to the Greek Bishops.

Pope Stephen, in his Answer to the Bishops that had writ to him, told them, they had just cause to turn out Photius, as by their Letters he was informed they had done; but that the Emperour having signified unto him, that he had withdrawn himself, he was perplexed what Answer to give. That there was a vast Difference betwixt being turned out, and quitting a Dignity of his own accord. Therefore not being able to pass his Judgment upon the Matter without a full Information, he had put it off; and thought it necessary that Bishops should be sent on both sides, that all Things being duly examined, and the Truth found out, he might order that which should be most acceptable unto God.

The Bishops
Answer to
phen.

The Bishops answered Pope Stephen, that the Difference found in their Letter and that of the Emperour, came from hence, That Photius's Friends, who acknowledged him for Patriarch, were obliged to give it out, that he had voluntarily quitted his Patriarchate: which they did not, who followed the Judgment of the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, and their Legates; for they look'd upon him only as a Lay-man, and said, he would never have voluntarily left it. They wondered, that having said in the beginning of his Letter, that Photius had been rejected, he should say at the latter end, that he must be brought into Judgment, as if it were doubtful whether he is a Bishop or not: that, if he were brought again into Judgment, he would be found still more guilty; and, to pass by other Matters, they did not think it convenient to pardon what the World knew he had done against Marinus. Lastly, They repeat their former Entreaties in behalf of those whom Photius had forced into his Communion, and pray him to send Circular Letters to the Patriarchs of the East, that they may approve of and confirm the Condescension which he had used towards those persons. To which they add, that it was the Emperour's Desire, who by rejecting of Photius had delivered them from his persecution; and that it was no way repugnant to the Canons, Photius being rejected, to admit to Penance such as had been compelled to hold Communion with him. This Letter was delivered to Pope Formosus, who succeeded Stephen, Anno 891.

Formosus his Reply to the Bishops Letter to Pope
Stephen.

This Pope answered to Stylian, that he was not plain enough in his Letter; that he desired Favour, without telling the manner, or for whom, whether for Lay-men or Bishops. If for Lay-men, he was willing to grant it; but if for Bishops, and that they might remain in their Dignity, he ought to observe, that Photius could not confer an Episcopal Dignity which he had not; that he could confer nothing but the Condemnation he had received; that praying in behalf of those he had Ordained, was to countenance him, who had Ordained them; that on the contrary, the Church of Rome ought to inflict severe penalties upon such persons, to purge thoroughly by that means the Church of Constantinople; that however his Clemency and Lenity inclined him to the Toleration of some things, but that there were others that could not be dispensed with; that he had appointed Landulphus Bishop of Capua, and Romanus his Legate à Latere, with whom they should consult about Matters, joyning with them Theophiladus Bishop of Ancyra, and Peter in whom he reposed a great Trust, provided nevertheless that the Condemnation of Photius should stand; and as to those whom he had Ordained, they might be received as Lay-men into the Church-Communion, if they acknowledged their Fault in Writing, and begged to be admitted to Penance; that done, he might do in conjunction with his Legates what he should think most expedient, these two Articles remaining untouched.

The last Answers of the Popes
to the Greeks.

But, whereas the Number of Bishops, Priests, and other Clerks ordained by Photius was so great, that all the Churches almost had been left destitute, if the Clergy ordained by him had been made Lay-men, therefore this Regulation could not be put in Execution in the East: So that Stylian and others were forced at last to tolerate them, and hold Communion with them; but since they should have been better satisfied if they could get the Consent of the Holy See to it, Stylian endeavoured seven Years after to get it, and writ to the Pope for it. Then was John IX. raised to the Papal See, who declined to return an Answer himself, but ordered one to be sent him in his Name, to this purpose, That he thanked him for his firm Adherency to the Church of Rome, that he hoped at last the Obstinate would submit, that Peace would be restored to the Church, and an End put to a Schism that had continued the space of 40 Years. That he expected his Predecessors Decrees should be inviolably observed; that he had the same Sentiments of Ignatius, Photius, Stephen,

Stephen, and Anthony, as his Predecessors Nicholas, John, Stephen, and the whole Roman Church; that he would deal with them, and look'd upon them as they had done, and received into the Church-Communion all those he had Ordained, upon the same Conditions they had prescribed. This was the last Answer of the Popes upon this Matter, whose Judgment the Greeks did not follow, for they left in their respective Stations not only such as had sided with Photius, but also those whom he had Ordained. From which time the Latin and Greek Churches held no good Intelligence, though it seems they did not break off Communion altogether. For both the Emperour, and the Patriarchs of Constantinople, used to write to the Pope, and the Pope to return Answer; who also sent his Legates into the East, as in the Business of Nicholas the Patriarch upon the fourth Marriage of Leo the Emperour; who, having lost three Wives without Issue, resolved to marry again. But meeting with strong Opposition against it from the Patriarch, he in the Year 901. desired Legates from Pope John IX. and made them approve of his fourth Marriage. Whereupon he turned out Nicholas the Patriarch, and put Euthymius in his place. This Business renewed the Troubles of the Church of Constantinople: for, after Leo's Death, Nicholas was restored to his See in 912, and writ a Letter to the Pope concerning it, praying him to punish those who had stirred up those Troubles against him. Some time after, having reconciled the Minds of Men, and restored Peace to the Church of Constantinople, he desir'd Pope John X. by another Letter, to endeavour a Re-union of their respective Churches, the Peace whereof seemed to have been for some time interrupted, and to re-settle a sincere Correspondence betwixt them by sending Legates on both sides, and declaring with one accord that fourth Marriages are unlawful, and therefore prohibited. It does not appear that the Pope made any Answer to it; but an Assembly was held at Constantinople in 921. which absolutely prohibited such Matches for the future, and Excommunicated all persons so contracted, till such time as they were parted. As for third Marriages, they were not absolutely forbidden; but a penance was ordered for five Years to all persons that should marry three times after forty Years of Age, or even before that Age, provided they had had Children by the first Marriage. We find that John XIII. sent Legates in 968. to Nicephorus the Eastern Emperour, to treat of a Match with his Daughter-in-law and Ortho the Western Emperour; but those Legates were slighted and abused by the Greeks, as was also Luitprandus, Ortho's Ambassador. In short, 'tis very plain, that there was in those Times no good correspondence betwixt the Latins and the Greeks; that the Latins were hated and slighted by the Greeks, and these but little regarded by the Latins. But as little Friendship as there was amongst them, yet they did not openly condemn each other, nor did their Enmity break out openly till the time of Michael Cerularius, as will appear in its proper place.

Broils of the Church of Rome with the Greek Churches.

Before we conclude this Chapter, it will not be improper to speak of the Works of Photius.

The most considerable Fruit of Photius's Studies and Labours, is his Library entituled Myriobiblon, composed by him at the Request of Tarasius his Brother, being yet a Lay-man, and Ambassador in Assyria. It contains the Argument or Abstracts of 279 or 280 Volumes of many Authors, upon various Subjects. Wherein we find Grammarians, Criticks, Poets, Orators, sacred and prophane Historians, Physicians, Philosophers, Divines, &c. not ranked according to their several Arts or Professions, but brought in confusedly, and as they came first into his Memory. As he goes forward in this Work, he seems to encrease his Labour by the length of his Abstracts. For in the beginning he sets down in few Words the general Argument of the Works he speaks of, and delivers his Censure upon them. Then he attempts a larger Account of the Matters therein contained; and towards the end he makes long Abstracts thereof, without Choice or Reflections. Thus, as his Work swells, he falls short in his Exactness; and his Spirits being wearied with the length of the Work, he grows careless and negligent, producing nothing of his own, but contenting himself to transcribe faithfully what comes in his way. And indeed the end of his Work is so unlike the beginning, that some eminent Scholars have thought it could not be Photius's. There is nothing to be seen of that Exquisite-ness, of that fine critical Wit, of that free and impartial Judgment upon the Character and Style of the Authors, or of that inimitable Exactness which appears in the beginning. Yet it is very probable, the Weariness and Negligence of Photius were the Reason why he was not so accurate towards the end as he was in the beginning. For the Number of Works mentioned in the preliminary Letter being only found compleat at the end, 'tis not credible that what Photius had done should be taken out, to substitute in lieu of it the productions of any others. Nay, it seems that Photius had purposely altered his Method, thinking it more useful to give larger Abstracts of the Works he went upon, than barely to tell the Subject. For there are some Authors of which he speaks but succinctly in the beginning, and speaks of 'em again towards the end, to give larger Abstracts of their Works. But whatever Reason induced him so to do, whether it was to make his Work less tedious or more useful, it cannot be denied but that it had been more proper to joyn the general Argument and the Censure to be given upon each Work, to Abstracts of particular places worth taking notice of. 'Twere to be wished, that Photius had performed both the one and the other in all the parts of his Work, and that he had not contented himself to do one of them only. The World however is very much indebted to him, and his Work a very rich Treasure nevertheless, including what is most curious in every Science, and preserving to us both the Memory of Authors, and some Fragments of abundance of Works, which had been unknown to us, and nothing whereof had remain'd with us, had it not been for this Learned Man's Work.

Photius's Library.

This so useful Work was found out by the Jesuit Andrew Schot, who caused it to be transcribed from a Manuscript of Cardinal Sirlet's Library, and to be compared with a Copy thereof in the Vatican, taken out of a Manuscript at Venice, written by the hand of Cardinal Bessarion. He communicated this Copy to David Hoeschelius, a Printer of Ausburg, who caused it to be Printed in 1601; being first compared with three other Copies, one in the Duke of Bavaria's Library, and the two other being procured for him by Margunius, and the Son of Henry Stephen, who had a Copy Written by his Father's own hand, and Revised by an Ancient Manuscript. Andrew Scior, a Man extraordinary well skilled in the Greek Tongue, considering the Usefulness of this Work, undertook to Translate it into Latin; and having happily compassed his Design, caused his Translation to be Printed alone at Ausburg, Anno 1606. Afterwards, both the Text and the Translation were Printed together at Geneva in 1611; and lastly, in the year 1653, this Work was Reprinted at Reuen by the Berthelins. This Edition is the largest and fairest.

The Nomocanon of Photius.

Photius his Nomocanon is another Proof of this Author's great Ability. 'Tis a Collection digested in an excellent Method, and brought under 14 different Titles, of the Canons of the Councils and Canonical Epistles, and of the Emperour's Laws about Ecclesiastical Matters. Balsamon has made Comments upon this Work, and with these Comments it appeared in publick by the care of Monfieur Justel, being Printed at Paris in Greek, with a Latin Version at the end, in 1615; the Version being first Printed both at Paris and Basil, in 1501. This Work is also found amongst Balsamon's Works (Printed at Paris in 1620.) and in the Pandects of the Canons of England, [put out by Justellus at Paris, 1662.]

Photius his Letters.

The delicateness of Photius his Style, and fineness of his Wit, as well as his Learning, and his particular Knowledge of Holy Scripture, are in a special manner conspicuous in his Letters, which appeared first long after his Works before-mentioned. They were published from a Manuscript brought from the East into England, Translated by Richard Montague Bishop of Notwich, and Printed at London, Anno 1651. They are in number 248.

The first, Written to Michael King of Bulgaria, is an Instruction directed to that Prince. To whom he proposes the Creed in the first place, as the Foundation of our Christian Faith; after which, he brings in the Decisions of the Seven General Councils, of which he makes a Compendious History. He tells him, We cannot depart from the Purity of the Doctrine settled by those Councils, without endangering our Salvation. He exhorts him firmly to adhere to the Faith, and to joyn Vertues and Good Works to a lively true Faith. In short, he lays before him the chief Duties of a Christian Prince, the Vertues that are most necessary for him, and the Manner how he ought to govern himself. 'Tis one of the best and completest Instructions that were ever given to a Prince; and, 'twould be a hard matter to find a larger, exacter, or more solid Collection of Precepts.

The Second is the Circular Letter which he sent to all the Patriarchs of the East against the Roman Church in 866. Wherein he takes occasion to reproach her with what had passed in Bulgaria, which was but newly Converted to the Christian Faith, where some Persons were found come from the West, who spread such Doctrines as were repugnant to the Purity of the Faith. First, by making the Bulgarians Fast on Saturdays, against the Laws of the Church which forbid it. Which might occasion a Contempt of the Doctrine; because when Men take upon them to slight Tradition, even in the least Things, they are easily prevail'd with to slight the Doctrine it self. Secondly, by distinguishing the first Week in Lent from the rest, and permitting them to eat in that Week, Milk, Butter, Cheese, &c. Thirdly, by detecting Married Priests. Fourthly, by causing them to be Anointed again with the Chrism, that had been already Anointed with it by the Priests; affirming, That Uncction ought not to be made by Priests. He exclaims against the Prohibition, affirming, That there is no Law reserving that Uncction to the Bishop, or prohibiting the same to the Priests. Lastly, he charges the Latin Church with breach of Faith, and falsifying of the Creed; by Teaching, that the Holy Ghost does not onely proceed from the Father, but from the Father and the Son. Upon this Article he doth enlarge very much, and alleges many Objections against the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son. Then he breaks out against those who had Taught the Bulgarians this Doctrine, and does Excommunicate them, by vertue of the Canons, about the Saturdays Fast, and the Celibacy of Priests. He exhorts the Patriarchs to joyn with him in Banishing that Doctrine, to send Bishops to Constantinople, to have those new Tenets exploded, and put a stop to those evils, that the Bulgarians may receive the true Faith. He acquaints them, That he has received a Letter from Italy, against the Tyranny of the Church of Rome. He admonishes them to receive, and cause to be received, in all the Churches of their Patriarchates, the Seventh General Council, in the same manner, and with the same Authority as the first Six.

In the Third Letter, which is to Bardas, he complains of what he was to suffer in the Place where he was, and seems to speak much like a Christian.

In the following Letters he also makes his Complaints of the Wrongs done him.

In the 18th he Writes to Michael the Emperour, about the Death of Bardas. He owns he deserved it, if he had actually conspired to make himself sole Master of the Empire, as he could not doubt of it upon the account of the Letters Michael had sent him. But he laments his Death, because he had not time to do Penance for his sins. He very much flatters Michael, and expresses to him the great desire he has to see him again shortly at Constantinople. The same Thing he innuendues, but in more flattering and pathetick Terms, in the next Letter.

In the 20th, he congratulates a Monk, for having brought over a Bishop to his Party.

In the 27th, he Writes against certain Monks, who had took upon them to depose their Abbot; and observes, that Monks ought not to set up themselves as Judges of their own Abbots, but that they ought to refer their Cause to their Superiours.

In

In the 30th, he proves the Perpetual Virginity of the Blessed Virgin; and explains that place of Scripture, where it is said, That she knew not Joseph till she had brought forth her first-born; observing, that the Particle Donec (till) doth not always imply, that the contrary to that which had not hapned before, doth happen afterwards.

In the 31st, directed to Tarasius a Nobleman, whom he calls his Brother, he Treats of Providence; and shews, why Good Men suffer in this Life, whilst the Wicked wallow in Prosperity.

In the 32d, and the Seven next following, directed to Theotistus the Abbot, he explains, in short, the Faith of the Mystrious Trinity, and of the Incarnation, against Hereticks. He also speaks smartly therein against the Iconoclasts.

The next Ten consist of Moral Exhortations to several Persons.

The Fiftieth is upon the Covenants of the Law and Gospel.

The next Three consist of Reprimands to a Collector of Taxes, for his Coverousness.

In the 54th he proves, that the Holy Mysteries ought not to be given to Infidels, or Hereticks, nor to Ill-Livers, but onely to Orthodox Persons, who live according to the Rules of Christianity.

The 55th is against a Liar.

In the 63d he gives the Reasons for the Darknes of Prophecies.

In the Sixty fourth he Confutes the Iconoclasts, and Answers to some of their Objections.

In the 72d he shews, how Contemprible our Temporal Life is.

In the 74th he pretends, That Abraham made his Servant Swear, by putting his hand under his Thigh, in honour to the Circumcision, and as a Figure of the Messias to come out of his Seed.

The 97th was Written to Basilus the Emperour, after he had turned him out of his Sec of Constantinople. He complains, in this Letter, of the Ill Treatment he had received, and particularly, That his Books were taken from him. He gives a very pathetick Account of the Persecution he suffer'd, and Writes smartly to the Emperour.

In the next Letters he continues to deplore his Misfortunes, and speaks of the Earthquake that hapned at Constantinople upon his Expulsion.

In the 102d he examines, how St. Paul could be both a Roman of Tarsis, and a Jew.

The 111th is directed to Gregory of Syracuse, his old and constant Friend. Wherein he exhorts him to stand firm under his present Ill Circumstances, and not to discontinue his Episcopal Functions.

In the 115th, he says, That the Council, which he calls Heretical, and which was made up of the Enemies to Image-Worship, has Excommunicated him, to raise a Man to the Sec of Constantinople, who lay under an Anathema. He speaks of the Eighth Council.

In the next Letters, he Writes against that Council, but chiefly in the 118th.

In the 125th he gives Mystical Reasons for the Tearing of the Veil of the Temple, when our Saviour died.

In the 127th he explains that place of Scripture, where it is said, That the Sin against the Holy Ghost shall never be pardon'd.

In the following Letters, he expounds some other places of Scripture, for which he brings Mystical Reasons, well invented, and happily apply'd.

In the 137th he affirms, That what is said in St. Luke's Gospel, that our Saviour sweated drops of Blood, is not to be understood literally; but that it is a Proverbial Expression, to signify, that the Pains he felt were so very violent, that he Sweated great drops. To which he adds, That this History of the Gospel has been left out of the Gospel by some, and particularly by some Syrians; but his Opinion is, That it ought to be received as Canonical, and to be put amongst the Scriptures of Divine Inspiration.

In the 139th he shews, That it is not impossible, as some pretended, to look upon a Woman, without sinful Thoughts.

The 144th is against Eusebius of Casarea, whom he charges with Arianism.

In the 147th, Photius examines what it is to take God's Name in vain; and says, That among the Jews, taking of God's Name in Vain, was to give it to the Idols, or make use of it for a false Oath, or prophane it in idle Discourses. That among Christians, those take God's Name in Vain, who Swear against that which is established by Law, or who attribute God's Name to Creatures, as a Being which they believe Created, as also, those who confound Images with Idols, and all Hereticks who abuse that Name.

In the 152d, he expounds, as the Pelagians do, that place of St. Paul's Epistle, where it is said, in which all have sinned; pretending, after Theodoret, that it ought not to be thus Translated, but whereas all have sinned.

In the following Letters, he Treats of divers Critical Questions.

In the 162d, he treats of the Names of God; and shews, by several Instances, that the Name of God is sometimes given to Creatures, with relation to their Excellency, Justice, or Power. He observes, the Jews were forbidden to Name God by his proper Name, and that none but the High-Priest bore it, which he did in his Forehead, Written in extraordinary and strange Letters. He adds, that the Hebrews pronounce it Aia, and the Samaritans, Fabe; that it is Written with these Four Letters, Joth, Aleph, Vau, He, signifying That is, viz. He that is, and indures for ever.

In the next Letter, he demonstrates, how it was not absolutely forbidden among the Jews, to hear or pronounce that Name, seeing Moses heard it, and taught it the High-Priests, who wore it Written upon Plates of Gold; but that they were forbidden, upon pain of Death, to pronounce it before Strangers.

In the 164th, he examines what may be the sense of the 13th Verse, Chap. 1. of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans.

The 165th contains a Fine Encomium of St. Paul's Wisdom and Eloquence.

In the 166th he explains several places of St. Paul's Epistles something dark, by reason of their Hyperbata, or Ellipsis, i. e. Transpositions, or Defects of words usual in them.

The 174th contains Photius his Apology against one of his former Friends, who now inveighed against him for his Contradictious Humour, charged him with betraying the Catholick Church, and violating her Laws. Photius, to vindicate himself from his Aspersions, maintains, That he has not undertaken, done, said, or writ any thing that might give any just ground to that Accusation; and that he could be reproached with nothing but the Hardships he had indured, and the Misery he was reduced to by the Persecution of his Enemies. Which he gives an Account of in the most sensible manner; affirming, That his Misfortunes had neither Despirited, nor made him slight the Divine Truth. His Adversary pretended, That it was ill done of him, to draw that Persecution on himself for Things of small consequence. But Photius, to justify himself, affirms, That his Enemies are our Saviour's Enemies, who rendred contemptible (as far as in them lay) the Blood of his Covenant, prophaned his Altars, and Ridiculed the Holy Christ, or rather the Holy Ghost, who had Consecrated it. He protests, he will never hold Communion with such Men, nor with those who shall receive them. Next, he deplores the Miseries of those who suffer Persecution for his sake; and complains, that he is abandon'd almost by all the World. He concludes, saying, That he ever offers Sacrifices and Prayers to God for his Prince.

In the 176th Letter, he recites the different Expositions of this Place of Scripture given by the Fathers, viz. My Father is greater than I.

In the 177th, speaking of St. Peter's Fall, he owns his Primacy.

In the 180th, and the Two next, he explains some places of the Gospel.

In the 182d, he deplores his Misfortunes.

In the 187th, he defends strongly, and rationally against Julian's Railleries, our Saviour's Advice, To sell a Man's substance to give it to the Poor.

In the 188th, he congratulates himself for his Sufferings.

In the 192d, he observes upon the Word Ephod, that it signifies, 1. A Priestly Habit. 2. A Habit like unto that worn by Lay-men. 3. The Habits of the Priests of the Heathen Gods, who imitated the Ceremonies of the Priests of the True God.

The 201. is a Letter of comfort to George of Nicomedia, upon the death of a Clerk Ordained a Priest by him. He says, That his Soul is in Abraham's Bosom, where it enjoys the Heavenly Glory.

In the 211th, he expounds a difficult place of Genesis, about the Sacrifices of Cain and Abel.

The 223d, and the three next, are likewise upon some difficult places of Scripture.

In the 228th he expounds that place in the Gospel, so frequently objected by the Arians, That none but the Father knows the Day of Judgment.

The 234th is a long Epistle, no less Christian than Eloquent, directed to Tarasius his Brother, to comfort him upon the Death of his Daughter.

In the 240th, he handles Two Critical Questions upon Scripture. The first, who was Ethan the Zeraite. The second, concerning David's Two Unctions. The third, about Samuel's serving Saul.

The 243d, and 244th consist of Ingenious Reproofs to a Friend of his, who forsook him through Timoroufness.

The 245th, is a piece of Comfort directed to a Nun, upon the Death of her Sister. Wherein he supposes her Soul to be in the Company of Angels.

The 246th, and 247th, are upon the Birth-place of St. Paul.

In the 248th, he discovers the Mystical Reasons of the Circumcision.

Monsieur Cotelierius was published in the Second Tome of the Monuments of the Greek Church, [Page 104.] a short Letter of Photius to Smaracus, Governour of the Isle of Cyprus, against that Minister's Avarice and Extortions; With a Compendious Discourse of the same Photius, shewing, that we ought to take care but of one Thing in this Life, that is, to forbear Sin; and, as we ought not to regard the Casualties and Misfortunes of this Life, nor look upon them as Evils; so Honour, Riches, Power, Eloquence, and other Advantages, either of Nature or Fortune, ought not to be regarded as a real Good.

Photius his Letter to the Patriarch of Aquileia, is much beyond the former. Baronius has inserted a Translation of it in his Annals [ad An. 883.] but it came out since in Greek by the care of Father Combefis, in the last Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum [at Paris, 1673.] In this Letter, having first highly extolled that Arch-bishop, and Complimented him about the Deputy he had sent unto him, he Argues against the Doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son, as an Error contrary to Tradition. He says, that the Popes, Leo the I. and Leo the III. have rejected that Doctrine. The first, by saying in his Letter, against Nestorius and Eutychius, chius, that the Holy Ghost doth proceed from the Father; and the last, by disproving those that had added the Filioque to the Creed, and causing it to be Ingraven on Plates without that Addition. He afterwards brings in many Arguments, grounded upon some places of Scripture, against the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son. He answers to the place alledged by the Latins, The Holy Ghost shall receive from me, and will declare it to you. He objects to himself, That S. Ambrose, S. Austin, S. Jerom, and some other Fathers have said, That the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son. He owns it to have been their opinion, and that they ought not therefore to be called Hereticks. But he pretends, their Authority must not be preferred before that of a greater Number, who spoke according to the Councils and the Holy Writ. He adds, that some Fathers of the Church may have swerved from the Truth; but, whatever respect we have for their persons, we ought not to follow their Errors. As for Instance, though Dionysius of Alexandria be ranked amongst the Fathers, the Arian Expressions he used are not to be approved; as well as some Tenets of Methodius, S. Irenaeus, and Papias. Lastly, he dares affirm, That if all the Men in the World should oppose us, we ought still to adhere to our Saviour's Words, and those of the Gospel; and, if we do seek after Proofs, next to our Saviour, we have the Suffrages of Oecumenical Councils, the greatest Number of the Fathers, the Bishops of Rome, and amongst these S. Leo, and Adrian the I. That the Legates themselves of the Holy See, which lately have been in the East Three several times, have alledged nothing contrary to that Doctrine; and that in the Council held by him, the Legates of Pope John had Subscribed unto, and approved of the Creed, without that Addition. Thus much is alledged by Photius in his Letter, to make good his Opinion.

His Work containing a compendious History of the first seven General Councils, which has been several times published separately, is nothing but part of the first Letter directed to Michael King of the Bulgarians.

But, as Photius had skill in Composition, so he was no less versed in Preaching. We have many Manuscript Homilies of his, whereof Father Combes has printed the Titles and Beginnings in the last Addition to the Biblioth. Patrum. But there are only two whole ones extant: one upon the Virgin's Nativity, inserted by the same Author into his first Continuation of the Biblioth. Patrum, and written with much Eloquence and Politeness. The other containing the Description and Encomium of a new Church in the Emperour's Palace at Constantinople, published by Codinus and Combes in their Collections.

In fine, Photius had joynd all the Subtily of the most refined Schoolmen to his other sorts of Learning. In Canisius's Collection we have some small Treatises of his in Latin, which are a convincing proof of his great Ability in School-Learning. The principal of which, is that of our Saviour's Wills, which are called Gnomical; found in the Tome added by Stuart to Canisius's Collection. It was in Greek in the Emperour and the Duke of Bavaria's Libraries, out of which Turrian took it, and put it into Latin. The state of the Question is to know, whether our Saviour had, besides a general Will to do a Thing, a particular Will to do it in such and such manner, whether he has chosen and affected the one more than the other. Photius in the first place says, That this Question, having been but slightly handled by the Fathers, is the more difficult to solve; but that 'tis an easie matter to find out all that has been written upon it, S. Maximus being the only Father that he found treating of this Question. And, to expound him, he distinguishes many sorts of Wills. The first, a Natural Will, which he calls Θέλων, being nothing but a Desire of doing a Thing, without any Reason for it. The second, a General Will, by him called Βέλων, being an Effect of Reason. The third, called Γνώμην, is an Inclination to one Thing rather than another. The fourth, is the Choice one makes of one Thing rather than another. The fifth, is the Determination of the Will to do this or that Thing. And lastly, the Execution. The Matter being thus stated, he says, that our Saviour had unquestionably a general Will attended with Reasoning, but that he has not a Will of Choice, nor of Deliberation or Design to do one Thing rather than another, because having a perfect Knowledge of all Things by his Nature by reason of the Hypostatical Union, and his humane Will being wholly subject to the divine Will, he cannot deliberate upon what he must do, nor will any Thing but what pleases the divine Will. That there being two Natures in Christ, there ought to be likewise two Wills, that is to say, two Faculties; but by reason there is but one Hypostasis, or but one person that wills, he therefore wills but one Thing, and has but one general Will, that is, but one sole Affection, because the humane Will does in all Things concur with the divine Will. This is the Opinion of Photius in this Matter, which he backs with many Reasons; and gives shrewd Answers to all Objections against it.

In the fifth Tome of Canisius we find moreover seven short Dissertations of Photius, upon several Scholastick Questions. In the first he puts this Question, How God is every where, and answers the Objections made against his Omnipresence. He shews, that God is not in the World as created Beings are, but in a more sublime manner; that he is in every Thing, and above all Things; that he is in all Things by his Operation, but that his Act being his Substance, one may truly say he is both in Act and Substance every where; that he is every where, without being of the same Substance with the Things in which he is; that he makes no part of them, not being tied, mingled, confounded, or any way changed by them.

In the second Dissertation he shews how we know God in this Life; and says, that we cannot perfectly define, or know him, but that he is known to us by a small beam of his Majesty shining upon his Creatures, and by way of Negation, that is, by denying that he is any of those Things we see. That all Men naturally know, that there is a God; because there ought to be an Eternal Being, a Sovereign Lord of all Things, and a Supreme Good by his own proper Substance.

In the third Dissertation he explains the Terms proper to the divine Nature, both in common, and such as are proper to each person.

In the fourth, he shews how we may say, that God is one, and that there are three persons in the God-head.

In the fifth, he treats of the Mystery of the Incarnation, and shews, that though the Word be every where, yet 'tis united hypostatically only to the humane Nature he took upon him.

In the sixth, he brings in the Reasons why it was expedient the Word should become Man. The first is, That Men being led by their Senses, might be raised by the sight of his humane Nature to the Knowledge of a Deity. The second, Because our Saviour had not overcome the Devil, had he not been in a condition to suffer. The third is, Because when a Man does both preach and give good Example, it is more effectual than using the Ministry of others; and that it is easier to imitate the Virtues we see practised, than those the practice whereof is required, without giving a Model of them. Thus it was requisite, that God should assume our Nature, to preach unto us himself the true saving Doctrine, and by teaching us by his own Example the practice of Virtues, to set himself up for a Model thereof.

Manuscripts of Photius.

In the Libraries of Ausburg, the Vatican, and of Monsieur Colbert, there are Manuscripts of a Treatise of Photius, entituled Amphilochia, from the Name of Amphilochius Bishop of Cizycus, who had proposed unto him a hundred Questions, which he solves in this Answer. [Some Fragments of this Treatise are extant at the end of Amphilochius's Works, printed by Father Combefis at Paris in 1644. and in his Auctuar. Tom. I. and by Turrian and others.] This Book was never yet in Print, nor these following Works of Photius, viz. his Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistles, of which there is a Manuscript extant in the Publick Library of Cambridge [but defective;] his Notes upon the Prophets, to be found in the Vatican Library; a Treatise against an Heretick, called Leontius, Bishop of Antioch, and quoted by Suidas [in the word Leontius.] To which add a Treatise against the Latins; [a fragment of which is extant in Bishop Vsser, de Symbolis, p. 25.] a Collection upon the Rights of the Metropolitans and Bishops, with a Lexicon; a Commentary upon Aristotle's Categories; and some other Works, which never yet saw Light.

A Censure upon the Genius and Qualifications of Photius.

We have nothing to add to what has been already said, concerning the Learning, the happy Genius, and Sublime Qualifications of Photius. Had he made use of 'em for the good of the Church, and not corrupted them by his Unjust Attempts, by unheard-of Violences, by Tricks and Artifices unworthy of an honest Man, he might have been happy. But his excessive Love of Glory, and his Unbounded Ambition, prompted him to those Excesses, which have blasted all his Indowments. 'Tis needless to repeat what we have already said of the various Editions of his Works: But it were to be wished, that we had a New Edition larger, and more Correct.

Theodorus Abucara.

Having spoke hitherto of Photius's Writings, I shall add a word of Theodorus Abucara, supposed to be that Metropolitan of the Province of Caria, who was Ordained by Methodius. Who, having sided with Photius, acknowledged his Fault in the Eighth Council, at their Second Session; and was received with the other Bishops Ordained by Methodius, who left Photius to submit to Ignatius. We have, under his Name, many small Doctrinal Treatises, published both in Greek and Latin by Gretzerus, and Printed at Ingolstadt in 1606, together with a Treatise of Anastasius Sinaita, [Entituled, Ὁδὸς; or, A Guide in the Right Way. As also in Auctuario Duceano, at Paris, 1624. Tom. I. p. 367.]

The Works of this Author are almost all Composed by way of Dialogues; wherein he brings in a Christian speaking with Infidels, Saracens, Jews and Nestorians, whom he Teaches the Truths of our Christian Faith, and answers their Objections. Therein he handles several Scholastick Questions upon the Mysteries of Christian Religion, and expounds the Meaning of the Philosophers Terms, which they made use of to explain them. He insists particularly upon the Trinity, and the Incarnation. Having, by Natural Reasons proved God's Existence, he endeavours to prove the Trinity after the same manner. He shews, That Christ is the Messiah; tells the Infidels, That he is God; and demonstrates Mahomet to be an Impostor. He proves the Necessity, and explains the Effects of the Incarnation; Confutes the Errors of the Nestorians, Eutychians, Jacobites, and Theopaschites in that Point; and proves, that there is in Christ but one Hypostasis, and two Natures. In his Answer to the Saracens Question upon the Eucharist, he says, in plain Terms, That the Bread and Wine set by the Priest upon the Holy Table, are changed by the Descent of the Holy Ghost into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. He Confutes the Error of the Origenists, as to the Duration of the Pains inflicted upon the Damned. He shews, against the Saracens, that it is more decent and rational to have but one Wife, than many. He shews, That God is by no means the Author of Evil. He affirms, That the Blessed Virgin never died. Lastly, he treats of several of the most subtle Questions of Divinity.

C H A P. X.

An Account of the Controversies raised by Photius, with the Church of Rome.

Photius was not satisfy'd with having divided the Greek Church by his Ambition; and laid the foundations of a Division between the Greek and Latin Church; but he also opposed the latter about several Points of Doctrine and Discipline, contain'd in a Letter which he Writ against it. Pope Nicholas the First seeing himself so vigorously Attack'd, desir'd the Assistance of the Bishops and Clergy of France, to Answer the Objections of Photius; and sent to Hincmarus, and the other Arch-bishops of Charles his Kingdom, the Ten Chief Heads objected against the Latin Church; that when they had examin'd them, they might furnish him with suitable Answers. Odo, Bishop of Beauvais, was pitch'd upon by the Bishops of the Province of Rheims, to make a Collection of the Answers which they thought sufficient to obviate the Objections of the Greeks. Aeneas, Bishop of Paris, was chosen for the same matter by the Bishops of the Province of Sens. We have the Treatise of the last; Odo's is lost: unless some will say, That 'tis the Treatise of Ratramnus, which Odo put out in his Name. But, there is more likelihood, that the Bishops also order'd Ratramnus to Write on that Subject; for, he ends his Work with these words; We have Treated as well as we could on these Matters, contain'd in the Writings you sent to us. If our Answer please you, we give God Thanks; and, if it displease you, we submit it to your Censure and Correction: Which words were, in all probability, addressed to the Bishops, who had given him order to Write on this Subject.

The Charge of the Greeks consisted of Ten Articles, which Ratramnus and Aeneas Answer in their Works.

Ratramnus's Preface is very short: He says, That the Objections made by the Emperours, Michael and Basil, against the Roman Church, are either False, Heretical, Superstitious, or Irreligious; and ought to be Contemn'd, were it not, that they give an Offence to the Weak. Aeneas's Preface is a great deal longer. He begins it with an Encomium of the Church, which is always Victorious over her Enemies; and then he laments the Division which was growing up between the Churches; for the Greeks had begun to Attack the Roman Church in the Reign of Lewis the Godly. He adds, That almost all the Heresies were hatch'd in Greece; that oftentimes the Eastern Patriarchs were Hereticks; but, that the Roman Church was so happy, as never to have had an Author of Heresie for its Bishop: That indeed Liberius yielded to the violence of the Arians, but did not altogether forsake the Faith of the Church. That the Objections which the Greeks make at present, are unjust; that they start unnecessary Questions, which are like to be the occasion of Trouble and Scandal; that he is oblig'd to prepare to Answer and Refute 'em.

The first chief Objection of the Greeks is concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. The Greeks ask the Romans, Why they hold that He proceeds from the Father and the Son, and not from the Father alone? As this is the principal head, and a Fundamental Point, Ratramnus treats of it very fully; and, of the Four Books which compleat his Work, Three are intirely Written on this Subject. In the first he proves the Doctrine of the Romans, by several Texts of Scripture; and, in the Two other, he urges some passages of the Fathers. Aeneas onely Collects those passages of the Fathers, which confirm the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and from the Son.

Answers to the Heads of Accusation of the Greeks.

Ratramnus observes, in the beginning of his Fourth Book, that the other Heads of the Exceptions, made by the Greeks, don't at all concern matters of Faith, but merely the Ceremonies and Usages of the Church, inasmuch, that it had been better not to have mention'd 'em; Since no Man is either oblig'd to approve of 'em, or reject 'em; for, the Ceremonies of the Churches may be different; which he proves by the Practices of the Primitive Church, which made use of others, than what have been since practis'd, and by the various Customs of the Churches among themselves, concerning which he cites the passage of Socrates: Whence he concludes, that it is without cause, that the Greeks inveigh against the Ceremonies of the Latins, for differing from theirs; observing, that this Exception cou'd not proceed from a motive of Piety, but from Envy or Pride. After this general observation, which Aeneas has not made, he examines distinctly the Exceptions of the Greeks, against every Article of Discipline.

The First, in Ratramnus, which is the Second in Aeneas, is concerning the Fast on Saturdays. Ratramnus observes, That all the Western Churches do not agree with the Church of Rome in this Article; and that the number of those Churches, who do not Fast on Saturdays, is greater than of those, who keep this Fast: Besides that all the Eastern Churches do not abstain from Fasting;

Fasting; since, in the Church of Alexandria, they Dine not on this day, no more than in the Church of Rome. He says, That the Custom of Fasting on Saturdays is of long standing in the Church of Rome; and he deduces the Original of it from St. Peter and St. Paul, who ('tis said) Fasted on this day, before they undertook the Dispute with Simon Magus; whence ('tis thought) this Custom among the Romans came. He grounds this Assertion on a passage in the Life of St. Sylvester, of which he will have Eusebius to be the Author: But this Apocryphal Work does not so well justify the practise of the Roman Church, as the passages in St. Augustin about this Fast, and the Reflexions that he makes on the Liberty which the Churches ought to have of following their Ancient Customs. Aeneas justifies the practice of the Church of Rome by the Testimonies of Pope Innocent the First, of S. Hierom and S. Isidore.

The Second Article of Discipline, which is of like nature with this, is, concerning the Length of the Lent-Fast. The Greeks were offended, that the Latins did not Fast Eight whole weeks, during which they were to abstain from eating Flesh, and, during seven weeks, from Eggs and Cheese. Ratramnus answers, That there is a great deal of difference, as well in the Eastern, as the Western Churches, about the number of Weeks in Lent; that some begin it six, some seven, others eight, and others even nine weeks before Easter: That if the Fast were to be kept exactly Forty days, those who Fast all the other days, except Sundays, must Fast also four days of the seventh week: That they who Fast not on Saturdays, or Sundays, ought to begin their Fast the eighth week; and that those who likewise, except Thursdays, ought to begin nine weeks before Easter, to make up the number of Forty days; and, in fine, that the Roman Church begins a kind of Fast nine Weeks before Easter, as well as the Greek Church, in that they leave off Singing of Hallelujah nine weeks before Easter: But, after all, though there are some Western Churches that Fast no more than six weeks before Easter, except Sundays, and, in which, by consequence, there are but Thirty six days of Fasting; nevertheless, for the most part, there are added four days more of Fasting in the Seventh week before Easter, and that thus they Fast more exactly than the Greeks, who keep but half a Fast in the first week, since they do not abstain from things made of Milk; and in the seven others are Three days in each week without Fasting, so that thus they Fast but 36 days. Aeneas says the same in his Answer; but he observes farther, that this kind of Abstinence is various in different Churches; that in Egypt and Palestine they Fast nine weeks before Easter; that in several parts of Italy, three days in a week they abstain from Eating any Boil'd, Bak'd, or Roasted Meat, their Meals being only of Fruits, Herbs and Pulse; that in Germany they don't usually abstain from Milk, Butter, Cheese, and Eggs; that some do not Fast on Holy Thursday; and that the Roman Church seems more reasonable in Fasting six weeks together, except Sundays, and in adding four Days to compleat the number of Forty days of Fasting.

The Fourth Objection made by the Greeks is of very little consequence, as Ratramnus observes. They are offended that the Priests shave their Beards. Ratramnus makes this appear to be a matter of no moment, which wholly depends upon Custom: That some do not shave their Beards, but cut the hair of their heads; That others shave their beards, and the Crowns of their heads, letting the hair grow that is about their Temples, and the under-part of their heads: That others shave off one part of their hair, and keep on the other: In fine, That the Custom of the Clergy is not uniform in this matter, but different; and that there had never been any dispute on this occasion; that the Apostle St. Paul seems to condemn those Men, who, in shaving their heads, put themselves under a necessity of Covering them with a Veil: That nevertheless they are not to be blam'd, who do it out of Humility: That he does not accuse the Greeks, nor should they find fault with the Custom of the Latins, who imitate the Nazarites, in shaving their Beards, and cutting their Hair. Aeneas makes use of this Example, and of some passages in the Fathers that speak of it, to justify the Custom of the Romans; and adds, That it might more reasonably be objected to the Greeks as a Fault, that they suffer their hair to grow, Et sic comam nutriant, against the prohibition made by the Apostle and the Church.

The Fifth Article is, concerning the Celibacy of Priests. Ratramnus says, That if the Greeks seem'd Superstitious in the other Objections, they are either very blind, or were worthy Compassion in this; blind, if they do not see that Continency is very much to be commended in Ministers of the Altar; and, worthy of compassion, if, knowing it, they condemn what they are sensible in their own Consciences deserves to be prais'd. He makes it appear, that the Latins do not by this condemn Marriage; but that they prefer Continency, and esteem it more becoming Priests, who ought onely to be taken up with Divine Service. Then he quotes some Canons, which oblige Bishops and Priests to Continence. Aeneas, after he has alledg'd the Texts of St. Paul, in praise of Celibacy, cites the Canons of Councils, Decretals of Popes, and Passages of Fathers, in Favour of Celibacy.

The Sixth Article is, touching the Prohibition to Priests of the Roman Church, to Anoint the Foreheads of those that are Baptiz'd with Chrism. Ratramnus says, That there is no better ground for this Objection, than for the other; since the Greeks have no other reason for doing it, besides the Custom of their Church, and no Law at all. On the the contrary, he maintains, that the Custom of the Romans is grounded upon the Gospel, and the Acts of the Apostles, where the Imposition of Hands, for bestowing of the Holy Ghost, is reserv'd to the Apostles, and consequently to Bishops, who are much above Priests, and who have particular Offices, as conferring Holy Orders, Consecrating the Holy Chrism, Holy Oils, &c. He adds, That it was upon the account of their Dignity, that it was forbidden to Priests to Anoint the Forehead of the Baptized with Holy Chrism. He affirms, That this was establish'd by St. Sylvester, as it is Written in the Pontifical, and quotes a Passage of Pope Innocent on this Subject. These two Authorities are likewise urg'd by Aneas, with a passage of Gelasius.

The Seventh Objection which the Greeks make against the Latins, is false in matter of Fact; They charge 'em with ordaining Bishops and Deacons, without conferring on them the Order of Priesthood. Ratramnus denies that this is practis'd in the West. He owns, that their Deacons are chosen in order to be made Bishops; but, he makes it appear, that this is not contrary to the Canons of the Church; whereas the Greeks violate 'em, in choosing Lay-men to make 'em Bishops. Aneas does not absolutely deny, that there are some among the Latins who allow of this Ordination; but he excuses their Practice upon this account, that it seems that he, who receives the Pontifical Benediction, is likewise honour'd with the other Benedictions, and that (it may be) they believ'd, according to S. Jerom, that the Ministry of a Priest makes part of a Bishop, on which he quotes the passage in S. Jerom on the Epistle of Titus.

The Eighth Objection of the Greeks is against the Primacy of the Patriarch of Rome; to whom they wou'd prefer, or at least equalize the Patriarch of Constantinople; because that City was then Equal, if not Superiour to Rome. Ratramnus asserts this Primacy; Because Jesus Christ, who is the Head of the whole Church, said to St. Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church: And St. Paul tell us, That he was among the Gentiles, as St. Peter among the Jews: That these two Apostles having receiv'd of Jesus Christ the Supremacy of the Church, Quos ambos Ecclesie principatum à Christo positos, were sent to Rome, as appears both by undoubted History, and by the Monuments of their Martyrdom: That it was reasonable, that the Prince of the Apostles should be sent to the Chief City of the World, to the end, that as it had subdued all the World to its Empire, it should likewise prelide over all the Kingdoms of the World, by its Primacy of Religion, and the Dignity of Apostleship. He alledges some Passages of Councils and Popes to establish this Preheminence of the Church of Rome. He affirms, That the Popes were always Presidents at General Councils by their Legates. He makes it appear, that the Patriarch of Constantinople, is neither to be preferred, nor equalled with that of Rome; and that he ought to be satisfied with the second place, which was allowed him by the Council of Constantinople, without entrenching on the Rights of other Churches, and the Determination made by the Council of Nice. Aneas makes a Collection of the Canons of some Councils, and the Decretals of Popes about the Prerogatives and Dignity of the Church of Rome: He quotes some Spurious Tracts attributed to St. Sylvester, as also the Donation of Constantine, and ends his Treatise with an Invective against the Condemnation of Ignatius, and the Advancement of Photius to the Patriarchate of the Church of Constantinople.

The Greeks made two more Objections against the Latins, which these two Authors think worth their Answering, because they plainly appear to be false; however, they ought not to be forgotten. The First is, that they made use of River-water to make the Chrism. The Second is, that they offer'd a Lamb at Easter with the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, according to the Custom of the Jews. Walafridus Strabo relates, that there were some particular persons, who Consecrated and offer'd a Lamb at Easter. An example of this usage, is found in the Life of S. Uldarick, and a Prayer is to be seen in the Roman Order, for the Benediction of the Lamb on Easter-day; but this was not a general Custom, nor Authoriz'd by all the Latin Churches. There is much more of Argument in Ratramnus's Work than in Aneas's, which is little else but a Collection of passages on the Questions propos'd.

CHAP. XI.

Several Constitutions made in Ecclesiastical Assemblies, about the Discipline of the Church.

NO Princes and Bishops were ever so careful in making Rules for the Discipline of the Church, nor have so frequently renew'd and confirm'd them, as the Kings and Bishops of France in the Ninth Century. These Rules were made by them in several Assemblies, of which here follows a particular Account.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, held in 809.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle

IN this Council the Question about the Procession of the Holy Ghost was debated, which was started by a Monk of Jerusalem, called John; and, it was there determin'd, That He proceeded from the Father and the Son: And, to confirm this Determination, Charles the Great Wrote a Letter to Pope Leo the Third, in which he confirms this Doctrine by many passages out of the Fathers. He also sent Bernarius, Bishop of Wormes, Jesse, Bishop of Amiens, and Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, to that Pope, to oblige him to confirm this Definition, and to allow that the Creed might be Sung with the Addition of the Filioque. A part of the Conference, which these Deputies had with Leo on that Subject, is yet extant; by which it is evident, that this Pope did allow of their Definition; but that he was not pleas'd with this Addition made to the Creed, or that it should be Sung with it. It was also propos'd in this Council, to make some Orders concerning the Discipline of the Church, and the Lives of the Clergy, but it was not put in Execution.

The Sixth Council of Arles, in the year 813.

The Sixth Council of Arles.

IN the year 813, Charles the Great Assembled several Councils for the Reformation of the Church, design'd in the Council of Aix la Chapelle; Eginhard speaks of Five; One held at Mentz, Another at Rheims, a Third at Tours, the Fourth at Chalons, and the last at Arles: In this order these Councils are reckon'd by this Author and Reginon. Nevertheless, that of Arles, and that of Rheims, are dated in the Month of May; and that of Mentz not till June; and, the two other have no date at all. We follow the Order in which they are found in the Collection of Councils, among which the Council of Arles is the first. The Bishops met in St. Stephen's Church at Arles, on the Tenth of May, and after they had taken their places, according to the time of their Ordination, and Prayed for the Emperour Charles, who had Assembled them; John, Arch-bishop of Arles, and Hebridus, Arch-bishop of Narbonne, who were the Emperour's Deputies, told them, That His Majesty earnestly pray'd and desir'd them to Instruct the Churches that were committed to their Charge, with Saving Doctrines, and to be Exemplary to them for the Sanctity of their Lives and Manners. They added, That in Acknowledgment of the King's Kindness and Favours, it was fit that Prayers should be order'd to be daily made in the Church for the Health and Prosperity of His Majesty. The next day the Bishops being met again, began their Constitutions with a Profession of Faith: Then they order'd, that Prayers should be made for the Emperour, which were the Two first Articles of this Council. In the Third, the Metropolitans were order'd to take care, that their Suffragans should be well Instructed in Sacred Things; That they should understand what belonged to Baptism, The Holy Scripture, and the Canons, that they might be able to Teach, Preach to, and Edify all the World by their Knowledge and Piety. In the Fourth, the Laity is forbidden to turn the Priests out of their Churches, without the Bishops Sentence, who ought not to prefer them to any Churches, unless he be well assur'd of their capacity. The Fifth forbids the Laity to take Bribes of Priests for presenting them to Churches. The Sixth enjoyns Bishops to Regulate the Lives of Monks and Canons. The Seventh says, That none but persons of known Honesty, and of considerable Age, shall have leave to come into Nunneries; and that those who shall come in there to Celebrate Divine Service, shall withdraw as soon as it is over; That neither young Clerks, nor Monks, shall be permitted to come thither, unless it be to see some of their Relations. The Eighth ordains, That no Monastery shall receive a greater number of Maids than it can maintain. The Ninth, that Tithes shall be paid. The Tenth, that the Rectors and Vicars shall take care to Preach, and Instruct their Congregation. The Eleventh forbids Marriages between Relations. The Twelfth recommends Peace and Unity. The Thirteenth Obedience to the Bishops, and Concord between Priests and the Civil Magistracy. The Fourteenth regards the Relief of the Poor in time of Famine. The Fifteenth is against False Measures. The Sixteenth forbids keeping Markets on Sundays, and

Working

Working in Servile Employments. The Seventeenth enjoyns Bishops to Visit their Diocesses every year, and to hinder Oppression and Violence. The Eighteenth commands, that Priests shall keep the Holy Chrism under Lock and Key; that they shall give none of it to any person as a Medicine, or for any other Reason whatever; because it is a kind of Sacrament which ought not to be touch'd but by the Priests. The Nineteenth recommends to Fathers and God-fathers Care of the Instruction and Education of their Children, both Natural and Spiritual. The Twentieth declares, that the Churches shall not be depriv'd of their Tithes, nor of the Goods belonging to them. The One and twentieth forbids Burials in Churches. The Two and twentieth ordains, that no Pleadings nor Assemblies shall be held in Churches, or in the Porches of Churches. The Twenty third is to prevent the Frauds and Cheats that are us'd in the Sale of the Goods of the Poor. The Twenty fourth forbids Bishops to permit any strange or fugitive Priests in their Diocesses, and enjoyns 'em to send 'em back to their own Bishops. The Twenty fifth orders, that those who hold any Benefices, or have Goods belonging to Churches, shall be obliged to contribute to the Repairing of those Churches. The Twenty sixth, That Publick Sinners shall doe Publick Penance.

The Council of Mentz, in the same year.

THIS Council was more famous and numerous than the preceding, and made more Canons: The Council of Mentz
It was holden in St. Alban's Church, the 8th of June, in the year 813. There were four Deputies from the Emperour present at it, Hildebaud, Riculphus, Arnoldus, and Bernarius. The Assembly divided themselves into three Classes: The Bishops made up the first, who had before them the Holy Scripture, the Canons, and the Pastoral of St. Gregory: The second consisted of Abbots and Monks, who examined the Rule of S. Benedict. The last was composed of Noblemen and Judges, who consider'd what concern'd the Civil Government. After a Fast of three days, they made Fifty six Canons. In the Three first they speak of the Three Vertues, Faith, Hope and Charity. In the Fourth it is ordain'd, That Baptism should be Administered, according to the Roman Ritual, and that it shall not be Administered, but at Easter, or Whitsuntide, unless there be a necessity for it. The Three following Canons are for settling Peace, and to prevent the taking away another Man's Goods unjustly. The Eighth grants to the Bishop the disposal of the Revenues belonging to the Church. The Ninth, and the following, contain several Orders concerning the Lives of Prebendaries and Monks, to whom they prohibit Worldly Pleasures, and the Secular Employment. The Prebendaries or Canons are there distinguish'd from the Monks, and the *Canonesse*s from the Nuns, who are of the Order of S. Benedict. The Two and twentieth is against Vagabond Clerks. The Three and twentieth sets at liberty the Clerks and Monks who have been shav'd, and Cloister'd by force. The Twenty fifth enjoyns Bishops to appoint some others to Preach in their stead, when they can't perform this Duty. The Twenty eighth commands Priests to wear Stoles always as Badges of the Sacerdotal Office. The Thirty Second and Thirty third recommend the Observation of Litanies, or of Rogations. The Thirty fifth that of Ember-weeks. The Thirty sixth the Celebration of High Holy-days, which are Easter-Day, and all the Week, Ascension-Day, Whitsuntide, the Feasts of St. Peter and St. Paul, the Nativity of St. John, the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, the Dedication of St. Michael, the Holy-days of S. Remigius, S. Martin, and St. Andrew; Four days at Christmas, and the Octave of Christmas-day, the Epiphany, the Purification, with the Holy-days of Martyrs and Confessors, in each Diocels, where the Body of any one of them lies, and the Day of the Dedication of the Church. The Fortieth maintains the ancient Right of Churches, in being made Sanctuaries, and forbids that those shall be deliver'd up, who come thither for Refuge, till their Lives are secur'd. The Three and fortieth declares, that one Priest cannot Sing Mass alone. The Four and fortieth reminds the People, that they ought to make frequent Offerings in the Church, and to give one another Pax. The Five and fortieth exhorts the Faithful to be careful in the Instruction of their Children. The Six and fortieth threatens those with Excommunication, who shall not refrain from Drunkenness. The Eight and fortieth forbids the Singing any Lewd or Immodest Songs, in going round any Churches. The Fiftieth appoints the Titles of the Vidames, and Defenders, or other Officers of Bishops, Abbots, or their Clergy-men. The One and fiftieth forbids the Translation of Reliques without leave. The Four and fiftieth orders, that Relations in the Fourth Degree shall not be allow'd to joyn in Matrimony. The Five and fiftieth forbids Parents presenting their own Children at the Font, or Marrying one's God-daughter, or one's Partner in the Suretyship at a Child's Baptism, or even the Person, whose Son or Daughter one has brought to be Confirm'd. I have omitted some Canons that are mention'd in the foregoing Council, Vidames] were such persons, as supplied the Bishops places, as Temporal Lords: Judges of Bishops Temporal Jurisdiction. Now they are become Lords, holding of the Bishoprick they belong to.

The Council of Rheims, in the same year.The Council of Rheims,

AFTER a Profession of Faith had been drawn up in this Council, and the Clergy had been admonish'd to doe their Duty, the Gospel was Read. The manner of Celebrating the Divine Service, and of Administring Baptism, was explain'd. The Canons, the Rule prescribed by S. Benedic't, the Book Written by S. Gregory, concerning the Duty of Pastors, and some Sentences out of the Fathers were Read. What relates to Penance was examin'd, that the Priests might know how they were to hear Confessions, and what Penances they were to enjoyn. Eight of the Chief Vices were also discours'd of in this Council; and the Bishops were told what they ought to Study, and how they should Preach. They were directed to lead a Chast, Sober, and Modest Life, and to doe Justice. As for Priests, they were enjoyn'd not to Remove from a Meaner Benefice to one that was Greater; and it was order'd, that such as should obtain any by Presents, or Money, should be depos'd. Several Canons were made concerning the Lives of Clergy-men and Monks, as also concerning the preservation of the Goods of the Church, and the keeping the Sabbath-day Holy. This is all that is contain'd in the Four and forty Articles, or Canons of this Council, which are nothing but the Summary or Abridgment of the Matters that were transacted there.

The Third Council of Tours, in the same year.The Council of Tours.

THE Prelates of the Province of Tours took no less care than the other Bishops to Reform the Lives of the Clergy, and the Discipline of the Church. In a Council that was conven'd in that Town, in the same year 513, they made Fifty one Canons upon the same Subjects. The Bishops are charg'd by them, to Instruct themselves and others; to lead a Sober, Modest Life; to abstain from Games, Shows, and Hunting; to take care of the Poor, &c. The same is enjoyn'd the Priests, and other Clergy-men. 'Tis forbidden to bestow the Order of Knighthood on any Man, before he be Thirty years of Age. In short, most of the Canons mention'd in the foregoing Councils are treated of in this.

The Second Council of Chalons, in the same year.The Council of Chalons,

THIS Council is the best of the Five, held that year by Charles the Great's Order, for Reforming the Church, and particularly the Clergy; but it is the most considerable for the number of Canons, and for the Matters of which it treats. In the first Canon, it condemns, with a great deal of strictness, the Avarice, Sordid Gain, and Exactions of the Bishops, and other Clergy-men. Among other things, it enjoyns the Bishops not to be a Charge to the Rectors of Parishes in their Visitations; and their Arch-deacons not to demand of them any Fees, or any thing for the Holy Chrism. It will not have them to oblige the Clerks, whom they Ordain, to Swear that they are worthy, nor that they will never doe any thing contrary to the Canons, and will be obedient to their Ordinaries. It does not prescribe many things to the Monks, because it observes, that those of that Province are to follow S. Bennet's Rule, and consequently need but to keep exactly to their Rule to live as they ought. It requires the Re-establishing of Publick Penance, for Publick Sins. To stop, or prevent the Differences that happen among Heirs, concerning the Right of Patronage of a Church, it orders, that it shall not be divided, and that none of the Clergy, nam'd by different heirs, shall be suffer'd to perform their Function there, till they are agreed together, and have Elected one and no more. Some persons were so devout as to be Confirm'd many times; this Council forbids this abuse in the 27th Canon. In the Thirtieth it is forbidden to dissolve the Marriages of Slaves. Some Women, with a design of being Divorc'd from their Husbands, brought their Children, at the Administration of Baptism, or Confirmation: Now, this Council orders, that these Women shall be oblig'd to doe Penance, and not be Divorc'd. The 32d intimates, that we ought not to make Confession of our Corporeal Sins onely, but also of the Spiritual. These are the words of the 33d. Some say, That we ought to Confess our Sins to God alone; others affirm, That they ought to be Confess'd to Priests: Both are done with great Benefit in the Holy Church; so that we Confess our Sins to God, who does forgive them; and, according to the Apostle's Institution, we Confess them to each other, and Pray for each other, that we may be Sav'd. So the Confession which is made to God Purges from Sin; and that which is made to the Priest, informs us, how we ought to be Purged from them: For, God is the Author of our Salvation, and grants it us, sometimes in an Invisible manner, by his Omnipotence, and sometimes by the Operation of Physicians. Which Canon only proves, that the Confession which is made to Priests ought to be attended with an Humble Confession of Sins to God; or, it is to be only understood of Venial Sins; it being certain, that it is necessary, that Mortal Sins be Confess'd to Priests, that we may obtain a Forgiveness of those Sins. This Council, in the next Canon, exhorts the Priests to act like Physicians, and like Judges, and to enjoyn Salutary and Suitable Penances to Sinners. It lets Penitents know, after this, that Repentance, if it be true, ought to be attended with a Change, both in the Heart, and Course of Life. It enjoyns all Confessors to take their Measures, concerning the Injunction of Penances, from the Holy Writ, and the Canons, Canons, or from the Custom of the Church; and, to reject such Penitential Books, the Errors of which are unquestionable, and their Authors uncertain, which have occasion'd the Death of many, because they onely injoynd slight Penances for great Sins. In the Nine and thirtieth Canon it is order'd, that Prayers be said for the Dead at every Mass. The Fortieth orders, that such Clergy-men as have been, or shall be degraded for their Crimes, be shut up in Monasteries, that they may lead there a Penitent Life. The One and fortieth is against such Priests as change their Church. The Two and Fortieth is against those who give Churches to Priests, or take Churches from them, without the Consent of the Bishops. The Three and fortieth is against certain Ivish-men, who giving themselves out to be Bishops, did ordain Priests and Deacons, without the consent of the Ordinaries: Their Ordinations are here declared to be void. The Four and fortieth is against those Priests, that follow such Trades as are forbidden them. The Five and fortieth is against those who go in Pilgrimage to Rome or Tours, thinking, by this means, to obtain more easily the Remission of their Sins; and who, in hopes of this, the more freely commit them: But the Council approves the Piety of those, who, having first Confess'd their Sins at the place of their abode, and there done Penance, and begun a new Course of Life, go afterwards in Pilgrimage, by a motive of real Devotion, and with a sincere design of expiating their sins. The Six and fortieth imports, that a great deal of caution ought to be us'd in what relates to the Receiving of the Body and Blood of Christ. That 'tis to be fear'd on one side, if it be too long put off, this delay should occasion the loss of the Soul; but that on the other side, if 'tis receiv'd Unworthily, not considering the Lord's Body, those that Receive, are like to eat and drink their own Damnation. So that all persons ought to try, and examine themselves before, abstaining, for some time, from Carnal Works, and cleansing the Body and the Soul. The Seven and fortieth orders, that all Christians shall receive the Eucharist on Holy Thursday, except those to whom it is forbidden to take it, on the account of the great Crimes which they have committed. The Eight and fortieth recommends the Anointing of the Sick, which ought to be perform'd by Priests, with an Oil Consecrated by the Bishop; adding, that a Remedy so fit to cure the Infirmities of the Soul and the Body, ought not to be neglected. The Nine and fortieth renews the Inhibition made by the Council of Laodicea, to Celebrate the Sacrament in private houses. The Fiftieth orders the keeping of the Lord's Day Holy. The One and fiftieth recommends Charity between Superiours and Inferiours. The Two and fiftieth commands the Abbesses to Rule the Nuns committed to their Charge, with Holiness and Piety, and to be themselves a good Example to them. The following Canons are some Directions for Abbesses and Nunneries. There are, in all, Sixty six Canons of this Council.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the year 816.

Lewis the Godly having Conven'd a Numerous Council at Aix la Chapelle, in the year 816, The Council caus'd two Rules to be drawn up there, by Amalarius, out of the Writings of the Holy Fathers, the one for the Canons, and the other for the Canonessees. They were Read and Approv'd in this Council; which order'd, they should be follow'd and practis'd by all Canons and Canonessees. The Emperour confirm'd them with his own Authority, and sent Copies of them to the Bishops, that they might take care to have them put in Execution. I do not here give the Abridgment of those two Rules, because they wholly consist of some Extracts of the Canons of the Councils, and of the Writings of the Latin Fathers.

The Council of Celichith in England, in the same year.

TWas not the French alone that were endeavouring to reform the Discipline of the Church; The Council The English, mov'd by their Example, did the like. Kenwolfe, King of the Mercians, of Celichith, caus'd a Council to Meet in the same year 816; The Arch-bishop of Canterbury presided in it, and Twelve Bishops of the different Kingdoms in England were present; Eleven Canons were made in it: In the First, the Bishops declare, That they will preserve the Faith and Orthodox Doctrine in their Purity, which they receiv'd from their Fathers. In the Second they say, That when a Church is built, it ought to be Consecrated by the Bishop of the Diocess; that afterwards the Eucharist ought to be set there, with Relicks in a Chest; and that 'tis requisite the Figure of the Saint to whom it is Dedicated, be placed in some part of it. The Third is an Exhortation to Concord and Unity among the Bishops. The Fourth gives a Bishop Power to Elect an Abbot, or Abbess, yet with the Advice and Consent of the Society. The Fifth enjoyns that no Irish-man be suffer'd to discharge any Ecclesiastical Function out of their own Country. The Sixth confirms the Ancient Canons, and all Acts ratified and confirmed with the Sign of the Cross. The Seventh is to prevent the Alienation of the Goods of the Church. The Eighth charges Layicks, or Secular persons, not to take possession of Monasteries, or alter their Institution. The Ninth directs each Bishop to have a Register, in which the Orders of the Synods, which he is to observe, are to be set down, with the Name of the Arch-bishop, on whom he depends, and of the other Bishops in the Province. The Tenth imports, that after the Death of a Bishop, the Tenth part of his Estate shall be distributed to the poor, or to pious Uses; and that Prayers shall be said for him throughout his whole Diocess, that he may obtain the Kingdom dom of Heaven, and dwell with the Saints. The Eleventh orders the Bishops to do nothing in the Diocesses of their Brethren without their leave. The Arch-bishop is excepted, because he is the Head of the Bishops. It charges the Priests not to perform any other Functions than such as are left to them by the Bishops, as that of Paprizing, and giving the Extreme-Unction. It establishes some Penalties against those that did neglect to administer Baptism; and finally it orders, that this Sacrament shall not be perform'd by Sprinkling, but by Dipping.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the year 817.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle. IN the following year Lewis the Godly held an Assembly of Abbots and Monks at Aix la Chapelle, and caused some Constitutions for Monks to be prepar'd by Benedict of Aniane, charging that Abbot to see them kept. These Constitutions are Eighty in all. An account of Abbeys, and of what they were to pay to the Crown was also drawn up in that Assembly.

The Council of Thionville.

The Council of Thionville. IN the year 821, there was an Assembly at Thionville, which made some Laws against those who should offer to Misuse or beat a Clerk, and the time of their Penance is fixed. These Ecclesiastical Laws were confirm'd by an Edict of Lewis the Godly, which is at the end of them.

The Capitularies, or Sanctions of Lewis the Godly.

The Capitularies of Lewis the Godly. Lewis the Godly* following his Father's Pious Example, made several Laws, and Wrote some Letters about Ecclesiastical Matters. In the First year of his Empire he pass'd an Edict in Favour of the Spaniards who fled into France from the Persecution of the Saracens. Another Edict made in his Third year, on the same Subject, is extant.

In the year 816, he Confirmed the Constitutions that were made at the Council of Aix la Chapelle, and gave Orders, that they should be follow'd by Letters to Magnus, Arch-bishop of Sens; to Frotarius, Arch-bishop of Bourdeaux; to Arnoldus, Arch-bishop of Salsburgh, and to other Metropolitans. In the same year he also made Twenty nine Capitularies on the Discipline of the Church. In the first he takes care to secure to the Church those Revenues that belong to it. In the Second, he leaves to the Clergy and the People the Liberty of choosing their own Bishops. In the Third he confirms the Rules of Prebendaries. In the Fourth he orders, that a good use be made of the Oblations given at Church. In the Fifth he leaves to the Monks the power of chusing their own Abbots. In the Sixth, he forbids the conferring Holy Orders on Slaves. In the Seventh, he enjoyns the Clergy not to receive such Oblations, as might cause the Children, or Relations of those that make them, to be depriv'd of their Inheritance. In the Eighth, the Priests are forbidden to give the Tonsure to any Person, with a Design to get a part of his Estate. In the Ninth the Laity are charg'd not to turn the Priests out of their Churches, or Install any there without the Bishop's consent. In the Tenth, he orders, that every Church have a piece of Ground belonging to it, and that no Priests apply their Revenues but to the Service of the Church. In the Eleventh, that every Church have its Priest: That the New Villages, where New Churches shall be built, pay Tythes to those Churches. The Thirteenth forbids to Pawn the Holy Vessels, unless it be for the Redemption of Captives. The Sixteenth is against the Simoniack Exactions, that were practis'd by some Bishops of Italy. The Seventeenth renews the Canon which forbids Priests to dwell with Women. In the Eighteenth, 'tis ordered, that the Bishop shall send the Chrism to such Rectors of Parishes as are remote, by one of those in their Neighbourhood; but that all those who dwell but a League, or a League and a half out of Town, shall come to fetch it as usually. In the Nineteenth, the Bishops are exhorted not to be a charge to the People, when they go either to Preach, or to Confirm. In the Twentieth 'tis decreed, that none presume to make young Maids, Nuns; or Boys, Monks, i. e. without the consent of their Relations. The One and twentieth obliges Widows not to take the Veil, till Thirty days after their Husbands decease. The Three following Canons are concerning Ravishers. The Five and twentieth renews Gelasius's Canon, against those that either debauched any of the Virgins who had been Consecrated to God, or ran away with them. In the Six and twentieth 'tis enjoyn'd, that no Maid shall receive the Veil before she be Five and twenty years of Age, according to the Canons of Africa. The Seven and twentieth forbids the Trial by the Cross. In the Eight and twentieth the Bishops are charg'd to Instruct the people of their Diocess. The last forbids Marriages between Relations, and the sharing of Churches between Co-heirs, and promises to take care to prevent this and many other things.

In the year 817, this Emperour published some Constitutions for the Monks; which Orders were drawn up at Aix la Chapelle by Benedict of Aniane.

Some mention an Edict of Confirmation made by Lewis the Godly, which, they say, he confirmed in favour of Pope Paschal II. the pretended Donations made by his Father to the Roman Church; but that Piece plainly appears to be supposititious, and does not deserve the least credit.

The Capitularies of the year 819, are almost all of them Civil Laws. Some of them, nevertheless, relate to the Church; particularly in the last Capitulary, published by Baluzius, page 619.

In the year 821, he Wrote a Letter to the Monks of Aniane, to exhort them to follow the Rules that had been established in their Monastery by their Abbot Bennet. He promises them his protection on the account of the Love he had for him, and confirms their Abbey in a Free Tenure, and the liberty they had of chusing their Abbot.

In the year 822, at the Request of the Bishops Conven'd at Thionville, he made some Laws, by which he enjoy'd very severe punishments for those, who calumniate, revile, misuse, or put to death any Clergy-man.

In the same year he made a Capitulary in favour of the Nuns of S. Croffe at Poitiers.

In the year 824, he caus'd some Instructions to be compos'd for Jeremiah, Arch-bishop of Sens, and Jonas, Bishop of Orleans, his Deputies at Rome, in the Affair of Images, according to the prescription of the Council of Paris; and he Wrote a Letter to Pope Eugenius the Second on that Subject.

In the year 826, there was an Assembly at Inghilheim, where some Laws were publish'd against those that should offer any violence to persons consecrated to God.

In the year 828, he appointed Four Councils, viz. at Meutz, Paris, Lions, and Tholouse; commanded a Solemn Fast, and sent Deputies to these Councils, to whom he gave some Instructions; and, on this occasion, he Wrote two Letters, which were address'd to the People.

In the year 829, he caus'd the Decrees of these Four Councils to be examin'd in an Assembly held at Wormes, and extract'd some Capitularies out of them.

In the year 832, he made an Edict, to confirm the Re-establishment of the Monastick Rule in the Abbey of St. Denys, which Monastery was originally made up of Benedictine Monks. The Monks had taken the Habit and way of living of Canons, except some of them, who had retir'd within a House that belong'd to the Abbey, by the Advice of Benedict and Arnoldus, who, being come to Reform that Abbey, had not been able to effect it; and had advis'd those who had a mind to follow S. Bennet's Rule, to withdraw from the rest. After this, Hilduin having demanded, that the Rule should be re-establish'd in that Abbey, a Council held at Paris deputed Aldricus, Arch-bishop of Sens, and Ebbon, Arch-bishop of Rheims, to doe it. Now when these were come to the Abbey, they found three sorts of Religious Men there; some of them said, They never profess'd a Monastick Life, and that they desir'd still to live like Canons; Some others confessing, they had profess'd a Monastick Life, were sorry that they had left it, took again the Habit of Monks, and led a life conformable to its Rules; and a third sort had always lived like Monks in a separate House. These two Arch-bishops settl'd again the Monastick Order in the Abbey of St. Denys. But, afterwards, many of those who had resum'd the Monastick Habit and Way of Living, repented the doing it, protested against it, and presented their Petition to the Emperour against Hilduin, and against Aldricus and Ebbon; but, it being rejected, they resolv'd to return to their Duty, and made three Charters, by which they bound themselves to follow S. Bennet's Rule; one of which was presented to Lewis the Godly, who confirm'd it by the Edict of which we are now Treating.

In the year 834, he made the City of Hamburg an Arch-bishoprick, as soon as Anscharius should be ordain'd Bishop of it; and he assign'd him all the People in the North of the Elbe, by his Declaration of the 15th of March in the same year.

The Sixth Council of Paris, held in the year 829.

Lewis the Godly imitating his Father Charles the Great's piety and zeal, caus'd four Councils to be conven'd in the year 829, to reform all the Churches in France. These Councils met at Meutz, at Lyons, at Tholouse, and at Paris; but we have nothing left of them all, but the Constitutions of that at Paris, which are excellent and very well Written. The Bishops begin with an Exposition of the True Faith, in which they show, That Good Works ought to be joyn'd with Faith, that it may become Saving. They add, That it must be acknowledg'd, that the Church is but one Body, which is divided into two principal parts, the Sacerdotal and the Regal. On this point they quote the passage in S. Gelasius, and S. Fulgentius. Then they enlarge on the Learning and Vertues that are requisite in a Minister of the Church. They order, that unless necessity require it, none shall be Baptiz'd at any other times but those prescribed by the Canons; and that the God-fathers shall take care to instruct their God-children in the Faith. They renew the Inhibition made, to hinder such as were Baptiz'd out of the Solemn Times, being sick, from entering into Holy Orders. They exhort all Christians to remember the Promises they have made at their Baptism. They enlarge upon the Qualities and Vertues which shole ought to have that enter into Holy Orders. They enjoyn the Bishops not to Alienate the the Revenues of the Church, and prescribe to them the use they ought to make of them. They also order, that they receive the Chalice thus, with their Clergy, and hold Spiritual Conferences. They forbid them to prefer to any Church such Clergy-men, as are preferred to them by Ladies, unless they find them duly qualified, and of sound Morals. They exhort them to do their duty towards the Flock that is committed to their Charge, and not use it as their own, but as belonging to Christ, and to assist it Corporally and Spiritually. They command, that Provincial Councils were not still held every year, and that, how beneficial that Practice was to the Church. They remove the attempts of the Suffragan Bishops. They condemn the Priests that become either Farmers, or Men of Business, and wandering Clergy-men and Monks. They charge the Bishops not to send to several distinct parts such Priests as belong to some particular Church. They recommend Residence to the Priests, and a constant attendance to instruct their Flocks. They charge the Bishops not to put their Clergy to exercise in their Visitations. They condemn severe Penitences to be borne, and charge the Priests to fulfil, as they ought, the Minister of the Keys. They order the Bishops not to give the Sacrament of Confirmation, after they have eaten, and believe that Sacraments ought to be administered Fasting, unless on extraordinary occasions. They would not have them bestow the Holy Ghost by imposition of hands, which is the Sacrament of Confirmation, at any other times than at Easter, and on Whit Sunday. They renew the Ancient Canons against the Crimes of Uncleanness. They will have Degraded Priests put into a State of Penance. They forbid the Admission of Foreign Clergy-men. They advise the Abbots to be an Example to their respective Societies. They exhort the Clergy to behave themselves Modestly, Decently, and Innocently. They will not have such Women as have newly left a Worldly State to be admitted [i. e. Abbesses] of Nuns. The Priests are forbidden giving the Veil to Widows without the Bishops consent, and also Consecrating Virgins; and the Abbesses are forbidden giving the Veil to Widows or Maids. They will not have the Veil to be given to Widows, till some time after the death of their Husbands. They do not permit Women to touch the Sacred Vessels, nor to give the Sacramental Habits to the Priests, and much less to give the Eucharist, as, through a great abuse, they did in some places. They charge all Priests and Canons not to go into any Nunneries, nor will they have Mass said in any other place than Publick and Consecrated Churches, saying, That 'tis better not to hear Mass, than to hear it where it ought not to be said. Priests are order'd not to let Mass when they are alone. They order, that, as there is one Bishop in each City [or Town] there ought to be a Priest in each Church; and they forbid one Priest Officiating at several Churches. After they have spoken of keeping the Lord's-Day Holy, according to the Ecclesiastical Laws, they resolve that an Address be made to the Prince, to desire, that he may Command, that no Pleadings, nor Markets be kept on that Day; and that neither Husbandmen, nor Day-labourers Work on that Day in the Countrey. They forbid all Vexations and Unlawfulness. Finally, they will not allow those Penitents, who are not yet reconciled to the Church, to stand God-fathers to Children. This is what is handled in the first part of this Council, so far as it relates to the Clergy, and to the Priestly Office. The Second concerns Princes, and the Laity. The Bishops give some very good Instructions to Kings concerning their Duties. They recommend to them Justice, Moderation, Clemency, and other Royal Vertues. They declare to such Subjects, that they ought to obey them, and reverse their Power which comes from God. They exhort the Faithful to come to Church, to join in the Prayers, and admonish them to behave themselves reverently there. Finally, they charge those who cannot come to Church, nevertheless to pray to God, and perform the Duties which they owe him. These Articles being fram'd, they sent them to the Emperor Leun, and added Twenty seven Chapters to them, which they put to His Majesty to Enact, and caused them to be put in Execution, that the aforesaid Articles might continue and be in force.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the year 836.

*The Council
of Aix la Chapelle.*

IN the year 836, in the Month of February, there was an Assembly of Bishops at Aix la Chapelle, in which some Constitutions were made, which are divided into three parts. The First is, concerning the Verities of Bishops: The Second, touching the Learning, Manners, and Doctrine of other Clergy; And the Third, of the Vertues and Duties of the Emperor, and his Children, principally in what relates to Church Affairs. A Remonstrance was prepar'd afterwards by the said Council, Address'd to King Pepin, and the Great Men of His Kingdom, on the occasion of their having seiz'd, to their own use, the Goods of the Church; and, that the said Remonstrance might be more effectual, it was attended with three Books, that contain'd the Examples and Passages in the Old and New Testament; as also, some Ecclesiastical Laws, which make it appear, that 'tis a Crime to take away, by force, those Goods that are Consecrated to God and the Church. Eginhard tells us, That this Remonstrance wrought the desired effect, and that Pepin yielded to these Advice, which were given him by his Father and the Bishops; so that he caused the Goods which had been taken from the Churches, to be restor'd.

The Council of Thionville.

IN the year 844, Lewis the Godly's three Sons met at Thionville, and held there an Assembly of The Council Bishops, of which Dreux, Bishop of Metz, was President. They exhorted these Princes, First, of Thion- To keep a Peaceable, and Friendly Correspondence with each other. Secondly, To Name Bi-ville. shops to the Vacant Churches. Thirdly, To restore to some Monks the Places and Revenues that ought to belong to them. Fourthly, to hinder the Laity from taking into their possession the Goods of the Church. Fifthly, That if some Reasons of State obliged them to give some Abbeys, or Houses of Canons, or Nuns, in Commendam; at least they should give order, that the Bishop, with some Abbot, might take care of those Monasteries and Religious Houses. Sixthly, To restore to the Whole Ecclesiastical Order, the Authority which they had, to cause the Discipline of the Church to be put in Execution, and oblige Sinners to doe Penance.

The Council of Verneuil.

IN the same year 844, a Council was held at Verneuil, in which, Ebron, Bishop of Poitiers was The Council President, with Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Sens, Hincmarus, Arch-bishop of Rheims, and the Abbot of S. Dennis, who assisted at it, bore the Character of the King's Commissioners. The Council addresses their Constitutions to King Charles. First of all they exhort him to mix Severity with Mercy, and Govern his people with Justice. They pray him to send his Commissioners to apprehend, and punish those disorderly Clergy-men, who condemn Apostolick Discipline, and break the Holy Canons, to hinder several Monks, that they abandon not their Profession, to compel certain wandering Monks, and Clergy-men to return to their Monasteries and Churches, to Nominate a Bishop for the Church of Rheims, and confirm the Ordination of Agius to the Church of Autun; to Adjourn the Debate about the preference granted to Dreux the Bishop of Metz, to a more Numerous Council out of France and Germany; and lastly, to cause those Revenues of the Church to be Restored, which Lay-men have unjustly possessed themselves of.

The Council of Beauvais.

IN 845, Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Sens, Erchanraus, and Nine Bishops, or Arch-bishops of Charles's The Council Kingdom, with Hincmarus, Arch-bishop Elect of Rheims, met in April at Beauvais, and composed Eight Canons, which they presented to that Prince, to require of him a Restitution of the Revenues and Privileges of the Church. In this Synod Hincmarus was Ordain'd.

The Councils of Meaux, in 845. and Paris, in 846.

THE Bishops of France being very earnest to perfect the Reformation of Discipline, which they The Council had begun, met in May 845, at Meaux; and in February following at Paris, where they composed 80 Canons for that end. The Six first were the Decrees made at Couleine, near Mons, concerning the Honour of the Church, and Peace of the State, which had the Approbation of the Paris King, and Bishops. Those that follow, to the 13th, are the Canons made at the Synod at Thionville. The Four next are taken out of the Council held at Lorris in Anjou, about the Authority of the King. To these are added the Decrees of the Council of Beauvais, concerning the Revenues of the Church. The rest were made either at Meaux, or Paris. In them the Bishops declare, that their Mansion-Houses ought to be Holy, and not frequented by Secular Men, or Women. And for this reason it is, that they desire the King, that when he takes up his Lodgings in them, in his Journeys, that he would not bring any Women into them. They also earnestly beg of him, that he would not suffer his Retinue, or Guards, to Pillage the Towns they pass through, or take what they please of the people without paying for it: They exhort him to maintain the Bishops in their right of doing their Office, without Molestation, and executing the Holy Canons. They condemn the custom of certain Bishops, who very seldom, or never Visit their Diocesses. They revive the Ancient Laws concerning the Translation of Bishops, the Honour due, to Metropolitans, holding Provincial Councils, and Residence, &c. They forbid taking Oaths about things Sacred. They demand a Restitution of the Ancient Hospitals, and the Freedom of Monasteries. They condemn them that are Simoniackly Ordain'd. They forbid the Suffragan Bishops to execute the Functions of Bishops. They command the Bishops to Consecrate the Chrism upon Holy Thursday onely, and not to take any thing for the Distribution of it. They forbid Lay-men making themselves Masters of Ecclesiastical Revenues, or choosing a Steward of them without the Consent of the Bishop, to whom the Disposal of them doth properly belong. They strictly prohibit any Priests to Administer Baptism in any other places than in the Churches where the Fonts stand; and that Clergy-men should be employed in any other business besides what belongs to the Church. They ordain, that the Priests, or Clergy of another Diocese shall not be received without Letters Dimissory. They forbid, that any Strangers shall be admitted into Holy Orders, till they have continued one year in the Communion of some Church, or Monastery, or in the City, and declare themselves against all Ordinations without a Title. They require all Prebendaries to live in one House together, and to have the same Hall, and Dormitory. They order the Bishops to have special care of the Cardinal-Titles established in the Cities, or their Suburbs. They forbid Usury to all Christians. They order, that a Bishop shall Excommunicate no Man, but for a Publick and certain Crime, and then shall not pronounce that Anathema against any Man, but with the consent of his Metropolitan; and after he hath given the Admonitions commanded in the Gospel. They charge the Monks to abide in the Monasteries, and not to meddle with Secular Affairs. They petition the King not to entertain any Prebendaries in his Service, though they present themselves to him, unless the consent of their Bishop be first had, and desire, that he may be the person that Ordains them. They forbid, that a Monk should be put out of his Monastery, till his Bishop be consulted about it, or be either himself, or Deputy present. They repeat the Laws against those that invade the Revenues of the Church, as also against Ravishers, and such Nuns as live a disorderly life. They revive the Ancient Laws against the Jews. They forbid Burying the Dead in the Church, as by an Hereditary Right. They agreed, that the Bishop should sue to the King for a Commission, engaging the Judges to obey them in every thing that respected the Ministry. They exhort the Great Men not to suffer any Disorders in their Houses, and to be particularly careful that the Priests of their Chapels should live pious Lives. They testify their earnest desires, that the King would bestow those Chapels onely upon such Priests as would exact the Tithes that belong to them, leaving the Parish-Churches to a Curate, with a charge to uphold the Chapels, and Celebrate Divine-Service in them. And they add, that if the King gives them to Lay-men, they ought not to receive the Tithes, but they ought to be given to the Curates, who Officiate in those Chapels. They pray him to give order, that no Pleas be held in any Court, during Lent, or Easter-week. Lastly, They desire him to confirm the Constitutions of Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly.

These Constitutions being presented to King Charles, then at Epernay, and the Nobles opposing some of them, The King having commanded the Bishops to retire, till he consulted about them, confirmed onely Nineteen of them, which ought to be understood of the last of those Constitutions, which were made in the Councils of Meaux, and Paris. For the Canons of the Councils of Couclines and Thionville, were confirmed, and published by his Authority before, and are met with at the Head of his Capitularies.

The Capitularies of King Charles the Bald.

After the Constitutions before-mention'd, there follow Nine made at Toulouse, An. 843. upon the complaints of certain Priests, who were over-charged by their Bishop.

In the First of them the Emperour orders, that the Bishop should do nothing against the Priests, by way of Revenge, because they have complained against them.

In the 2d he commands, that the Bishops should exact no more every year of the Priests, than a

† A Muid is a large French Measure, for Corn, containing Five Seams and Five Bushels of London Measure; and, for Wine, it contains 36 Gallons.

Muid of Wheat, and as much Barley; † a Muid of Wine, with a Pig of Six pence, or Two Sols-value, which was before determined by the Councils of Toledo, and Brague.

The 3d obliges them that dwell within one League, or a League and half of the City, to send this Present by their Servants; but in all places at greater distances, the Bishop shall appoint a place in every Deanery to have them brought to. He exhorts the Bishops not to suffer those Officers, whom they shall appoint to receive those Presents, to exact them with force, but they should kindly accept what the Priests shall bring of their own accord.

The 4th advises the Bishops, in their Visitations, not to stay at every small Church, but to make choice of some of the Principal Churches, where the Curates of the Lesser shall meet them, and bring their People to be Instructed and Confirmed. So that they shall Visit but one Church in five, and the Curates of the other four shall come to them, with their People, and bring with them every one Ten Loaves, a Rundlet of Wine of 16 Gallons, a good quantity of Oats, a fat sucking Pig, two Pullers, and some Eggs for the Maintenance of the Bishop and his Attendants. That the person where the Bishop Lodges shall accommodate him with nothing, but Wood, and Household Utensils; and that the Bishop shall be careful that his Servants do his Host no damage, either in his House or Gardens.

In the 5th he confines the Bishops, that they shall not Visit above once in the year; and, if they do it oftner, they shall be no Charge to their Curates in their other Visits.

In the 6th he orders, that if the Bishops do not Visit in person, they shall not exact any thing of their Curates for it, nor oblige them to be at any expence to entertain others; and that they shall not carry along with them a great number of servants.

The 7th exhorts the Bishops not to multiply Parishes without necessity.

The 8th declares, that the Bishops shall have no power to decline the observation of the Orders, under a pretence that it belongs to them to make and explain Canons; That they ought to explain them in their genuine sense, and not elude them by corrupt glosses; and, if they do otherwise, he will teach them, by the Judgment of a Synod, and his own Royal Authority, how they shall explain them aright.

The 9th says, that the Bishops shall oblige the Priests not to come to above two Synods a year, at the set-times for them, appointed by the Canons of the Church, and that they shall judge Priests with Justice.

King Charles published also, at the same place, another Constitution in favour of the Spaniards and Goths, who were then fled into Catalonia. — He likewise published at Epernay the 19 Canons made at the Councils of Meaux and Paris, in 846.

In 853, he confirmed the Canons of the Council of Soissons, and made several Constitutions for the better support of Ecclesiastical Discipline, of which I shall speak afterwards. Which were published and confirmed at the Synod held at Verbery the same year; which made some other Canons also, confirmed by Charles's Authority. — In December, the same year, he nominated several Ecclesiastical and Lay-Commissioners, in all the Provinces of France, and gave them several Heads of Instruction to act by in their Office; among which the Second concerns the Honour of the Church.

There are also one or two about the Revenues of the Churches and Monasteries in the Constitutions made at Attigny, in 854. — In his Letters-Patents of the same year, given at Verbery, Aug. 23d. King Charles confirms to the Prebendaries of the Church of Tournay, the property of the Revenue he was possessed of, and limits the number of them to 30.

In an Assembly of Bishops and Lords, held Anno 856, at Bomevil, they petition the King to put the Monasteries in Order, and to execute the Constitutions made at Couleine, Beauvais, Thionville, Verneuil and Soissons, and declare all those things Null, that shall be made in prejudice to those Laws. They threaten him with God's Judgments, if he doth not perform their desires.

In 857, King Charles made two Constitutions at Quiercy, which he sent to the Commissioners of his Realm; by which he gave them power to bring all Offenders to Civil or Ecclesiastical punishments, and particularly Ravishers.

In 862, he put out a severe Edict at Pista against Robberies, and other publick Disorders, very common at that time, in which the Bishops joyn with the King, and condemn those Malefactors to Canonical punishment, which the King condemned to Civil. In 866 there was a Constitution made at Compeigne, about the Liberties and Privileges of Churches, and the Authority of Bishops.

But, above all, his Edict of 869, made at Pista upon the Seine, is the most considerable of all that he made about Ecclesiastical Discipline. In it he declares himself the Defender of the Bishops Authority, and Liberty of the Churches. He orders all his Ministers to respect their Power, execute their Commands, and preserve the Churches in the enjoyment of their Privileges. He requires all Earls, great Lords and Judges, to give the Bishops their due subjection; and, on the other side, that the Bishops should not encroach upon the Rights of the Earls, Lords and Judges. He commands the Bishops to doe no Injustice, either to the Clergy or Laity, under their Jurisdiction; and that their Curates should give the Lords of their Parishes the respect due to them. He enjoyns the Bishops not to reject those Clergy-men that are presented to them by Abbots, Abbeses, or Lords, to serve in their Churches, if they are not worthy of blame for their Conversation, or Doctrine. He renews the Constitution, which forbids the Lords requiring any thing of the Clerks they present. He forbids them Excommunicating any persons, who were not full convicted of the Faults they were accused of; and, who after admonition to amend and repent, have not obstinately refused to submit. He recommends Peace, Union and Friendship among his Civil Magistrates, Bishops and Clergy. He orders his Bishops to defend the Privileges granted to their Churches by the Church of Rome, and by the Charters of his Royal Progenitors, and that they be careful to have the Rents paid that are due to them.

The King having received Intelligence at Pisti, that Lotharius was dead, went immediately to Lorraine to be Crown'd King of it. And being arrived there in Sept. 869. after Adventius, Bishop of that City, had declared in the Name of all the Bishops and People, that they all accepted him for their King, he took an Oath to preserve the Honour and Privileges of their Churches, to doe Justice impartially to every Man, according to the Laws, and protect that Kingdom. After this Hincmarus, who performed the Ceremony of the Coronation, and Ordain'd some Bishops, being Admonish'd by Adventius, and other Bishops, which belonged to the Province of Treves, that this Action would prejudice the Rights of their Metropolis, made a Declaration, That it would be no prejudice to the Rights of the Province of Treves, because that Province, and that of Rheims were like Sitters, so firmly united, that they made, but as it were, one Province; since the Bishops of both met at one Synod, observed the same Canons, and, among the Arch-bishops of Treves and Rheims, the most Aged always took place: but yet, were it not so, he ought not to be accused for meddling with the Jurisdiction of another Province, by his own Authority, or of putting his Sickle into the Harvest that did not belong to him, since he had not concerned himself with that Province, but at the Request of the Bishop, and out of Charity. Lastly, That they ought to look upon it, as a special Favour of God, that Charles was Crowned King at Metz, because heretofore his Father Lewis the Godly, who was descended of Clovis the French King, who was Converted by S. Remigius, and Baptized in the Church of Rheims, where he was Anointed and Consecrated King, by a Christ sent down from Heaven, which they still have at Rheims: That Lewis the Godly was Crowned Emperour in that City, and after he was Deposed from his Imperial Throne by the Conspiracies of his Enemies, he was restored, and was Crowned again in the same City, and in St. Stephen's Church, whose Name was a good Omen, because it signifies a Crown.

After

After this Declaration, he asked the People, If the Coronation should be Celebrated before the Altar, and whether that Prince should be Consecrated by the Holy Unction. The People having testified their Approbation by their Acclamations, they Sang Te Deum, and the King was Crowned by the Priestly Benediction of the Bishops. This Constitution is very remarkable.

In the year 874, Charles Judged some Ecclesiastical Causes at Attigny, at the Request of the Bishop of Barcelona. The First was about a Complaint made to him, That one Thyrifus, a Priest of Corduba, had called the People together at a Church of Barcelona, and had taken away from him almost two thirds of his people; That he Celebrated Mass, and Administred Baptism without his permission. That he caused those people to go to his Church on the Feasts of Nativity and Easter, which ought to be at his Cathedral, and gave them the Sacrament. The King Recited the Canons, which condemned the practice of that Priest. The Second complaint, made by the Bishop of Barcelona, was, That another Priest had engaged the Inhabitants of the Castle of Terracine, not to submit to his Jurisdiction. The King order'd, that the Canons in that case should be observed. The Third was against two private persons, who having Intercepted the King's Letters, had possessed themselves, the one of St. Stephen's Church, and the other of certain Lands belonging to the Church of S. Eulalia. The King commanded, that if this could be prov'd, his Commissioners should give an Account what Letters had been Intercepted, that being reported to the Council, it might be Examined by them.

Lewis, the Emperour of Italy, being dead, Aug. 8. 875, Charles was Crowned Emperour at Rome on Christmas-Day of the same year, by Pope John the VIII; and, at his return, received the Crown of Lombardy at Pavia, and the Confirmation of his Imperial Crown in an Assembly of the Nobles and Bishops of that Countrey, held Feb. 876, at which the Pope was present in person. After this, to acknowledge the Obligations he had to the Pope, he made a Constitution, in which he decreed, That all persons should pay an especial Veneration to the Holy Roman Church, the Head of all other Churches; that no Man should dare to attempt any thing in violation of her Power and Privileges; but should enjoy her full Authority, and exercise her Pastoral care over all the Church; that they should particularly honour the Supreme Bishop, and Universal Pope John; that his Decrees should be received, with all due regard, and Obedience be given him in all things he hath right to: He forbids all persons encroaching upon the Lands and Revenues of the Church of Rome. He then commands, that due respect be paid to the Sacerdotal Authority and Clergy; that all should submit to the Imperial Authority, and none should be so bold as to resist his Orders. That Bishops should freely exercise their Function, and punish Offenders; that they be careful to Preach. He enjoins the Lay-men which dwell in the Cities, to be present at the Assemblies of the Church on Festival-days, and forbids them having private Chapels in their Houses. He requires, that Bishops should have Colleges for their Prebendaries near the Church; that Prebendaries should live according to the Canonical Rules, and be subject to their Bishop. He forbids Clergy-men dwelling, or conversing with Women, as also Hunting. He provides for the preservation of the Church-Revenues, and payment of Tithes. He commends Friendship between the Nobility and Clergy. This was published and received at Pontigon in July 876.

Lastly, Charles the Bald held an Assembly of his Nobles at Quiercy, June 877, in which he made several Constitutions by his own Authority, and propounded others to his Nobles for their Advice. The Constitutions now made about Discipline, are these. The First was about the Honour and Liberty of Churches, so often repeated. By the 2d he confirms the Privileges of the Abbey of S. Mary of Compeigne, granted by the Pope, received by the Bishops, and Authorized by the King's Letters. The 3th secures the Revenues of Vacant Arch-bishopricks, and Bishopricks. In the 12th he nominates several Bishops, Abbots and Earls to dispose of his Alms, which he should give by Will, after his Death. The rest contain several Directions for doing what is necessary for the good of his Kingdom and Children after his Decease. Two days after he renewed again the Constitution about the Honour of Churches, and Authority of Bishops; he confirmed several Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws, and promised to put them in Execution. He provides for the preservation of the Estate of an Earl lately deceased, till his Son was in possession of it; and for the security of those Churches who have lost their Bishop, Abbot, or Superiour, till they have a Successor. These are the last Constitutions of Charles the Bald, who died August the 23th following at Frankfort, in the 70th year of his Age, and 59th from his first Coronation. He was a Lover of Justice, Religion, and of the Church, and was the nearest of any Prince of his Race, to Charles the Great, in his good Qualities and Vertues.

The Council of Mentz held Anno 847.

of Mentz.

THIS Council was held under Rabanus, An. 847. It was made up of 12 Bishops, some Suffragans, several Abbots, Monks, Priests, and others of the Clergy. The Bishops and Clergy made one body, and had the Gospels, Canons, and Fathers laid before them; The Monks the Rule of St. Benedict, that they might unanimously endeavour a Reformation of the Clergy, and the Monastick Life. —First, They particularly recommended it to the Bishops, that they should take care that the people be well-instructed in the Fundamentals of Religion; and, for that end, certain Homilies should be composed in the Vulgar Tongue. Secondly, That Baptism should be administred according to the Rites of the Church of Rome, and at the times appointed by the Pope's Decretals.

They

They exhort all Men to Peace ; and order, That not onely those Men should be Excommunicated, who attempt any thing against the King, or State ; but those, who, by surprize, contrary to his good affection to Religion, obtain of him the Lands and Revenues that belong to the Church.

They leave the whole disposal of the Church's Revenues in the power of the Bishops, and forbid the Clergy to make use of them, to augment their own Estates, or dispose of them. They secure their Tythes, and other Rights, to the Churches. They revive the Canons concerning such Employments as are forbid Clergy-men and Monks.

They forbid Monks to have any possessions of their own, to cover the enjoyment of worldly things, which they have renounced, and to take on them any Cure of Souls, without the consent of the Bishop.

They forbid Abbesses to go out of their Monasteries without great necessity, and without the leave of the Bishop.

They revive the Ancient Canons of the Council of Ancyra against Man-slayers. They declare, touching the Administration of the Sacraments to the Sick, that the Priests ought to require of them a sincere Confession, without imposing on them any rigorous Penance, but onely to bring their sins to remembrance, and comfort them under them, by the Prayers of their Friends, and by their Alms, and so Absolve them, upon condition nevertheless, that if they recover their health, they shall undergoe what Penance shall be imposed on them ; after which they may Administer the Unction, and then the Communion, as their Viaticum.

They are not afraid to grant such Malefactors, as suffer for their Crimes, if they confess their sins, and are penitent, the honour of a Christian Burial ; and that their Offerings be received, and Masses said for them.

Lastly, After they have forbidden all Contracts of Marriages, either Incestuous, or within the Degrees of Consanguinity, prohibited by the Laws ; they command, that Penances, proportionable to Mens Crimes, shall be imposed upon them ; that publick Sinners shall do publick Penance ; and they, whose sins are secret, shall undergoe private Penance.

This is almost all that is contained in the One and thirty Canons of this Council. We shall not here speak of the Council of Mentz held the next year, against Goteschalcus, nor of those that concern his Affair, nor Ebbo's, because we have spoken of them at large in another place.

The Council of Pavia.

THE Emperour Lotharius, and his Son Lewis, held an Assembly at Pavia, Anno 850. in which the Bishops made 25 Articles, or Constitutions. The Council of Pavia.

In the First they order, that the Bishops should have some Priests, or other Clergy-men witnesses of their most secret Actions.

In the Second, That they should not neglect not onely to celebrate Mass publickly on Sundays and Festivals, but, if it be possible, offer that Sacrifice every day in private.

In the Third they order, that their Meals should be temperate, and that they should entertain Pilgrims and Strangers at them ; whom they should entertain with Pious Discourses and Exhortations.

In the Fourth they forbid the Pleasures and Luxury of the World.

In the Fifth they advise them to Study the Holy Scripture ; to explain it to their Clergy, and to Preach upon it to the people.

The Sixth imports, that the Bishops should be careful that the Priests discharge their Duties well in the Government which is entrusted to them. That the Arch-Priests should go to the Heads of Families, to exhort publick Offenders to doe publick Penance : That in difficult cases they should apply themselves to the Bishops, and the Bishops should consult their Brethren.

The Seventh orders, that the Priests should examine whether the Penitents perform the works of Penance ; That the Absolution of publick Penitents is reserved to the Bishops, and that no Priest shall Absolve them but in the absence of the Bishop, and with his Allowance, because the Imposition of hands was reserved to the Apostles.

The Eighth engages them to Instruct the People in the saving nature of the Sacrament of Unction, of which the Apostle St. James speaks [c. 5. 14.] and make them sensible, that they can hope to receive the wished-for effects of that Mystery, viz. Remission of sins, and health, onely when they desire it with a sound and full Faith. That because it often happens, that sick persons know not the force of that Sacrament, or think their Distempers inconsiderable ; or forget to desire it, because their Minds are taken up with the pains of their sickness ; the Priests of the place ought to put them in mind of receiving it, and invite the Priests of his Neighbourhood to be present at the Administration. But if the sick person be in a state of Penance, he ought not to bestow it on him, till he be reconciled to the Church ; because he that is not allowed to receive the other Sacraments, is not in a capacity of receiving this.

The Ninth advises Fathers of Families to Marry their Daughters as soon as they are of Age, and condemns them to Penance, if they happen to be debauch'd, either by their Negligence, or Connivance ; and forbids, that the Benediction be given them, who Marry after they are De-flowered. It also says, that Marriage is forbidden those, who are in a course of Publick Penance.

The Tenth is against Ravishers, and declares, that they cannot lawfully Marry the persons they have forced; and allows such persons no Absolution, but just at the point of Death.

The Eleventh orders, that they who commit a publick crime in any place, shall be excluded from Communion by the Bishop of that place, and put to Penance, and not be received to Communion by any other.

The Twelfth declares, that they who are deprived of Communion, and put to Penance for their Crimes, may not exercise any publick Offices, but can't be prohibited from taking care of their Domestick Affairs. That such persons as refuse to doe Penance, ought to be Excommunicated and Anathematized, after all proper means is used to make them submit to their Duty. Yet this is not to be done without the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Bishops of the Province.

The Thirteenth orders the Bishops to commit the care of Priests of smaller Parishes to the Arch-priests.

The Fourteenth commands those Bishops who have suffered the Monasteries of their Diocesses to be demolished, to have them immediately repaired and re-built.

The Fifteenth imports, that such Hospitals, as are subject to Bishops, shall be govern'd according to the Orders of their Founders: That those that are under the protection of the Church, shall be Govern'd by the Heirs of the Founders, according to the Rules of their Institution, who shall hinder all embezzelling the Revenues, and mis-employment of them.

The Sixteenth resolves, that they will represent to the Princes the Misdemeanour of those Hospitals, that are under their protection.

The Seventeenth orders, that all Christians should pay their Tythes, which shall be employed for the Maintenance of the Clergy, and the Necessities of the Church, according to the Disposal of the Bishop.

The Eighteenth importeth, that they will not suffer any of those Priests, or Clergy-men, who are called Acephali, not under the Discipline of any Bishop; and that those Priests, that celebrate Divine Service in Noble-mens Chapels, shall be such as are approved by the Bishop; or if they be out of other Bishopricks, shall have Commendatory Letters from their own Bishop: That they will not suffer wandering Clerks, nor any other persons without a Mission.

The Nineteenth forbids putting Clergy-men upon Secular Employments.

The Twentieth imports, that they shall be Excommunicated, who suffer Jews to be either the Judges, or Receivers of Tribute.

The One and twentieth forbids Usury, and obliges such, as have made advantage by it, to Restitution.

The Two and twentieth imports, that they who neglect the care of Orphans and Widows committed to their charge, shall be admonished of it, and exhorted to be very diligent and watchful for them; but if they will not doe it, they shall petition the King to appoint them other Guardians.

The Three and twentieth is against those Clergy-men and Monks, who, going up and down the Cities, stir up unprofitable Questions, and disperse Errors. They order, that such Men shall be apprehended by the Bishop of the place, and carried to the Metropolitan; and if it be found that they have vented such Doctrines through Ambition, and not for the Instruction, or Edification of the Faithful, they shall be punished, as the Disturbers of the Church's Peace.

The Twenty fourth forbids the ill practices of certain Peasants, who Married their Sons very young to full grown Women, to be abused by them, and prohibits such Marriages.

The last condemns certain Magicians to very severe penance, and deprives them of Absolution till the point of Death, who boasted, they could make persons Love, or Hate one another by their Art; and, whom they suspected of having killed some Men by it.

The Council of Soissons, Anno 853.

The Council
of Soissons.

THIS Council hath Three parts. 1. Some Canons. 2. The Acts of Eight Sessions, about the Affair of Ebbo, and the Clerks Ordained by him. 3. Some Constitutions published by the Emperour. What is contained in the Acts of this Council, we have related in the History of Hincmarus. So that there remain onely the Canons and Imperial Constitutions.

The First is nothing else but an Abridgment of the Judgment given against Ebbo.

The Second is concerning Heriman, Bishop of Nevers; who, being a Man of a weak Judgment, had committed several Misdemeanors in his Office; and, notwithstanding that, desired to continue in his Function. They order Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Sens, his Metropolitan, to go to Nevers, to put that Church in order, and bring away Heriman to Sens along with him, till the Summer, in which he was worst in his Mind, was over, and send him again when he was grown something better.

In the Third they reform what had passed in the busines of the Bishop of Chartres. They question'd the Validity of his Election, and maintain, that he is not fit to be a Bishop. It was order'd, that he should either justify himself, or retire; and they charged Hincmarus, Pardulus and Agius, to certify him of their Resolution. He thinking himself Innocent, and being confirmed in that Opinion by the Testimony of the Clergy and Laity of Chartres who were present, he thought it his best time time to appear, which he accordingly did, and said, That it would be a great piece of pride in him to assert himself worthy of so great a Dignity, but if any Person accused him of any Crime, he was ready to defend himself. No Man appearing, the Council order'd, that certain Commissioners chosen by Wenile, should be sent to Chartes, to examine the ordination of Burchard, give in their Report, and ordain him Bishop.

In the Fourth they relate, that the Bishop of Mans being troubled with the Palsie, wrote to the Council to be excused for not coming to it, and to desire the Bishops to pray for him, both so long as he lived, and after his Death. That the Bishops promised to do their Duty, and gave Order to Amaricus, Arch-bishop of Tours, his Metropolitan, to go to the City of Mans, and to do what he saw convenient for the advantage of that Church in this juncture.

In the Fifth they declare, that they had deposed and banished into remote Monasteries, those Monks and Priests of the Abby of St. Medard, who had conspired to secure Pepin, Charles's Nephew, who was shaved and shut up in that Abby.

The Sixth is against a Deacon of the Church of Rheims, who was accused of putting out Edicts in the Emperour's Name, they debar him going to any Synod, and confine him within the Diocess of Rheims, till he should clear himself.

The other Canons are some Propositions, which they intended to make to the King; That he would send Commissioners to set up Divine Service in the Monasteries. That he would permit the Churches to enjoy their Ancient Privileges. That he would pay to the Church the Ninth and Tenth part of those Revenues, which belonged to it of old. That he would not hold any Courts in any place Consecrated to the Service of God. That none should protect those, whom the Bishop would punish by the Laws of the Church. That on the contrary, incestuous Persons, and others guilty of like Crimes, should be refer'd to the Bishops by the Civil Judges. Lastly; That there should be no exchanges made of the Churches Lands or Revenues, without the Consent of the King. In Answer to these Demands, the Emperour made Twelve Constitutions, in which he granted them more than they had desired of him. For in the First, he orders that his Commissioners shall make inquiry, with the Bishop of the place, and in the presence of him who hath charge of the Monastery, concerning the Life and Behaviour of those that dwell in it; that he will regulate the Discipline, and cause them to make the Repairs carefully. That the Churches shall be adorned, and furnished with Tapers and Books, &c. That he will compose a Verbal process, in which he will put the Name of the Abbot, or Superiour of each Monastery, the time of his enjoyment of it; the number of the Canons and Monks, or Religious Persons, to increase or diminish it, &c. That they should inquire, whether the Heirs of such as founded the Monastery, did not detain the Revenues their Ancestors had given them. That they should inform themselves of the Revenues of Chapels, and several Monasteries farmed out,--and if they had a care to keep up the Buildings, and provide all things necessary for Divine Service. That they should inform themselves of such Estates of the Church, as are given in Fee-simple; and of those Persons which pay Ninths and Tenths: That they shall forbid, that any pleading be had in Church Porches, Quires, or any other places, or in Lent. That they shall declare, that those that study to revenge them whom the Bishops have chastised for their Faults, shall be excommunicated, and pay a large Fine. That they shall order the Judges to assist the Bishop in his Visits, and constrain the excommunicated to do their Penance. That they shall declare, that he will give no Letters to set Farm to the Church Revenues. Lastly; That they shall forbid making any exchange of the Church Land, or Slaves, without the consent of the King.

The Council of Verbery, anno 853.

THE same Bishops that were convened in the Council of Soissons in February, met at Verbery in August the same Year, where they wrote a Letter, in which they declare, that they would settle Heriman in his Bishoprick of Nevers, and that he was not deprived of it for any Fault he had committed, but only for the Infirmary of which he was cured. They prevented the giving by a precarious Title, an Abby and Farm which belonged to the Abby of St. Denys. Lotharius in this Assembly, caused the Constitutions which had been made at Soissons, to be read over and received.

The Council of Rome, under Leo the IV.

IN 853 Pope Leo IV. called a Council at Rome in December, in which he confirmed the Canons of a Synod held under Sergius II. in 826. and made some Additions to them. He also composed some new Canons, and deposed Anastasius a Priest of the Church of S. Marcellus, who having left his Church, fled out of the Countrey, and would not return after several Admonitions given him, nor justify himself before the Council. There are Thirty Eight Canons made by the Synod held by Sergius. The six first concern the Lives, Knowledge, and Manners of the Bishops. The Eight following contain some Constitutions about the Life of Priests. The Fifteenth forbids all Familiarity of Clergy-men and Bishops with Women, and chiefly any Woman with whom they are suspected to deal carnally. The Sixth forbids alienating the Church Revenues. The Seventeenth prohibits, that the Offerings of Sinners be accepted. The Eighteenth Eighteenth orders, that no Letters dimissory be given to any Clergy-men, but such only as are desired by some other Bishop. The Nineteenth and Twenty first, are about the Advocates, who ought to have Bishops to patronize their Causes. The Twentieth enjoyns the Founder of a Monastery or Chapel, to name a Priest approved by the Bishop to it. The Two following Canons concern the Administrations and Usage of the Church's Revenues. The Twenty Fourth orders, that Divine Service be settled again in the Churches, where it had been discontinued. The Twenty Fifth, commands that sacred places be built again. The Twenty Sixth forbids the Bishops exacting any thing against Law. The Twenty Seventh imports, that they should choose Abbots fit to govern the Monasteries. The Twenty Eight enjoyns Bishops to take Care, that those that profess themselves Monks, should live regularly. The Twenty Ninth commands, that young Women who have taken on them a Religious Life, should not marry. The Thirtieth and Thirty First, concerns the Sanctification of the Sunday. The Thirty Second commands, that such as are shut up in the Monasteries for their Crimes, should not be suffered to go out. The Thirty Third says, that 'tis not allowable for Lay-Men, to place themselves with the Priests or Clergy, at Divine Service. The Thirty Fourth says, that there shall be in all Cathedral Churches and other places where 'tis necessary, Masters and Tutors to teach the Liberal Sciences. The Thirty Fifth forbids Balls, Dancing, and other Sports upon the Feasts of the Martyrs. The Thirty Sixth prohibits Men putting away their Wives and marrying others, unless in case of Adultery and Orders, that if a Man and his Wife are willing to part, to embrace a Religious Life, they must do it with the consent of the Bishop, who shall examine both the Man and his Wife, whether they do both indeed consent to it. The Thirty Seventh forbids Polygamy. The Thirty Eight is against Marriage within the Degrees of Consanguinity forbidden.

Leo IV. made some Additions to these Canons, which were nothing else but Explications of them, or some Clauses to confirm them. But he added four new Canons. The First imports, that no greater number of Priests or Clergy-men be ordained in every Church, than is just necessary. The Second, that Priests should present themselves at the Council of their Bishops. The Third orders, that Lay-men who retain Priests that are Strangers, and employ them against the consent of their Bishop, shall be themselves excommunicated, and the Priests deposed; if upon Admonition, they will not return to their Dioceses. The Fourth says, that no Man shall settle Priests in the Churches, but he that hath right to ordain in those Churches, and punish those that are in it, i. e. none but the Bishop of the Dioceses.

The Third Council of Valence.

*The third
Valence.*

IN January 855. the Emperour Lotharius called a Synod at Valence, of Fourteen Bishops belonging to the Province of Lyons, Vienna and Arles, over whom their Metropolitans presided, and Etbo Bishop of Grenoble, to judge the Bishop of Valence, who was accused of several Crimes. In this Council, the Decisions about Grace above mentioned, were made, which make up the first six Canons of this Council. The Seventh is about the Election of Bishops. They declare in it, that to prevent, that ignorant and unfit Persons be not preferred to Bishopricks, they would petition the King, that the Bishop of every Diocese shall be chosen by the Clergy and People who shall be obliged to choose a Person out of the same, or a Neighbouring Church, fit to fill the See, and that if the Emperour shall send any of his Officers to be Bishop, they shall examine his Life and Doctrine carefully, that the Metropolitan shall have a care, that the Bishop who is ordained, be a person fit for that Charge. The Eighth is against those who invade the Revenues of the Church. The Ninth is against those that take the Revenues of Chapels. The Tenth orders, that they pay the Ninth and Tenth of the Revenues of alienated Churches, and condemns Usury. The Eleventh forbids taking the Oaths of both parties in justice, and excommunicates him that doth the contrary. The Twelfth forbids the Combats, which were in use to prove Mens Innocence. The Thirteenth imports, that such as are disobedient to their Bishops, shall do Penance, and such as are excommunicated in one Church, shall not be received in another. The Fourteenth forbids all vexatious Troubles, and commends Union and Love in Clergy-men. The Fifteenth enjoyns the Bishops to live an Exemplary Life. The Sixteenth orders them to preach and instruct their People. The Seventeenth commands them to visit their Dioceses, without being a charge to any Man. The Eighteenth requires, that Schools be set up for Learning and Singing. The Nineteenth imports, that the Metropolitans and Bishops should take care that the Clergy live orderly. The Twentieth enjoyns, that the Ornaments of Churches be preserved, and used only according to the Canons. The Twenty First says, that Church Revenues shall not be alienated. The Twenty Second says, that a Bishop shall not receive the rights of the Visitation, when he doth not Visit. The Twenty Third is in Favour of the Arch-Deacon of the Church of Vienna, whom they had redeemed from Slavery. They assert he was not a Slave, and threaten Excommunication to them, who shall persecute him upon that account.

The Council of Quiercy.

IN November, 858. the Bishops of the Province of Rheims and Roën being Assembled at Quier- The Council cy, composed a Letter, directed to Lewis King of Germany, who had possessed himself of the of Quiercy.
Kingdom of Charles, Surrendered to him at Attigny, by Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Sens, and Ercan- raus Bishop of Chalons. After they had excused themselves for not being present, according to the Orders they had received at the Assembly held at Rheims, because they had not sufficient Warning to provide for their Journey, and get leave of their Metropolitans, they passionately represent to that Prince the Disorders of the People of his Realm, and the lamentable state the Church was in. They exhort him to maintain the Rights and Privileges of the Churches, the Authority of the Bishops, and honour of the Priests; to put in Execution the Canons and Constitutions, which concerned the Liberty of the Church; to restore their Revenues to the Church and Clergy; to put the Monasteries and Abbeys of the Monks and Nuns into their Ancient condition; and to take them from the Lay-men, to whom his Brother was forced to grant them.
They give him many Instructions about his own Carriage, and how he ought to govern his Kingdom. They let him know, that they thought he had no Right to mind the King his Brothers Coun-reys; and, at last, Protest, that they could not take the Oath he desired of them; nor subject their Churches to him, or their Revenues, as if they were Temporal Estates. This Letter is Written with much Elegance and Freedom. In it they Threaten that Prince with the Judgments of God, and terrifie him, with representing to him his sad condition at the hour of Death.
They give him several Instructions and Precepts about Civil matters, and speak to him in a Majestick Style. They relate to him a fabulous Story of the Damnation of Charles Martel, for having taken away Church-goods. There is some probability that Hincmarus composed this Letter; for which Reason 'tis Printed among his Works.

The Council of Metz.

Lewis of Germany being obliged to retire in 859, the Council assembled at Metz sent Nine Pre- The Council lates to him, to exhort that Prince to beg peace of his Brother, to acknowledge and confess his of Metz.
Fault, oblige him to promise to live peaceably for the future, and never hereafter to cause Schism, or Division, to punish them who were the Authors of this War, to engage himself to maintain the Rights of the Churches, and procure a Reformation: That if he did these things, although his Faults deserved a long penance, they could absolve him, although they did not joyn with him.
These Messengers, who had for their Leaders, Hincmarus, Arch-bishop of Rheims, and Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Rouen, finding Lewis of Germany at Worms, June the 4th. the Prince spake to them first, and being desirous to appease them, said to them, That if he had offended them, he begged their pardon. Hincmarus, who stood the first on his left-hand, answered, That he came to offer him what he desired; that, as to his own particular, he had nothing against him; that he pardon'd him what he had done; and as for the Mischief he had done his Church, he advised him, as he tender'd his own Salvation, to make it up. Guntharius, Arch-bishop of Cologne, who was also one of the Messengers, told him what satisfaction they demanded of him, and read the Instructions to him they had given them. Lewis of Germany was displeased with them, and told them for Answer, That they came provided with full Instructions, that they might surprize him: That the Bishops of his Kingdom not being present, he could do nothing in that Affair without consulting them. So that this Embassage had not that good effect which they hoped for by it.

The Council of Savonieres.

IN June, the same year 859, the Bishops of both Kingdoms met at Savonieres, near Toul, where The Council they made up a Peace and Agreement between the Kings. In it also they Regulated several of Savoni- other Affairs. Tortoldus Deacon of Sens, who had taken upon him to exercise the Episcopal Functions at Bayeux, was left to the Judgment of Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Sens, and three other Bishops.
They ordained, that the Sub-deacon Anscharius, who had possessed himself of the Church of Lang- res, should make Oath, that he would not attempt the like for the future. King Charles accused Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Sens, as the cause of his Rebellion; and it was order'd, that his Process should be made according to the Canons. Atto, Bishop of Verdun was summoned, because his Ordination was accused as faulty. They also charged the Bishops of Bretany not to withdraw themselves from the Jurisdiction of the Arch-bishop of Tours, their Metropolitan. They admonished them not to communicate with persons under Excommunication; and to exhort their Prince Solomon, to be faithful to King Charles. They also allow the persons Excommunicated till the next Council, to amend and reform themselves; and, if they did not do it, they would pronounce a solemn Anathema upon them at the next General Council. This Synod earnestly entreats the King, and Ralph, Arch-bishop of Bourges, to maintain the privileges of the Abbey of
S. Benedict, which that Arch-bishop had possessed himself of, upon condition, that if the Abbot were

were found negligent, or irregular, by the King's Commissioners, he should be deposed, and another put in his place. They set in order several other private Affairs, of which there is no mention in the Canons, and ordered Prayers. This Synod was very numerous: At it were Eight Metropolitans, and most of the Bishops of the Twelve Provinces of France. We have, besides the Thirteen Canons, or Articles, already mention'd, Three Letters, one to Wenilo, Arch-bishop of Sens, and two others to the Bretons, with a Remonstrance, containing an Accusation of that Arch-bishop, brought against him by Charles the Bald.

They read also in this Council the Six Constitutions of Valence about Grace; and Ten other Canons made Fifteen days before, by some Bishops met at Langres. We will not repeat what we have said about the Constitutions of the Council of Valence, and how Hincmarus oppos'd the Reception of them; but we will give the substance of the other Ten Canons.

The First imports, that they would petition their Kings to call Synods every year in every Province, and every second year a General-Council in their Palaces.

The Second ordains, that the Bishops should be ordained according to the Canonical Laws; that is to say, by the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Neighbouring Bishops; and such persons should be chosen, as are of good life, and known probity.

The Third commands, that Bishops visit Religious Houses, and take care, that all things be managed and dispos'd in good order.

The Fourth enjoyns them to set up Schools, or Teach the Holy Scripture, and good Learning.

The Fifth requires them to repair their Churches.

The Sixth orders, that every Congregation should have an Head of their Profession.

The Seventh declares, that the alienated Revenues of the Church shall pay their Ninth and Tenth parts, and that for the future nothing shall be taken from the Church.

The Eighth enjoyns, that the Revenues of Hospitals shall be employed according to the intent of the Founders.

The Ninth declares, that they will cause Justice to be done to the Poor by the Civil Judges.

The Tenth contains their Resolve to punish Ravishers and Adulterers.

The Council of Coblentz.

The Council of Coblentz.

THE Peace which was made between the Kings at the Council of Savonieres in 859, was confirmed and sworn to, Anno 860, at an Assembly held at Coblentz; at which, Ten Bishops, and several Lords were present. In it it was agreed, that publick sinners should be put to penance; and, that no Bishop should Excommunicate any Man, till after Admonition and Reproof; That they would pardon those Rebels that accepted a pardon, and promised Fidelity for the future; That they would put the Laws and Canons against Criminals in Execution. Some other Ecclesiastical Laws and Civil Constitutions were made in it.

The Second Council of Tullium, or Toul.

The Council of Toul.

IN October 860, a General Council was held at Touffy, in the Province of Toul. There were present almost Sixty Bishops out of Twelve or Fourteen Provinces of France. They compos'd a Pastoral Letter against those that invaded the Churches Revenues; and, because it seem'd too tedious to some of them, they made Five Canons, which were signed by all the Bishops.

In the First they Excommunicate, and deprive of Burial all those, that take, or receive the Oblations of the Church without the consent of the Bishop, or the Person, who is entrusted with the care of the Church Revenues; and condemn those of the Clergy or Laity who shall do it, to restore three or four-fold.

In the Second, it is ordained, that Widows, or Virgins, devoted to the Service of God, who Marry, or suffer themselves to be Deflowered, shall be Imprisoned, and put to Penance till their Death: and they that so Debauch them, shall also be forced to undergoe Penance.

The Third pronounces Excommunication against all Perjured Persons, and False Witnesses.

The Fourth excludes from the Communion of the Faithful, and from Divine Service, all Ravishers and Man-slayers, till they shall submit to a course of Penance.

The Fifth enjoyns all wandering Clergy-men, and Monks, which are out of employ, because their Churches, or Monasteries, are burnt by the Normans, to betake themselves to their Duties, and submit themselves to their Abbots, or Bishops.

We have spoken about the contest between the two Hincmarus's, concerning these Canons; the Arch-bishop of Rheims maintaining, that they were not made by a Council, and that he did not sign them: the Bishop of Laon affirming the contrary. It is probable, that Hincmarus, Arch-bishop of Rheims, compos'd the Large Letter; but, that not being liked, some others digested the Five Canons, which were signed by several of them. This Council order'd Hinc-

marus to Write to the Arch-bishops of Bouges, and Bordeaux, and Bishops of their Provinces, about the Affair of Earl Raimond, which we have explained in the History of Hincmarus's Work. And because we have also spoken of the Councils of Aix la Chapelle, Metz and Rome, held about the Divorce of Lotharius and Thietberga, we shall pass them over here; as also those held about the business of Rothadus, Hincmarus of Laon, Ebbo, Wulfadus, of which we have spoken in the History of the Controversies, in which Hincmarus was chiefly concerned.

The Council of Worms.

IN 868, in June, Lewis, King of Germany, Assembled a General Council of his Kingdom at Worms; in it, the Bishops first of all composed a Confession of their Faith; in which they asserted the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father, and the Son; and rejected the Opinion of those, who affirmed, That it proceeded from the Father by the Son, or from the Son onely. They deliver, That the Resurrection shall be in the same flesh, in which we live, and that the Catholick Church shall Reign with Jesus Christ for ever.

After they had made this Confession of Faith, they composed, or rather revived several Canons. The 1st Imports, that Baptism shall be solemnly Administred onely at Easter and Whitsuntide. The 2d, that it belongs to the Bishop onely to Consecrate the Chrism. The 3d, that a Bishop shall not require any Present for the Consecration of Churches; and that they shall use nothing but Bread and Wine, mingled with Water, in the Sacrament of the Altar. The 5th contains a Rule of S. Gregory's, about Dipping once, or thrice in Baptism. The 6th, that the Disposal of the Church Revenues belongs to the Bishops, and not to the Founders. The 7th, that they shall divide the Church Revenues into four parts. The 8th is an Extract of the Seventh Canon of the 2d Council of Seville. The 9th contains a Law of Celibacy, for all in Sacred Orders. The 10th concerns a Bishop accused of a Crime. The 11th declares, that Priests, who have been guilty of carnal sins, ought not to enjoy their Dignity. The 12th, that they that are accused of that crime, but can't be convicted, shall clear themselves by their Oath. The 13th, that Bishops shall not Excommunicate any Man for small faults. The 14th, that if they do, their neighbouring Bishops shall not communicate with them, till a Synod shall meet. The 15th orders, that if there be any Robbery done in any Monastery, and the Author is not known, all the Brethren shall communicate at one Mass, that by that means it may be known that they are innocent. The 16th Excommunicates the Bishops that refuse to come to a Synod, or withdraw before 'tis ended. The 17th forbids Clergy-men keeping Hunting-dogs, or Hawks. The 18th orders, that strange Clergy-men shall not be suffer'd to exercise their Ecclesiastical Functions, unless they have a Letter from their Bishop. The 19th says, that those that will not obey their Bishops, nor execute their Ministry diligently, in the Church which shall be allotted them, shall be Excommunicated and Degraded. The 20th appoints, that those Women, who are devoted to God by the Sacred Veil, and fall into any carnal crimes, shall not leave their profession, but shall be put to severe penance. The 21st obliges those Widows, who have taken the Veil, and have Prayed in the Church among the professed Nuns, offer'd Oblations with them, and promis'd to continue in that Estate, never to leave it. The 22d holds, that it is not lawful for them, who have by their Parents been put into the Monasteries in their Infancy, and have been brought up in a Regular Discipline, to leave or forsake that sort of Life, when they are come to a Riper Age. The 23d Revives that Maxim of the Councils of Spain, That a Man may be made a Monk, either by the Devotion of his Parents, or by his own proper Profession; and declares, That both ways equally oblige: and those, that are made so either way, may not return to a Secular Life. The 24th is against them that doe any Injury to Clergy-men or Churches. The 25th Commands Priests to impose penances proportionable to Mens Crimes, and agreeable to the Laws of the Church. The following Canons contain the punishments of different sorts of Manslaughter. The 31st gives Lepers a liberty of receiving the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, but not with those that are in perfect health. The 32d says, that the number of Children, which a Man may have, can't be determin'd; yet no Man may Marry his near Relations. The 33d forbids Marrying Two Sisters. The 34th a God-mother, or God-daughter. The 35th condemns to the penance of Murderers, those Women, who cause Abortions in themselves; and those to something less punishments, who smother their Children in their sleep, though not thinking of it. The 36th subjects to penance, and separates him from his Wife, who hath layn with his Wife's Daughter by another Husband. The 37th imports, that Married persons, though under penance, are not to be parted. The 38th and 39th impose penance upon those that kill their Slaves. The 40th appoints, that a Bishop, who ordains a Slave, knowing him to be such, without the consent of his Master, shall pay double the worth of him to his Master; but, if he were ignorant of it, the Sum shall be paid by them who were Witnesses for him. The 41st orders, that they shall be Excommunicated who live in Enmity, and will not be reconciled. The 42d constitutes, that no Man shall be Condemned, who is not formally Convicted. The 43d sentences them to Deprivation of their Goods, and Excommunication till Death, who side with the Enemies of the State. The 44th condemns Adulterers to a Seven years penance.

These

These are the 44 Canons, which are all, but the 40th, in an ancient MS. under the Name of the Council of Wormes. There are also 36 other Canons, that bear the Name of this Council. But since they are not to be found in any ancient MS. and some of them are already among the 44 preceeding; and Labbe hath assured us, that the order of the first is very different in a MS, which he hath consulted; And there are some Canons cited by Ivo Caennutensis, under the Name of the Council of Wormes, which are not found among these Latter; it may be rationally doubted, whether this Collection of 44, or 80 Canons, were made in this Council of Wormes. However that be, these Canons are, almost all of them, found either in more ancient Councils, or in those about this time.

The Second Council of Douzy.

The Council of Douzy.

AN Assembly of Bishops, who met the 13th of June at Douzy, in the Diocess of Rheims, Wrote a Circular Letter to the Bishops of Aquitain, which contains some Laws of the Councils and Popes about Marriages between Relations, and against them who possessed themselves of the Churches Revenues, that they might deterre the Great Lords from those two disorders, which reigned among them. This Assembly also Tried Duda the Nun, who, being ambitious to become an Abbess, combined with the Priest Humbertus, and engaged him to Write Slandorous Libels against her Abbess, and present them to the King's Commissioners, by whom he was convicted of Falsehood and Calumny. After this, he returned to his Monastery, and had such private commerce with the said Nun, that she became with Child by him: She confessed her fault, and said, That it was done by the Priest Humbertus; but he denied it. The Council, in the first place, declared, That that Priest, being already convicted of Perjury, and to be a False Accuser, ought not to be believed upon his denial, nor ought they to refer themselves to his bare Affirmation. Secondly, That before he be judged in the place, where the Crime was committed, the King should send certain Commissioners into the Monastery, who may examine all the Nuns apart, and inquire our particularly of Duda, the time and place, where she committed the Crime with Humbertus; who may also examine her Companions, and so make that Priest sensible that his Oath is not to be trusted; That if he persist in the Denial, they shall bring him before the Deputies of the Synod, King's Commissioners, Priests, and Clergy of the Monastery, with the Abbess, and her Society. That Duda, and her Companions, being also summon'd thither, shall endeavour to make him own his Crime. But, if he still resolutely deny it, they shall Swear Duda and her Companions, and make them bear Witness against him; That, upon their Testimony, he shall be deposed by the Deputies of the Synod, Banished by the King's Commissioners, and Imprisoned in some Monastery. As for Duda, they ordered, That she should be put to Penance, and Scourged by the Abbess, in the presence of her Sister-Nuns, and shall not be received into Communion till after Seven years Penance. And, as for the two Nuns, who being conscious of Duda's Fault, did not discover it, they judged them Blameworthy; because the Priests, to whom they discover'd that sin, by secret confession, are obliged to keep them secret; yet there is not the same Obligation of Secrecie upon them, who attain the knowledge of others Crimes some other way. Nevertheless, they dealt more mildly with these Nuns, and ordered, that after they have been moderately chastised with a Rod, they shall endure but Three years Penance. This is the substance of the Relation of this Council, which is full of choice passages out of the Councils and Fathers, very handsomly and fitly alledged.

The Council of Ravenna.

The Council of Ravenna.

John the Eighth appointed a Council at Ravenna, where he was to meet the Bishops at the end of May, 877. He came and held a Council there in the beginning of August, where they made Nineteen Canons for the good of the Church.

The First enjoyns, and obligeth all Metropolitans within three Months after their Ordination, to send a Confession of their Faith to the Holy See, demand the Pall; and they that shall neglect this Duty, shall have no power to Ordain Bishops till they have performed it; and that other Metropolitans shall have liberty to ordain the Bishops of their Province, after three Admonitions, and having taken the Advice of the Pope.

The Second orders, that if those who are chosen Bishops do not procure Ordination within three Months after their Election, they shall be Excommunicated till they doe; and if they do not do it within Five Months, they shall neither be Ordained for the Church, to which they are chosen, nor to any other.

In the third 'tis forbidden to make use of the Pall in the Streets in Procession, or in any other Ceremonies, than what are appointed by St. Gregory.

The Fourth forbids the Nobles and Judges to contemn or abuse the Bishops, or exact any thing of them. It reserves the cognizance of the causes of the Clergy, Nuns, Orphans and Widows, to the Bishops.

The Fifth is against those that take away the Revenues of the Church.

The Sixth is against Ravishers.

The

The Seventh is against Murderers, and Incendaries.

The Eighth is against those that pillage and steal other Mens Goods.

The Ninth declares them Excommunicate, who voluntarily keep company with persons Excommunicated; and requires, that all Audience be denied them who are Excommunicated a whole year, and trouble not themselves to take off their Excommunication; if they die in that condition, it forbids to accept them to Communion.

That the former Decree may be put in execution, it is ordered in the following Article, That all the Bishops should send to their Neighbours, and people of their Diocess, the Names of such as are Excommunicated, and cause them to set up a List of them upon their Church-doors.

The Eleventh imports, that those, who, to avoid deserved punishment, fly to other Lords, shall not be received, till their Master hath Justice done him.

The Twelfth is, that they that absent themselves Three Sundays together from the Assemblies of the Faithful in their Parishes, shall be Excommunicated.

The Thirteenth enjoins the Defenders, Preservers and Managers of Church-Revenues, to do their Duty, under the pain of Excommunication.

The Fourteenth shews, that he shall not be Ordained a Priest, that is not diligent in the Service of the Church.

The Three following are for the preservation of the Laws and Revenues of the Church of Rome.

The Eighteenth orders, that Tythes shall be paid to the Priest that serves the Parish; and forbids the Priest of another Diocess, or Parish, to meddle with them.

The Nineteenth forbids the Judges, or King's Commissioners to hold any Pleas, or Lodge in Churches.

At this Council there were present, besides the Pope, the Arch-bishop of Ravenna, Patriarch of Grado, Bishop of Verona, and Six and Forty other Bishops of Italy; who signed a Grant, by which they confirmed the Donation of certain Lands and Revenues given to the Church of Aulun by King Charles.

The Council of Troyes.

John the Eighth being come into France, to desire the Assistance of Charles the Emperour, called a Council at Troyes in 378, at which were present with the Bishop of Porto, and Three other Bishops of Italy, the Arch-bishop of Rheims, Sens, Lyons, Narbonne, Arles, Tours, Besancon, Vienna, and Eighteen other Bishops of France. In it they treated of several matters. The Bishops approved of the Excommunication of Lambert, and Adelbert; and declared, that they would look upon all those as Excommunicated, who had been so by the Pope. They pronounced an Excommunication against those, that had invaded the Goods of the Church. They confirmed the Judgment given against Formosus. They made a Canon, forbidding all Christians to Marry a Second Wife, while the First is living; and Bishops removing from one Church to another; and, in the conclusion, made Seven Canons. In the First it is commanded, that Secular Noble-men should pay respect to the Bishops, by not sitting down before them; and, that Lay-men should not meddle with Church Revenues. The Second enforces the same prohibition. The Third orders, that the Canons made the year before at Ravenna, should be observed. The Fourth enjoins the Bishops to assist each other in the defence of the Revenues and Interests of their Churches. The Fifth requires, that those persons, who have been Excommunicated, or subjected to Penance by one Bishop, shall not be received by his Brethren. The Sixth asserts, that they will not receive another Man's Servant without his consent. The Seventh says, that they will not entertain a private Accusation against any Man. The Pope having seen the Body of the Gothick and Spanish Laws, brought by the Arch-bishop of Narbonne, and finding no Law in it against Sacrilege, Wrote to them to observe the Law made by Charles the Emperour, who Fined such as were guilty of it Thirty pounds. He sent also a Letter to the Bishop of Poitiers, forbidding him to encroach upon the Revenues of his Church; and, enjoying all those, that had invaded it, to make Restitution. By another Letter he confirms the Privileges of the Church of Tours, and grants a Privilege to the Monastery of Fleury. Hincmarus, Bishop of Laon, presented a Petition to this Synod, and his Affair was here determined, as we have said. In this Synod King Lewis the Stammerer was Crowned by the Pope. They made a Motion to put out Gozelin, Abbot of S. Denys, but 'twas not put in execution. Lastly, They determined some affairs concerning the Bishops of Avignon, Troyes, and Besancon. This Council was ended at Five Sessions, or Actions, which have we have Abridged with the Seven Canons, and the Decisions of John the Eighth, of which we spoken.

The Council of Troyes.

The Council of Fismes.

The Council of Fismes. IN 881, several Bishops of France met at Fismes, April the 2d, where, after they had recited that excellent passage of Gelasius, about the Distinction between the Ecclesiastical and Civil Power; and, another place out of S. Gregory, concerning the Episcopal Vigilance, they admonish King Lewis to preserve, and increase the Honour and Revenues of the Church, and to maintain the Authority of the Bishops. They require, that Monasteries and Nunneries be visited by the King's Commissioners, who shall represent the state of those places. They exhort the King to punish Ravishers severely. They also exhort the King's Officers and Judges to hinder Disorders, and punish Crimes. They invite Sinners to Penance; and, Lastly, addressing their Speech to the King, they advise him to provide wise, discreet, and impartial Counsellors, who love Justice and Religion, and will employ their knowledge and zeal to suppress Vice.

The Council of Cologne.

The Council of Cologne. IN the year 887, there was an Assembly held at Cologne, made up of the Arch-Bishops of Mentz and Cologne, Four or Five Bishops, some Abbots, several Priests and Deacons, and some Lay-men, in which Drogo, Bishop of Metz was Ordained. Afterward they renewed some Constitutions made against them, who had taken away some Revenues belonging to the Church. Nevertheless they gave them to the end of June, to be received to Penance, if they would come in. They also revived divers other Canons of Councils about unlawful Marriages.

The Council of Mentz.

The Council of Mentz. THIS Council was called by King Arnoldus at that time, when Germany was much afflicted by the Incursions of the Normans. The Arch-bishops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves were at it, with several of their Suffragans: In it, after they had declared, by way of Preface, the miserable condition that Germany was reduced to, they made the following Canons.

The First obliges, to Pray continually in the Church for King Arnoldus, his Queen, and all Christians.

In the Second, they give the King a short Abridgment of the chief Duties incumbent on him.

The Third shews him, that he is obliged to Administer Justice impartially both to great and small.

The Fourth says, that they who are Founders of Churches, should leave the disposal of the Revenues they give, to the Bishops, according to the Nineteenth Canon of the Third Council of Toledo.

The Fifth enjoins, that no Priests be put into any Church, without the permission of the Bishop.

The Sixth requires, that those shall be punished as Murderers of the Poor, who detain the Revenues of Churches, Monasteries, or Hospitals.

The Seventh declares, that those, who do any injury to Clergy-men, shall be put out of the Church, till they have made a proportionable satisfaction.

The Eighth orders, that they who had cut off the Nose of a Priest of the Church of Wirtzburg, should be Excommunicated.

The Ninth commands, that Masses shall not be celebrated in all places; but either in such places as are consecrated by the Bishop, or are allowed by him for that use. That in the places, or Churches Burnt by the Normans, Mass may be celebrated in the Chapels, till they are Re-built; and that in a Journey, if Men can't find a Church, they may say it in the open Field, or in a Tent, provided they have a Consecrated Table for an Altar, and other things necessary for that Service.

The Tenth enjoins Clergy-men absolutely to have no Woman to co-habit with them.

The Eleventh says, that all that Invade the Lands of the Church, shall be Excommunicated and Banish'd.

The Twelfth is a Canon falsely attributed to Pope Silvester, about the Accusations of Clergy-men.

The Thirteenth imports, that ancient Churches shall not be deprived of their Tythes and Revenues to Endow New Chapels.

The Fourteenth holds, that no Bishop can retain, ordain, or judge a person, that belongs to another Bishop's Diocese.

The Fifteenth asserts, that he that doth so, shall not be received at a Council, till he hath had a Reproof.

The Sixteenth imposes a severe and long Penance upon him that shall kill a Priest.

The Seventeenth orders the Payment of Tythes.

The Eighteenth is against a person that had Married his God-mother, and being divorced from her, had taken her again.

The Nineteenth revives some old Laws against Unchast Priests.

The Twentieth is against them, who, by their Petitions, get the Revenues of the Church into their possession by a precarious Title.

The One and twentieth revives the Prohibitions made by Charles the Great, to hold Meetings about Secular Affairs in the Churches, or Church-porches.

The Two and twentieth is against those, who defraud the Church of part of their Tithes.

The Three and twentieth ordains, that Ecclesiastical Causes shall be judged by the Bishop, either according to the Deposition of Witnesses, or by the Oath of the Accused, and none shall be admitted for a Witness, unless they be 14 years of Age.

The Four and twentieth recommends Peace, Unity, and Loyalty to their Prince.

The Five and twentieth orders those, who have the Patronage of Monasteries committed to them, to place such Superiours over them as may doe their Duty, and will govern such as are subject to their power, as they ought.

The Six and twentieth forbids, that Widows should be easily admitted to the Veil; and declares, that they ought to be left at liberty, either to Marry, or embrace a single Life, till their conversation be approved. If they embrace a Single Life, it orders, that they be put into the Monasteries, where they shall live regularly with the Nuns. If they violate their Profession, they shall be punished Canonically. They renew the Canon of Elvira, made concerning Virgins devoted to God, which violate their Virginity.

The Council of Metz.

I Place this Council after the preceeding, because we do not precisely know the year of its Meeting; yet it was held under the same Prince by Rathbodus, Bishop of Treves, and Robert, Bishop of Metz. The Bishops of Verdun, and Toul, were present at it, with one Abbot, and several Priests. Many Earls, Lords, and other Persons of worth were also at it. The following Constitutions were made at it.

The First is a resolution to endeavour to establish Peace in the Church, promote Piety and Discipline, and hinder the Poor from being pillaged.

The Second provides, that Tithes shall be paid to the Priest that serves the Church, to which they were anciently due, to maintain him; to furnish the Church with Lights, and Ornaments, and to make necessary Repairs for the Buildings.

The Third requires, that every Priest shall have but one Church, unless there hath been a Chapel annexed to it, time out of Mind.

The Fourth forbids, that any Tribute shall be exacted for a Farm, or Four Slaves belonging to the Church, or for Lands given for a Burial-place; and that nothing shall be paid for a Burial.

The Fifth orders, that Priests shall have no Women with them; no, not so much as their Mother or Sister.

The Sixth enjoyns, that Priests shall shew their Bishop the Books, and Sacerdotal Habits; that they shall keep the Throne under a Key; that Clergy-men shall not bear Arms, nor wear Lay-mens Habits; nor Lay-men Priests; that none shall be admitted for God-fathers, but such as understand the Confession of Faith; and, that one God-father is sufficient.

The Seventh forbids Christians eating with Jews.

The Eighth orders, that Mass shall not be celebrated in places which are not Consecrated; and that Bishops shall Consecrate those Churches a-new, which have been consecrated by Suffragan Bishops only.

The Ninth commands, that they shall veil, and shut up, in some Monastery, two Nuns of the Monastery of St. Peter, who had been put out of it, and unveiled for their Crimes; and that a Deacon convicted of Sacrilege shall be put in prison.

The Tenth pronounces Excommunication against some persons who had Guelt a Priest, who would oblige one of their Kinswomen to return to her Husband.

The Eleventh Excommunicates those persons, who exercised pillaging in the Province, and did not come to the Synod to acknowledge their Crime. It issues out, in particular, an Excommunication against two private persons, the one guilty of a Rape committed upon a Nun, the other of Man-slaughter.

The Twelfth asserts it to be unlawful to Communicate with Excommunicate persons, or give any tokens of Communion to those, who died under the Bonds of Excommunication.

The Thirteenth orders prayers to be made for King Arnoldus, with a Fast of three days, and some Processions to obtain of God the Peace and Quiet of the State.

The Council of Vienna.

THE Bishops of the Province of Arles made, in 892, some Constitutions like those, which had been made in Germany. Two Legates from Pope Formosus were present at that Assembly. In it they Excommunicated, 1st, those who invaded, or unjustly detained the Revenues of the Church. 2^{dly}, Those, 2dly, Those, who injured, or abused the Clergy. 3dly, Those, who misemployed the Alms given by a Bishop, or Priest, in their Sickness. 4thly, It was forbidden Secular persons to bestow Churches without the consent of the Diocesan, and to exact any Present of the Priests they put into them. By the 5th 'tis ordered, that Priests have no Women with them.

The Council of Tribur.

The Council of Tribur. OF all the Councils held at this time, there were none so numerous, or that made more considerable Constitutions, than this, which was held in 895, under King Arnoldus, at his Palace called Tibur, situate near Mentz. The Arch-bishops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves were at it, with 19 German Bishops. The Constitutions of it are contained in 58 Articles, or Canons, which are set after a long Preface.

The First is only an Invocation of the Spirit of Peace.

In the Second, upon occasion of a Priest, who complained, that a Lay-man had put out his eyes, and his Bishop pronounced him Innocent, and because the Lay-man would not appear before him, nor undergoe Penance for his crime, they renewed the Canons which forbid to receive persons Excommunicated by their Bishop, or communicate with them. And, in the following Article they enjoin all the Counts to apprehend the Excommunicate, who will not submit themselves to Penance, and bring them before their Bishop; that those who are not afraid of the Judgments of God, may be terrified by the Severities of Men. They promise Impunity to them, who slay them, when they defend themselves against their apprehension, and will not have them obliged to pay the Fine in that case usually imposed.

The Fourth directs, how the Fine which is to be paid, for hurting and wounding a Priest, shall be employed. If he survive, he shall have it all; if he dies, it shall be divided into three parts, and given, one part to the Church, in which he was Ordained, the other to his Bishop, and the third to his Relations.

In the Fifth, they impose upon him that kills a Priest, Five years Penance; during which time he shall eat no Meat, nor drink any Wine, unless it be on Festivals and Sundays. He shall carry no Arms, go always on foot, and never come into the Church. After these years are expired, he may come into the Church, but shall not Communicate till Five years more be expired; in which time he shall keep three days of Abstinence weekly.

The Sixth condemns him, as guilty of Sacrilege, who enters into the Church-porch with a naked Sword.

The Seventh is against such as violently extort the Goods of the Church.

The Eighth is against those, that will not perform the Penance imposed on them by the Bishop.

The Ninth shews, that if the Bishop and Count call an Assembly both in one day, it is just that the People and Count both should meet at the Bishops; nevertheless, to prevent such an accident, and for the good of Peace, it was ordained, without any prejudice to the power and dignity of the Bishop, that he that first sends out his Summons, shall hold his Court.

The Tenth renews the Canon of the Council of Carthage, which orders, that no Bishop shall be deposed, unless it be by 12 others, a Priest by 6, and a Deacon by 3.

The Eleventh inflicts the punishment of Deposition upon those Deacons and Priests, who have committed Murder, although against their Wills.

The Twelfth orders, that the Sacrament of Baptism shall not be administered but at the Solemn Times, i. e. at Easter and Whitsuntide.

The Thirteenth commands, that the Tithes and Oblations of the Church shall be divided into Four parts, one for the Bishop, two for the Clergy, the third for the Poor, and a fourth for the Reparation of the Church.

The Fourteenth preserves the Tithes to the ancient Churches, and annexes the Tithes of new broken-up Lands to them; but if new Houses be built Four Miles from other Churches, in a Wood, or other place, and a Church be built there by the consent of the Bishop, they may put in a Priest, and give him the new Tithes.

The Fifteenth says, that the Dead shall be Buried, if possible, in the City, or some Monasteries; but, if that can't easily be done, then in the Church, to which they pay their Tithes.

The Sixteenth forbids exacting any thing for a Burial.

And the Seventeenth prohibits the Burying of Lay-men in Churches.

The Eighteenth forbids the use of Wooden Pattins and Chalice.

The Nineteenth orders, that Water and Wine be mixed in the Chalice, but twice as much Wine as Water.

The Twentieth is against them that Misuse Clergy-men.

The One and twentieth provides, that no Oaths be required of Priests.

The Two and twentieth says, that those that are accused of any Crime, which they have no proof of, shall clear themselves by Oath. But if there be any just cause of suspicion, they shall undergo the Proof of Red-hot Iron, in the presence of the Bishop or his Commissioner.

The Three and twentieth revives the Laws against those who Marry Virgins Consecrated to God.

The Four and twentieth imports, that a Maid, who hath taken the Veil by her own desire, and without without any Constraint, before she is 12 Years old, she is obliged to retain her Virginity, if she hath worn that Habit a Year and a Day, and no Body may take her out of the Monastery.

The Twenty Fifth forbids Bishops to give the Veil to Widows, and obliges them to a single Life, who have taken it before.

The Twenty Sixth allows Monks, who will not go out of their Monastery to preserve themselves, or others, to do it with the consent of the Bishop, Abbot, and their Brethren; but orders those to be punished, who get but to avoid the severity of the Discipline.

The Twenty Seventh forbids the Clergy to forsake their Office, and gives the Bishops power to keep them to it, and take them up, if they are fled to take a secular Habit.

The Twenty Ninth forbids that a Slave be ordained till he hath gotten perfect Liberty.

The Thirtieth appoints, that in Memory of St. Peter, the H. Roman and Apostolick See ought to be honoured, it being just, that that Church, which is the Mother of the Priestly Dignity, should be the Mistress of Ecclesiastical Order, so that 'tis fit, that Men bear and endure the Yoke she lays upon them, although it be almost insupportable. Nevertheless 'tis ordered, that if any Priest or Deacon be accused of carrying forged Letters from the Pope to stir up any Troubles, or lay any Snares for the Ministers of the Church, the Bishop may with due Respect to the Pope, stop his Proceedings, till he hath written to the H. See.

The Thirty First is against Thieves.

The Thirty Second orders, that if the Right of Patronage to any Church be disputed by several Co-heirs which can't agree, to hinder the Disorders which may follow upon it, the Bishop shall remove the Reliques out of the Church, shut it up, and provide that no Mass be celebrated in it, till all the Heirs shall agree together to present one Priest, and that they shall neither put in, nor remove any Priest without the Bishop's consent.

The Thirty Third revives those Canons, which exclude such Persons from H. Orders, as have made themselves Eunuchs, or maimed themselves; but it excepts such from this Law, as have lost any of their Members, or are made lame by any Distemper, or other Accident.

The Thirty Fourth treats those Men gently, who in the Wars with the Barbarians have slain by chance some Christians, which they took for Pagans, by imposing on them only 40 Days Penance.

The Thirty Fifth forbids that any Pleadings or other Civil Assemblies be held on Sundays, Holidays, Fasts, or in Lent, and commands that all Christians be present on Holy-days and Sundays, at the Vigils, Divine Service, and Mass; and that in Lent, and other Fasts, they fast with Devotion, pray with Zeal and Fervour, and give Alms according to their Abilities.

The Thirty Sixth declares, that if it happens that a Man, who is cutting down a Tree, and seeing it ready to fall, bids his Companion stand out of the way, and he doth not do it, but it falls upon him, he that cut down the Tree shall not be reproved or blamed for it.

The Thirty Seventh is a like Case: If a Woman leaves her Child near boiling Water, and the Water still boiling scalds the Child, the Woman shall be put to Penance for her Negligence, but she that set the Water on the Fire hath committed no fault.

The Thirty Eighth orders, that every Free-man that marries a Woman made Free, shall keep her as his Wife.

The Thirty Ninth orders the same thing to such as marry Strangers.

The Fourtieth declares the marriage of a Man and a Widow null, who have committed Adultery together in the Life of her Husband, if he hath promised to marry her at that time.

The Forty First imports, that if a Person who is unable to do the Duties of Marriage, marry a Woman, and his Brother abuse her, they shall be parted, and she shall not have Commerce with either of them; nevertheless the Bishop may permit her to marry again, after the Guilty Person hath done Penance.

The Forty Second asserts, that if any Person change his Diocess, after he hath committed incest, he shall be taken up, and put to Penance by the Bishop of the Place where he committed it.

The Forty Third is, that if a Person commit Fornication with a Woman, who hath had carnal knowledge of his Son or Brother without his Knowledge, and he depose upon Oath, that he is not Conscious of any such thing, he may be allowed to marry, after he hath done Penance.

The Forty Fourth says, that if one Brother marry a Woman, with whom another Brother hath had carnal Commerce, a severe Penance shall be imposed upon this last, because he did not tell his Brother of it, after which they may Marry. As to the Woman, they revived upon her account the Law of the Council of Neocesarea.

The Forty Fifth orders, that he that lies with two Sisters, and the Sister which lies with him last, if she knows that he hath had Commerce with her Sister, shall be put to Penance, and obliged to live a single Life to their Death.

The Forty Sixth importeth, that if a Woman be prosecuted at Law by her Husband for Adultery, and she hath recourse to the Bishop, he shall endeavour to obtain of her Husband not to put her to Death, but if he can't prevail, he shall not deliver her into her Husband's Power, but send her whither she desires for her Safety.

The Fourty Seventh allows him, who is God-father to a Man's Child, to marry his Widow, if she was not his God-mother.

The Fourty Eighth imports, that if a Man by chance marry the Daughter of his God-mother, he may keep her and live with her, as with his Wife.

The Fourty Ninth forbids, that such as have committed Adultery together, should ever Marry, Dwell, or have Society together. If they have any Estate, it shall be preserved for the Adulterous Off-Spring.

The Fiftieth is against those who pervert Christians, and destroy them by their evil Arts.

The Fifty First repeats the Prohibitions made to an Adulterer, to marry the Woman with whom he hath committed Adultery, after her Husband's Death.

The Fifty Second leaves it in the Power of the Bishop, to regulate the time of Penance for involuntary Man-slayers.

The Fifty Fourth to the Fifty Eighth, which is the last, appoint the time and manner of Penance for wilful Murderers, viz. Seven Years. For the first Forty days, the Guilty shall not go into the Church, eat nothing but Bread and Salt, and drink nothing but Water. He shall go bare Footed, having his Thighs only covered, he shall not lie with his Wife, he shall not converse with other Men; after this, he shall not enter into the Church for a whole Year, all which time, he shall abstain from Meat, Cheese, drinking Wine, Metheglin and Beer, unless upon Holidays, or in a journey, or in Sickness, in which case he shall buy off the Fasts of Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, by giving a Penny to the Poor, and maintaining Three poor People. After this year, he may go into the Church, with other Penitents, but he shall observe the same Abstinences, for the Second and Third Years, saving that he may for all that time buy off the Three Days aforesaid. In the Four last Years, he shall make three Lents, the one before Easter, in which he shall abstain from Cheese, Fish and Wine. The Second before the Nativity of St. John Baptist, and the Third before the Nativity of Christ, in which he shall practise the same abstinences. He may eat the rest of the year, what he pleases, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, and buy off Munday and Wednesday for a Penny, but he shall keep a strict Fast on Friday. When the Seven Years are over, if he hath observed these Penances exactly, he shall be reconciled as the Penitents are, and be admitted to partake of the Communion.

The Council of Nantes.

The Council of Nantes.

THE Canons which bear the Name of the Council of Nantes, are only a Collection of several Constitutions made at different places.

The First orders, that the Priests on Sundays and Holy-days shall demand of the People before they say Mass, whether there be any person of another Parish, who is come to hear Mass in Contempt of his own Priest; and if they find any, they shall put them out of the Church, and oblige them to return to their own Parish. They shall also ask, if there be any Person at Variance, and in Quarrels, and if they find any, they shall cause them to be Reconciled immediately, which if they refuse to be, they shall also put them out of the Church, till they shall be Reconciled, because they cannot bring their Offering to the Altar, till they be reconciled to their Brother. This being done, the Priest shall say Mass.

The Second forbids all Priests to receive the Parishioners of another, unless he be in a Voyage, or come to some Court.

The Third forbids a Priest to have any Woman with him, yea, those that are accepted by the Canons. It forbids also Women to approach the Altar, officiate as Priests, or to sit within the Rails.

The Fourth contains Directions, what a Priest ought to do when he hears that any Person is sick in his Parish. He ought to go immediately to see him, and when he enters into his Chamber, sprinkle Holy-Water, singing the Anthem, Asperges me Domine, Thou shalt sprinkle me, O Lord, &c. Psal. 51. 7. Then he shall say the Lord's Prayer, the Seven Psalms, and the Prayers for the Sick. After this, he shall cause all that are in the Chamber to go out, and coming to the Bed of the Sick-Man, he shall speak comfortably to him, and exhort him to put his whole Trust in God, to bear patiently the Afflictions he hath laid upon him, to confess his Sins, and to resolve fully upon a thorough Conversion; if God restores him to his Health, to promise, that he will do Penance, to dispose of his Goods, and set his worldly affairs in order, while he is of a sound Mind, to redeem his Sins by Alms, to pardon those that have injured him, to make a Confession of the Faith of the Church, and not to despair of the Mercy of God. After he hath given him these Exhortations, he shall give him his Blessing, and then shall retire to leave the Sick Man to think of his Sins.

The Fifth imports, that the Priest who shall receive the Confession of a Sick-Man, shall not bestow Absolution upon him, but upon Condition, that if God shall restore him to his Health, he will undergoe Penance proportionable to his Faults.

The Sixth forbids raking any thing for Burials, and Burying in the Church, near the Altar.

The Seventh forbids all Ministers of the Church to favour secret and clandestine Ordinations of any of the Clergy of another Diocess.

The Eighth forbids a Priest to have more than one Church, unless he have other Priests under him in every of those Churches, who shall recite the Office day and night, and celebrate Mass in them every day.

The Ninth commands, that the Bread be Blessed that is distributed to the People. This is one of the Articles of Hincmarus's Constitutions made 852.

The Tenth is about the Revenues of the Church, what use they ought to be put to, and how distributed into Four parts.

The Eleventh Orders, that when the Bishop designs to make an Ordination, he shall cause all those who are to be Ordained, to come to the City the Wednesday before the Ordination, with the Arch-Priests who are to present them. That afterward he shall send some Priests, and other discreet persons, to get information of their Life, Education, Birth, Manners, and Capacity; that he shall have them examined Three days together, and on Saturday Ordain those he finds worthy.

The Twelfth allows a Man to put away his Wife for Adultery, but not to Marry another in her Life-time. He may be Reconciled to her, but on condition that he doe Penance with her.

The Thirteenth imposes Three years Penance for single Fornication.

The Fourteenth imposes Seven years Penance upon a Married person, that hath committed Adultery; and Five on him that is not Married.

The Fifteenth regulates the practices of Fraternities, and takes away Abuses. This is Copied out of Hincmarus's Constitutions.

The next is an Extract from the same Author, In it a Priest is forbidden to sue for another Church besides what he has, and give Presents to the Lord to attain it.

The Seventeenth lays 14 years penance upon a Voluntary and Publick Murderer, viz. Five years in which he shall be separated from the Church; the rest of the time he may be at Prayers, but without Offering, or Communicating.

The Eighteenth imposeth Five years penance upon an Involuntary Murderer; Forty days Fast with Bread and Water, Two years separation from the Prayers of the Faithful, and Three years without communicating. It leaves it to the Priest to prescribe the Abstinence as he thinks convenient.

The Nineteenth forbids Nuns and Widows to be present at Pleadings, or any publick Assemblies, if they are not summon'd by the Prince or Bishop, or have no necessary business, in which case they ought to have the permission of the Bishop.

The Twentieth commands, that Bishops and their Ministers should use their utmost endeavours to abolish the Remainders of Idolatry in all places.

A LETTER from the Clergy of Ravenna to Charles the Younger.

CHARLES the younger had consulted the Clergy of Ravenna, to know, whether the Monks, which were raised to Ecclesiastical Dignities, ought to wear Clergy-men's habit, or keep to their Monks Garb. In Answer to him, they brought several Authorities of the Popes, to shew, that Clergy-men and Monks ought not so much to be distinguished by their Habits, as by their holy Lives and Profession. Then they say, that it doth not seem contrary to the Laws of the Church, that the Monks who are made Bishops, may not wear the same Habits with other Bishops, according to the practice of the Church of Rome; and they think, that such an Uniformity is much better, than if they were distinguished, as they are in the Greek Church. That nevertheless they do not think that it ought to be a Law to all Churches, because every one may have its particular Customs. But yet they can't condemn the practice of the Italian Bishops, and that it is convenient to uphold it, and to oblige all Monks that are Ordained Bishops, to wear the Stole, i. e. a Long Garment, in Honour to the Priesthood; although they are not thereby dispensed with to neglect the practice of their Rule. Lastly, That we must follow in such things the Custom that is anciently settled in the Church.

The LETTER of the Bishops of Germany to John the VIIIth.

THIS Letter is Written in the Name of the Bishops, Clergy, and People of Bavaria. They tell the Pope, that having heard of their Predecessors, that the Bishop of Rome hath been always careful to promote the Peace, Union, and Discipline of every Church; they cannot believe that which is daily reported, That there is lately come out from the Holy Apostolick See, which is the Original of the Christian Religion, and the Source of the Priestly Dignity, a Decree both both unjust in it self, and contrary to the Doctrine and Authority of the Church; but that three Bishops, who pretend themselves his Legates to the Sclavonians and Moravians, have raised that Report. That these People were heretofore subject to their Prince and the Bishops, that had Converted them; That the Bishop of Passau had always conversed freely with them, and held Synods there, till they revolted, and forsook Christianity; That since they brag, that they have obtained of the Pope, by their Money, to send three Bishops, who have attempted to doe a thing in the Bishoprick of Passau, which they could not think the Holy See would be the Author of, and which is directly contrary to the Order of the Canons, viz. To divide that Bishoprick into Five parts, and place an Arch-bishop, and three Bishops in that Diocess, without the consent of the Bishop. They cite the two Canons of a Council of Africa, and some places in the Pope's, Leo, and Celestine's Letters. They add, that his Predecessor Consecrated Wicherius Bishop at the desire of the Duke Zuetbaldus; but that he sent him into a Conquer'd Countrey, and not into the Dutchy of Passau. They complain also, that his Legates giving credit to the Relations of the Sclavonians, accused them of many false things. They take notice, that their Prince is descended of the Family of the Kings of France, who are Christians; whereas the Moravians and Sclavonians are Originally Pagans, and Enemies to the Christian Religion. They commend their King Lewis, and shew the great inclination he hath to the Holy See, and for Religion. They Confute the Reports the Sclavonians had given out, that they had made a League, in a prophane manner, with the Hungarians, who have pillaged, burnt and sacked the Countrey. That, on the contrary, they had a design of hindring them from entring into Italy, and to send some Succours into Lombardy; and to put themselves into a condition to doe it, they had desired a League with the Sclavonians, but could not obtain it. They conclude, with an earnest Request to the Pope, not to believe the Calumnies which the Sclavonians spread abroad against them, and to endeavour the Peace of the Church.

CHAP. XII.

The Constitutions of some Bishops, and Collections of Canons, concerning the Discipline of the Church.

BESIDES the Constitutions made by the Bishops Assembled in Councils for the Reformation of Church-Discipline, several Bishops were at the pains to make particular Constitutions for their own Diocesses, and Treatises for the Instruction of their Clergy. They also, at the same time, made several Collections of Canons about Penance, and other Ecclesiastical Matters. The chief Tracts, which relate to the Matters, and the Authors of this Age, which composed them, are these that follow.

Hatto, or Hetto, chosen in 796 Abbot of the Monastery of Augia Dives, of which he was a Monk, and afterwards Bishop of Basil in 801; was sent, by Charles the Great, in the year 811, to the Greek Emperour, to make a Peace, and settle the Bounds of both Empires. He Wrote a Relation of his Voyage, but it is lost. He Composed a Book of Constitutions for the Instruction of the Priests of his Diocese, put out by Father Dacherius, in Tom. 6. of his Spicilegium, and inserted in the last Collection of the Councils.

This Book contains 25 Articles. 1. That Priests shall understand well the Doctrine of the Faith. 2. That they shall Teach the People the Creed, and Lord's Prayer in Latin, and their Mother-Tongue. 3. That they shall Teach them to say the Responses after the Priest in Divine-Service. 4. That the Priests shall understand the Nature of the Sacraments, of Baptism, Confirmation, and the Lord's Supper; and that by the Mysterious use of a Visible Creature, the Salvation of the Soul is further'd. 5. That they shall have Books necessary for their Office, viz. A Book for Celebration of Sacraments, a Book of the Lessons, Anthems, Administration of Baptism, a Calendar, and Homilies for all the year. 6. That they shall recite S. Athanasius's Creed at the Prime. 7. That they shall have notice of the Solemn time for Baptism, as H. Saturday, and the Saturday before Whitsuntide, although in cases of necessity, Baptism may be administered at all times. He observes, that they used Three Dippings, and had in their Fonts a Vessel, which they used onely to Baptize in. 8. That they should know all the days in the year, which they are to keep Holy, viz. All the Sundays in the year, from Morning to Night; our Lord's Nativity, St. Stephen's, St. John's, St. Innocent's, Circumcision, Epiphany, Purification, Easter, Ascension, H. Saturday, Whitsuntide, St. John Baptist, the XII Apostles, and chiefly St. Peter and St. Paul. The Assumption of the Virgin Mary, the Dedication of St. Michael's Church, and all other Churches; the Feast of every Saint, in Honour of whom any Church is Founded. That they ought to observe the Fasts appointed by the Prince; but as to the Festivals of S. Remedius, S. Maurice, and S. Martin, the People ought not to be forced to keep them, nor hindred, if their Devotion lead them to it. 9. That Clergy-men ought not to have Women, that are Related to them, with them. 10. Nor go to Taverns. 11. Nor frequent Courts of Judicature, nor be Bail, nor go a Hunting. 12. That they should know, that none ought to be Ordained for Money, and if any Man be, he ought to be deposed, as well as he that Ordained him. 13. That no body ought to receive, nor employ a Clergy-man of another Diocese, without the consent of his Bishop. 14. That they ought not to celebrate Mass in private Houses, or Unconsecrated Churches, unless in respect to the Sick. 15. That Tithes ought to be paid, the third part of which belongs to the Bishop, according to the Council of Toledo; that, as for himself, he was contented with a Fourth part, according to the Constitutions of the Roman Bishops, and the use of the Church of Rome. 16. That Women ought not to come near the Altar, nor doe any Offices about it. That when they are to wash the Vessels, and Church, the Clerks shall take them from the Altar, and deliver them to the Women at the Rails of the Altar, whither they shall bring them again; and the Priests shall also receive there the Offerings of the Women, to carry them to the Altar. 17. That Priests shall Preach both by their Word and Example, That Men ought not to be Usurers. 18. That no Clergy-man, Ordained, or to be Ordained, shall go out of his own Diocese, either to Rome, or to Court, or to obtain Absolution, without the allowance of his Bishop; and that they shall admonish them, that will go to Rome out of Devotion, that they ought not to go, till they have confessed their sins in their Diocese, because they ought to be bound, or loosed by their own Bishop, and not by a Stranger. 19. That nothing shall be Sung, or Read in the Church, which is not taken out of Scripture, or the Writings of the Orthodox Fathers. That they shall not honour any unknown Angels, but onely S. Michael, S. Gabriel, and S. Raphael. That Priests shall all have one way of Administring Penance, and shall impose it according to the nature of Mens Faults. 20. That they shall put the Offerings of the Faithful to a Good Use. 21. That they shall not suffer a Contract of Marriage between Relations to the Fifth degree; but nevertheless those that are Married in the Fourth degree shall not be parted, but put to Penance so long as they continue together. That it is not lawful to Marry the Relations of a First Husband, or First Wife; also a God-son, or God-daughter at Baptism, or Confirmation: That they who have committed Fornication with a Relation in the First degree, may not continue together, that they shall be put to penance, and parted; but they may Marry others. That Slaves may not Marry, without the consent of their Master; and if they doe, the Marriage is null. 22. That Priests shall Teach their People to doe Works of Mercy, Instruct them in Vertue, and win them from Vice, but chiefly from Perjury. 23. That they shall Officiate in the Churches they are appointed, and shall not fail to say the Canonical hours both by day and night. 25. That they shall admonish God-fathers and God-mothers, that they are obliged to make their God-sons and God-daughters, when they are at Age of Discretion, to be sensible of the Promise they have made for them. These Constitutions shew, how prudent and wise a Man this good Bishop Hatto was. Being very Aged, he laid down the Government both of his Diocess and Monastery, which he had always held with it, in 823, and lived a private Monk the rest of his Life. He died in 836. He also Wrote a Relation of the Visions of St. Wettinus, or Guetinus, a Monk of the same Abbey, which are also mention'd by Strabo. [This Tract is printed among the Visions of Hildegardes, and other Religious Men, at Paris, 1513. and by F. Mabillon, Sæc. Benedi. 4. p. 1.]

Agobard.

This is a proper place to Treat of the Writings of Agobardus, which, for the most part, concern the Discipline of the Church. The Life of this Author is very obscure; some think him a Frenchman, though they have no clear proof of it. He was Coadjutor, (a) or rather a Suffragan of Leidradus, Arch-bishop of Lyons; who being desirous to retreat into the Monastery of Soissons, in the beginning of the Empire of Lewis the Godly, Agobardus was put in his place by the consent of the Emperour, and (b) a whole Synod of France, which approved of the Choice, that Leidradus had made of him for his Successor. But this Ordination was afterward found fault with, because 'tis against the Canons for a Bishop to choose his Successor; a Rule, which it is very dangerous to break. Nevertheless Agobard enjoyed his See peaceably, till he was put out by Lewis the Godly for taking part with his Son Lotharius, and having been one of the Principal Authors of his Deposition, at an Assembly of Bishops held at Compeigne, in 833. for Lewis the Godly punishing the Injustice, and Violence, which had been done to him by Lotharius, and the Bishops of his party, had a Process drawn up against them at a Council of Thionville held in 835. Ekbo, who was Arch-bishop a Or rather a Suffragan.] We ought to Read Chorepiscopus in Ado, as it is in the Chronicon of Hugo Flaviniensis, and not Co-episcopus; because if he had been Co-episcopus, or Coadjutor, there had been no need of Ordaining him a-new, when Leidradus retired. And 'tis certain there were at this time Suffragans in France.

b A Whole Synod.] What Synod it was is not known. M. Baluzius believes it was that of Mentz, in 813. but this Synod was under Charles the Great; and Leidradus did not retire, and so Agobard could not be Ordained, till the Reign of Lewis the Godly.

of Rheims, was forced to confess his fault, and submit himself to his Deposition. Agobardus, who fled into Italy, with the other Bishops of his party, was cited to the Council three times; and, not appearing, was Deposed. The Examination of their cause was began the next year, at an Assembly held near Lyons, but was left undetermined, by reason of the absence of the Bishops, to whom alone it belonged to depose their Brethren. Lastly, The Children of Lewis the Godly having made peace with him; they obtained, that Agobardus should be Restored; and he was present at a Synod held at Paris, by the Order of Lewis the Godly. He likewise obtained the favour of that Emperour, with whom he Died at Saintonge in 840, on the 15th day of June.

This Bishop had no less share in the Affairs of the Church of his time, than in those of the Empire, and hath shown, by his Writings and Government, that he was not more Learned and Skilful in Divinity, than expert in Politick Affairs. The Catalogue, and Extract of his Works follow.

His Treatise against Felix Orgelitanus is dedicated to Lewis the Godly. In it he explains the Tract of Felix, which he Composed by way of Question and Answer, and published, against what Agobardus had asserted in the City of Lyons, where he was then in banishment, after the Recantation he had made of his Error at the Council of Aix la Chapelle. Agobard observes, that Felix had suppressed several Expressions, which he had used before, and had added new Errors. He acknowledged, that that Bishop lived a very Holy Life; but says, that we must judge of a Man's Faith, not by the Holiness of his Life, but of his Manners by his Faith. Non est vitâ hominis metienda fides, sed ex fide probanda est vita. He excuses the plainness of his Style, and prays them, who will take the pains to read his Writings, to content themselves with the consideration of the passages of the Fathers which he hath cited, and to compare Felix's Opinion with them. After he hath spoken in general of the Error of Nestorius and Eutychius, he says, that he hath heard that Felix in his Life-time, did Teach, That Jesus Christ, as Man, was ignorant of many things; as of the place where Lazarus was Buried; because he asked his Sisters, where they had laid him; the Day of Judgment; the Discourse which the Disciples, that went to Emmaus, had together; the Love St. Peter had for him. That Agobard, knowing that he Taught these things, found them out, reproved him for them, explained those places to him, and sent him several passages of the Fathers, contrary to those Errors; that having read them, he promised to amend them; that things remaining thus, he did not think it his Duty to publish the Errors asserted by him, because it did not concern him to doe it. But, after his Death, some of the Faithful told him, That he had asserted, That it was not certain that the Son of God Suffer'd, or was fixed to the Cross, but that ought to be affirmed of the Manhood only, which he had assumed; an Error, which arises from the ignorance of the Substantial Union of the Word with the Flesh, although he seemed to admit but one Person only in the Person of Jesus Christ. He shews, that Nestorius spake after the same manner. He consults that Assertion of Felix, That in the Nativity of the True Son of God, of the Substance of his Father, his Nature preceded his Will; so that he is necessarily the Son of God: but in his Humane Nativity, it was from his Will, and not from Necessity. That he was the Son of God---Agobardus affirms, that this Expression makes Jesus Christ to be believed not to be the true and natural Son of God. He also blames Felix for teaching, that though the Virgin Mary be the Mother of God, yet she is otherwise the Mother of the Man, than of God. He says, that this Expression is not only new, and not heard of before, but impious. That the Virgin can't be one way the Mother of the God-head, and another of the Manhood in Jesus Christ, since she was the Mother of a God-man at the same time, and the Divinity and Humanity make but one Person in Jesus Christ. He also opposes that opinion of Felix, that Jesus Christ was different ways the Son of God according to his different Natures; That according to his Divinity, he was a Son by Nature, in Truth and Substance, whereas according to his Humanity, he was a Son only by Grace, Election, Will, Predestination and Assumption. From this Principle, he draws this Consequence, That since Jesus Christ is a Natural Son in one Sense, and an Adoptive in another, we must acknowledge two Sons and two Persons. 'Tis true, that Felix disowns this Consequence, but Agobard affirms it to follow directly from his Doctrine, and says, that Nestorius used that very Expression. He confutes this principle, and the Consequences Felix draws from it by several passages of the Fathers. And Lastly, answers to those that Felix had alledged to prove the Adoption of Jesus Christ; shewing that the Fathers never said, that Jesus Christ was an Adoptive Son, but that the Humane Nature was adopted by the Divine, i. e. the Divine Nature was united with the Humane, so that the Person made up of both Natures, was the true and natural Son of God, and not merely by Adoption and Grace.

The Book of Agobard concerning the Insolence of the Jews, is a petition addressed to Lewis the Godly, in which he Complains, that the Commissioners which he had sent to Lyons, took part with the Jews against the Church, and had sealed Letters and Ordinances bearing his Name, which were favourable to them. They had carryed the Business so far, that they spoke openly in favour of the Jews, and so threatened some Bishops. Agobard, who was absent when this happened, being gone to the Monastery of Nantouë to accommodate a difference that had happened among the Monks, wrote about it to the Commissioners, but they had no regard to his Letters; whereupon he addressed himself to the Emperour, and represented it to him, that the Jews did persecute Him and his Fellow-Bishops, because he preached to the Christians, that they should not sell any Slaves to the Jews, nor suffer the Jews to sell Christians into Spain, nor keep Christians for their Household Servants, nor to suffer Christian Women to keep the Jewish Sabbath, nor the Jews to labour or trade on the Lord's Day, not to eat in Lent with them, not to eat any Flesh they have killed, nor drink any Wine that they sell. Lastly, not to converse familiarly with them, nor trade with them, because they daily Blaspheme the Name of Christ. Then he describes the insolence of the Jews, because they found themselves upheld by the Authority of the Commissioners. He beseeches him to hear the humble entreaty of Himself and Brethren, and rectify this disorder.

To this Petition he joyns a Letter written in his Name, and in the name of Bernard, Arch-bishop of Vienna, and another Bishop called Eaof or Taof, in which they produce the Authorities of the Fathers and Scripture, to justify the Severity they treated the Jews withall. They relate the example of S. Hilary, who would not salute them; of S. Ambrose, who writes, that he would rather suffer Death, than rebuild a Synagogue of the Jews, which the Christians had burnt. They add to these two Fathers, S. Cyprian and S. Athanasius, who wrote against the Jews: Then they alledge the Canons of the Councils of Spain and Agda, which forbid Christians to eat with the Jews, and the Constitutions of the first Council of Maséo, which declares, that according to the Edict of Childebert, it is not permitted to the Jews to be Judges, or Receivers of the publick Revenues, nor to appear in publick in the H. Week, and renew the prohibition given the Christians not to eat with them. This is Confirmed by the Canons of the First and Third Councils of Orleans, and the Council of Laodicea, which forbids Christians to converse with them. They forget not the Action of St. John, who fled from the Bath, in which he saw Cerintus the Heretick entered, who was an Heretick of the Sect of the Jews. They accuse the Jews of their time to be worse than Cerintus, because they believed God Corporeal, and had gross and false Notions of the Divinity, allowed an infinite number of Letters, and believed the Law to be written several Years before the World, were perswaded that there are several Worlds and Earths, introduced many Fables about the old Testament, and uttered Blasphemy against Jesus Christ, published the false acts of Pilate, used the Christians as Idolaters, because they hated the Saints, and did infamous Actions in their Synagogues, from whence they conclude, that if they ought to separate themselves from Hereticks, they ought with more Reason to have no commerce with the Jews, which they maintain by several passages of H. Scripture.

'Tis very probable, that Agobard went to Court about this Business. He applied himself to Three Persons, who were in great Favour at Court, viz. Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, Vala the Son of Bernard, Brother of Pepin, and a Relation to the Emperour, and Helesacharius Abbot of S. Maximus at Treves, having complained before them of those that defended the Jews, they brought him into the King's presence to relate it, but he received no Satisfaction, and was ordered to withdraw. Being returned, he consulted those Three Persons by a Letter, what he should do with those Jewish Slaves, who desired to become Christians and be Baptized. He shews by several Reasons that he could not refuse to do it; and that the Jews might have no ground of Complaint, he says that he offer'd to pay them for those Slaves, what was ordered by the ancient Laws. But since the Jews would not receive that Price, because they were perswaded that the Court Officers were their Friends, he prays them to whom he wrote to direct him what to do upon that occasion, about which he was much perplexed, fearing on the one Side Damnation, if he denyed Baptism to the Jews, or their Slaves who desired it; and on the other Side, being fearful of offending the great Men, if he granted it to them.

In Agobard's Letter to Nebridius Arch-bishop of Narbonne, he shews how dangerous it is to hold a familiar converse with the Jews, and tells him, that he hath admonished his People of it all along his Visitation of his Diocels, and boldly opposed the attempts of the Emperour's Commissioners.

Agobard presented another Petition to Lewis the Godly, in which he prays him to abolish the Law of Gundobadus, which ordered, that private Contentions and Differences should be decided by a single Combat, or some other proofs, rather than by the Deposition of Witnesses. He shews that that Law which was made by an Arrian Prince, is contrary to the Spirit of the Gospel; to that Charity, that Christians ought to have one for another, and to the peace both of Church and State. He observes, that it came neither from the Law nor Gospel; That the Christian Religion was not established by such sort of Combats; but on the Contrary, by the Death of him that preached it; That the most Wicked and Guilty have often overcome the more Just and Innocent. He adds, that Avitus Bishop of Vienna, who had some Conferences about Religion with Gundobadus, and converted his Son Sigismond, disallowed this Custom. He complains of the little Regard had to the Canons of the Church of France. Lastly; he says, he could wish that all the Kings Subjects had but one Law, but because he believed that impossible, he desired he would abolish at least, that Custom, which was so unjust and so prejudicial to the State.

In the Treatise of the Privileges and Rights of the Priest-hood, dedicated to Bernard Bishop of Vienna. Agobard Treats of the Excellency of the Priest-hood. He says, that all Christians being Members of Jesus Christ, who is our Chief Priest, are Kings and Priests of the Lord. That in the beginning of the World, the First Born were Priests, and Sacrificers. There he produces several Examples taken out of the Holy Scripture, and many Authorities to shew that God hath often heard wicked Priests, and had no regard to the Sacrifices of good ones, because he looks chiefly upon the Dispositions of the Heart of those for whom they offer Sacrifices, and that otherwise 'tis not the Merit of the Priest, nor his Person that God respects, but his Ministry and Priest-hood. For this Reason it is, that wicked Priests may administer Sacraments, which the most H. Lay-men cannot do. And upon this account, Men ought to hear and believe what the Priest teacheth, if he do not corrupt the Doctrine of Jesus Christ, for if he teach any thing that Christ hath not Commanded, he that hears him, saith Agobard, is a Leper, that follows another Leper, a Blind Man, lead by another Blind Man, and consequently both of them ought to be driven out of the Camp, and shall both fall into the Ditch. This gives him occasion to cite several Texts of Scripture, to exhort the Priests of the New Testament to behave themselves worthy of their Ministry, and to complain of the Irregularities of his time. He observes that the Great Lords of his time, kept Domestick Priests in their Houses not to obey them, but to employ them as they pleased, as well in Temporal as Spiritual Services; insomuch says he, that some Priests wait at Table, provide Meat and Drink, look after Dogs and Horses, and take care of their Farms in the Country. And because they can't find any good Clergy-men, who will so dishonour their Calling, they take such as come next, without regarding whether they are ignorant and worthless, and guilty of many Crimes. They only desire to have some Priests with them, that they may leave the Churches and publick Offices to them. And when they have a mind to have them ordained, they come and say in an imperious way, I have a little Clergy-Man whom I have brought up, who is the Son of one of my Waiting-Men or Tenants, I desire you to make him a Priest, and when they have got him ordained, they think that they have no need of the Curates, and never come to the Service of a Parish-Church, nor Exhortions made there. He crys out against this abuse, and bewails the badness of his time, in which the Bishops were not allowed to reprove their irregularities, as by their Office they are obliged. Lastly, he exhorts the Laity to have respect to the Sacraments, which are administered by the Priests. For says he, the Holy Sacraments, Baptism, and the Consecration of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and the rest, which give Life and Salvation to the Faithful, are so Great and Holy, that they cannot become more Excellent, by reason of the Holiness of good Ministers, nor worse by the impiety of wicked ones, because they operate not by the Virtue of Men, but by the Majesty of the Holy Spirit, when the Priest hath made his Invocation; whereupon he cites several passages of S. Austin, Gelasius and Pope Anastasi, and advises the Bishops to be careful, that they be not partakers of other Mens Sins, by ordaining such Persons Priests, as are vicious, ignorant, and unable to discharge their Ministry well. He says, that the Learning of Ministers is more to be regarded than their Manners, because though a Priest ought to be blameless in both, yet 'tis less dangerous, to have a Priest that reaches well and lives ill, than to have the ignorant though they live well. Lastly, he distinguishes Ministers into four sorts, 1. Such as are to be loved, who live well and teach well. 2. Tolerable, such as teach well but live ill, or who live well, but have not learning enough to instruct others. 3. The Contemptible, who live ill and are ignorant. 4. Such as are accursed, who live either well or ill, and teach Heresies. In the Conclusion, he prays God to pour his Graces upon the Priests of his Church, that they may carry themselves so, as becomes their Ministry.

Nothing is more judicious, than the next Treatise of Agobard's, which he wrote to undeceive the People, and remove the Opinions they had, that Sorcerers could raise Tempests, cause Thunder, and bring Hail by their Inchantments. He proves by several Texts of Scripture, that it is great Folly, and a kind of Sacrilege to attribute to Men, that which belongs to God. He laughs at the fancy of some, who supposed that there was a Region in the Air, whither they conveyed the the Corn and Fruit, which the Hail beat down. He shews by several Texts of Scripture, that God only is the cause of Thunder and Hail, that he punishes Men by these Plagues; That all that is done in the Air, is the effect of his Power, whether done by Himself or Angels, or Men; That he alone is the Mover and Creator of the Universe; That if wicked Men had power to afflict and destroy other Men, all their Enemies would be so dealt with; That he understood not how Men had power to disturb the Air, or Heaven, whose Nature they are ignorant of; That most of the Histories written upon this Subject being examined, will be found false, although there be some People so ignorant as to expose themselves to Death to maintain them, as it happen'd a little before, when they accused Grimoaldus Duke of Beneventum, of having scattered a Powder through the whole Countrey, which made all the Oxen die. As if, says he, he could make a Powder, which should kill Oxen only, and not other Beasts, or could make such quantities of it, and have Sowers enough to scatter it through the whole Countrey.

Fredegifus Abbot of S. Marrian at Tours, having found fault with some passages in one of Agobard's Books, he thought himself obliged to defend himself and answer that Abbot's Objections. The first Expression of Agobard's which he reproved was, That the humble Man who hath mean Thoughts of himself, is subject to error. Fredegifus says, That Jesus Christ was humble, and yet 'tis certain, he was not subject to error. Agobard answers, That his Maxim ought not to be understood of Jesus Christ, who abased and humbled himself voluntarily without ceasing to be Omnipotent and Sinless; but he confirms it in respect of all other Men, who are subject to Error and Sin.

Secondly, Fredegifus accuses him of weakning the Authority of Scripture, and of the Interpretation of it, because he had observed, that they did not always observe the rules of Grammar. Agobard answers, that that ought not to make those things doubted of, which are related in Holy Scripture, that the Interpreters have used so to do, either to accommodate themselves to the capacity of the Simple, or to express the Sense of the Original the better. That it is not allowable to doubt of the authority of those Authors, of whom the Holy Spirit hath made use to write the Canonical Books, or believe that they ought to have written otherwise than they have. That next to the Original, the authority of the Translation of the Seventy ought to be acknowledged, and the fidelity of S. Jerom's Latin Version upon the Hebrew Text, and that the Latin Versions made by Orthodox Christians out of the Seventy, are not to be condemned, but there are several Translations which are justly to be corrected and reprov'd, as those of those famous Hereticks, and Bastard Jews, Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus, as also certain Latin Interpreters reprov'd by St. Jerom. And lastly, as to Commentators, Men ought to follow the Rule of St. Austin, who gives all Liberty to judge of them, and reject what is not orthodox and true in their Writings. Afterward examining particularly the question about the Holy Books, he says, 'tis absurd to believe, that the Holy Ghost did inspire the Prophets and Apostles, with the Words and Terms which they used; and to prove this, he alledgeth the Example of Moses, who says, that he was of a slow Speech. He produces the Testimonies of S. Jerom, who acknowledgeth, that there is a difference in the Style in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles, some of whom wrote more loftily and Eloquently, others with less Elegancy and Loftiness, and sometimes there is the same difference in different Writings. This difference may not be attributed to the Holy Spirit, but to Men, and consequently 'tis they, not the Spirit, which are the Authors of the Words and Expressions which they use, although he inspires them with the Sense and Doctrine they ought to write.

In his Answer to the Third Objection, he opposeth the Opinion of his Adversary, who maintain'd, that the Souls of Men were Created, separated from the Bodies; he affirms, that we ought to believe, that they are created in and with the Body, although the Philosophers delivered the contrary, and Austin doubts of it.

In the next place he answers a question put to him by his Adversary, Whether Truth be any thing but God. He answers, That Truth is not always taken for God himself, although 'tis not to be doubted, but that God is Truth. The Fourth Question concerns the Righteous Men of the old Law. Agobard maintains that they may be called Christians, although they were not called so, because they believed in Jesus Christ, and belonged to him, being anointed with the invisible Ointment of his Grace, as well as those who were good Men among the Gentiles.

The Jews who were in credit at Court, because they had Money, obtained an Edict from the Emperour, which contained many things in their Favour, and among the rest, that none of their Slaves should be baptized, but with their Masters Consent. This Edict being very prejudicial to Religion, and contrary to Christian Piety. Agobard address'd a Writing to Hilduin the King's great Chaplain, and to the Abbot Vala, who was at Court, in which he shews the injustice and impiety of that Prohibition, being evidently contrary to the Design of the Gospel, and the intention of Jesus Christ, who will have all Men to be saved, and hath commanded his Apostles to preach the Gospel to all Creatures, and baptize all that believe, whether Bond or Free. He desires them to whom he writes, to endeavour all they can to get this Edict recall'd, which he hoped might be done more easily, because he offer'd to pay the Jews the Ransom of those Slaves, according to the appointment of the Canons made in that Case.

In the Letter written by Agobard in his own Name, and Hildegifus and Florus's, who were Clergy-men of Lyons, to Bartholomew Bishop of Narbonne, he speaks of a certain Distemper, which took Men suddenly, and threw them down like the Falling-Sickness. Some also felt a sudden Burning, which left an incurable Wound. This ordinarily happen'd in the Churches, and the a-stomish'd People to guard themselves from it, gave considerable Gifts to the Churches to secure them. Agobard disallows this practice, and searching into the Cause of this Plague, he says, 'twas nothing else but the will of God, who punisheth Men by the Ministry of an Angel. After which, he relates several Examples of the like Chastisements out of Scripture, in which God hath exercised his Justice by Angels and other Creatures. He affirms, that these sort of inflictions are not from the power of the Devil, although he owns that God sometimes suffers the Devil to disquiet and torment Men. Returning then to the Question of Bartholomew, viz. what we ought to think of the practice of those, who coming into the Churches, where they were seized with this Distemper, bring presents to them. He says, that fear causes these people to do what they ought not, and hinders them from doing what they ought; for it were better, says he, to give Alms to the Poor, or Strangers, to address themselves to the Priest to receive Unction, according to the Command of the Gospel and of the Apottle, to fast and pray, and do works of Charity. It is true, adds he, that if the Offerings given to the Church be employed as they ought, they are an Action of Charity, but because at present, they are used only to satisfy the Covetousness and Avarice of Men, and not to honour God, or relieve the Poor, it is a shame to give them to such covetous Wretches to be kept, or ill employed by them.

The Injustice and Violence which was practised among the people of Lyons, and could not be restrained, obliged Agobard to write to Matfredus, a powerful Man in the Emperour's Court. He begs of him to use his Interest with his Prince, to hinder those Disorders, and cause justice to be done. This Compliment is short, but urgent. The Letter to the Clergy of Lyons concerning the manner, how the Bishops and Pastors ought to govern, is an excellent instruction for them. He says, that those who are entrusted with the Government of the Church, the Spouse of Christ, who is Peace, Truth, Justice, and the Author of all Good, ought to love that his Spouse singularly as himself, and apply himself entirely to the spiritual good of his only Spouse. That those who neglect to do their Duty, and place all their Pleasure and Affections upon Riches, Finery, Hunting, and Debauchery, are the destroyers of God's Work, and the Assistants of Antichrist; That though they seem to be Bishops in the Eyes of Men, they are not so in the Eyes of God, no more than Hypocrites, who affect to appear outwardly Holy, but whose Heart is full of Impurity, who seek not the Edification and Instruction of the Faithful, but their own Interest and Glory, such are those, who seek to get into the sacred Ministry, only to obtain Honour and Riches, or to live finely. He adds, that all those, that make it their main Business to gain themselves the Love and Respect of those that are under their Charge, and not to make Jesus Christ be loved and honoured by them, who is the only Spouse of the Church, are Adulterers and unworthy of the sacred Ministry, because they design rather to feed themselves than their Flock. Nevertheless he advises, that the Sheep should endure wicked Pastors, through Prudence, when they can't reform them.

His Book concerning the Dispensing of Ecclesiastical Revenues, was not written against the ill usage, which Clergy-men might make of them, but against the Laity, who took them away and kept them unjustly. Lewis the Godly, having called an Assembly of Clergy-men and Lords at Attigny, in 822. for the Reformation of Church and State, Agobard advises Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, and another Abbot called Helisficarius, that they ought to rectifie the Disorder, that was in the Church about the Ecclesiastical Revenues, which the Laity had appropriated to themselves, that they might speak to the Emperour of it. He zealously represents to them, that the Churches having been enriched by the Gifts of the Emperours, Princes and Bishops, had made an abundance of Laws and Canons for the preservation of the Revenues, and to hinder Lay-men from encroaching upon them; That the necessity which they alledged, was not a sufficient Reason to overlook those Laws, nor to authorize the Usurpations they had made of them. The year following, this matter was more fully debated in an Assembly held at Compeigne, where the Clergy again represented that the Laity were not to be suffered in the quiet Possession of the Revenues of the Church, which they had usurped. The Lords would not agree to the Restitution of them. The Emperour thought to accommodate the matter between the Bishops and Nobles, by causing a part to be restored only, but the Nobles not contented with it, declared at Length, that they would not hear of any accommodation, and complained grievously against Agobard, as a Man who had raised a question, which was fit to trouble both Church and State. In this Book he defends himself by bringing Authorities out of the Old and New Testament, to shew, that it is a great Crime to meddle with the Goods Consecrated to the Temple, Altars, maintenance of Ministers, and relief of the Poor. To them he joyns the Authority of the Canons, and chiefly those of the French Church. He observes, that some would not receive them, because the Popes and Emperours Deputies were not present at the Councils that made them, but 'tis his Judgment, that wherever Orthodox Bishops are met in the name of Jesus Christ for the good of the Church, the Decisions they make ought to be respected and followed, which says he, is established upon the Authority of the Popes, who have ordained that every two Years, two Councils shall be held in every Province, and have commended great Councils. Lastly, Agobard not only condemns the Lay-men, who make use of the Revenues of the Church to maintain Dogs and Horses, and great Retinues of Servants, or to satisfy their Pleasures and Passions, or spend them in Sports and superfluous Gallantry, but he involves in the same Condemnation the Bishops, Abbots and Clergy-men, who put those Revenues to any other use, than is allowed by the Laws of the Church and Doctrine of the Fathers.

Agobard's Treatise against the Judgment of God (i. e. the proofs made of Mens Innocency, either by single Combat, or by holding a red-hot-Iron, or by standing immoveable by a Cross, or by any other proof of like Nature) contains several Maxims taken out of the Holy Scripture, and chiefly out of the New Testament; by which he proves, that this usage is contrary to the Gospel, Christian Charity, Right Reason, and the Principles of our Religion.

In his Discourse of the Faith, Agobard runs through the chief Articles of our Belief, as the Trinity, Incarnation, Redemption; the Union of Jesus Christ with his Church; the Necessity of the Grace of Jesus Christ; to doe Good, and Resist Temptations; Patience in Adversity; Obligation to Prayer, &c. and sets down on every point Texts of Scripture, or Fathers: 'Tis rather a Sermon, than a Doctrinal Treatise.

The Letter of Lamentation about the Division of Europe, Dedicated to Lewis the Godly, was Written by Agobard in 833. when that Emperour made War against his Children. Agobard, who wished for peace, although he was of Lotharius's party, sent this Letter to him. He first of all represents to him, that it is the duty of a faithful Subject, and chiefly of a Prelate, to admonish his Prince, when he sees him ready to engage in a bad Cause, where his Soul is endanger'd. He calls God to witness, that this was the onely cause of his Writing to Lewis the Godly. Lastly, After he hath lamented the Calamities and Disorders which the War had caused, he tells him, That he did some time since part his COUNTRY between his Children, and made Lotharius a Partner in the Empire: That it was done with all the Solemnity possible, and with the consent of the Nobles and Bishops; That to consult the Will of God about it, he had commanded a Fast, continual Prayers, and Alms for three days; That the thing being finished, he sent the Act to Rome, to have it confirmed by the Pope. Lastly, That he obliged them all to Swear, that they approved the Election of Lotharius, and Division of the Empire. That, at first, all Letters and Edicts bore the Name of the Two Emperours in the front of them; but afterward he put out the Name of Lotharius without any Reason, and attempted to dispossess him of it. He beseeches Lewis the Godly not to persist in that design. He lets him know, that the Oath he had taken obliged him to be of Lotharius's party; and he endeavours to terrifie that Prince, who was of a fearful spirit, by threatening the Judgments of God, and hatred of Men upon him.

About the same time he sent a Treatise to Lotharius, Entitled, A Comparison between the Ecclesiastical and Civil Government; in Answer to an Order, which the Emperour had given to the Nobles, as well of the Clergy as Laity, to be ready to fight for him; the one with the Sword, and the other with the Tongue. Agobard tells him, That he ought in War to put his trust in God's help, more than his own Forces; and that in all Disputes we should seek for Truth, rather than Eloquence. Since he was one of those that Lotharius had Commanded, not daring to come himself, he Admonished him by Writing, of the Respect he ought to give the Holy See; and, to persuade him to it, he Cites a Passage of Pope Pelagius, against some Bishops, who would not recite the Pope's Name at Mass: And another passage out of St. Leo, about the Primacy of Peter. Agobard touched upon this string, because Lotharius carried Pope Gregory the IVth along with him, to Authorize his own party, and make his Father's odious. He knew what the other Bishops of France said, That if he came to Excommunicate them, he should return Excommunicated himself: Si Excommunicatus veniret, Excommunicatus abiret Agobardus. That if Gregory came, with an ill design, to foment the War, he deserved to be sent away with Disgrace: but he maintains, that if he came to procure the Peace and Quiet of the Empire, they ought to obey him, and not resist him. Now, he affirms, that this is the end of his Voyage, since he came to settle what was done by the will of Lewis, and consent of all the Members of the Empire; and confirmed by the Authority of the Holy See. He adds, That he had received Letters from him, commanding, that Prayers and Fasting be made for the Restoration of the Peace, and Agreement of the Empire, and in the Emperour's Family. Lastly, Agobard exhorts Lewis the Godly to be of that Mind.

This Writing is followed by a Letter, or rather a Fragment of a Letter of Gregory the Fourth to the Bishops of France, who would not receive him. It serves for an Answer to a Letter which they Wrote to him. In the beginning of it he finds fault, that they had called him Father, and Pope, in the Superscription of their Letter: He requires them to give him the Name of Father, as if the Bishops were not his Brethren, and had not that Title given upon many occasions; yea, in those very Letters he sent to them. The Second thing that Gregory finds fault with in the French Bishops Letter, is, That they declare their Joy for his Arrival; being persuaded, that it would be profitable for their Prince and his Subjects; and that they would have paid their Respects to him, had they not been prevented by an Express Order from the Emperour. He complains, That they preferred the Order of their Prince, before their Respect due to him; and maintains, that the Matter of Fact was not true, for they had notice of his Arrival; before they had any such Command from the Emperour. He adds, That they ought to know, that the Spiritual Government of Souls is more excellent, than the Temporal Government of Princes, as S. Gregory Nazianzen boldly told the same Emperour: That they ought to imitate the Liberty of Gregory the Great, who told the Emperour, That he was one of his Sheep, and that he ought to hear and believe him in things that belong to the Faith. That, in stead of those foolish flatteries which they they used to ingratiate themselves with the Prince, they ought to consider St. Austin's words, in Chap. 24. l. 5. of his Civitate Dei; where he gives Christian Princes excellent Advice. All this is very good, but it hinders not, but that though Bishops have received an Order from their Prince not to goe to the Pope, yet they ought to doe their Duty; for that prohibition is concerning a thing purely Civil and Politick, in which they are obliged to obey him, when it is not contrary to the Essential Duties of Religion.

In the Third place, Pope Gregory complains, that the Bishops of France, after they had declared their Joy for the News of his Arrival in France, say, That they were much troubled when they heard that he came to pronounce a presumptuous Excommunication, without any reason, to the dishonour of the Imperial power, and contempt of the Episcopal Authority. He reproves their inconstancy, and asks them, Whether the actions committed by the Emperour, which are really worthy of Excommunication, be not a greater disgrace to his Imperial Majesty, than Excommunication if inflicted, would be. But it doth not appear that he had good grounds for his Reproof or Question. Onely those are justly charged with Inconstancy, who change without reason; and, in the same posture of Affairs: For that which made the Bishops of France alter their Mind, was, the news they had heard, that Gregory would Excommunicate their Prince. They rejoiced at his arrival, because they believed he came to settle Peace; but when they saw he came to increase their Trouble, by an unjust Excommunication, they were the more disturbed; because they foresaw, that it would tend to his Disgrace both before God and Man, to take the part of Rebelious Children against their Father. And, for this reason 'tis, that Gregory had no good grounds for this Question. Whether the Emperour did not dishonour himself more, by doing things worthy of Excommunication, than he could do by Excommunicating him; for although perhaps it may happen, that such an Extremity may be used against a King of France, yet Lewis the Godly deserved not Excommunication. He was a Prince of great Piety and Religion in Agobard's Opinion; he had done nothing against the Law of God, or the Church: The controverſie he was engaged in, was about the Division of his Empire, which did not at all belong to the Vicar of Jesus Christ to take Cognizance of, since the Chief Pastor himself would not meddle with such matters, while he was upon Earth; and if it had been allowed him to intermeddle with such Affairs, he ought to have endeavour'd to make Peace, and re-unite the Father and Children, and not increase the Division by a rash Excommunication; he ought not to have favoured a Rebellion of the Children against the Father; nor their Intrigues and Devices to Dethrone him, as Unjust, and Ill an Action as a Man can be guilty of. In the Fourth place, this Pope blames that Distinction between the Holy See and his Person; and that they might bear a due respect to that, though they condemned his Actions. He says, they ought to respect the Person for the Sees sake. This is true; but that respect ought not to proceed so far, as to approve things, which he doth, contrary to the honour of his See, and Spirit of Jesus Christ and his Church: They respected his See, and his Person for its sake; but they condemned and disapproved the Personal Faults which he committed, and the Errors he was fallen into.

The Bishops of France, in justification of themselves, had Written, That they could not break the Oath they had taken to the Emperour without sin, nor deny him their Allegiance. Gregory affirms, That it was he that was faithful to him, because he reproved his actions against Religion and the Church; but, as for them, they denied him the Faith they ow'd him, by suffering his disorders. If the Quarrel had been about Religion, or the Manners of that Prince, 'tis true, the Bishops had been defective in their Duty, if they had not admonish'd him of it; but, when the whole Contest was about the Division of the Empire, it did not belong either to the Bishops or Pope to meddle with it. They had taken an Oath to Lewis the Godly (which the Pope did not deny) and they ought to obey him: they also ow'd the same to his Children, but after their Father, whose Interests ought to be preferred before those of his Children. If the Pope had come with this Intention, the Bishops of France would have received him Honourably, as they told him in their Epistle. This Expression offended him farther. He told them, that they acted by Humane Motives, and to get a Reward in this World. None but God knew their Intention; but, their Action was accounted by Men as an Effect of their true Christian Generosity and Fidelity. At last, the Pope comes to the Matter of the Quarrel, which was about the parting of the Empire. The Bishops of France held, That the Division made in 817 might be altered for the Good of the State. The Pope maintained, That this Change was so far from being advantageous to the State, that it caused infinite Troubles to it, and so could not be said to be according to God's Will. The Bishops of France Invited him to come to the Emperour, that he might know the Truth of the thing. Gregory rejected that Proposition with disdain, believing it evident, that the Change was unjust, because it was the cause of so great troubles; as if God did not sometimes permit Just Attempts to meet with Unfortunate Ivents. And besides, it was not the Alteration which was made in parting the Empire, which disturbed the State, but the Division it self, which Lewis the Godly had made among his Children; for, from that time, there was no Union among them, and they sought all ways to prejudice one another, and Dispossess their Father, by raising, daily, Wars destructive to the State.

The Bishops of France added, That if the Pope came with intentions, contrary to what they hoped, they would not endure him to dispose of any thing in their Diocesses, or Excommunicate any Man. Gregory wonders, that they would hinder him from settling Peace in their Churches; That indeed they might separate themselves from the Unity of the Church, but could not separate the Churches of Jesus Christ from the See Apostolick; as if that were to separate themselves from the Holy See, to make the ancient Canons to be observed, which forbid all Bishops, as well those of the Apostolick Sees as others, to doe any thing in the Diocesses of their Brethren, without their permission. Lastly, The Bishops of France tell him in their Letter, That they thought themselves obliged to declare to him, what they could much rather have kept to themselves, That if he would not follow their Counsel, he would be in danger of losing his Dignity. The Pope denies not but if he were guilty of some great Crime, as Murther, Sacrilege, or Theft, he might be Degraded: but, he says, Nothing is more ridiculous, than to threaten him with that punishment, because he would not agree to their Judgment. The Bishops of France labour'd to insinuate, that he deserved to be Deposed for Perjury, of which they affirm he was guilty, in taking part against Lewis the Godly, to whom he had taken an Oath of Allegiance, as is evident from the sequel of the Letter; which put Gregory into so great a Passion. He says, That if he were Perjured, he could not be Depos'd by those, who were equally guilty of that sin, but they could not prove him so. They added, That as to the Bishops, that followed Gregory's party, they should be Judged with the greatest severity; irrefragabiliter. The Pope accuses them of presumption, to believe, that their Judgment might not be examined a-new, in a General-Council, apud Universitatem; or by more Judicious persons, who have more equal Intentions; or, Lastly, at the Tribunal of Jesus Christ. But 'tis evident, that the Bishops of France spoke onely of Humane Judgments, which were according to the ancient Discipline established by the Council of Nice, strongly defended in Africk, and maintained in France; according to which, the Judgment given by the Bishops of a Country against the Clergy, or Bishops of it, is of unalterable force, and cannot receive any change. For this reason the Bishops of France did so vigorously maintain the Rights and Liberties of their Churches; and discharged their Duty of Fidelity and Obedience to their King, according to their Oath, without denying a due Respect to the Holy Apostolick See.

Although the Cause of Lewis the Godly's Children was very heinous, yet Agobard endeavours to make it plausible in his Manifesto [or Apology for them.] The pretence of their Rebellion was, the Good of the State: their Design, if we may believe them, was to purge the Court of Plots, and Debaucheries, and settle Union and firm Correspondence between their Father and themselves; and chiefly to repress the Publick Disorders of their Mother-in-Law, whom they had once Imprisoned; but, being after released, was always possessing their Fathers Mind against them, and creating Disturbances. They declare, That Lewis the Godly caused an Oath first to be made to himself, then to his Son Lotharius, and after that to Pepin, and, last of all, had compelled almost all the World to Promise Fidelity to a Babe (i. e. to Charles the Bald, the Son of his Second Wife, to whom he gave Austria, after he had taken it from Pepin.) That he had Raised Troops, which ought rather to be employed against the Barbarians; That he did all this by the Advice of some Men, who justled for the destruction of his Children, that they might more easily compass his own; That the Queen did many Indecent things in the sight of all the World, yea, and of the Bishops themselves. He adds, That 'tis for the publick Interest to labour for the Peace and Quiet of the State; That to doe this effectually, they ought to have recourse to the Original of these Grievances, which is no other thing but the Irregularities, Debaucheries and Ambition of the Queen; who, like another Jezebel, or Dalilah, having entirely engrossed the Affections of the King, did make him doe much Injustice and Wrong, for which he ought to put himself into a state of Penance, and leave his Throne to his Son. These last words shew, that this Book was made some-time after Lewis the Godly was Deposed, and put to Penance, in 833, as it is related in the Memoir, according to Agobard; where he says, That he was present at the Assembly of Bishops and Lords, held in the Royal Palace of Compeigne, in the 4th Month, 833, to consider of the Danger the Kingdom was in, by reason of the Negligence, Cowardice, and Irregularities of the Emperour Lewis; and that he approved all that was done for the Good of the State, and for the Amendment and Ease of Lewis's his Soul, which made him admonish him of his Faults, by his Commissioners, and exhort him to Repentance; And, for that end, he gave him a Schedule of his Crimes, that he might see the foulness of his Actions; that all the Bishops had met him, and compassionating his Weakness and Miseries, had begged of God to deliver him from his Misfortunes, and pardon his Sins, that so his Soul being raised by the true Contrition of an humble heart, and humbling himself before them, had acknowledged and confessed his Crimes several times; That he had begged pardon, and undergone the Penance imposed on him; That, lastly, going to the Church, in the presence of the People, he had Prostrated himself before the Altar and Tombs of the Saints; and, lying in Sackcloth, had Confessed aloud, Three or Four times, his Crimes, with abundance of Tears; and, pouring out his Tears at the bottom of the Altar, he was put to Publick Penance, by the Imposition of the hands of the Bishop, with Singing of Psalms and Prayer.

The Book Dedicated to Ebbo, Arch-bishop of Rheims, contains a Collection of Texts of Scripture, about Hope and Fear, but we have nothing remaining at present but onely the Preface.

The Works of Agobard conclude with Two Pieces of Poetry; the one an Epitaph upon Charles the Great; the other is some Verses upon the Translation of the Reliques of S. Cyprian, S. Speratus, and Pantaleo, brought out of Africa and Ayles to Lyons.

Agobard Writes in a plain Style, Intelligible and Natural, but something flat, and without Ornament: His Discourse is mingled with several Citations, long passages of Scripture and Fathers, according to the Custom of his Time. He Argues very rationally about the Matters he Treats of, and Writes like a Man well-versed in the Doctrine of the Fathers, and Discipline of the Church.

His Works are published by Papirius Massonus, and Printed at Paris in 1605, in Octavo, out of a MS. which he found by chance in a Book-binders-Shop at Lyons, which he designed to use as Waste-paper; and which his Brother, after his Death, put into the King's Library. But though Massonus was a very Learned Man, yet he left many Faults in his Edition, which have been since Corrected by M. Baluzius, in his Edition of Agobard's Works, Printed by Maguet at Paris, 1666, in Two Vol. Octavo. Revised by the same MS. with great exactness, who hath added a Treatise of Agobard's to it, against the Book of Offices, made by Amalarius, taken out of a MS. which was communicated to him by F. Chiffletius. [This Edition is put into the last Edition of the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 234.]

Amulo.

Amolo, Amulo, or Amulus, a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, under Agobard, succeeded him in 841. He was in great Reputation and Favour with Charles the Bald. He was President in a Council held at Lyons, 845.

We have already spoken of this Letter to Gottschalcus about the Question of Predestination and Grace: But we must here give an Extract of another Letter Written to Theobaldus, or Theobaldus, Bishop of Langres; who consulted him about some Abuses committed in the Church of S. Benignus at Dijon, as to the Relicks shewed then: Two Monks had brought some Bones of a pretended Martyr, which they said came from Rome, and some other place of Italy; but that which was most pleasant, was, that these impudent Monks were not ashamed to say, That they had forgotten the Name of the Saint: As if, says Amulo, it were credible, that they could be ignorant of the Name of a Saint, famous in the place from whence they had him; or could forget his Name in the way, whom they looked upon as their Patron, and whom they ought continually to Pray to. The Bishop of Langres used much prudence upon this occasion; and imitating S. Martin in a like Case, determined, That they ought not to receive those Relicks, which were not well-Attested; but yet they might not use them with contempt. Then he thought it fit to oblige those who had brought them, to procure Authentick Proofs from the place where they had them. Indeed, one of them went away with a pretence to get some proofs, but never returned; and the other died a little time after at Dijon. Nevertheless they laid up these pretended Relicks in the Church, by the Body of the Holy Martyr, and affirmed they did many Miracles: No Sick persons were cured by them; but, on the contrary, some Women fell upon the ground, beat themselves, and made a shew as if they were Plagued by them. This brought many to that place. Amulo observes, that there were many persons who were seized with the same Distemper, and, upon that account, were obliged to stay in the Church, or to return again as soon as they were gone out of it: That this Distemper happened in other places, particularly in the Village of Saulieu, in the Diocese of Aulun, where the Bodies of the Holy Martyrs, Andochius, Thysus, and Pelix lay.

Amulo hereupon advises the Bishop of Langres to remove these Bones out of the Church, and Bury them in some decent place at a distance from it, in the presence of some few persons; for, says he, since 'tis said, They are the Bones of some Saint, we ought not to deprive them of all Respect; but yet we ought not to give an occasion to the People to fall into an Error and Superstition. Nor may we fear, adds he, least our scrupulousness be the cause of Scandal; since God hath commanded us to be sincere, and prudent in things which concern his Service. Whereupon he alledges the Example of S. Martin, and the Decree of Pope Gelasius. He says; That if there were any Miraculous Cures done in the Church of S. Benignus, they ought to be attributed to God, and the Merits of his Saints, without approving other Signs, done in the Church, or elsewhere. That it is likely, that the fallings and bearings of Men and Women, were the effect of the wickedness of those miserable Beggars, who pretended themselves to be so afflicted, only to get Money. That he never heard any such Miracles spoken of; as to make Sound-Men Sick; part Daughters from their Parents, and Women from their Husbands, by obliging them to continue in the Church, and hindring their return to their Houses. That these things are the effect, either of Humane Malice, or Diabolical Illusions. Upon this occasion he relates two Examples of things of like nature, which happen'd under his Predecessor Agobard, of which he found out the Cheat. He advises the Bishop of Langres to banish that Superstition out of his Diocese, to perswade the people from it; and exhorts them earnestly not to assemble so unprofitably in that place, but every one to remain in his Parish, and frequent the Service of that Church, where he received his Baptism, tism, as well as the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, where he useth to hear Solemn Masses, from whose Priest they receive Penance, are assisted in their Sickness, and are Buried after their Death; to whom they pay their Tithes, and bring their Offerings, to which they go to hear Saving Instructions. That in these Churches it is, they must meet to pay their Vows, and Prayers to God, to beg the Prayers of the Saints, to give Alms to the poor Widows and Orphans, That this is the Lawful and Regular Discipline of the Church, and the ancient practice of the Faithful. That if it happens that Christians fall into any Weakness, or Sickness, they ought to follow the Command of St. James, to call the Priests to Pray over them, and anoint them with Oil in the Name of the Lord. He doubts not but if this were put in practice, all these pretended Miracles would cease: And he likewise advises him, that if any of these Wretches prove obstinate, to have them Scourged, till they shall confess the Truth. He adds, That since these Distempers happened, through the Illusion of the Devil, they would do better to implore the help of the Lord of their Churches, than to remain in a distant Church; and that one Saint will not contradict the Honour given to another, because they are all united in the same Love. If they will go to visit the Churches of the Martyrs, they ought to do it at these times, which are appointed for it by the Church, viz. In the Rogations, Lent, and Festivals of the Martyrs. Nevertheless he doth not condemn those, who do it at other times out of Devotion, provided they do it without Ostentation and Tumult; but he finds fault with them for neglecting to do it upon the Solemn Days set apart by the Church; and tells them, they do it at other times to no purpose, through Vanity and Ostentation. Lastly, Since there are some people really possessed, they ought to be used by the Priests of the place, or Neighbouring Chapels of the Martyrs, in private, with gentleness, and not expose them to the throng and tumult of the People. These are the principal Arguments of Amulo in this Letter, which prove, that this Bishop had much sincerity, knowledge, prudence, zeal and eloquence. He is also the Genuine Author of a Treatise against the Jews, published by F. Chiffletius, under the Name of Rabanus [at Dijon, 1656.] for Trimethius [De Script. Eccles.] attributes it to Amulo, and it is found under his Name in a MS. in the Library of M. Colbert. [Baluzius published the rest at the end of Agobard's Works.]

Adelardus, the Son of Count Bernard, Brother of Pepin, Grandson of Charles Martellus, Great Master of the French, and Abbot of Corbey, was sent to Rome to Pope Leo, about the Question concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. Having joyned with Bernard King of Italy, in the Conspiracy against Lewis the Godly, he was forced to fly into Aquitain, to the Monastery of S. Philibert, but he was re-called in 822, and restored to his Monastery. He made some Statutes for the Church of Corbey, published by Father Dacherius, Tom. 4. of his Spicilegium. He died in 826. His Life is Written by Paschasius Rathbertus, Abbot of Corbey.

Ansegisus, Abbot of S. Wandrillus, is the Author of the Collection of the Constitutions of Ansegisus. Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly, of which we have already spoken. He died in 834.

Haltigarius Succeeded Hildegaldus in the Bishoprick of Cambray, in 816. He was sent with Halitgarus, Elbo of Rheims to Preach the Gospel in Denmark; and, by Lewis the Godly, Ambassador to Michael Balbus, the Emperour of Greece, Anno 828. Being returned from that Embassy, he died in 830, June 25. He Composed a Work, Entituled, Of Vices, and their Remedies: Of Vertues, and the Order and Judgments of Penance. 'Tis a long Penitential, divided into Six Books, which is found in Tom. V. of the Collection of Canisius, and in the Biblioth. Patrum [Tom. XIV.] This Work is also attributed to Rabanus.

Isaac, Surnamed the Good, a Scholar of Hilquin, and Deacon of Pardul, Bishop of Laon, Isaac, who was preferred to the Bishoprick of Langres, and present at the Council of Savonieres in 859, and the following Councils; made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, taken out of the Canons of the Councils, held by Boniface Arch-bishop of Mentz, and confirmed by Pope Zachary; and out of the Constitutions of the French Kings; chiefly out of the Three Books, which the Deacon Benedict hath added to the Collection of Ansegisus. This Collection is published by Father Sirmondus, in the Ninth Tome of the Councils of France; and by M. Baluzius, Tome I. of Capitularies. F. Dacherius hath published a Small Tract about the Canon of the Mass, which bears Isaac's Name. But M. Baluzius tells us, That 'tis not Isaac Bishop of Langres's, but another Isaac's, who was Abbot of Stella, whose Name it bears in some MSS. and under whose Name it hath been published in Tom. VI. of the Biblioth. Cisteriorum.

Herard, made Arch-bishop of Tours in 855, made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws in 856, taken out of the Capitularies, which he propounded to a Synod of Priests, held in May the same year. This Collection is in Tom. VIII. of the Councils of the Last Edition, and at the end of Tom. I. of M. Baluzius's Capitularies. This Arch-bishop died in 871.

Wauterius, or Gauterius, Bishop of Orleans, about the year 870, made also a like Collection of Canons for his Diocess; which is Printed Tom. VIII. of the Councils.

Wulfadus. Wulfadus having been Ordained, as we have said, by Elbo, and molested by Hincmarus, was made Arch-bishop of Bouges, in 866. He hath left a Pastoral Letter, directed to the Priests of his Diocese, which Father Mabillon hath put out in Tom. IV. Analect. This Bishop died in 876.

Riculphus. Riculphus, who was Bishop of Saïssons, about the end of the Ninth Age, sent, in 889, a Pastoral Letter to the Curates of his Diocese, containing 28 very useful Constitutions for ordering their Discipline and Manners. He exhorts them to labour after the Sanctity of their People, by their good Example and Knowledge: He advises them to be constant in Divine Service, and exhort their Parishioners to be there as often as they can; but to be sure not to be absent on Festivals and Sundays. He requires them to say by heart the Psalms, Canon of the Mass, Credo, Quicumque, &c. That they should be skilled also in Singing, and the Calendar; That they should have Rituals to Administer Baptism, a Missal, a Book of the Lessons, a Book of the Gospels, a Martyr-book, a Book of Anthems; a Psalter, and a Copy of S. Gregory's Forty Homilies. He also prescribes what Ornaments they ought to have, and Orders them to take care of them, to keep them neat, as well as the Holy Places. He orders them to instruct the Catechumens in Lent, that they may be Baptized, and receive the Eucharist at Easter. He commands them to have a care of the Publick Penitents, and not to receive them to Absolution, till they have performed the time of their Penance; and if it happens that they are forced to it by necessity, or any other Reason, he desires them to have particular care of them. He Orders them to Administer to the Sick the Holy Unction, after Confession, and Absolution, but before Communion. He allows them to give Absolution to the Sick, that have lost their Speech, if there be any that can witness that they desired it. He puts them in mind of the Division of the Churches Revenues into four parts, and requires an account of that, which is to be employed for the Service of the Church. He exhorts them to have two or three Clergy-men to celebrate Masses, i. e. Divine-Service with him; and forbids them to celebrate it alone. He advises them to be Charitable and Hospitable. He forbids them going to Inns, suffer Wine to be sold in the Church, to dwell with any Women, or be familiar with them; to be Farmers, or Men of business. He forbids Usury, and orders them to keep the Sunday Holy. He requires them to take nothing for the Burial of the Dead, but allows them to take any Free-gifts. He orders the Deans to call Assemblies of the Curates every Month, on the First day of it, but forbids Feasting at them; and enjoyns them to have Conferences about what concerns their Ministry, and the occasions of their Parishes. He orders them to reconcile those that are Enemies, or Excommunicate them if they refuse. He enjoyns them to give Notice of the Fasts, he hath appointed, to the People. This Letter is published by Condesius, with Hincmarus's Works [at Paris, 1615.] and is Printed in Tome IX. of the Councils.

Elias. Elias, Bishop of Jerusalem, Wrote in 887, a Letter to Charles the Groſſe, the Clergy, and Lords of the Kingdom of France, to desire of him some Relief for the Churches of his Country; He tells him, That the Prince under whose Government they were, being become a Christian, had allowed them to re-build, and repair their Churches, which were either quite ruin'd, or ready to fall; That to doe it, they were forc'd to Mortgage their Lands and Revenues, so that they had nothing to purchase Oil, Ornaments, and Holy Vessels for Divine-Service: Then he exhorts this Prince, and the French, to exercise their Charity upon this occasion, and to bestow something upon the Two Monks which he would send to gather their Alms. This Letter is in Latin in Tome II. of Dacherius's Spicilegium. It is well Written, but very short.

Luibertus. Luibertus, Arch-bishop of Mentz, hath Written a Letter to King Lewis; In which he tells that Prince, That seeing the Danger their Churches were expos'd to, he was oblig'd to speak, because the Primacy and Dignity of St. Peter is assaulted and Dishonoured by those who ought to be the Leaders of the People of God, who prefer Humane things before Divine; inſomuch, that he is afraid, that the Evil, which is in the Head, will spread it self into all the Members, unless a Remedy be timely provided. He tells the King, that there is present danger, because those that ought to watch for the Salvation of others, destroy themselves, and dig a Pit of destruction for those that follow them. He exhorts him to confer with those, that know the Law of God, that he may remove these Scandals, and settle Peace in the Church. He adds, That it is so much the easier, because all the Body of the Church is not corrupted as yet; That there are some Members weakened by the wound in the head, but may be cured with suitable Medicines; That it seems necessary and profitable, that King Charles call a Council soon; that the Bishops of his Kingdom, which are not infected with the Disease, might joyn with the Bishops of Germany and Him, to restore the Peace and Agreement of the Catholick Church, as soon as he returns from the Voyage he was about to take. This Letter seems to relate to the Troubles, which happened after the Death of Lotharius, about the Kingdom of Lorain, which Pope Adrian claimed for the Emperour Lewis; threatening Excommunication to Charles, and to the rest who were in possession of it.

Of all Authors of this Age, there is none that hath taken more pains about the Canons than Regino. He was chosen Abbot of Prom, about 892; after Farabertus had voluntarily resigned it, but he enjoyed it not long, being deprived of it in 899, by the Arts of his Enemies, who put Richarius, the Brother of the Counts Gerhardus and Monfredus, into his place. He endured this injustice, with a great deal of Patience, and lived a private Monk, in the Abbey of Prom. In this time he composed his Collection of Canons, and Ecclesiastical Constitutions at the desire of Rathboldus, Arch-bishop of Treves. He finished it in 906. He also composed a Chronicon, which ends in 908, dedicated to Adelbertus Bishop of Metz. We do not exactly know to what Age he lived.

His Collection of Canons is entituled, A Treatise of Ecclesiastical Discipline and of the Christian Religion, collected by the order of Rathboldus, Arch-bishop of Treves, by Regino, heretofore Abbot of Prom, and taken out of the Fathers, Councils and Popes. It is divided into two Books. In the first he sets down the Canons, which concern Ecclesiastical Persons; and in the Second, those that concern the Laity. These two Books begin each of them, with a form of such things, as Bishops or Ministers ought to be informed in, when they make their Visits. That which is at the beginning of the first, concerns the Clergy; and that which is at the beginning of the second, concerns the Laity. Then he confirms the Articles of the first by the Canons and Ecclesiastical Constitutions. He quotes the Canons of the Councils, and particularly those of France, the Constitutions of the Kings, the genuine Decretals of the Popes, and sometimes the false; some passages of the Fathers and Ecclesiastical Authors. This Collection is very large, and exact. Burchardus, Ivo Carnatenfis, and the other Collectors of Canons that follow him, have made use of it, and often copy it out. It hath been published from a M.S. of Flaccus Illyricus, and printed at Helmstadt, 1659; and since M. Baluzius hath taken care to print it at Paris, by Maguet, 1671. having received it by a very ancient M.S. in the Library of the Oratory at Paris. He hath set down in the Margin, the places from which the Canons and passages of that Collection are taken, and where the Articles of Burchardus's Collection are found.

Regino's Chronicon is divided into two Books. It was printed at Frankfort in 1483. Trithemius assures us, that this Author wrote several Sermons, some Letters, and other Works, which never came to his Hands. He much commends his Ingenuity, Learning and Piety; and says, that he is the best of the German Writers of his Time.

Lastly, we have another Author of this Age, who treats of a very curious Subject of Discipline, and that is Auxilius, who maintains the Validity of the Ordinations made by Pope Formosus. He was (a) ordained by this Pope, and 'twas his Interest to defend it. He hath made two small Treatises upon that Subject, in which he shews a great deal of Learning for the Age he lived in.

The First is a Collection of Ecclesiastical Constitutions and passages of Fathers, to prove that a Bishop deprived of his Bishoprick may be dignified in another Church, when it is for the good and advantage of the Church, and with the Pope's Permission. This Collection was designed to prove the Translation of Formosus, from the Bishoprick of Ostia to the Roman See, Lawful. Then he adds some other Testimonies to shew that though the ordination of Formosus was not lawful, yet the Ordinations made by him were valid. Upon the first Head, he brings a Passage out of the false Decretal of Anterus, the Example and Authority of St. Gregory Nazianzen, the Examples of some Translations alledged by Socrates, and what is observed in the Greek Book, about the Translation of S. German of Cyzicum to Constantinople. Then he shews, That the Canons of the Council of Nice, do not forbid all Translations, but those only, that are made through ambition, and to disturb the Church. He approves the Law, which Hosius propounded in the Council of Sardica, which forbids those Translations which are made for Avarice, Ambition, or Dominion; but he disapproves what is added, that those who pass from one See to another, shall be reduced to Lay-Communion. He affirms this Law, comes near the Rigour of the Novatians; Condemned by S. Austin, That it was not approved by the Holy See; and that Hosius was of no great Authority, having fallen into Heresie. He ought to have observed, that all the Bishops of the Council, approved the opinion of Hosius.

Auxilius then passeth to the Second Head; which concerns the Validity of the Ordinations made by Phorius, and alledgeth the Testimonies of S. Innocent, S. Austin, S. Leo, S. Gregory, and S. Anastasius, to shew that the Ordinations made by unlawful Bishops are valid, and ought not to be repeated. He confirms this Doctrine by a Canon of the Council of Nice, which accepted the Ordinations made by the Novatians. He says, that since the Ordinations of Pope Liberius, who was an Heretick, and Vigilius who was an Usurper, guilty of Simony and Murther, were a Ordained by this Pope.] He says it plainly at the end of his first Treatise, in which having spoken of the Validity of the Ordinations of this Pope; he adds, That he continued in the order which he had received by Consecration, waiting for the equitable Judgment of a General Council. In the Thirty First Chapter of his Second Treatise. His Adversary objects, that he was a Stranger; and at first he don't deny it, but about the end he puts in a Doubt; saying, 'twas a fiction of his Adversaries. He says also in the same place, That he was ordained a Priest by Formosus. In the Chapter of the Second Book, he says also, that he was ordained by Formosus, and was come to Rome from his own Countrey.

well approved, there is much greater reason to allow of those made by Formosus. He proves, that it will cast the Church of Italy into strange Confusion, and the Faithful into inexpressible Trouble. He observes, that if there was any default in the Translation of Formosus, it did not belong to him, who accepted it, but to the Clergy and Nobles of Rome, who chose him, and acknowledged him for their Bishop. Lastly, he proves, that they who swear, that their Ordination is void, are guilty of Sacrilege, and they are not obliged thereby to obey the Commands of their Superiours, nor of the Pope, who exacts it, because they ought not to execute those Commands of Superiours, which are contrary to Justice, and the Law of God; That their Excommunication ought not be feared or observed, but when it is just; That we ought to distinguish between the Papal See, and the Persons who preside in it; That we ought to respect the Sees, but not follow those that preside in them, if they depart from the Faith or Religion, although they are obliged to obey them in those things, they order well, although they would not do it. In "Conclusion, He advises, "That this Collection of Testimonies may perhaps seem needless to several Persons, because there are few People, that will judge of this Affair with Equity, "and that he did not hope to carry his Cause in the judgment of those, who are both Judges, "Advocates and Witnesses, but that according to the Opinion of S. Jerom, he wrote both for "himself, and for them which were of his Judgment, that they might be courageous, seeing they "do not ground their belief upon their own Sense, but the Holy Fathers, and that they observe, "that which is written; That if a Multitude rise up against you, you should not fear, and that "they should hold fast what they have received, lest you lose your Crown. That continuing in "the sacred Vocation you have received, they may wait for the impartial Examination of "a general Council, under the protection of which they may put themselves with these Words. "Lift up thy Self, O Lord, judge thine own Cause.

The Second Treatise of Auxilius, saith Sigibert in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers, is written in form of a Dialogue, by way of Question and Answer. It was composed at the desire of Leo, Bishop of Nola, who had been ordained by Formosus, who being urged to acknowledge, that the Priest-hood which he had received from Pope Formosus, is null; first consulted the French Bishops, and the Bishop of Beneventum about it, who answered him, that he ought not to do it, and then sent his Request to Auxilius, to answer the Objections made against the Ordinations of Formosus. At the beginning of this Treatise is propounded a general Question, which serves as a Preface to it, viz. whether those who have been ordained against their own Consent, but afterwards yield to their Ordination, ought to be re-ordained. To which he answers, that as we do not re-baptize Infants, nor such as have been baptized by force; no more ought we to re-ordain them who have been involuntarily ordained. This Preface is accompanied with a Letter of Auxilius's to Leo Bishop of Nola, in which he tells him, That he made this Treatise to satisfy him, and had set down the Objections under the name of the Objecter, and answers under the name of the Defender. That he ought not to expect in his Writings Syllogisms in form, no Logical Subtleties, being the Scholar of a Fisher, i. e. S. Peter. That tis true, though he is in his Bark, he is in a Tempest, but he prayed the Lord of all to command the Winds and Sea, and make a Calm.

The first Objection made by the Objecter, is about the Translation of Formosus. He says, having left his Wife, i. e. Bishoprick, he hath taken away the H. See from them, who ought to be ordained in it; so that he is a Reprobate and Hypocrite. The Defender says, That he did not trouble himself with what Formosus was, but he maintained that the Ordinations of Formosus made by him were valid and Lawful. The Objecter insists and says, That Formosus not being Pope, all the Ordinations made by him are null. All that Chapter contains this Difficulty. The Defender maintains, that his Ordinations may be valid, since S. Leo acknowledgeth the Ordinations of false Bishops to be so; That Anastasius allowed Acacius's, and no Man ever doubted of Liberius and Vigilius's. The Objecter replies, That the Council of Nice declared their Ordinations void; and that Pope Innocent asserts, That an Hypocrite and Reprobate can't confer Ordination, because he hath none. The Defender Replies, that this ought to be understood of some, and not all Heretics, since he approved of those that Bonifacius ordained. The Objecter insists upon his Principle, and demands how it can be, that the Ordinations of a Reprobate can be valid, since the Members can't exist without the Head; and to urge it the farther, he asks to whom Formosus's Crime ought to be imputed; if his Ordinations are of Force, the Defender says, it belongs to the Clergy and people of Rome, and not to a Clergy-man, who being a Stranger, came far with a good intention to receive Ordination from him, whom he saw seated on the H. See. Then he proves by the Testimonies of Anastasius and S. Austin, that a Reprobate and an Hypocrite may administer Sacraments effectually, and consequently Ordinations. The Objecter urges the Example of Constantine the Antipope, whose Ordinations were declared null, and the Persons ordained by him Re-ordained. The Defender condemns this Action, and opposes the Authority of S. Leo, Anastasius, &c. Then he proves by some passages of the Popes and Fathers, that Re-ordinations are no less faulty, than Re-baptizations. The Objecter says, That if it were so, a great number of Men are Condemnable, because the number of them that believe Formosus's Ordinations null, is very Great. This inconvenience doth not at all touch the Defender. He says, God regards not great or small Numbers, but Justice; That his Flock is small; That he never hath,

hath, nor will pardon a multitude of Sinners, though never so great, which he clears by the Example of the Deluge; People of the Jews, and the small number of those that remained Faithful under the Persecution of Antiochus; adding to these Examples of the Old Testament, that in S. Athanasius's Time almost all the World embrac'd Arianism, and there was but a very small number of Persons that continued in the Catholick Faith, and did obtain the Crown. The Defender having asserted, that those who are ordained a Second time ought to be excluded for ever from the Sacred Ministry. The Objecter propounds two difficulties against the Propositions. The first, That they are not deprived of Christianity, who have been re-baptized. The Second is, That Clergy-men who have fallen into Idolatry, may do their Duty, and perform their Functions, and therefore 'tis probable, that the same thing may be allowed to those who are re-ordained. The Defender answers to the First, that a Minister's Function is not like the Title of a Christian, that this is necessary, but that the other is not. To the Second he says, that they have been deposed without all hopes of Restauration, who have voluntarily renounced the Faith, and no Mercy hath been shewed, but only to those who have done it through the violence of Torments. The Obedience due to the Pope, and the Oath which he required, to acknowledge that the Ordinations of Formosus are null, create new Difficulties. The Defender strongly maintains, that Superiours ought not to be obeyed, when that which they command is forbidden, and that the Oaths taken in such Cases oblige not. He takes himself not to be obliged to go to the Synod, which the Pope had appointed, and treats the Bishops, that were at it, as Wolves. He adds, that it is sometimes convenient to discover the faults of Superiours, especially when they are prejudicial to the Church, and they can't be remedied any other way; and in fine, insists upon the Fact that 'tis a Fault, which is published, and aggravated by those that defend it. He proceeds yet farther; he says, that we ought not to fear or regard the Excommunication that is unjustly pronounced. He repeats what he had said in his first Treatise about the Distinction of Sees, and them that sit in them. He comes next to the Examination of the affair of Formosus; and says, as he was deposed, so also he was absolved by the Pope; That the Oath which they made him take never to come to Rome, or so return to his Bishoprick, was a Cruelty and an unheard of Violence; That he did it only by Constraint. He brings several Examples of Bishops condemned and deposed, who have been restored again. He adds, that Formosus having been restored by the Pope, his first Deposition could not be alledged as an Obstacle to his promotion to the Pope-dom; That only God knows, whether it was through Ambition that he was raised to the H. See, and so it belongs only to him to judge of it. That all the City of Rome, and Neighbouring Provinces did bear Witness of his Piety, except some who had the boldness to blast his Reputation. He endeavours to justify his Translation by the Example of several others, of whom he makes a long list. He answers as he had done in the other Treatise to the Law propounded in the Council of Sardica, approving the first, and condemning the second part. The Council of Africa was objected, which forbids him who doth the Office of a Clergy-man in one Church, to pass to another. He replies, that it is only forbidden by that Canon, to receive the Clergy of another Bishop. He explains the Canons, which forbid Translations, of such as are through a kind of Ambitious Avarice or Dominion, and proves that they do not comprehend those which are made for the necessity, and profit of the Church. He adds, that it belongs to the People of Rome to answer for the Necessity and Advantage there was in Translating of Formosus to the See. It was objected, that although Formosus might be excused as to those Points, yet the Blow he had received by suffering himself to be re-ordained, was not to be covered. This Objection much puzzled Auxilius, and to answer it, he supposeth that the Priests and Bishops are not essentially distinct, and endeavours to prove it by the famous passage of St. Jerom, from whence he Concludes, That as a Priest is Consecrated to make a Bishop, without any intention of Consecrating him a Priest anew, but only adding the Episcopal Title in like Manner. Formosus by his Second Ordination, did not lose the Title of Bishop he had before, but only received the addition of the Apostolick Dignity. This Sophistical Answer of Auxilius, did not excuse Formosus, if the Matter of Fact were true; but he maintains immediately, that it was very false, and that he was informed by those, that were present at the Instalment of Formosus, that he did not receive a new Ordination, but was conducted to the H. Apostolick See, by singing of Prayers, and was installed with a Speech proper for that occasion. He adds, that none but his Enemies, and others, that had a present Quarrel with him; said, that he was ordained a Second Time, whose Testimony was not worthy of Credit. That to pass a true Judgment of this Matter, a general Council ought to be called, which might easily remove the Scandal, and settle Peace in the Church; That the Synod held at Ravenna had confirmed the Ordination of Formosus, for which indeed the Bishops were accused of Bribery, but very unjustly. He aggravates the Cruelty exercised by Pope Stephen against Formosus, whose Corpse he took up and brought it to a Council, where having stripp'd him of his pontifical Habits, he caused a Lay-Garb to be put on him, and having cut off two Fingers of his Right-Hand, he caused him to be Buried in the Church-Yard for Strangers, from whence he was after thrown into the Tiber. Auxilius says, that they that exercised this piece of inhumanity upon him, acted like Savage Beasts; That this their Action was contrary to Heathen Morality, which obliges us to spare the Dead; That although the Translation of Formosus had been contrary to the Laws of the Church, it ought to have been tolerated with a Christian Compassion, and not aggravated with an unheard of Cruelty. That all that could have been done, had been to have called a Council to forbid the People

ple of Rome making the like Elections for the future. Auxilius after this is reproved by his Adversary, for saying, That it did not belong to him, who was a Stranger, to find fault with the Opinion they had in Italy, about the Ordination of Formosus, and takes an occasion from hence to shew, that he hath reason to defend the Cause of Formosus. Lastly, to invalidate the Oath, which was required to destroy the Ordination of Formosus, he proves, That those Oaths ought not to be kept, that oblige a Man to do Evil. This is the Sum of the two Treatises of Auxilius, which are written with a great deal of Boldness and Freedom. [The former of them is published by Morinus at the end of his Work, De S S. Ordinationibus, and from thence put into the Biblioth. Patrum Tom. XVII. p. 1. The other is printed by F. Mabillon, Analect. Tom. IV. p. 610.]

Certain Questions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

TH E R E has been no Age in which a greater Number of Persons have applied themselves to regulate and explain the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church than the Ninth: Princes, Bishops, and other learned Men have set themselves about it with great Emulation. At the beginning of this Century, the Emperour Charles the Great writ a Circular Letter to all the Arch-Bishops of France, [directed to Odilbert, Arch-Bishop of Milan] Commanding them to inform him after what manner they and their Suffragans Taught and Instructed their Priests and People about the Sacrament of Baptism. Also why an Infant is rank'd amongst the Catechumens? What it is to be a Catechumen? And what is the signification of the other Ceremonies? What means the Scrutiny? How the Creed is to be explain'd? How we are to understand the renouncing of the Devil, his Works, and his Poms? What are the Works and Poms which are renounced? For what Reason they breath upon the Infant, and why they Exorcise him? What is the reason they give him Salt? Why they touch his Nostrils? Why they anoint his Breast with Oyl? Why they cloath him in white? Wherefore they pour on him the Oyl of the Chrism? Why they cover him with a Mysterious Veil? And, Lastly, Wherefore they give him the Body and Blood of the Lord? All these Questions Charles the Great commanded his Metropolitans to Answer particularly and fully.

[This Letter of Charles the Great is put out by F. Mabillon in his Anecd. Tom. I. p. 21.]
[Insufflation and Exorcising.]

Rites were used by the Church in Baptism in this Age, as in the former they had been, not as necessary Ingredients in Baptism, because they are not enjoyed by the Word of God, but as useful to beget a Reverence to this Sacrament in the Minds of the illiterate Vulgar, and express to them the Virtue and Efficacy of it; for they sometimes abolished part of them, and always declared, that they attributed no Efficacy or Energy to them, but expected that from the joynt Prayers of the Church. This shews how differently they were used from the use of them in the Roman Church, who place a Sacred Operation in them, and make them necessary to Baptism.

The Arch-Bishops of France, in Obedience to this Order, composed, and caused to be composed several Books upon these Subjects, all which they Dedicated to the Emperour. Amongst others, Amalarius. Amalarius Fortunatus, Arch-Bishop of Treves, writ a Treatise upon that Subject, which is to be found in the Sixteenth Tome of Canisius's Collection, under the Name of Alcuin, to whom that Author attributes it upon a bare Conjecture only, without having any sufficient Proof; for in his MS. and some others there was no Name of any Author: But in another Ancient MS. of F. Petavius it bears the Name of Amalarius. For indeed it is impossible it should be Alcuin's, for he dyed in 804. and this was written in Answer to a Letter in 811. This Amalarius was he that was sent the same Year along with Peter, the Abbot of Nonantula, to the Greek Emperour, Michael Curolopatas. He was chosen Arch-Bishop of Treves, and dyed in the Year 814.

Jessé, Bishop of Amiens, writ also an Answer to the Emperour's Letter, in which he relates very exactly and clearly all the Ceremonies of Baptism, with a very Natural Comment upon every one of them. He speaks also of Confirmation, and the Eucharist conferred upon Infants at the time of their Baptism. Cordeus, who was the first that publisht this Letter of Jessé at the end of Hincmarus's Works [at Paris 1615.] added thereto a short Explanation of the manner of Administring Baptism, and of the terms which are made use of in the Prayers, together with Nine Canons or Instructions for Priests; but it is very plain this Addition does not belong to Jessé, for it has no Relation to the Matter he treats of. His Letter ends at the Chapter of the Eucharist. What follows as far as the Canons, is the Work of another Author, whose Notions and Method are very different from his. The Canons are a Capitulary or Remonstrance for the Instruction of Charles the Great, which is to be found amongst the Collection of Constitutions, Publisht by M. Balusius, pag. 531. This Letter of Jessé is also extant in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 14. pag. 67.] This Bishop was sent by Charles the Great in the Year 802 to Irene, Empress of the East, and afterwards Deposed in 831 by Ebbo, Arch-Bishop of Rheims, in a Synod held at Nimiquen.

Odilbert, Arch-Bishop of Milan, writ also upon the same Subject, whose Book was never yet Printed. It is a Manuscript in the Abby of Richemont. Father Mabillon, in the Fourth Tome of his Analects, has publisht the Letter, which serves for a Preface to the Treatise, with an Extract of the Treatise it self.

Theodulphus, Bishop of Orleans, writ also an Answer by the Express Command of his Metropolitan, Magnus, Arch-Bishop of Sens, to whom he Dedicated it; and who also writ a small Treatise upon the same Subject, [Printed with some other Pieces of his by F. Simondus at Paris, 1646.]

The Church of Lyons was too considerable, and its Ceremonies too Authentick, not to explain it self upon this Occasion. Whereupon Leidradus, Arch-Bishop there, undertook to Compose an Answer to the Emperour's Letter. This Letter has been put out lately by Father Mabillon, in the Third Tome of his Analects. To which is annexed another Private one to the Emperour; and likewise a small separate Treatise upon the Renunciations made at the time of Baptism. We have over and above these, two other Letters of Leidradus. The First written also to the Emperour, where he gives him an Account of the use he had made of the Ancient Revenues of the Church of Lyons, which had been restored to him by his Orders. He says, he has established a Quire there, and whatever else is necessary to Celebrate Divine Service. He acquaints him, that he had gotten Schools of Singers, who are so very excellent in their Art, and are able to Instruct others. That he has Readers, who not only Read Publickly, but are fit to Expound and Interpret. That he has caused a great many Ecclesiastical Authors to be Transcribed; Rebuilt and Beautified a great many Monasteries, and other Religious Houses; and likewise erected a Cloyster for the Canons and Prebendaries, and many other things both of Use and Profit. The Second Letter of Leidradus is Consolatory to his Sister upon the Death of her Son and Brother. The Works of Leidradus are in a plain and natural stile, but have nevertheless a great deal of good Sense and very Christian Thoughts. These two last Letters are in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 10. p. 232.] Papyrius Massonus and M. Balusius have joyned them to the Works of Agobardus, to whom Leidradus resigned his See to retire into the Monastery of St. Martin at Soissons. There are other Anonymous Answers given to the Questions proposed by Charles the Great in his Letter. All these Authors give an Account of the Ceremonies of Baptism, and put a Mystical Sense upon them, for the Instruction and Edification of Priests and Believers.

Lewis, surnamed the Kind or Godly, was not less Curious than his Father, in endeavouring to understand the Ceremonies of the Church. Amalarius, a Deacon of Metz, to whom is also given the Title of Abbot in Ancient Manuscripts, and whom some have called Suffragan, Dedicated to him Four Books of the Ecclesiastical Office, in his Preface of which he gives him great Commendations, concluding it with many wishes for his long and happy Life. In these Books he relates the Ceremonies and Customs of the Church, according to the Roman Establishment, and gives Mystical Reasons for them, which are in no wise to be thought the true Reasons for the Institution of these Ceremonies, but Humane Inventions, and for the most part groundless Suppositions, and which I do not think my self obliged to give any Account of; therefore shall only take notice of a few Points of Discipline in them, which are the most considerable. The First Book is about the Service of the Church from Septuagesima to Pentecost: Where he teaches us, that from Septuagesima to Easter, neither Hallelujah, nor Gloria in Excelsis were sung in Churches; that Lent began the Wednesday after Quinquagesima. That on Holy-Thurday they Consecrated Oyls for the Sick, for the Catechumens, and those that were Confirmed. That these three Oyls had three different Consecrations. That they mingled Balm with that used for Confirmation. That on Good-Friday they worshipped the Cross, and after they had brought out the Body of Christ (reserved the day before) they mixt it with unconsecrated Wine, which they thought sufficiently consecrated by this Mixture, and so gave it immediately to the People. But he takes notice at the same time, that in the Church of Rome the Priests only Communicated. That the Service of Saturday was for Saturday Night till Sunday, and that they blest the Wax Candle. He speaks of some of the Ceremonies of Baptism made use of at that time, and principally of the Unction, which was pour'd by the Priests on the top of the Novice's Head. He seems to disapprove of the Fast upon Rogation, which he says, was Instituted by St. Mamertus, and was never in use with the Eastern Churches. In the Second Book he Treats of the Twelve Lessons

* Of the Divine Service, of the Fast of the Four Ember Weeks, of the several Orders and * Habits of Priests of which he gives very Mystical significations. The Priest's Vest signifies the right management of the Voice, his Albe the subduing of the Passions; his Shooes, upright Walking; his Cope, Good Works; his Stole, the Yoke of Jesus Christ; the Surplice, Readiness to Serve his Neighbour; his Handkerchief, Good Thoughts, and the Pallium, Preaching. The Third Book Treats of the Method observed in Celebrating Mass. Of the Habits, of the Office of the Singers, of the manner of the Bishop's going to the Altar; of the Place where he sits, of the Presenting of the Chalice by the Acolythus to the Subdeacon, who receives it. Of the mixing of the Sacramental Bread with the Consecrated Wine; and lastly of the Kiss of Peace. He Discourses at the same time of the Prayers which are said, viz. † Of the Introitus, the Kyrie Eleison, the Gloria, the Collects, the Tractus, the Responses, the Hallelujah, the Offertory, the Secret Prayers, the Preface, the Canon, the Lord's Prayer, the Agnus Dei, and the Blessings, which are given at the end of the Mass. He also adds some Reflections upon the Masses and Service used on All-Saints-Day, the Advent, Christmas-Day, and the Purification; upon the Hour of Celebrating Mass, and the differences between the Masses for the Dead. We may thereby Learn, that the Practice in his Time of Celebrating Mass was not different from what it is at present. But the Mystical Reflections he makes upon these Ceremonies and Prayers are so far-fetched and incongruous, that there is no great use to be made of them. He has one particular Observation to himself about the Body of Jesus Christ, which he divides into three states or conditions. 1st. Of Jesus Christ risen again, represented by that part of the Eucharist which is put into the Chalice. 2. Of Jesus Christ upon Earth, represented by that which is consumed by the Priest. And, 3. The Body of Jesus Christ in the Tomb, represented by that part which remains on the Altar. The last Book is upon the other parts of the Divine Service; || As the Prayers for the First, Third, Sixth, None hours, Vespers, Completorium, and Night-Office, as well for Sundays and Holy-days, as other Principal Feasts of the Year.

|| These hours of Prayer, and the Reasons of their Institution, are at large explained by Durand. in his Rationale Divin. Off. l. 5. c. 3—10.

F. Mabillon, in the Second Tome of his Analec'ts, has Printed a Supplement to this Fourth Book attributed to Amalarius. But it appears by Agobard's Book, writ against this Work, that the last Chapter of the 4th book, was the same with the last and 47th in the Vulgar Editions: Also 'tis certain, that this Supplement is rather added by the Monk Ademarus, than the Work of Amalarius. Moreover 'tis plain, this Addition has no Connexion or Conformity with the other parts of that Treatise.

The

The same Author has Writ another Book, called * The Order of the Book of Anthems, where he gives a Reason for the Order he has observed in the Book of Anthems, which he made for the Churches of France, in so disposing the Anthems, Responses and Psalms. Ademarus informs us, That Amalarius was also Author of a Treatise, named A Rule for the Canons and Canonesses, Published in the Council of Aix-la-Chapelle, which consists of nothing else but a Collection of Precepts and Canons, gathered from the Fathers and Councils, relating to the Lives of Clergy-men and Monks. The Deacon Florus makes mention of two other Books of Amalarius, made before the former, and adds a third, called An Introduction or Preface to his Works; but this we have altogether lost.

Mon. Balufius amongst the pieces which are at the end of the second Volume of his Capitulary, hath Published some Eclogues of choice Reflexions, upon some places of the Roman Order, concerning the Ceremonies of the Mass, which gounder the name of Amalarius: But altho this Work be very full of Reflexions, much like those of Amalarius, yet it is very dubious whether they be his or no; for besides that it is not likely he would Treat a second time of the same thing, only after a different manner, of which he had spoken before in the third Book of his Divine Offices. It appears to me, that this Author's Style and Manner of Writing is something different from that of Amalarius.

There are five Letters of this Authors, in the seventh Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium, [Tom. 6.] The first is directed to Terence, Arch-Bishop of Sens, concerning the manner of Writing the Name of Jesus Christ, together with Terence's Answer. The second is on the same subject, Writ to Jonas Bishop of Orleans, with that Bishop's Answer. The third is to Rancarius Bishop of Noyon, about the meaning of these Words in the Gospel; This is the Cup of my Blood, of the new and eternal Testament.

The fourth is to the Monk Hetton, who was Abbot of Fulda, after Rabanus, about the Word Seraphim, whether it be of the Masculine or Neuter Gender; And the fifth is to Gontard, where he treats of this Question, viz. Whether a Person may be allowed to spit just after receiving the Holy Eucharist. It seems by this last Letter, that he believed that there was no harm in spitting some time after, when one cannot easily forbear longer: And if it should happen that without their knowledge or will, they should let drop some of the Eucharist, they need not much trouble themselves about it: Also, That he doubted whether Christ's Body once Received did Incorporate with ours, and accompany it to Death; or whether it evaporated through the Pores, or was exhaled into Air, or converted into Blood, or went into the Drought; so that this has given occasion to some, to accuse him of the Error of the Starconanists, as Heribald and Rabanus were. The Books of Amalarius were very ill receiv'd in France, and chiefly by the Church of Lions, which would by no means endure them. Agobardus Bishop of this See, wrote three Treatises against his Offices and Book. Florus a Deacon of the same Church, attackt him very vigorously, and accused him in the Councils of Cressi and Thionville: First about his Opinion of the Body of Christ, under three Forms, represented by three pieces of the Sacramental Bread: Secondly about his Moral and Mystical significations of the Ceremonies of the Church, which he lookt upon as false Opinions and Imaginations without Grounds. Thirdly, because he insisted only upon the Roman Order, and Expounded it word for word, altho he knew that this Book was unknown to the Arch-Deacon of Rome, of whom he had many Traditions.

Amalarius thus having attacked the Customs of the Church of Lions, Agobard, who was their Arch-Bishop, Defended them in his Correction of the Anthem Book, to which his Treatise of the manner of singing Psalms in the Church of Lions, serves for a Preface. He observes that the particular Customs of some Churches ought not to be reflected on. He approves of that of the Church of Lions, in not Singing new and fantastical Psalms, in not making use of Poetry in Divine Services, and by keeping exactly to the Scriptures. This was what Amalarius Quarrel'd with, but Agobard vigorously defended it, and proved it highly reasonable and conformable to the sense of the Church.

This Correction of the Anthem Book is Dedicated to all Believers, but principally to the Singing-men of the Church of Lions: He there gives reasons for the Corrections he has made, and shows that he has only retrencht all that was not taken from the Holy Scriptures, he gives particular reasons for leaving out some Anthems, and proves that they were contrary to the Truth, and did not at all agree with Mysteries. He afterwards Quotes several Places in the Fathers, to show that it is necessary to endeavour to reform the Service, and to retrench those Errors and Abuses which are slid into it, either by Malice, Ignorance or Simplicity. He complains that there are some Clergy-men, that spend their Lives more in learning to Sing, than in Studying the Holy Scriptures, and other matters that relate to their Ministry: He says that the Ancients to avoid this disorder, chose rather to repeat the Psalm often, than to charge the minds of those that sung with a great many superfluous pieces. And lastly he concludes, That as the Church has a Mass-Book whose Doctrine is very pure, and a Collection of Lessons taken wholly out of the Holy Scriptures, so it ought also to have an Anthem-Book Purged from all Errors and Humane Inventions, and compos'd out of nothing but the Bible.

This Treatise is followed by another against some passages of Amalarius's Book, concerning the Divine Service: He reproves what Amalarius maintains; That on the twenty fifth of April might be us'd Litanies or Rogations, without Fasts and Abstinence; he laugh't at what Amalarius had asserted, that upon that day they pray'd Publickly for Eggs, Bread and Fish. He finds fault with Amalarius's Explanation of the passage of St. Paul. He reproves divers expressions and Notions of this Author; as when he says, that the Holy Ghost did drive all Carnal Desires out of the Apostles Hearts: That Man, and by consequence Jesus Christ, was Created out of the four Elements; That Jesus Christ dyed for the just and unjust; That there are two Sacrifices, the one General for all Men, and the other particular only for the Saints: That the first is the death of Jesus Christ, and the second the Prayers Prayers of the just, which are united to the Sacrifices of the Angels: This Treatise of Agobard seems imperfect.

Rabanus.

Rabanus or Herbanus, surnamed Maurus and Magnentius, has made himself very famous by his Works, which he has Written concerning the Ceremonies and Discipline of the Church. He was born at Mayence, in the year 788. He was put very young into the Monastery of Fulda, where he was brought up; from thence he was sent to Tours, where he Study'd some time under the famous Alcin: He returned afterwards into Germany to his Monastery, where he was entrusted with the Government of the younger Monks, and was afterwards ordain'd Priest in the year 814. and at last chosen Abbot of Fulda in 822. After having managed this charge twenty years, he voluntarily quitted it to satisfy his Monks, who accused him, that he applied himself too much to Study, and neglected the affairs of the Monastery. He retired to the Mount of St. Peter, and was at last chosen Arch Bishop of Mayence, in the year 847. He held a Council the same year for the Reformation of Discipline, he Condemned Gotscalcus a Monk of Corbey in another Council, and sent him to Hincmarus Arch-Bishop of Rheims; he dyed in the year 856.

He excell'd all in the common Learning of those times, such as expounding the Principles of Arts, as the Rules of Grammar and Rhetorick; in a readiness of Collecting from the Fathers of the Church, common places upon the Holy Scriptures. In Inventing Allegories upon the Histories of the Bible; in the Exposition of the Myttical Reasons of the Ceremonies; in a knack of turning Prose into Verse, and in the manner of reducing his common places into Precepts and Instructions. All the Works of Rabanus, are of this kind.

I shall not speak of the Grammar that is attributed to him, and which is nothing else but an Extract of Priscian, because these kind of Works do not relate to our Subject; and that those that have writ his Life, and the Catalogue of his Books, have not mentioned it.

His Treatise, De Universo, or of the signification and propriety of Words, composed for Haymon Bishop of Halberstat, and sent to Lewis the Godly, is nothing but a Collection of common Places, about a great number of things. It is divided into twenty two Books, of which there are but the five first, which have any relation to Ecclesiastical Affairs, the others being all about the Sciences and profane Arts. The first Book is concerning the three Persons in the Godhead; in the first Chapter he explains the several names of God, and gives the sense of such Expressions in the Scripture, as attributes the Members and Actions of Man to him. In the second he considers the different Names which are given to the Son of God, in the Old and New Testament. In the third he explains what relates to the Holy Ghost, which he affirms to proceed from the Father and the Son. In the fourth he treats of the Mystery of the Trinity, and in the last of the Names of Angels, and of their different Orders. In the second and third Book he searches into the Significations of the Names of the Patriarchs and Prophets, and other remarkable Persons in the Old Law. The fourth concerns the Church only; he there Explains the Names and Parables in the New Testament, he takes Notice of the Signification and Etimology of the Words which are made use of in the Affairs of the Church, such as Clerk, Bishop, Martyr, &c. Also he distinguishes the different sorts of Monks: he speaks of Heresies, and concludes with an Exposition of the Doctrine of the Church, which is taken, or rather Copy'd out of the Treatise of Gennadius, upon Ecclesiastical Opinions. In the fifth he Discourses of the Books of the Holy Scriptures; he makes a Catalogue of them, and adds moreover to those the Church has received as Canonical, some that have not been allowed by the Canon of the Jews. He sets down those that he believes to have been the Authors of the Old and New Testament, and makes an Abbridgment of their Works. He speaks also of the Restoration of the Holy Books by Esdras, of the Libraries of the Version of the Septuagint, and of other Versions of the Holy Scriptures; he extremely commends that of St. Jerom, and prefers it before all others, as being the most literal and clear. Verborum tenacior & perspicuitate Sententia Clarior. He Treats also in the same Book of other Ecclesiastical Writings of Canons, or of Concordances of the Evangelists, of Definitions of General Councils, and of Ecclesiastical Offices. He comes at last to the Sacraments, and other means of Sanctifying us. He says, That Sacraments are things which ought to be received Holily; That Baptism, Chrism, the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, are called Sacraments, because the Divine Grace works in them by the Visible Signs; that they have their Effect, whether they be Administred by good or bad Men; that Baptism remits Sins; that there are several sorts of Baptisms, as that of the Holy Ghost, and that of Martyrdome, &c. That there are in the Church other means of purifying our selves from our Sins, and principally Confession, Penance and Tears; that Chrism or Unction Sanctifies us, and that the Priest lays his hands upon us to endure us with the Holy Ghost; That as to the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, God has chosen Bread and Wine to shew us that his Body and his Blood is for our common Nourishment; That the Sacraments give Life to some and Death to others, because all receive them, tho few have the virtue and benefit of them. He speaks lastly of Exorcisms, the Creed, the Lords Prayer, Lent, publick Penance, and Litanies or Processions.

Rabanus's Work in Praise of the Holy Cross, is of a very particular kind; it must needs have cost him a great deal of pains and study, tho it be but of little use. The body of the Work is composed of 11 letters divided from one another, and range over against one another in lines. In reading from the right hand to the left, every line contains an Hexameter Verse. These Letters thus rang'd in lines, make a sort of a draught or platform, on which there are Figures or Symbols of the Cross Painted; the letters enclosed in these Figures make also Verses, which have some relation to the Figure. There are 28 Figures in 28 Tables, the Verses are Copy'd entire; afterwards at the end of every Table, and the Mystery explained in Prose. The first Table contains the Image of Christ, extending his Arms in the form of a Cross. The 47 Verses read long-ways, from the right Hand to the left, show the several Names that have been given to Christ, in the Old and New Testament. The Letters compriz'd in the draught of the Figure Compose other Verses; as for Example, Those that meet in the Crown about his Head, read round, make exactly this Verse, Rex Regum Dominus Dominantium. In the other Tables he represents many different things upon the Cross, as the Angels, the Virtues, the Elements, Ciphers, Myttical Numbers, Gifts of the Holy Ghost, the Beatitudes, Books of Moses, Names of Adam, Allelujab, Amen, &c. In the last he represents a Cross, at the foot of which is Painted a Monk Worshipping it, and in it these Words, Rabanum memet clemens rogo, Christe tuere, O Pie, Judicio. This first Book is explained by a second, which contains 28 Chapters in Prose. Rabanus undertook this Work at thirty years of Age, and presented it a great while afterwards to Gregory the Fourth, to whom it was recommended as a wonderful piece of Art by Alcuinus, who had been Rabanus's Master.

These are the Contents of the first Tome of Rabanus's Works; the second consists of four Books of Commentaries upon Genesis, four upon Exodus, seven upon Leviticus, with an Abridgment of them, by Strabo his Scholar, four upon Numbers, and as many upon Deuteronomy. All these Commentaries are Dedicated to Freculphus Bishop of Lysieux, at whose desire he undertook them. Rabanus in his Epistle entreats him to Examine them; and tells him, That he ought not to expect any thing extraordinary from one that was more fit to Work for his Living, than to write Books for the use of the Learned, and besides whose charge of Abbot allowed him but little Leisure. The third Tome contains two Books of Commentaries upon Judges, Dedicated to Humbertus Bishop of Wirtzburg. One on the History of Ruth, four on the four Books of Kings, Dedicated to Hilduin, four others upon the two Books of Chronicles, Dedicated to Lewis Emperour of Germany. One Commentary upon the History of Judith, and another upon Hester. These two are Dedicated to the Empress Judith. A Comment upon the Canticles, which is Composed into Morning Hymns, for every day of the Week, Dedicated to Lewis King of Germany. Three Books of Commentaries on the Proverbs of Solomon, as many on the Book of Wisdom, and two upon Ecclesiastes. These two last are Dedicated to Ogarius Arch-Bishop of Mayence. The fourth Tome consists of nineteen Books of Commentaries upon the Prophecie of Jeremiah and his Lamentations, twenty upon Ezekiel, Dedicated to the Emperour Lotharius. And two more on the two Books of Maccabees; the first is to Lewis King of Germany, and the other to Geroldus Arch-Deacon of that Kings Chappel. The fifth Tome contains eight Books of Commentaries upon the Gospel of St. Matthew, Directed to Aistulphus Arch-Bishop of Mayence: and lastly, thirty Books of Commentaries upon the Epistles of St. Paul, written at the request of Lupus of Ferrara, and Dedicated to the Bishop Samuel. Many Homilies upon the Sundays, Feasts and Holydays of the year, and also upon divers points of Morality, Dedicated to Aistulphus and Lotharius. A Treatise of Allegories upon all the Scripture, where, after having explained the difference between Tropology, Analogy, and Allegory; he ranks in Alphabetical Order, many words of the Holy Scriptures, to all which he gives an Allegorical or Myttical Sense.

Those Authors that have mentioned Rabanus's Works, add to these several other Commentaries, upon Joshua, Esdras, Tobit, Job, the Psalms, Isaiah, Daniel, the Minor Prophets, the Gospels of St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John, the Acts of the Apostles, and Canonical Epistles, and some others which have never yet been Printed. All these Commentaries consists of nothing else but Collections out of other Mens Works, which be Copy'd from them without any exact choice or distinction.

The Sixth Tome of Rabanus's Works contains many Books; the first and most considerable of all these, is his Treatise of Instruction of Clerks, divided into three Books. He Compos'd it for the Monks of Fulda, who propounded to him divers questions about their Duty, and Dedicated it in the year 819. to Aistulphus Arch-Bishop of Mayence. The first Book treats of the several Ecclesiastical Degrees and Habits of Clergy-men; also of the four Sacraments of the Church, as Baptism, Christm, the Body and Blood of Christ, and the Service of the Mass according to the Roman Order. The second is upon the Liturgy it self, the Canonical Hours, Fasts, Confessions, Penance, Holy-days, the rule of Faith, and about Heresies; the last is of Ecclesiastical Knowledge and Studies.

In the first, after having observed that the Church is an Assembly of Believers, he divides it into three sorts of Members; first Lay-men, secondly Monks, and thirdly Clerks: He observes, That the Clergy are admitted into it by Shaving the Crown, which is a Ceremony that demonstrates, that they ought then to part with all Vice and Disorderly Living. It seems they did not then content themselves to cut off a little Hair, but Shav'd all the top of their Heads, leaving only a circle round about, which Rabanus believes to have been a mark of the Royalty of the Christian Priesthood. He reckons up eight Ecclesiastical Orders; the Porter, the Quister, the Reader, the Exorcist, the Acolythus, the Sub-deacon, the Deacon, the Priest, and Bishop. He says, That this last must be Ordained, not by one Bishop only, but by all those of his Province; least so great Power being trusted to a single Person, he should undertake any thing prejudicial to the Faith. He adds, That in Consecrating him he has a Staff put into his Hand to admonish, that he is not only to Guide but Correct the People committed to his charge, and a Ring to denote either the Honour of the Priesthood, or the Secrets he is to keep. He counts three sorts of Bishops; first Patriarchs, secondly Arch-Bishops or Metropolitans, and thirdly single Bishops. He adds moreover Suffragans, which he compares to Christs Disciples, who could do nothing without their Masters Orders. These sorts of Bishops were Establish'd for the sake of the Poor in the Country, that they might not be depriv'd of Confirmation, which these Suffragans had power to confer upon them, tho they were Ordained by one Bishop onely, as the Priests are. He tells us, that these last were also called Bishops, and that they had the power almost equal to theirs, for they could Consecrate the Eucharist confer Baptism, and Preach. But nevertheless they had not the chief Dignity of Priesthood, Pontificatus Apicem, since they could not anoint the Forehead with Chrism, and bestow the Holy Ghost, which two only belong to the Bishops, as it appears by the Acts of the Apostles; neither can they confer Holy Orders, which is also reserved to the Bishops. The Deacons are Ministers of Sacred Things, they have right to Baptise, they are necessary in the service of the Altar, for the Priest cannot take the Chalice from thence, but must receive it from the Hands of the Deacon. The Sub-deacons are under them; these take the Offerings of the People, and carry them to the Deacons who place them upon the Altar; they are oblig'd to live unmarried: These are not Ordain'd by Imposition of Hands, but only by receiving the Cover and Chalice from the Hands of the Bishop; and the Christal Bottle and Napkin from the Arch-Deacon. He says nothing particular of the lesser and inferior Orders. I shall pass by the Remarks he makes upon the likeness of our Ministers with those of the Old Testament, and the Myttical significations he gives to the Bishops Habits. To come to what he teaches concerning the Sacraments, He says, That Baptism, Chrism, and the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are called Sacraments; because that under the Vail of Corporal things, the Divine Power produces Salvation and Grace, after a secret manner by the power of the Holy Ghost, which works this Effect, insomuch that they are equally Efficacious, whether they be Administred by the Good or the Bad. That Baptism is the first, because it must be received before Confirmation, and before the Receiving the Body and Blood of our Lord. That in this Sacrament Men are dip't in Water, to denote, that as Water outwardly purifies the Body, so Grace inwardly does the Soul, into which the Holy Ghost descends. He relates afterwards the Order of Admnitration, and the Ceremonies of Baptism; and from thence passing to Confirmation, he Remarks, that the Bishop dispenses the Holy Ghost by Imposition of his Hands; and that he Anoints the Believer a second time with the same Chrism the Priest had done before, with this difference only, that his Anointing is on the Forehead, whereas the Priest's was on the Crown of the Head. He attributes to this last Unction the Sanctification and Grace of the Holy Ghost. At last speaking of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, which he considers as two different Sacraments. He asks the Question, Why Jesus Christ has comprehended the Mystery of his Body and Blood under things which we eat and drink? And why of all the sorts of Food we eat, he has made choice of Bread and Wine? To which he Answers, That Jesus Christ has given us his Body and Blood in the form of Nourishment, because effectively his Flesh is such and his Blood Drink. That he hath made use of the Fruits of Earth, because he was upon Earth, and that he has chosen Bread and Wine to accomplish the Sacrifice of Melchisedech, and to show that as Bread and Wine consists of many Particles, which together make but one Substance, so we are all United into the same Church by the same Charity, being all made Members of the same Body by this Sacrament. He adds, That this Sacrament serves for Nourishment to our Flesh, and converts itself into our Substance, and that by vertue of this Sacrament we are changed into Jesus Christ. That we partipate of his Spirit and Grace; and in a word, that we become his very Members. That the Bread which is made use of is without Leaven, to denote, that those which approach it ought to be exempt from all Impurities. That Water is mixt with the Wine, because we read in the Gospel, That Blood and Water came out of the Side of our Saviour. And that as it is good for them that are not separated from it by their Sins, often to approach this Sacrament, so it is very dangerous for such as have committed such Crimes as debar them from it, to receive it before they have Repented. After having treated of the Sacraments, he speaks of the Celebration of Mass, which he believes to have been so called, because of the dismissing of the Catechumens with these words, Ita Missa est. He says, That the Mass is a Sacrifice which the Priest offers to God, instituted by Jesus Christ, practis'd by the Apostles, and used by all the Church. He acknowledges that at first they did not Sing as they do at present; but he believes they read the Gospel and the Epistles of the Apostles; he ends this Book with a short Exposition of the Ceremonies and Prayers of the Mass.

In the second Book after, he hath spoken of the Hours for Divine Service, and the different sorts of Prayer. He treats of the Confession, the Litanies or publick Prayers, and the divers kinds of Fasts. He distinguishes three sorts of Lent; the first, that which precedes Easter; the second, the Fast observed after Pentecost; and the third, that which begins in November and ends at Christmas-day. He notes, that the custom of his time was to Fast Friday and Saturday. He does not forget to speak of the Fasts of the four Ember-weeks. He approves of other Fasts ordered by the Bishop on any particular occasion, or practis'd thro Devotion by Christians. In speaking of abstaining from Wine and Flesh, he observes, that Birds are allowed to those who are forbid to eat of any four-footed Creature, because that 'tis thought, they were formed out of Water as well as Fish.

He distinguishes two different sorts of Alms, and ranks amongst this Number the good Works we do for our Salvation, which are as Alms we bestow upon our selves. He defines Penance a Punishment, by which a Man corrects himself for what he has done amiss. He says, that Penitents let their Hair and Beards grow, wear Sack-cloth, throw themselves on their Faces on the Ground, and besprinkle their Bodies with Ashes. That Repentance is a second remedy for our Sins, after Baptism. That to effect a true Repentance, it does not suffice only to bewail ones Sins past, but we must never commit them again. That this is the satisfaction, followed by Reconciliation. That Penance and Reconciliation ought to be publick, for publick Transgressions; but as to those whose Sins are conceal'd, concealed, and who have confessed them secretly to a Priest or a Bishop, they may do Private Penance, such as the Priest or Bishop will order; and afterwards be reconciled when they have performed their Penance. That the ordinary time for Reconciliation is Holy-Thursday, but Absolution may be granted at other times to those that are in danger of their Lives. He afterwards Treats copiously of the Solemn Celebration of Feasts and Sundays. He speaks by the by of the Oblation of the Sacrifice of the Mass for the Dead, of the Dedicating of Churches, the Prayers of Divine Service, the Songs, the Psalms, Hymns, Anthems, Responses, and Lessons. He makes a Catalogue of Canonical Books, which comprehends all that are at present acknowledged for such. He tells you those that he believes to have been Authors of the greatest part of them. He speaks of Ecclesiastical Benedictions, viz. That of Oyl, and that of Salt and Water; which he says, are made use of to comfort the Sick against the Illusions of the Devil, to heal the Flock, and to drive away Distempers. At last, having spoken of the Apostles Creed, and given an Abridgment of the Doctrines agreeable to the Faith, he sets down a very imperfect Catalogue of Heresies, in which he forgets some, and reckons others which are altogether unknown; as the Canonians and Metangismonites.

The last Book is concerning the Learning of Clergy-Men. He says, they are not allowed to be ignorant of any thing they should teach others, and which is necessary to render them capable of instructing them. That they ought to understand very well the Holy Scriptures, not only the Historical part, but be able to Expound the Figures and Mystical Sense of it. That it is good for them to have a Tincture of other Arts and Sciences. That they be Civil and Regular in their Manners, and Affable and Courteous in their Speech. That they be of an Acute Judgment, and know how to apply proper Remedies to the different Diseases of the Soul. He afterwards makes use of the words of St. Gregory the Great, to Reprove those who undertake to teach others, and Cure Souls, without being very well instructed in their Duty themselves: I mean such as enter into the Ministry merely through the Prospect of Interest or Ambition, and those that dishonour God by an Irregular Life, whose Deportment does not answer their Doctrine. He says, That the Grounds and Perfection of Wisdom is the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, which is an Emanation of the Eternal Wisdom of God, and a Participation of his Truth. That all the Wisdom and Truth that Men have, and all that is to be found Profitable in Profane Writers, is to be attributed to the Divine Wisdom, which gave it a beginning. That the Scripture has its Obscurities, which are good to exercise Mens wits: But there are scarce any Truths contained in one place, which are not explained in another, Nihil autem de illis obscuritatibus eruitur quod non plenissime dictum alibi reperiatur. This is taken from St. Austin's Treatise of Christian Doctrine, as well as the rest of this Book; which is nothing but an Extract from this Father, excepting what he says upon the Seven Liberal Arts, upon which he quotes a passage taken out of the Pastoral of St. Gregory.

The Book of Orders, Holy Sacraments, and Priests Habits, which followeth this, is almost nothing else but a Copy of the first of the three foregoing Books: It is very near the same with the three Books of Ecclesiastical Discipline; for the two first are nothing but an Abridgment of those of the Instruction of Clerks, to which he has added some passages out of St. Austin. In the last, which is about the Christian Warfare, he Treats of Vertues and Vices.

* The two Books dedicated to the Abbot Bonetus, of which the first is about the Vision of God, and the second upon Penance, are made up of passages out of the Fathers upon these Subjects. * Dr. Cave adds a

The three Books of Questions about the Rules of Penance, do not belong to Rabanus. The first third, De and second are Halitgarus's, Bishop of Cambray, and the third an unknown Author's. Puritate

The three Books of Vertues and Vices belong to the same Halitgarus, who has also made a Penitential at the Request of Ebbo, Arch-Bishop of Rheims, divided into Five Books, and published under his Name by Canisius. These are not much different from the Five Books, which here bear the Name of Rabanus. Cordis: Or, the Purity of the Heart.

But the Penitential dedicated to Oggarus, Arch-Bishop of Mayence, is certainly the Work of Rabanus, which he composed towards the Year 841, before he was Bishop of Mayence. [This Tract is Printed alone at Venice, 1584. Quarto.]

The Name of a Penitential has also been given to the Letter which he wrote to Heribaldus, Bishop of Auxerre, published by Stewart in his Addition to the Antiquities of Canisius [at Ingolstadt, 1616.] and by M. Balusius, at the end of Regino, [at Paris, 1671.] But this is a Canonical Letter, in Answer to some Questions propounded by that Bishop. It is divided into Articles, and quoted by Regino and the Collectors of Canons. He there gathers together many Canons concerning the Penances of Homicides, Adulterers, Forsworn People, Sorcerers; and about the Punishments of those that commit any great Crimes after they are admitted into Holy Orders, and about other Circumstances of Penance and Absolution. But towards the end he Treats about two Questions much debated in his Time. The First about the Eucharist, whether it goes into the Draught? A Question that has been spoken of before. And the Second about Ebbo, Old Arch-Bishop of Rheims, who after his Deposition, retired to Hildesheim in Saxony, where he exercised his Episcopal Functions. He says, that he knows not whether he was justly or unjustly Deposed; but nevertheless that it did not hinder him from doing the Duty of that Office: For he has heard that he was afterwards re-established by the Holy See. He adds, That he had lately written thereupon to Hincmarus, after he understood that he had removed from the Priesthood and Clerkship, all those who had been ordained by Ebbo after his being deposed. This Letter of Rabanus was written about the Year 853, a long time after the Penitential, of which we have spoken before.

Rabanus's Letter to Humbert, about the Degrees of Consanguinity, within which 'tis forbidden to Contract Marriage, is also a Work of the same Nature. In it after he hath related the Opinions of Theodorus, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and Isidorus, he says, 'tis his Judgment, that a Man may Marry after the fifth Degree of Consanguinity. And that if there be any Marriages found within that Degree, without their knowledge they were so near of Kin, they might be suffered to continue married, only enjoying them Penance, and exhorting them to live in Abstinence from the Marriage-Bed.

Humbertus not being satisfied with this short Answer, sent him some new Questions about this Subject; and also askt him what he thought of Fortune-tellers Divinations? Rabanus Answers him in a longer Letter, in which he shews, that he was in the right to make use of the Chapter in Leviticus to Regulate the Degrees of Consanguinity, within which it is forbidden to Marry: Because that this Law related to Manners, and that the Precepts of this kind have not been abolished by Jesus Christ. He afterwards relates a passage of St. Austin, which explains the passage of Leviticus. Another passage in the Answer of St. Gregory to Austin the Monk; and a great many Canons concerning the Degrees of Consanguinity, in which it is forbidden to Contract Marriage. In the Second Part, after having spoken of the Artifices of Magicians or Sorcerers, he concludes, That we ought to take care how we apply our selves to them for the Cure of any Distemper, or to find things that are stolen or lost.

In his Book, Of the Soul, he treats briefly, contrary to his ordinary Custom, about such Questions that respect the Original and Nature of our Souls. He says also, that it is a disputable Point, whether God created it to be infused into our Bodies, or whether it be produced from the Souls of our Fathers and Mothers. He maintains, that it is altogether Spiritual, and has no particular Figure, although its principal seat be in the Head. He says, it is not less in Infants than more aged Persons; and that it is of the same Nature in all Men, though the inequality of Organs hinders it from acting every where alike. He Treats afterwards of the Principal Vertues of the Soul, of the Form of the Body, and of the Senses.

The Treatise of the Rife, Life, and Manners of Anti-Christ, contains a Description of his Life and Actions, framed out of what is said of him in the Holy Scriptures: That he should be of the Race of the Jews, and of the Tribe of Dan: That he should be born according to the order of Nature, of a Father and Mother: That at the very Minute of his Conception the Devil should enter into his Body, and always dwell there: That he should be born in Babylon: That he should extend his Dominion to a great distance. That he should do Signs and Prodigies. That he should stir up a great Persecution against all Christians. That when he should come, the Roman Empire would be entirely ruined, and Judgment would be at hand. That he should call himself Christ, and draw all the Jews after him. That he should also sit in the Temple of God, that is to say, the Church. That he should have Elias and Enoch for his fore-runners: That they should be killed after three Years and a half's Preaching. That the great Persecution of Anti-Christ should commence from their Death, and that it should continue three Years and an half; but that although the Anger of God should be enflamed against him, and that he should be slain by Jesus Christ, or the Angel Michael armed with his Power. That 'tis thought this shall be on the Mount of Olives. That the Judgment shall not follow his Death immediately, but that God should grant some time to those that have been seduced, to Repent, and acknowledge their Transgressions.

At the end of these Works we find Rabanus's Verses, in which he confesses, that his Writings are only Collections and Composures out of others Writings.

The Martyrology attributed to Rabanus, is very short, and seems to be a Genuine Piece: It has already been published by Canisius, [Antiq. Lest. Tom. VI.] We owe to the Jesuit Brouverus the Collection of Rabanus's Poetry, where there is Sense and Wit, although it is every where full of Barbarous Terms, and have neither Elegance nor Politeness.

The Commentary upon the Rules of St. Benedict, attributed to Rabanus, belongs to the Abbot Smaragdus, as we have noted before.

The List of some Latin words rendred into High Dutch Terms, and the Figures of the Letters or Characters of the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and Tutonic Tongues, are taken from the Second Tome of the History of Germany, composed by Goldastius, which are such Ancient Pieces, that they may very well be attributed to Rabanus. These are the whole Contents of the Six Tomes of this Author, Printed at Antwerp in the Year 1626. bound in Three Volumes in Folio. [And by the Care of Georgius Colvenerius, at Colen, 1627. Fol. Vol. 3.]

There have been since published some other Works of Rabanus. For without reckoning the three Letters of Predestination and Grace, written against Gotescalcus, and published by Sirmundus [at Paris, 1647. Octavo.] of which we have spoken. M. Balusius has given us in the last Edition of the Works of M. de Marca, two Treatises, which without doubt do belong to Rabanus, and which are most elaborate, useful, and best Written than any of his other Works. The first is Dedicated to Drogo Bishop of Metz, which is concerning Suffragans. Opinions were then divided in the Gallican Church, about the Dignity and Power of Suffragans; some affirmed they were real Bishops by their Ordination, and that they might ordain Priests and Deacons, Confirm, Consecrate Altars, and do all the Office of a Bishop: But others denied this, and affirmed that their Ordinations and Confirmations were null and void. Charles the Great consulted Pope Leo the Third upon this Question, who Answered, That he was certain that Suffragans had not this Power, and that all they had done belonging to Bishops, was ipso facto void, and that they ought to be deprived of any such Power. The Council of Ratisbon followed the Popes Advice, and ordered them to remain in the rank of Priests.

This

This Decision did not hinder, but that there were yet Suffragans in many Diocesses, and that the Bishops did still allow them Privileges which belonged only to them. There has always been many Churches, and chiefly in Italy and Spain, where Suffragans have been esteemed no more than Ordinary Priests, where they Re-ordained such as were made Priests or Deacons by them, Confirmed anew those they had been Confirmed by, and Consecrated anew such Churches as they had Consecrated. Rabanus having understood this, undertook to defend the Suffragans. He says, that their Order had its Original from the times of the Apostles; and that they had such Assistants who could Ordain and do the same Offices with them. He believes that St. Linus and St. Cletus were Suffragans to St. Peter and St. Paul in the Church of Rome. He accuses those Bishops that undervalue Suffragans, and who look upon them no more than Ordinary Priests, of overthrowing the Order by their Ambition. He endeavours to prove by the Canons of the Councils of Ancyra and Antioch, that Suffragans might Ordain thro the permission of their Bishops, and that they have received the Episcopal Consecration and Ordination. He asserts, that if Suffragans had not this Right, they would be of no use to the Bishops as they now are: And upon what was objected against him, that it is said in the Acts, that the Apostles themselves had been sent into Samaria, to bestow the Holy Ghost on those that were newly Baptiz'd; He answered, that the Apostles were sent thither, because there was then no Suffragan at Samaria but only the Deacon Philip, who had Baptiz'd them. The rest of the Treatise contains some Admonitions to the Bishops about Humility.

The other Treatise of Rabanus, Publish'd by M. Balusius, is concerning the respect Children owe to their Parents, and Subjects to their Prince: It was writ upon the occasion of the Conspiracy of Lewis the Godlie's Children against their Father. Rabanus there quotes several places in the Scripture, which prove, that every one ought to obey his Prince and his Parents. He confirms these Truths by Examples, and shows in particular, that it was never permitted to a Subject, to take Arms against his Sovereign upon what account soever. He mightily condemns those children who would deprive their Parents of their Estates. He speaks against unjust and rash Judgments, openly blaming that which the Bishops pronounc'd against Lewis the Godly. He shows plainly that Clergymen ought not to meddle with Secular or Temporal Affairs. He maintains, that none can Condemn or put to publick Penance, a Sinner that accuses himself, unless he be otherwise Convicted. He adds, that those that are sorry for their Sins and are converted, deserve forgiveness. At last addressing * Merit himself to the Emperour, he exhorts him to despise the false Judgments given against him; and Pardon—advertises him, that he may nevertheless with good Works * merit Heaven. He Counsels him, not Heaven] to be surpriz'd at the attempts of his Enemies, but to be encourag'd by the truth of the Gospel, Under the word Merit, which is often met with in the Fathers, The Church of Rome, which generally counsels her new and false Do- and to believe in his Judge and his King, who has given him a Crown on Earth, and promised him one in Heaven. He tells him, that if the Conspiracy of his Enemies have done him any wrong he should trouble himself but little about it, but be thankful to his Defender and Saviour Jesus Christ, who afflicts and chastizes all those that he loves. He exhorts him in fine, not to seek after any Revenge, but heartily to forgive all such as have offended him. This Treatise is Elegant and well Written.

M. Balusius, has also Published in the first Tome of his Miscellaneous Works, his Treatise about the account of Time, directed to Macarius. Rabanus writ this when he was a private Monk, in the year 820. This Book is written by way of Questions and Answers. It treats of all that relates to the Calendar; as Days, Months, Years, Epacts, Cycles and Easter. These Matters, tho they be very obscure, are here treated of with a great deal of Exactness and Method.

Erines, under old Names, would have us understand a Merit ex condigno, whereby we deserve Heaven as a just reward of our Works; whereas they mean a Merit of impetration, as a conditional qualification for happiness.

The same M. Balusius hath put out in another of his Works, (viz. his Collection of some ancient Acts, which he has put at the end of his Capitularies) a Letter of Rabanus's to Regenbaldus, Suffragan of Mayence, about some Questions, that Regenbaldus had propounded to him, about several cases. The first is concerning a Person who having beaten his Wife, had caused her to bring forth a dead Child. He answers, he ought to be dealt with as a Man-slayer. The second is about a Person, who having been bit by a Dog, applyed immediately some of his Liver to the Wound, as most likely to heal it. He excuses him that did this through Ignorance; but he says, he ought to be warn'd of committing the like again. The third is concerning such as are guilty of the Sin of Bestiality. He condemns them to suffer the Punishments specified in the ancient Canons. The fourth is, Whether it be lawful to eat the Calves brought forth by Cows polluted with the Abominations of Men? He Answers, that that is not forbid to his knowledge. The fifth is concerning the Penance of those that have voluntarily, involuntarily, or otherwise killed their Parents and other Relations. He refers these to what has been said about Homicides. In the Conclusion he tells this Suffragan, that he may moderate Canonical Punishments with Prudence and Discretion.

There is at the end of the eight Volume of Councils, in the last Edition, another Letter of Rabanus's to the same Reginbold or Reginbald, about other questions of like nature with the former. The first is concerning those that carry away and sell Christians to Pagans. He Answers, that they ought to be subjected to the Penance for Homicides. The second is about Infants, who are stilled by lying with their Fathers and Mothers. He says, that although these Children came by their Death, contrary to the knowledge of them that were the cause of it; nevertheless they ought not to be exempt from doing some Penance; and if they knew it, they ought to have been punish'd as Homicides. The third is about the degrees of Consanguinity, within which it is forbid to Marry. He sends him upon this question, the letter which he writ to Humbert. The fourth is concerning the Sins of Fornication or Adultery amongst Relations; Rabanus hereupon quotes divers Canons. The fifth is, whether it be lawful to Pray for a dead Slave, who had run away from his Master. Rabanus says, that we ought not to refuse to Pray for him, if he had committed no other Crime; but withal, that we ought to admonish other Slaves not to commit the like. The sixth is concerning a Man, who pleading to be a Priest, altho he was none, had Administred the Sacrament of Baptism. Rabanus says, it ought not to be reiterated, if it was Conferred in the Name of the Holy Trinity. The last is about those that eat Flesh in Lent, and who swear by Relicks. Rabanus answers, that they do very ill, and that they ought to be made to do Penance for their Crime.

Walafridus Strabo.

Walafridus Strabo, (so called as some think, because he was Squint-Ey'd) a Monk of Fulda, a Scholar of Rabanus; afterwards Dean of St. Gallus, and Abbot of Richenou; followed and imitated his Master, not only in Compiling a Glosse upon the whole Bible, Collected principally out of his Commentaries: but also in making a Treatise about the Beginning and Progress of Divine Worship, Dedicated to Reginbert, in which he explains particularly what relates to the Ceremonies of the Church. This Work has been Printed in the Collections of Writers concerning Divine Offices, [by Cochleus at Mentz, 1549. and Historpius at Paris, 1610.] and also in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. XV.] The principal Points which he handles in this Book are these:

He says about the Original of Altars and Temples, that Noah, Abraham and Isaac, erected them in Honour of God. That Moses was the first that Built a Tabernacle for the People to Worship God in. That Solomon afterwards Built a Temple, which was preserved a great while by the Jews. That Pagans, and Authors of false Religions, have imitated in this the Worship of the True, in Honouring Devils and False Gods with the like Ceremonies. That when Christians, who are the true Worshippers of God in Spirit and Truth, began to set up Places for their Worship, they always sought out pure places, distant from the noise and hubbub of the World; where they might quietly offer God their Prayers, Celebrate the Holy Mysteries, and Comfort one another. That they have sometimes made use of their houses for that purpose, but the number of them encreasing, they were forced to build Churches. That oftentimes to avoid Persecution, they have met together in Caves, Caverns, Church-yards, and other private places; but at length, Religion being fully established, they Built new Churches, and turn'd the Temples of their False Gods, into those of the True. That they then did not much mind in what Situation their Churches were built, although the common custom has been since, to turn towards the East to Pray. That at first they had no Signal to call them to the Assemblies. That some were led thither by their Devotion, others had notice of the Day and Hour at their last Meeting, and others by reading it upon certain Tables, set up in their Assemblies for that purpose. That they afterwards made use of an Horn and Trumpet, and at last of Bells, the larger of which are called Campanæ, and the lesser Nolæ; so named from the Town of Nola, where they were first used. Having explained the names of Church, Temple, Basilick, and their parts, together with the Barbarous name of the Osticon, he goes on to Discourse of Images, the Abstracts of which, I shall for some reasons forbear to set down here.

He proves afterwards, that Altars ought to be Consecrated, and so passes from the material parts of Churches, to what is to be done in them. He says, that Praises ought there to be Sung to God, the Gospel Preacht, and Baptism Administred. That a great deal of Care ought to be taken, to keep them from Profane uses. That Prayers there ought to be short and pure, and accompany'd with Tears; and that they ought to proceed from Hearts worthy to be the Habitation of God, who loves the Offerings of Virtues, better than any Corporeal Gifts. That nevertheless God accepted the Oblations of the Patriarchs, and the Sacrifices of the Jews, till such time as Christ, which they represented, was come. That he by his coming, has caused all Sacrifices to cease, and has established new Mysteries, having given the Sacrament of his Body and Blood to his Disciples; and commanded them at the same time to Celebrate it in Commemoration of his Passion. That he has chosen for this Mystery, the Species of Bread and Wine, to signify the Union betwixt the Head and its Members; and that Water is mixt with the Wine, to shew, that the People ought not to be separated from Jesus Christ. That these Mysteries are called Sacraments, because of the Secret Virtue, by which they work our Sanctification. That it is for this reason, that such as cease to be Members of Jesus Christ, by committing Capital Crimes, are excluded from these Sacraments, for fear that if they should approach them, they should be made worse, or be Corporally punisht: And to the end, that the terrour of this Separation might engage them to Repentance; he takes notice, that heretofore other things than Bread and Wine were offered upon the Altar; and that in some places at Easter, they Sacrific'd a Lamb, which was laid upon the Altar, or the side of it, and which they afterwards eat; but he altogether disapproves of this Practice. He afterwards shews there was great reason, that the Eucharist should be received in Lent.

As to what relates to frequent Communion, he observes, that some have thought it enough to Communicate once a year, and that others Communicated every Sunday, and many upon all Holy-days; that afterwards they added some solemn days for Fasting. He approves of their Practice, that Communicate and Say Mass every day, provided they be free from great Sins. He adds also, that there were some Priests that would not Celebrate Mass above once a day, and that there were others, who believed themselves obliged to say it three or four times; for according to the Church of Rome, there are sometimes two or three Masses appointed for one day, as for Christmas-day, and some Feasts of Saints. He gives every Priest the liberty of using them as they think fit, provided they don't condemn each others Practice. As to the Prayers of the Mass, he says, that no body knows by whom they were established, as they now are; and that the Apostles Celebrated it, after a plainer and most unaffected manner: Quod nunc Agimus multiplici Orationum, Lætionum, Cantilenarum, & Consecrationum Officio, totum hoc Apostoli, & post ipsos proximi (ut creditur) Orationibus & Commemoratione Passionis Dominica, sicut ipse præcepit, Agebant simpliciter. That the Ancients say, that they did, as we do now on Holy [or Good] Friday; and that after they had repeated the Lord's Prayer, and made Commemoration of Christ's Passion, they received the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. That afterwards the Offices of the Church were enlarged, as well as the Ceremonies. That the Romans added to what they received from St. Peter, what else they thought fit. That their usage was admired by so many People, because they were a famous Nation, and were taught by St. Peter himself, the Head of the Apostles; and because there never was a Church in the World so free from Heresies. That St. Ambrose compos'd a Form of Prayer for his Church, and for the Churches of Liguria. He fixes upon the Roman Order, and explains the parts of it, taking notice of the Popes, to whom some attribute the Institution of them. He wishes, that they would Communicate at every Mass; and observes, that the time of Communion is before the Prayer, which is said at the end of the Mass, in which they commonly Pray for those that have Communicated. And although he acknowledges, that Priests may Offer and Communicate alone; nevertheless he says, Illam esse legitimam Missam cui intersunt Sacerdos, Respondens, Offerens & Communicans. As to the hour of the Mass, he observes it is different, according as the Solemnities of the day will permit; that sometime it is before Noon, sometimes towards three a Clock in the After-noon, sometimes in the Evening, and sometimes at Night, but never before nine a Clock in the Morning. He speaks afterwards of Holy Vessels and Priests Habits. He makes several remarks upon the Hours of Divine Service, of which these are some of the most considerable. That the Irish kneeled down often; that the Distribution of the Psalms into many parts of the Service, was not begun before the time of Theodosius. That about the same time they began to sing Hymns in the Church of Milan, and to Celebrate Vigils. That St. Ignatius goes for the Institutor of Anthems. That the name of Hymns may be given to all Psalms of Praise, altho they be not in Verse. That there are a great many Churches, where they are never Sung in Verse. That St. Ambrose was not the Author of them all. That the Gloria Patri is differently exprest. That the Spaniards Sing it thus; Gloria & Honor Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui sancto in secula seculorum, Amen. And the Grecians, Gloria Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui sancto, & nunc & semper, & in secula seculorum, Amen. That the Latins add, Sicut erat in Principio. That 'tis thought to be the Council of Nice that Instituted this Hymn, That many put it at the end of those Hymns which they divide into a great many parts, as those which follow the Service of St. Benedict. That the Romans use it not so often in their Psalms, as they do in their Responses: That all the Offices begin with, Deus in Adjutorium, except that for the dead, and that for the Holy Week, [or Week before Easter]. That the Romans still Sing the Psalms, according to the Edition of the Septuagint, but the French and some of the Germans, according to the Correction of St. Jerome; that Stephen the III. coming into France, introduced the Roman way of Singing there.

Scrabo, after having finish'd what related to the Divine Service and its several parts, treats of the Administration of Baptism. He says, That the Ceremonies of Baptism have been encreased by little and little; that the Unction of Christ was added to it, which no body doubts but 'twas taken from the Old Law. That from the very first, Confirmation was Administred by Imposition of Hands, which was then always Conferr'd by the Bishops, and so is still. That the solemn times of Administring Baptism, are Easter and Whitsuntide, that some have added Christmas-day and the Epiphany. That in case of necessity Persons may be Baptized at any time. That they may be Baptized by Dipping or Sprinkling, Plunging the Infant in the Water once or thrice. That at the beginning of the Church, Baptizing of Adult Persons was more frequent; because that those which were Converted, were capable of being instructed in the Principles of Religion, and in answering for themselves. That as for Infants, they had Godfathers and Godmothers to answer in their Names, who are obliged to put them in mind, when they come to have the use of their Reason, of the Promise, that they have made for them.

He passes afterwards to Tithes, and shews that they ought to be given to the Clergy, who must divide them into four parts, whereof one is for the Bishop, another for the Clerk, a third for the Poor, and the last reserved for the Buildings of the Church. He does not forget to speak of the Litanies or Processions, used in the days of Rogations, establish'd by Mamertus; but he observes, that some keep them between Easter end Whitsuntide, according to the Council of Orleans; but the Spaniards defer them till after Whitsuntide, and others to December. He adds, that the name of Litany does not only signifie, that Prayer by which the Saints are Invoked, but also every sort of Prayer, by which we ask any favour of God. He speaks afterwards of the Sprinkling of the Holy Water, of the Consecrating of Wax-Candles, and ends with an enumeration of the several Orders of Clergy, which he compares to Civil Employments. These are the several Orders of the Clergy. The Supreme Bishop who enjoys the See of Rome, and holds the place of St. Peter, being rais'd to the Dignity of Head of the Church. The Patriarchs of other Churches, who are equal in Dignity to the See of Rome, which are of Antioch in Asia, and Alexandria in Africa; besides these three Patriarchs, there are many others which are Inferiour to them [as the Patriarchs of Constantinople and Ephefus]. The Arch-Bishops are above the Metropolitans, to whom succeed in order the Metropolitans, Bishops, Abbots, Great Chaplains, Little Chaplains, Suffragans, Priests that are possessed of Churches where they Administer Baptism, and Priests who have the Government of private Chapels, pels, Arch-Priests that have the charge over Canons, Arch-Deacons who have care of the Bishop's Family. Then Deacons, Sub-Deacons, Exorcists, Porters, Acolythus's, Readers, and Singing-men. This is an exact Abridgment of this Work of Walafridus Strabo, which treats of Matters very rationally. He seems to have read a great deal. He often quotes the false Decretals of the Popes, and sometimes Cites Apocryphal Histories. There is another small Treatise of this Author's, upon the Destruction of Jerusalem, and a great deal of Poetry, Publish'd by Canisius [Antiq. Lec. Tom. 6.] The Lives and Miracles of St. Gallus and Othmarus, Publish'd by Surius [Oft. 16. & Nov. 16.] The Life of Blainus Abbot of Ist, and the Visions of St. Wittinus in Sac. Benediſt. IV. of Father Mabillon. Walafridus dyed in the year 849.

C H A P. XIV.

Such Orders and Constitutions relating to a Monastick Life, as were made by the Authors of this Age.

Benediſt, Abbot of Aniana.

Benediſt, Native of Languedoc, Son of Aigulphus, Earl of Maguelone, having past some time at the Court of Charles the Great, retired into the Abbey of St. Sequanus, in the Diocese of Langres. The Abbot of this Monastery being dead, they would have chosen him in his room, but he refused it, and returned to Languedoc, where he Erected near the River Aniana a Monastery, which afterwards became very considerable. The Reputation of this Holy Abbot was so great, that he was chosen to Govern divers Monasteries, and to effect a Reformation in all the Abbies of France. Being Invited to the Court of Lewis the Godly, he Built the Monastery of Indus, near Aix-la-Chapelle; he was present at the Council held in 817. in that City, and framed Statutes for the Monks. He dyed in his Monastery of Indus in the year 821. He has made a Collection of all the Rules and Orders of Monks, both of the East and the West; and another Work, in which he shews the Conformity of other Orders with that of St. Benediſt. The first is Entituled Codex Regularum, i. e. a Book of Rules; and the second, Concordia Regularum, or an Harmony of Rules. The first has been Publish'd at Rome by Holſtenius [1661] and since Printed at Paris in Quarto, in the year 1663. by Billaine. And the second Publish'd by Father Menardus, and Printed at Paris in 1648. At the end of the first, there is a Collection of Works of Fathers, proper for Monks. It is Compos'd out of the Pious Treatises of St. Athanasius, St. Basil, Evagrius and Faustus; also out of other Writings about a Monastick Life. There is also another Collection of Passages of the Fathers, which also bears the name of Benediſt of Aniana, Compos'd of Extracts, out of the Works of St. Jerome, St. Austin, St. Ephraim, St. Cesarius, Cassian, St. Fulgentius, &c. There are also some other small Treatises of this Abbot, as a Penetential printed in the Addition of Capitularies [by M. Balusius]. A Confession of Faith, which is to be seen no where but in Manuscripts, and a few Letters.

Ardo Smaragdus.

Ardo Smaragdus, a Scholar of St. Benediſt of Aniana, and a Monk of his Monastery, has written the life of his Master, Publish'd by Father Menard, and inserted in the first Tome of F. Mabillon's Sac. Benediſt. IV.

Smaragdus.

We ought not to Confound another Smaragdus with the foregoing. This was Abbot of St. Michael, in Lorraine; he taught human Learning to his Society, as it appears by his Commentaries upon Donatus, and other Profane Authors. He wrote a Book concerning the Duty of a Prince, under the Title of Via Regia, i. e. The King's Way, which he Dedicated to Lewis the Godly, who was made King of Aquitain, by his Father Charles the Great. He has also written Sermons upon the Epistles and Gospels, throughout the whole year, Collected for the most part out of the Fathers: Likewise a little Treatise for Instruction of Monks, Entituled Diadema Monachorum, or Monk's Crown, and a Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benediſt, which he explains and confirms in many places by other Rules. Charles the Great made use of him to Write to Pope Leo, about the Procession of the Holy Ghost. And he also writ the Acts of the Conference held at Rome, in the year 809. and upon the same Subject. The Book Entituled, The way of Kings, was Publish'd in the fifth Tome of Dachevrius's Spicilegium. His Sermons were Printed at Frankfort, in the year 1536. The Monk's Crown at Antwerp, in 1540. And the Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benediſt, is Published amongst the Works of Rabanus, Printed at Colen, in the year 1625. (where it was Printed before in 1575.)

Hildemarus.

Hildemarus a French Monk, called into Italy about the year 830. by Rampertus Bishop of Bresse, who committed to him and Leutgrinus, the care of Rebuilding the Church of St. Faustinus and St. Jovitus. He has written a Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benediſt. This Work has never yet appeared in Print. Some have attributed it to Paul the Deacon, but it is none of his, and it ought to be restored, according to the Manuscript of Dijon, to Hildemarus. There is also in the thirty eighth Chapter, a Letter writ by Hildemarus to Ursus Bishop of Beneventum. This Author dyed in the year 840.

We may also place amongst those Authors that have written concerning Monastical Discipline, Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, whose Letters contain divers Laws and Instructions for a Monastical Life. Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, whose Letters contain divers Laws and Instructions for a Monastical Life. He was Born about the beginning of the Ninth Century. He was certainly of the Province of Sens, but of Ferrara, and of a very considerable Family. He was brought up to Learning, and was admitted betimes into the Abby of Ferrara, where he was soon after Profest under Alaricus, who was then Abbot, and afterward Arch-Bishop of Sens. He was sent into Germany to the Abby of Fulda, there to Study the Holy Scriptures under the famous Rabanus, who at his desire, Compos'd his Commentaries upon the Epistles of St. Paul. Lupus, who was then but Deacon, made great Progress in Ecclesiastical Knowledge, under so able a Master, and returned to France with great Reputation, in the year 830. He was presented to Lewis the Godly, by the Empress Fudith, and stayed some time at Court, in hopes of obtaining some Abbey. It was at this time that he receiv'd the Order of Priesthood: Afterwards he was chosen by Charles the Bald, to supply the place of Odo Abbot of Ferrara, whom this Prince resolv'd to deprive of his Monastery, because he had favoured the Party of Lotharius. Being come thither by the King's Order, he was received for Abbot in November 842. and drove out Odo from the Abbey in the year 844. He assisted at the Council of Verneuil, and was ordered to compile the Canons. He assisted at divers other Assemblies of Bishops, and was sent to Pope Leo the IV. by Charles the Bald. He assisted at the Council of Soissons in the year 853. and lived in great Reputation for Knowledge and Piety, till the 862.

There has been a Collection made of 130 Letters of this Abbot's, upon different Subjects. There are divers upon the difficulties of Grammar, and other Civil Matters; but there are some which relate to Ecclesiastical Affairs, and which treat of some points of Doctrine, Discipline, and Morality.

The fourth is a very Christian Consolation to Eginhardus, upon the death of his Wife, who was Daughter to Charles the Great. This is an Answer to the third Letter of Eginhardus, written to him; in which he declared, that he was not capable of Comfort under his Loss. He says, That it afflicted him most, that the hopes he had put in the Intercessions and Prayers of the Martyrs were all in vain. Lupus Answers him in that point, that his Vows and Prayers, that have not been heard for a Temporal Good, will serve to procure him Eternal Life; and that he does not in the least doubt, but that this Death will be Advantagious both to him and his Wife; because it was more convenient that he should die last, it being likely that he had the greatest Strength to bear this Affliction, and to resist the troubles that are suffered in the World: That oftentimes God does not grant us what we ask, but what is most fitting and convenient for us. That God perhaps had taken away his Wife, to reconcile the Division that was in his Heart, between Her and the Lord, and to Unite all his Love in this only Object. He tells him at length, that tho it be seemingly out of his Power to end his Grief, yet he ought to have recourse to the Goodness and Mercy of God, and resign himself entirely to this Sovereign Physician, who easily heals those Wounds that Men think most Incurable. Then he Exhorts him, to ask of God Eternal Happiness for his Wife; and for himself Perseverance in good Works, growth in a Spiritual Life, and Christian Consolation. About the end he speaks of a Book of Eginhard's, upon the Adoration of the Cross, and thanks him for Dedicating it to him. We have lost this Work.

In the Eleventh Letter he Petitions Lotharius, in the Name of the Monks of Ferrara, to let them enjoy the Revenue of the Monastery of St. Jesse, upon the Sea, which Charles the Great had given to Alcuin, and to the Monks of Ferrara, to maintain Pilgrims, and relieve their Necessities. Rhodingus obtain'd it of Lotharius by Surprise: He begs of him to restore it; and conjures him to it by the respect he owes to the Holy Virgin, St. Peter and St. Paul, through whose Intercession they daily pray God for his Health and Salvation.

In the twelfth, writ to Pardulus Bishop of Laon; he desires this Bishop to use his Interest with the King, in favour of the Monks, of the Monastery of St. Columbus of Sens, who were going to Court, to recover the Privilege of Exemption, which had been granted them by the Arch-Bishop of Sens, and by the Kings. M. Balusius observes upon this Letter, that the Kings were then able to Exempt Abbies from ordinary Jurisdiction. That that of St. Columbus had been put under the Jurisdiction of Jeremy Arch-Bishop of Sens, by Lewis the Godly, and afterwards taken from him. That after this it lost its Liberty again, under Charles the Bald, but soon recovered it again; as it appear'd, by a Charter from this Charles, dated the 13th of November, 847. which serves to fix the Date of this Letter. M. Balusius adds also many other Examples to show, that the Exemptions of the Monasteries of France, were Granted and Settled by the Authority of Kings, who took them into their Care, Management and Protection, sub tuitione.

It appears by Lupus's 18th Letter, that he was charged with care of the Abbey of St. Amandus, without ever seeking it: That he was glad when he was rid of it; and that he was sent to a General Assembly called by the King, near Paris.

In the 19th, Lupus being informed of the Poverty of a Monastery, of the Diocess of Auxerre, by a Monk of the same Monastery, who was come into his; gave Heribald Bishop of Auxerre notice of it, and desired him to remedy it.

The 20th is about some difficulties of Grammar; he takes notice towards the end of a very remarkable thing, which was, that Probus a Priest of Maience had begun a Book, in which he placed Cicero, Virgil and Others, that he believ'd to have lived well, amongst the number of the Elect; for fear it should be said, That Jesus Christ had unprofitably shed his Blood, and did nothing when he was in Hell. These are his Words, An certe inchoatam Satyram, quod magis existimo, Scribens Ciceronem & Virgilium lium, Ceterosq; opinione ejus probatissimos viros, in Electorum Collegium admittat, ne frustra Dominus sanguinem fuderit, & in Inferno otium triverit. It is to be thought, that this Probus did not speak this seriously, as you will be convinced, if you please to consult M. Balusius's Notes upon it.

The 21st Epistle of this Lupus's is an Excuse to Zonas Bishop of Orleans, that he had Accused Agus his Kinsman of having wrong'd the Estate that his Monastery had in his Diocesis. He makes an Apology also for taking his Predecessor Odo's place. The 23^d, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28th, are some Letters of this Odo about Affairs relating to his Monastery.

The 29th Letter, dedicated to Wenilo Archbishop of Sens, is very remarkable. Two Priests of this Diocesis, one call'd Adegarius, and the other Baudrius, having a design to turn Monks, had desired of the Archbishop that they might leave their Churches or Cures, utulos, to enter into the Order of S. Benedict. Wenilo answer'd them, That he would not give them this permission, unless Lupus, into whose Monastery they were to be admitted, would satisfy him it might be done regularly and lawfully. Lupus writ him word, That he had never heard it question'd; and that without doubt it might be done. That Jesus Christ having taught that the perfection of a Christian Life consists in quitting all, and leaving the World, Clergy-men sure ought not to be hindred embracing that perfection which Jesus Christ propos'd even to Lay-men. Hereupon he makes a strong Objection, and answers it. You will object perhaps, says he, that as none are allow'd to break the carnal Union of Marriage, unless it be for Fornication; so none are permitted to quit the Pastoral Charge, which they have once undertaken, as long as they are able to labour for the edification and salvation of their Flock. This is true, answers he, unless he that has establish'd the Marriage does break it himself, or that he that has charg'd us with the Government of others, does secretly command us to quit it. For he that has forbidden anyman to put asunder those whom he has join'd together, the same great God hath made this separation himself when he has pleas'd, because he is God. For we have many Examples of vertuous Persons of both Sexes, that have quitted all carnal Commerce to serve the Lord in holy places. He adds, that there has scarce been any Monastery whereinto some Priests have not retired. He quotes amongst the rest one of his Predecessors, an Abbot of Ferrara, call'd Frigulphus, who had quitted the Habit of Canon, to take upon him the Profession of a Monk. He says that Aldricus, the Predecessor of Wenilo had resolv'd before his death to leave his Archbishoprick and retire into a Monastery. That it is not to be thought that these great men were ignorant of the Canons and Rules of the Church. That the Apostles and Clergy of the Primitive Church had in some measure practis'd a Monastical Life, by putting their Goods in Common. That there may be bad Monks among them, but that he ought to have Episcopal Compassion for them. And, in fine, that there is no surer way to Salvation, than by entering into that religious Order prescrib'd by St. Benedict. Whose Constitution, so much commended and approved by S. Gregory the Great, shows that we may, and we ought to receive Priests into our Monasteries, since he allows them to enter, and the Abbot to receive them, altho' with greater difficulty and precaution than others. Then he entreats Wenilo to allow these two Priests that Liberty they had desired. This Letter teaches us, first, That Priests, who had Ecclesiastical Charges, ought not to quit them to become Monks, without leave of their Bishop. And M. Balusius confirms this in his Annotations by an Example of a like permission requested and granted by Arnoldus Bishop of Lisieux. Secondly, That Bishops might give this permission, or refuse it. Thirdly, That Curates were so closely link'd to their Churches, that it was not in their power to leave them, nor in the Bishops to take them away from them at their pleasure; which M. Balusius confirms in his Notes by divers Canons and very curious Remarks.

The 30th, directed to Grotescalcus, contains an Explanation of a Passage of S. Austin concerning Happiness. He shows that this Saint believed, That God would make himself clearly known to the Blessed, and that this knowledge would engage them inviolably to him. That this knowledge of the Divine Substance belong'd only to the Soul, but that the Eyes of the Body should perceive his presence by the admirable Effects it should work upon the Creatures. Thus he expounds what St. Austin says, That God shall be seen by the Eyes of the Body. He advises Grotescalcus not to perplex his mind with such Questions, for fear they make him incapable of understanding teaching Matters of better use.

The 35th Letter contains an handsome Reflection on the study of good Literature. He observes that it ought to be join'd with the study of Wisdom and Vertue. That if we labour to correct the Defects of the Tongue we ought not to be less diligent to reform the Vices of our Manners. That if one has a great deal of care to polish his Discourse, he ought to apply himself more vigorously to acquire Vertue and Goodness. He exhorts him to whom he writes, to live like a Christian in whatever Condition he engages in, and to make often and serious Reflections on his Duty towards God.

In the 42^d and 43^d Letters written to Hincmarus, he employs his Interest with Charles the Bald, to get the Revenue of S. Josse restored to him, making use of the Poverty of his Monastery to persuade him to it. He also recommends it to King Charles in the 45th Letter, and humbly shews him, That for fifteen years, or thereabouts, seventy two Monks of his Monastery, that prayed continually for his Health and Prosperity, had endured great want of Habits, Pease and Fish, (M. Balusius concludes from hence that they eat no Flesh) and that they could not relieve the Poor and Pilgrims. He entreats him to consider seriously upon their Wants, and to bestow some Charity upon them. He mentions in the 42^d Letter, a Vow that Charles had made by Hincmarus's solicitations, in the Church of S. Dennis. He also there tells us that he compiled the Canons of the Council of Verneuil.

In the 51st Letter he writes to his Monks that he had some hopes to recover the Revenue of S. Josse. Where you may meet with this fine thought, That the Abbot ought to have the Charge and Government of the Revenues of the Monastery, but the enjoyment of them only in common with the other Monks.

In the 53d Epistle he presses King Charles vigorously to restore him this Revenue; and the better to engage him to it, he informs him, That his ancient Monks have observed, and heard of their Predecessours, that all that have ever done any considerable damage or wrong to their Monastery, have been punish'd either by the loss of their Estates, their Health or their Lives. He exhorts him to perform the Vows he has made; and moreover, threatens him with the Judgments of God if he doth not.

In the 55th Letter to Marcuadus Abbot of Provins, he entreats this Abbot to come to Court to assist him in obtaining the Restitution of the Revenue of S. Josse. He informs him, that he came thither the last of November, and has continued there with a great deal of expence and trouble. That the King endeavours to elude his Demands, and always delays him, because that Odulphus, (who then was posselt of St. Josse) was absent and sick, as he was inform'd, but not very grievously (says he) so that this sickness may serve to humble and correct him: Nor so dangerously as to be the cause of his death, for which he should be sorry, because 'tis certain he would be damn'd if he should die, in the unjust possession of the Revenue of the Church. At length Lupus, after many delays and put offs obtain'd the Restitution of the Revenue of S. Josse, as it appears by the 61st and 62d Letters. The 64th Letter is an Instruction to King Charles concerning his duty.

The 79th contains an Extract of a Letter written to Hincmarus, by which he recommends his Kinsman Hilmeradus to him, who was named by the King to be Bishop of Amiens; affirming, that tho' he had not much Learning, yet he might be made serviceable to the Church by following his directions. And that if he was not well fitted for Teaching the Word of God, yet he might do Works that might save him, and those that should imitate him. M. Balusius in his Notes declares himself of a different Opinion with his Author, and says, That in this he has hearkned more to the Sentiments of Nature, than the Principles of Reason.

The 81st Letter is written in the name of Wenilo Archbishop of Sens and Count Girard, who were sent to Amolo Archbishop of Lions, by the King's Orders, to command him to Ordain Bernus Bishop of Autun. They represent to him, That 'twas not a new thing for the King to make Courtiers Bishops of the principal Churches. That Pepin had had in the like Case the Consent of Pope Zachary in a Synod, where Boniface Bishop of Mayence assisted. They also desired the same thing of him for Godesfeldus, named by the King Bishop of Chalons.

The 82d Letter is written to Wenilo in favour of a Priest Accused and Suspended from the Exercise of his Function. Lupus desires Wenilo to give him liberty to exercise his Duty, till a Synod were call'd, in which he hoped to clear himself of the Charge brought against him.

The 84th is a Synodical Epistle of a Council held in the Year 849, consisting of the Metropolitans of Tours, Rheims, Rouen, and about twenty of their Suffragans, whose names are set down at the beginning of this Letter, directed to Nomenius Duke of Breton, about the Disorders he had committed. They reprove and blame him for having laid waste the Lands belonging to the Christians, for having destroy'd, pillag'd, and burnt several Churches, together with the Reliques of Saints, for seizing upon the Revenues of the Church, which are the Vows of the Faithful, the Satisfaction of Sins, and the Patrimony of the Poor, for having taken away rich Mens Estates, and kill'd and enslaved a great number of Christians. Of driving the Bishops from their Churches, and robbing them of their Goods, &c. But principally for having slighted the many Letters of Leo the 4th, Successor to S. Peter, to whom God hath given Supreme Power over all the Church. Of having entertained Lambert Count of Nantes, a Rebel against the King. They exhort him to do Penance, and to satisfy that which the Pope write to him about. And finally, they declared those Excommunicate that shall Communicate with Lambert.

The 93d is an Instruction to King Charles, to whom he proposes Trajan and Theodosius, as two Patterns worthy of his Imitation.

In the 94th he shows, That Afflictions and Sufferings are advantageous to good men.

The 98th is a Letter written in the name of the Cathedral Church of Paris, of the Abbies of S. German, S. Dennis, S. Geneva, S. Maurus des Fosse, and other Monasteries, to Wenilo, Archbishop of Sens, and to the other Bishops of that Province, acquainting them that after the death of their Bishop Ercanradus, they had chosen Aeneas, who had been nam'd to them by King Charles, whom they desired them to Ordain as soon as they could. This Letter is followed by an Answer written in the name of the Bishop of Sens and his Suffragans, testifying their approbation of their Election of Aeneas.

The 100 Letter is an Admonition to the People, wherein they are exhorted to do Penance, to avoid Rebellions and Factions, to embrace a Peace, to forbear Robberies and Plunder, to think of nothing but Publick Good, and to live in Union with one another.

The 101st is a Letter of Recommendation, written in the name of Wenilo, to the Bishops of France and Italy, in favour of two Monks of Ferrara, who went to Rome, desiring them to afford them an Hospitable Reception by the way. This is followed by a Letter written in the name of Lupus upon the same account.

By the 103d Letter he recommends these two Monks to Pope Benedict, to whom he sent them. He entreats him to instruct them in the Customs of the Church of Rome, and to send him the Commentaries of S. Jerom upon Jeremiah, from the sixth Book to the end, being not able to find them any where in France. He adds to this, the Book of Cicero's Book of Oratory, Quintilian's Institutions, and Denatus's Commentaries upon Terence, &c.

In the 105th he promises to receive and deal mercifully with a Monk that had quitted his Habit and Order, provided he would amend, and behave himself better for the future.

In the 108th he thanks Lotharius for sending him this converted Monk. And excuses himself for not letting him be his Secretary, because there was no likelihood that a Monk, who had not all imaginable diligence, would ever be able to do his duty in the midst of the affairs and hurries of the World. Quoniam propositum nostrum vix mediocriter intra Claustra Monasterii custoditur, ne dum inter tumultus Mundanos à quolibet præsertim non satis cauto valeat adimpleri. The following Letter is also about the return of this Monk. It is to be noted that Lupus says in the first Letter upon this Subject, that he could not receive him without the consent of his Brethren.

In the 112th Letter Lupus condemns those that in commending Virginity blame Marriage.

In the 124th he clears himself to Wenilo of the Accusation that Erard had preferred against him in the Synod of Savoniers.

The 128th and 129th Letters are those mention'd before which Lupus sent to Answer the Questions concerning Predestination and Grace.

The last is a Fragment of an Epistle written in the name of Wenilo Archbishop of Sens to Pope Nicholas the first, concerning Herimanus Bishop of Nevers, who was Non compos mentis. He there alleges that Pope Miltiades was of opinion, that a Bishop could not be deposed without the consent of the Pope. He desires Nicholas to send him this Decree of Miltiades, such as it is at Rome; and he assures him he will wait his Judgment, how to make use of it against this Bishop, Whether he shall keep to the Moderation observed by S. Gregory towards the Bishop of Rimini, or whether he should immediately depose him according to the Decree of Gelasius.

Pope Nicholas did not Answer this Question about the Decree of Miltiades; but having enlarg'd upon the Commendation of the Archbishop of Sens's Conduct, he acquaints him concerning Heriman, that he is not enough instructed in his Business; that tho' Heriman be Non Compos, he ought not to be allow'd to come to the Synod; that if he has no other defect than a Weakness of Mind, he ought to be pitied rather than punish'd. And that as to the lewdness and extravagancies he us'd to be guilty of, he ought not to condemn him for them, as well because he is absent, as because he is not inform'd what those Extravagancies are; and then, whether he committed them in his right Wits, or when he was not himself. This Letter in the Manuscript from whence F. Sirmondus took it, bears the name of Servatus Lupus; which shows that 'tis the Abbot of Ferrara's who is so called, and by consequence that the Treatise about the three Questions of Gorefcalcus, belongs also to him; besides, that this Book and these Letters are of the same style, and that the same Doctrine is expounded in the 128th and 129th Letters, which are as it were an Abridgment of the other Work. Inasmuch that there is no reason to believe that Lupus Servatus was any other but the Abbot of Ferrara. 'Tis likewise believ'd that he took this Surname after he had been cured of a very dangerous Disease, thro' intercession of S. Faron, as it is related in his Life, written by Hildegarius Bishop of Meaux, a Contemporary Author.

I have already given you an Extract of Lupus's Writings upon Predestination and Grace. He has also written the Lives of S. Maximinus Bishop of Treves, of S. Wigbert an Abbot, with two Homilies and two Hymns upon the same Saint.

Two great Men of our Age have given very different Judgments of Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, in relation to a Monastical Life. One blames the inordinate Love he had for curious Learning, and his great Inclination for Profane Sciences, which, he says, is a study unworthy of a Monk; and it would have much better become him to have lamented his own and the world's sins in his Cloister, and to have supported his Brothers, then to hunt after and study with so much diligence the Works of Profane Writers. This is the Judgment given of him by the Abbot de la Frappe. F. Mabillon on the contrary thinks him an Ornament to the Monastical Order; a Man that was not less to be esteem'd for his Piety, than his solid Doctrine. So well known and valued in his time, that there was no Council held without him; and whom they always employ'd in the most important Affairs, as the best Instrument and Secretary of the Bishops, and chiefest Churches of France. A Man extremely well vers'd in the Fathers; and who in short was to be admir'd both for his Religion and Holiness, and the great veneration he brought to the Monks of his Monastery, as Hildegarius observ'd. Pastor modò pro Religione Sanctitatis in Monasterio famosissimo Ferrariensi, ubi Cætus Monachorum in Christo cum illo toto Orbe est venerandus.

It does not belong to me to judge of the Monastical Conduct of Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, neither am I fit to decide the Judgments of two Persons so learned as the Abbot de la Frappe and F. Mabillon, for both of which I have a very singular respect. But in keeping to my Subject, that is, considering Lupus as an Ecclesiastical Writer, I may say, That he was not only very knowing in general Learning and Profane Sciences, but in the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church and the Works of the Latin Fathers. And that he writ, not only with Elegancy, Pleasantness and Politeness, but also with a great deal of Solidity and Exactness.

His Letters were publish'd the first time by Papirius Massonus out of a Manuscript of the Abbey of Ferrara, and printed in the Year 1597. This Edition is very erroneous. M. Duchesnius has since oblig'd us with one more correct, [In his Collection of French Historians, Tom. 3.] The Treatise of the Three Questions, and the Letters about Predestination and Grace, have been printed at Paris in 1648. from an ancient Manuscript of S. Amandus, and since by M. Manguinus, together with a Collection of Fathers upon the same Subject. F. Sirmondus has publish'd the two Letters, and the Book of the three Questions [in 1650.] The same Author has put out a Fragment of the 130th Letter, taken out of a Manuscript of the Abbey of Fleury, which was communicated to him by F. Dacherius.

The

The Life of S. Maximin, with that of S. Wigbert, has been publish'd by Busseus, who had caus'd it to be printed with the Letters of Hincmarus at Mayence in the Year 1602. and the two Homilies upon this Saint in 1604. At last M. Balusius publish'd a very fair Edition of all Lupus's Works, enrich'd with Learned Notes, and many Pieces added at the end of the Volume in Octavo, printed for Muguet in 1664. [From whom it is put into the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. XIV. p. 1.]

CHAP. XV.

Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures written in the Ninth Century.

Such as in this Century have apply'd themselves to the study of the Holy Scriptures, have rarely produced any thing of their own, but only made Collections out of the Commentaries of the Fathers. After this manner are those of Rabanus, Paschasius, and the ordinary Gloss of Walafridus Strabo compos'd, of all which we have spoken before. Florus a Deacon of the Church of Lions, follow'd the same method, and gather'd together a great many Books, out of which he made divers Collections. And amongst others, a large Commentary upon the Epistles of S. Paul, taken from fourteen Latin Fathers, and which has never yet been printed. Another Commentary upon S. Paul, compos'd of Extracts out of S. Austin, commonly attributed to Bede, altho' it really belong'd to Florus. It is printed amongst the Works of Bede. He has besides this compos'd a Treatise about the Celebration of the Mass, entitul'd, De Actione Missarum, which is a Comment upon the Canon of the Mass printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. XV. p. 62.] Also two Discourses upon Predestination; and another upon the same Subject against Johannes Scotus.

You meet some Fragments of the first Discourse in Hincmarus. The second has been publish'd by Father Celler and Montieur Mauguin. This last has also oblig'd us with Florus's Book against Johannes Scotus, spoken of before, [Both at Paris 1650.] He has also made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, of which there are two considerable Fragments quoted in another Collection of Manuscripts, whereof the first was publish'd by Father Dacherius in the Twelfth Tome of his Spicilegium; and the other by M. Balusius at the end of Agobardus's Works. The first consists of Laws and Canons against the Jews, and the Judgments of the Bishops. The second is concerning the Elections of Bishops, which he proves ought to be made by the Clergy and People. Lastly, Florus is Author of some Poetry, and there is a great deal of likelihood, that those which go under the name of Drepanius Florus in the Bibliotheca Patrum belong to him. For there is one Poem inscrib'd to Moduinus Bishop of Autun, and another to Wulfinus, who both lived in the Ninth Century. So that it must needs be acknowledg'd, that the true Author of these Poems was Florus the Deacon of Lyons, whom we now speak of. Father Mabillon has also publish'd in the first Tome of his Analeſts some other Poetry of this Author's, of the same nature with the former. The first Poem is a Complaint about the Division of the Kingdom, after the Death of Lewis the Godly. The second is a Letter to Moduinus Bishop of Autun, in which he complains that this Bishop suffer'd the Church of Lyons to be abus'd. The third is in honour of two Martyrs, call'd S. John and S. Paul. The fourth is in honour of S. Stephen the Proto-Martyr. The fifth is concerning the Reliques of S. Cyprian, which are generally believed to be at Lyons. And the last is the Inscription of an Altar, under which there were some Reliques of certain Martyrs; and upon it was portray'd Christ, the Apostles, and S. John Baptist. There was also a third Piece dedicated to Moduinus, of which Father Sirmondus published the beginning in his Notes upon Theodulphus, [at Paris 1646. which are also in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.]

These are very near all the Works of Florus which we have extant. He made a great many Collections, reason'd very properly, and writ tolerably well. He pass'd for one of the best Writers in his time.

Haymo [Aimo] or Hemmo, (a) a Monk of Fulda, or of Hersfield, a Scholar of Alcuin, who was chosen Bishop of Halberſtade in Saxony in the year 841. is one of the Authors of this Century, that has writ the most Commentaries.

In the Year 847. he assist'd at the Condemnation of Gotescalchus in the Council of Mayence, and died in the Year 853. He has written Comments upon almost all the Books of the Holy Scriptures, both of the Old and New Testament, collect'd according to the custom of this time out of the Commentaries of the Fathers, whose Expositions he does but Copy and Abridge. We have those upon the Psalms printed at Paris in 1533. [at Friburg the same year]. Those which he compos'd upon the major Prophets, and the Twelve minor, printed at Colen in 1573. Seven Books upon the Apocalypse at Paris in 1540. and at Colen in 1529. [and 1531.] One Book upon the Aſts, and Seven upon the Canonical Epistles at Colen in 1573. [at Paris 1556. and under Remigius's name at Mentz 1614.] There is at last a Commentary upon the Epistles of S. Paul, which some attribute to Remigius of Auxerre. which is certainly Haymo's. It was printed at first at Rome in 1598. under the name of Remigius Archbishop of Rheims, by the care of the Jesuit Villalpan-

(a) A Monk of Fulda, or Hersfield.] Some make him Abbot of Hersfield; but M. Bulteau believes that he was no more than a Monk of this Monastery, as well because he has no other Character given him in the Chronicle of Saxony, as that Hui who was Abbot of Hersfield in 831. did not die till 846. when he was succeeded by Brnuardus.

us, known by his Commentary upon Ezekiel, and afterwards Reprinted at Mayence, in 1614. Vilalpandus attributed it to S. Remigius Arch-Bishop of Rheims, who Baptized Lewis; but all the Critics easily discovered, that this Opinion was not Maintainable: For how could S. Remigius, that dyed in the beginning of the Sixth Century, Cite the Order of St. Benedict, Bede, the life of Casarius Bishop of Arles, &c. His Style and Manner of Writing easily shows, he was of the Ninth Century; but yet they don't agree to what Author it ought to be attributed. Some give it to Remigius d'Auxerre, others to Remigius of Lyons, but the greatest part to Haymo of Halberstadt; which name it goes under in many Manuscripts, and in two Paris Editions, 1556. and 1608. This last Opinion seems most reasonable; for it is certain, by the Testimony of Sigebert and Trithemius, that Haymo did write a Commentary upon St. Paul: Besides, this is very like his other Commentaries; there is the same Method, the same manner of Writing, the same Expression, and in the greatest part of the Manuscripts of it, it bears his name. Lastly, it was attributed to him 100 years after his death, in the times of Fulbertus and Carnatus. On the contrary, there are but very few Manuscripts that attribute it to Remigius of Auxerre, and Sigebert that writes of this last, has not numbered it amongst his Works. It is therefore more reasonable to attribute it to Haymo, than Remigius.

Other Works of Haymo. We have besides these Commentaries, two Tomes of Homilies upon the Evangelists, Printed at Colen in 1532. and 1540. and at Antwerp in 1559. An Abridgment of the Ecclesiastical History, Printed with Sulpitius Severus, and with Notes of Galesinius at Colen, in 1531. and Reprinted at the same place in 1573.

In fine, Dacherius hath Published in the twelfth Tome of his Spicilegium, a small Work concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which is apparently a Fragment of a Homily of this Bishop's: He there teaches the Real and Substantial Conversion of the Bread and Wine, into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ.

The Commentaries of Angelomus. Angelomus a Monk of Luxeuil, has also written large Commentaries upon the four Books of Kings, taken out of the Works of the Fathers, and upon the Song of Songs; they are Entituled Stromates, because they are Woven up of many passages of divers Fathers: The first is divided into four Books, which he wrote by command of Drogo or Dreux his Abbot; but he did not finish it till after the Abbot's Death, in 855. And the second is Dedicated to the Emperour Lotharius, before he was deprived of the Empire, which happened in 855. These Commentaries are Allegorical and Mythical; they are Printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. XV.] and have been Printed separately at Colen, in 1530. and at Rome in 1665. Trithemius mentions another Treatise of this Author's, bearing the Title Of Divine Offices.

The Commentaries of Sedulius. Some time before these Authors, of whom we have been speaking, and at the beginning of this Century, one Sedulius a Scotchman, writ the like Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistles, which are nothing else but Collections out of the Commentaries of other Authors. It is thought that this Sedulius, was also Author of the like Collections upon St. Matthew. [His Collection on St. Paul's Epistles is Printed at Basil, 1528. 1534. and in Bib. Pat. Tom. 6.]

The Commentaries of Druthmarus. We must add to these Christianus Druthmarus, a Monk and Priest of Corbie, who lived about the end of the ninth Century. He has made a Commentary upon the Gospel of St. Matthew, addressed to the Monks of Stavelo and Malmedy. He tells us in his Preface, that he Compos'd it for the use of the young Monks; because that he observes, after he had Expounded to them twice the Gospel of St. Matthew, they had forgot what he had taught them. He says, he express'd himself in Terms easie enough to be understood; that he endeavour'd to clear all difficulties, that he kept to the Literal and Historical Sense, because that the Letter is the ground of other Sences. and that without it they could not be well understood. He promises a Commentary upon the Gospel of St. John, for that of St. Mark, he refers to one of Bede. This Author performs his design well enough; his Expositions are Short, Historical, Easie, and without Allegories or Tropes. There are also two Expositions of the same Author, upon some places of St. Luke and St. John. This Commentary has been Printed at Haguenau, in the year 1550. [1530.] in the Bibliotheca Patrum. This Author was called The Grammarian, because he was very skilful in the Languages, and understood Greek and Latin admirably well, and always kept to the Literal Sense.

The Commentaries of Remigius of Auxerre. Lastly, Remigius a Monk of St. German's of Auxerre, was called to Rheims to fix his Studies there, by Fulgreus who succeeded Hincmarus [in that See, and had lately Erected a School at Rheims] in the year 882. He was reputed to have been very Learned in the Prophane Sciences, says Sigebert; but yet he employ'd himself more profitably in Expounding the Holy Scripture. We have one of his || Commentaries upon the Psalms, Collected out of those of St. Ambrose, St. Augustine, Cassiodore, & || [This and an Exposition of the twelve Minor Prophets, Printed at Antwerp in 1545. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. XVI.] Sigebert makes no mention of these two Books: Some deprive him of the first, and bestow it upon one Monegodus; but Trithemius attributes it to Remigius of Auxerre. This same Author makes mention of a Commentary of Remigius's upon St. Matthew. We have observed, that the Commentary upon the Epistles of St. Paul, which some attribute to Remigius of Auxerre, does rather belong to Haymo of Halberstadt. Both Sigebert and Trithemius place among his Works, a Commentary on the Song of Songs, which was never Printed. But in the Bibliotheca Patrum, we have the Exposition of the Canon of the Mass, of which the same Author speaks: They also say he wrote a Book of Divine Offices, a Treatise of all the Feasts of the Saints, an Answer to Gualo Bishop of Autun, who had propos'd two Questions to him; one upon the Contest of St. Michael th' Arch-Angel, with the Devil about the Body of Moses, spoken of in the Epistle of St. Jude; and and the other upon these words of God to Job, Lo, the Behemoth that I have made with you, &c. and some other Treatises. Trithemius adds, that he Compos'd a great many Learned Books, and amongst the rest, a Commentary upon Donatus, and other Ancients. Neither of these Treatises or the foregoing, have been yet Printed, no more than his Sermons.

CHAP. XVI.

The History of the Popes, that enjoyed the Holy See during the Ninth Century.

LEO the III, who had been rais'd to the Holy See, about the end of the foregoing Century, Dying in the year 816. he was succeeded by Stephen the IV. soon after his Exaltation he imposed an Oath of Fidelity upon the People of Rome, to be true to Lewis the Godly, and then went into France to visit this Emperour, where he was very honourably receiv'd : and after he had obtain'd liberty for some Prisoners, and a return for some Persons that were then in Banishment, he returned to Rome, where he dyed a little while after, in the seventh Month of his Pontificate. Stephen IV.

Paschal the first of that name, who succeeded him, was rais'd to the See of Rome in the year 817. He immediately gave notice of his Elevation to Lewis the Godly, according to the custom of those times. Having received Letters from Theodorus Studita, and other Defenders of Images Persecuted in the East ; he writ them back a Letter, to comfort them in their Sufferings. There are three Letters which go under his Name, but which are very faulty, and much to be suspected. The first is about a Privilege granted to the Church of Ravenna. The second is an account of the Invention of the Reliques of St. Cecilia. By the third he grants the Pall to the Arch-Bishop of Vienna. The two first are not worthy of credit, and the third is doubtful: [They are extant in Tom. VII. of the Councils.] Paschal I.

Eugenius the II. succeeded Pope Paschal in the year 824. There goes under his name a Bull, sent to the Bishops and Lords of the Army of the Huns, which does not seem a very Authentick Monument. There are also attributed to him some Canons, but without doubt they belong to a Council of Rheims, and not to this Pope. There is also a Letter under his name to Bernard, Arch-Bishop of Vienna, which has little more to be said for it than the former. [This with another Letter attributed to him, is extant Tom. VII. of the Councils.] Eugenius II.

Valentinus who succeeded Eugenius in the year 827. having lived but few Months, Gregory the IV. was raised to this Dignity, at the beginning of the following year. He came into France to favour the Undertakings of the Children of Lewis the Godly, against their Father; threatening to Excommunicate the Bishops that would not be of his side. But the Bishops answered him boldly, that if he came to Excommunicate them, he should return Excommunicated by them. We have spoken of an Extract of a Letter, which this Pope writ upon this Subject, which is to be found amongst Agobard's Works. There are also two other Letters of this Popes, one upon the Affair of Adricus Bishop of Mans, whose cause he would have had brought before him, and in the mean time his Title of Bishop to cease : And the other upon the Deposing of Ebbo, which he disapproves of, and condemns of Violence. This Popes Letters are in Tom. VII. of the Councils.] Valentinus. Gregory IV.

Sergius the II. succeeded Pope Gregory the IV. in the year 844. We have but one Letter of this Popes, by which he makes Drogo Bishop of Mets his Vicar general in the Countries, on the other side of the Alps, in consideration that he was Uncle to the Children of Lewis the Godly, and besides was very fit for that Office. He gives him power to Assemble the National Councils of all that Country ; to examine the Cases of those that shall appeal to the Holy See, and to prepare those of Abbots and Bishops. He forbids any to Appeal to Rome, that have not first had their Case Examined in a Provincial Synod, or in that of the Vicar General ; because an Affair may be better understood in a place where it is Transacted, than any where else. This Letter is Directed to all the Bishops on the other side the Alps ; 'tis written with a great deal of weight and worth. [This Letter is Printed in Tom. VII. of the Councils, p. 1799.] Sergius II.

Leo the IV. was chosen Pope, after the death of Sergius the II. the twelfth of April, in the year 847. He Governed the Church of Rome eight years, three Months, and some days ; during this time he wrote divers Letters, but there are but two of them come to us entire, and it is not very certain they are his. Leo IV.

The first is a short Letter Directed to Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, by which he commands him to Consecrate an Abbey for Ademarus and his Monks, which was to depend upon the Holy See.

The second is sent to the Bishops of England, who had consulted him upon many Articles, and particularly about Simoniack Bishops ; he orders, that such should be tryed in a Council. He afterwards gives them a satisfactory Answer to their other Questions: Concerning the first he says, 1. That the Hierarchy consists of Bishops and Clergy-men : 2. That every Bishop is to govern his Diocese, by his Priests and other Clergy, and make his Visitations : 3. That Priests ought not to be obliged by them them to carry the Eulogies to the Councils: 4. That Charms are a sort of Witchcraft: 5. That no Body ought to Marry his Kinswoman: That the Bishops ought to regulate their Judgments, by the Canons of the Councils, and the Decrees of the Popes, Silvester, Fericius, &c. but might also make use of the Authorities of St. Jerom, St. Austin, and St. Isidore.

We have some Fragments of a Letter of Leo, against Nomenocus Duke of Britain; of another to Lotharius, in which he refuses the Pall, to the Bishop of Autun; and of a third to Hincmarus, concerning the Council of Soissons.

Lately, There is a Discourse attributed to this Pope, Directed to the Priests and Bishops, containing a great many Instructions relating to their Ministry and Duty. [All these Letters of Pope Leo, are put into the VIII. Tome of the Councils, p. 30.]

Benedict.
III.

Benedict the III. of that name, was chosen in July, 855. after the death of Leo the IV. His Election was opposed by a Priest, called Athanasius, who through the favour of the Commissioners of the Emperour, posselt himself of the See and Palace of Rome; he also put Benedict into Prison: But at last, such as espous'd Athanasius's Cause, were forc'd to yield, and to Depose him themselves, and to acknowledge Benedict. This Pope was but two years and an half in the Papal Seat, and we have but two Letters of his; One to Hincmarus, concerning the Council of Soissons, and the Privileges of the Church of Rheims; and the other to the Bishops of Charles's Kingdom. by the which he Cites to Rome, Hubert Son of Boson, who had quitted his Profession of a Clergy-man, and liv'd a lewd and irregular Life.

There are also two other Letters attributed to this Pope; One to confirm the Privileges of the Abbey of Corbey; and another to ratifie those of the Abbey of S. Denis. But since these Writings are doubtful, and particularly the last, we shall insist no longer upon them. These four Letters are printed together in Tom. VIII. of the Councils.

Nicholas I.

Nicholas the first, Son of Theodorus a Roman, was Ordain'd Sub-Deacon by Pope Sergius, and Deacon by Pope Leo the fourth. He acquired a great Reputation under the Pontificate of Benedict the third. He was chosen after the death of this Pope by the Clergy and Grandees of Rome to his See in the Year 858. and was Consecrated in presence of the Emperour Lewis, the 22th of April. He had at the beginning of his Pontificate a Difference with John Arch-Bishop of Ravenna, against whom many had brought Complaints to the Holy See. He cited him three several times to a Synod of Rome. But this Arch-Bishop not appearing he Excommunicated him. John upon this had immediate recourse to the Emperour, who was then at Pavia, and afterwards came to Rome with some Officers, which that Prince sent to accompany him. The Pope told those Officers, That they ought not to joyn themselves with one that was Excommunicate; and at the same time cited John to the Synod that was to be held in November. But instead of obeying, John immediately left Rome. The Senators of Ravenna, and the People of Emilia prayed the Pope to come himself in Person to Ravenna to reform the Disorders that John had caused there. He went and restored to the People of Emilia and Pentapolis the great Riches that John and his Brother had got into their possession. John fled to Pavia to beg the assistance of the Emperour Lewis, but this Prince counselled him to submit to the Pope, and to reconcile himself to him. Which he did; and the Pope gave him Absolution from the Heresie of which he cleared himself, and received him again into his Communion. And upon the Complaints of the Bishop and People of Emilia, he order'd him to come every year to the Synod at Rome: To Ordain no Bishops but such as were chosen by the Duke, Clergy, and People, and whose Election was first confirm'd by the Holy See. To permit the Bishops of Emilia to come to Rome when they pleased. To exact nothing of them, and not to seize upon any Revenues, under pretence that they belong'd to him, till it was plainly determined by the Holy See, or Commissioners from it, that they did really belong to him. This Decree of the Pope was approv'd of by the Synod.

This Affair was follow'd by many others of greater Consequence, which Nicholas maintain'd with a great deal of Courage and Vigour. The principal are the Intrusion of Photius, and the unjust Deposing of Ignatius; The Divorce of Thietberga; The Deposing of Rothadus, and the Conversion of the Bulgarians. Which are not necessary to be any farther spoken of here, because I have treated of them in other places of this Volume. And this is also the reason that I have but little to say of his Letters, which are near an hundred; because the Course of our History about these Affairs, hath oblig'd us to make an Extract of them upon other occasions. The first sixteen are a Collection, which he made himself of those, which related to the Case of Ignatius and Photius. The rest concern the Affairs of France. the Peace between the Kings, the Divorce of Thietberga, of Lotharius, the Excommunication of Waldrada, the pardoning of Count Baldwin, the affair of Ingletruda and Boson, the Judgment pronounc'd against Rothadus Bishop of Soissons, the affair of Ebbo, the Privileges of some Abbies, the Promotion of Hilducius to the Bishoprick of Cambray, the Dispute between the Bishop of Mans and the Monks of S. Kalais. the Pall granted to Egilo Arch-Bishop of Sens, the Bishopricks of Brittany, which the Dukes of that Country had a mind to take away from the Metropolis of Tours, and the Objections of the Greeks against the Church of Rome, about which he consults the Bishops of France.

But there is one of these Letters, in which he Answers Rodulphus Arch-Bishop of Bourges, about several Points of Discipline, which we cannot pass over in silence. It contains seven Articles. The first relates to the Ordaining of Priests and Deacons by Suffragans. Some Bishops of France Deposed those they had Ordained; and others Re-ordained them. Because, says he, Suffragans were created in imitation of the Seventy Disciples, who might perform Episcopal Functions. But because the Canons forbid Suffragans to execute these Functions, he orders the Canons for the future to be observ'd.

The

The second is upon the Complaint the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne made, That the Arch-Bishop of Bourges forc'd his Clergy to Commence their Differences in his Courts, and be tried by him; and that he dispos'd of several Matters that belong'd to his Diocese, without consulting him about it. Nicholas admonish'd the Arch-Bishop of Bourges of this, and told him, that his Quality of Primate and Patriarch did not allow him that Privilege. And that he ought to content himself to be Judge of Appeals of Causes which had been tried before by the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne. He repeats anew, upon this occasion, the Canons that constitute the Rights of Patriarchs and Primates.

In the third he declares, That in the Church of Rome they never anoint the Hands of those Priests and Deacons that are Ordain'd with the Chrism: Adding, that he never read that it was practised.

The fourth permits the Arch-Bishop of Bourges to moderate the Penance, and relax something of the rigour of Canons made against such, as having undertaken a state of Penance, return again to the World.

The fifth is about those that are obliged to bring to Confirmation such Children as their Wives have had by a former Husband. He says, That if they have been guilty of the neglect of it thro' Ignorance, they ought not to be parted from their Wives, but only made to do Penance.

The sixth orders, That such as have kill'd their Wives, unless they have taken them in Adultery, shall be made to undergo the Penance of Homicides.

The seventh intimates, That the Bishops ought to repeat the Gloria in Excelsis, on Holy-Thursday at Mass. But it is not permitted to any to wear the Pall on this day, unless they have leave from the Holy See.

F. Dacherius in the Twelfth Tome of his Spicilegium, has publish'd another Canonical Letter of Nicholas the first, sent to Harduicus Arch-Bishop of Besançon, in which the Pope prescribes the following Rules.

First, he proves by the Canons, That such as have married two Sisters, may not marry any more for the future.

Secondly, That those that have married their Relations, and are upon that account divorc'd, cannot marry as long as either of them lives; but that it is not forbidden when one of them dies.

Thirdly, he also believes, That Marriage ought not to be absolutely forbidden to such as have committed the Crime of Sodomy, provided they repent of their Sin, and have left off that cursed habit.

Fourthly, he shews, That the Election of a Bishop by the Clergy and chief Men of the Diocese, ought to stand good.

In the fifth Article he says, That it is forbidden Suffragans, not only to Ordain Priests and Deacons, but also to Consecrate Churches and Confirm Children, which only belongs to the Bishops, as we may observe, not only by the Customs of the Church, but also by the Acts of the Apostles.

The last shews, That a Priest that is once fall'n into, and convict of a foul Crime, can no more be restored to his Function.

There is another Work of Nicholas the first, concerning Church Discipline, yet more considerable than the former. 'Tis his Answer to the Questions of the Bulgarians, which contains *above 100. Vir. 106. Articles.

In the first he says, That the Religion of Jesus Christ consists in Faith and Good Works.

The second is concerning the Spiritual Affinity between God-fathers and their God-children, which hinders their ever marrying together.

The third is about the Ceremonies of Marriage. He says, that after the betrothing, the Priest ought to cause the Persons to come into the Church with their Offerings, and there give them his Benediction and the Veil, which is not to be given in second Marriages. That being gone out of the Church, they should wear Crowns upon their heads. These are the ordinary and solemn Ceremonies, which, as the Greeks say of theirs, need not nevertheless always be observed. That consent, according to the Laws, might suffice; and that if that be wanting, the rest signifies nothing.

The fourth sets down the Fasts which are observed in the Church of Rome; 1. Lent; 2. The Fast after Whitsunday; 3. That before the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin; 4. That before Christmas; 5. The sixth day of every Week; and 6. All the Vigils or Eves of great Feasts.

In the fifth he says, That the Fast on Wednesday is not commanded, but that of Friday is.

In the sixth, That it is not forbid to bathe on those days.

In the seventh and eighth he approves of the Custom of Carrying and Kissing the Cross, and of the Reliques in Lent.

In the ninth he extolls the Custom of Communicating every day in Lent, provided the Communicant be engaged in no Sin, nor has any Mortal Crime lying upon his Conscience.

The tenth is about the Celebration of Sunday.

The eleventh sets down the Feasts in which we must forbear working, to assist at Divine Service.

In the twelfth he says it is to be wish'd that Men would on those days forbear also trying Civil and Criminal Affairs.

In the thirteenth he excuses himself for not sending them Civil Laws.

In the fourteenth he aggravates the Cruelty which was us'd towards a Greek, who had his ears and nose cut off for pretending to be a Priest, and baptizing a great many People.

In the fifteenth, he says that such Persons ought not to be re-baptized in the Name of the Holy Trinity.

In the sixteenth he says, That those that did thus abuse this Priest ought to be put to Penance.

In the seventeenth he blames the King for executing the principal Leaders of a Rebellion raised against him by the Bulgarians, whom he had caused to be baptized. And he says that he has committed a great Sin, and particularly in the murdering their Infants who were innocent. But since he did it thro' a violent Zeal for Religion, and a blind ignorance, he hopes he may obtain mercy, if he repent.

In the eighteenth he says, That those that have been baptized, and after forsake Christianity, ought to be first admonished by them, that held them to the Font, that if they do not reform, they ought to be accused to the Church; and that if they refuse to obey the Church, they should be punish'd by the Prince's Authority.

In the nineteenth he says, They may make use of the rigour of their Laws against those, as would take away the lives of their Princes. Nevertheless, he exhorts the King to pardon such Offenders. This, and the following Articles relate more to Civil Policy than Church Discipline.

In the 41st he forbids forcing Infidels to the Faith, and advises them to avoid communicating with them.

In the 44th, and those that follow, he forbids Hunting, Examining Causes, Playing, Marrying, or Feasting in Lent; and in the 50th leaves it to the prudence of the Bishop or Priest, who have the care of Consciences, to determine after what manner a man should live with his wife during that time.

In the 51st he expressly forbids men to have two wives at a time. In the 53^d he says that it is permitted to all Believers to make the sign of the Cross upon the Table, and to give a Benediction thereupon in the absence of the Priest. In the 54th he does not disapprove of the Custom of the Greeks, who thro' humility used always to wash their hands before they went into the Church; but nevertheless, he does not command it. In the 55th he says he does not think it needful to force People newly converted to pay their debts, that they may be received into Communion. In the 56th he approves of the Custom of ordering Prayers and Fasts for Temporal Necessities, as in a time of Drought, &c. In the 57th he rejects the Superstition of the Greeks, who would not eat any Beasts kill'd by Eunuchs. In the 58th he orders, according to the Precept of the Apostle, that women should have their heads covered in the Church. The 59th and 60th relate to their Habits and the Hours of Eating. In the 61st he recommends continual Prayer to them. In the 62^d he forbids them to make use of a certain Stone that they believ'd would heal or cure a Disease. The 63^d and 64th shew the time when it is most proper to abstain from use the of Marriage. The 65th commands to receive the Eucharist fasting, and allows those to come to the Communion, who have bled much at the nose or mouth; for which he makes use of the example of the Woman in the Gospel, who being sick of a Bloody-flux touch'd Christ's Garment; which makes it credible, that he doth not debar Women from it that are under the like inconvenience. In the 66th he forbids them to enter their Church with their Turbans on their Heads. In the 67th he forbids the Bulgarians to swear by their Sword, or by the name of any Creature. The 68th allows Women newly brought to bed to enter into the Church. In the 69th he says, That the solemn times of administering Baptism are the Feasts of Easter and Whitsuntide; but that it is not necessary to observe this in regard of the People newly converted, no more than in respect of such as are in danger of death. The 70th directs that they ought not to depose a Priest who hath a Wife; and that it is not lawful for Lay-men to judge of Priests. The 71st shews that Priests, how wicked soever they are, cannot defile the Sacraments; and that they may be received from them with security. The 72^d is about the question propounded to him concerning a Patriarch. He says he cannot answer whether he shall grant them one, till he knows their number of Christians. That a Bishop may serve their turn in the mean time; and that if their numbers of Believers encrease, and that there be divers Churches and divers Bishops, he will make choice of one of them for their Patriarch, or rather Arch-Bishop. In the 73^d he says that their Patriarch, Bishop, or Arch-Bishop must not be Ordained but by the Supreme Bishop; and then he that is Ordained by him, having receiv'd the Privilege of Metropolitan from the Holy See, may Ordain other Bishops. That after this there would be no more need of coming to Rome for the Ordination of their Arch-Bishop, who then might be Ordained by the other Bishops, upon condition that he doth not execute any part of his Office till he has receiv'd the Pall. The 74th asserts that men may pray any where. The 75th and 76th, That the Bishops that he will send them, shall bring the Rules of Penance which they desired, together with a Missal. In the 77th he forbids them to have any thing to do with Lots, by putting a Pin into a Book to find out any thing they are in suspicion of. The 78th declares that Penance ought to be refus'd to none. In the 79th he forbids superstitious Ligatures made use of to cure men. The following Articles relate to Peace, Agreements or Bargains, Judgments and Civil Punishments. In the 87th he forbids forcing Widows to become Nuns. The 88th says that it is not lawful to pray for such as dy'd in their Infidelity. The 89th recommends to them the Custom of Offering the First-fruits of the Earth. The 90th says that it is lawful to eat Birds which have not been bled in killing them. The 91st forbids Christians to eat Beasts kill'd or hunted by Infidels. In the 92^d he declares that they are the proper Patriarchs who govern the Churches founded by the Apostles, which are only Rome, Alexandria and Antioch. That the Bishops of Constantinople and Jerusalem are also called Patriarchs; but they have not so great Authority as these three. In the 93^d he declares that that of Alexandria to be the second Patriarch. In the 94th he declares the Cheat of the Greeks, who said that Christ came first from their Country. The 95th says that they ought not to be taken from the Church who have fled thither for Sanctuary. In the 96th he forbids Husbands to be divorced from their Wives, if it be not for Adultery. In the 97th he exhorts Masters to pardon their Slaves that have offended them. In the 98th he is willing that such as kill themselves should be buried, for fear their putrid Bodies should occasion Infection; but he would have no Obsequies bestowed upon them, nor any Sacrifice or Prayer offer'd for them. In the 99th he permits such to be buried in the Church as have liv'd well. The 100th approves of the Custom of carrying dead Bodies into their own Countries. In the 101st he commends Alms. In the 102d he forbids doing violence to Pagans to convert them. In the 103d he commands them to burn the Books of the Sarazens. The 104th is concerning the validity of Baptism administered by a Jew, who had no Religion. Nicholas the first answers, That such ought not to be Re-baptized, if he did confer it upon them in the name of the Trinity. In the 105th he speaks of those that preach'd a Doctrine contrary to that of the Apostles. He answers that they ought not to be heard: But that it doth not belong to the Bulgarian Lay-men to judge whether the Doctrine be true, or not. In the last he exhorts them to take Instructions from none but the Church of Rome, which always delivers the Truth to such as desire it.

These are the Decisions or Answers of Nicholas the first in this Work. This Pope was a great Canonist. He wrote readily and with Authority. He often quoted the Canons and Decretals of the Popes. He maintain'd the Grandeur of his See with vigour, and manag'd the most difficult Matters he was concern'd in with Honour. M. de Marca observes, That he had done some Injuries to the Discipline and Liberties of the Church by maintaining that it was not lawful to assemble a National Synod without the consent of the Pope: In attributing to himself the Appeals of the Clergies Cases determined in National Synods; and also after a Review brought, in Citing the Persons and Causes to Rome to be there determined anew, instead of appointing Judges on the places; and affirming, that the Causes of Bishops wholly belong'd to his Cognizance. But these Pretensions have not been acknowledg'd by the Church, and particularly by the France, who have always kept to their Liberties without the least diminution of Respect and Submission due to the Holy See. [These Epistles are all put out in Tome VIII. of the Councils.]

After the death of Nicholas the first, which hapned the 13th of November in the year 867. Adrian Adrian II. the second, who was about 76 years of age, was chosen in his place. He was a Roman, the Son of Talanus, related to the Popes Stephen the fourth and Sergius the younger. Gregory the fourth Ordain'd him Priest, and gave him the Title of St. Mark. His Liberality gained him a great repute in Rome, and he was propos'd to be chosen Pope after the death of Leo the fourth, and Benedict the third. And after the death of Nicholas he obtain'd it both by the Votes of the People, who lov'd him, and by the joynt consent of both Parties of Grandees. Lewis the Emperour approved of his Election; and he was Ordained the 14th of December. He was at first suspected not to favour much the Memory of his Predecessor Nicholas the first, because he seem'd not so severe towards Lotharius and Waldrada, as he had been. But he freed himself from this suspicion, and re-united those to him that before had forsaken his Interest upon this account.

The beginning of his Pontificate was disturb'd by the Invasion of Rome, which the Duke of Spoleto seiz'd on, and barras'd with Robberies and Plundering of his Soldiers. But Rome was deliver'd both by the Authority of the Emperour, who depriv'd the Duke of Spoleto of his own Dominions, and the Thunderbolts of Excommunication which the Pope sent out against these Robbers. A Peace was no sooner granted to the Church of Rome, but the Affair of Photius was brought before Pope Adrian. The Emperour Basilus having restor'd Ignatius, sent some of his Officers to Rome to accompany the Deputies of Ignatius and Photius. Those of Photius's side were drown'd for the most part, and there appear'd in his behalf but one inconsiderable Monk call'd Methodius, who durst not maintain his Cause, and who suffer'd himself to be cited thrice, and was at last condemn'd for Non-appearance. But the Officer of the Greek Emperour, and John Metropolitan of Cæsaria in Cappadocia, having presented to Pope Adrian the Transactions of the pretended Council which Photius had assembled against Pope Nicholas the first, he caus'd them to be examined and condemn'd in a Council which pronounced an Anathema against Photius, and had the Book burnt which he wrote against Pope Nicholas. After this Adrian sent Legates to Constantinople to assist in his name at the eighth General Council. They had at first all the satisfaction they could wish, but after the Council, they enter'd upon the Affair of Bulgaria, and after it was debated in their hearing, judg'd that it ought to be subject to the Patriarch of Constantinople, which troubled the Legates extremely. Wherefore having protested against, and declared this Judgment null, they immediately left the City dissatisfied. And being but very meanly accompanied, they fell into the hands of the Sclavonians, who robbed them, and took them Prisoners. They soon after made an escape, and came to Rome at the end of the year 870.

There are five Letters of this Pope concerning the Affair of Ignatius and Photius in the Version of the Acts of the eighth Council done by Anastasius. The three which follow, relate to the Affairs of France, and the Churches of Brittany, to Lotharius and Waldrada, Aldardus, Wulfadus, and the other Clergy-men Ordained by Ebbo. To the Kingdom of Lotharius, on which Charles the Bald seiz'd after his death, and which Adrian would have had been left to Lewis the Emperour. To the pretended Privileges of Caroloman, and to the Quarrel of Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, with his Uncle. It is not necessary to give any Extracts of these Letters in particular, having spoken of them particularly elsewhere. Adrian dyed the first of November in the year 872. He was naturally good and well temper'd, zealous for Peace, and for the welfare of the Catholick Church. His Letters are written in a Style mixt with Gravity and Modesty, Zeal and Humility; he maintaining in every part of them his Authority, without Affectation or Contempt of any Body. He behaves himself towards those he had Business with, according to the Rules of Honesty and Charity; not Flattering them by a base Complaisance, or Offending them by high Words, nor Enraging them by his extraordinary Claims.

John the VIII. was Arch-Deacon of Rome, when he was rais'd to the Holy See; it was in December 872. that he came to this Dignity, at a time when all Italy began to be very much molested by the inroads of Barbarians, and Divisions between the Dukes and Lords. He was obliged to make a Treaty with the Sarazens, to hinder their Invasions. After the death of the Emperour Lewis the II. he set the Imperial Crown upon the Head of Charles the Bald, in the year 875. and supported himself by his Protection, as long as this Prince lived: But having a mind after his Death to let the Empire fall into the Hands of his Son, he was opposed in his Design by the Lords of Rome, and by Lambert Duke of Spoletto, who seized both upon that City and the Pope in it. But he escaping some time after, fled into France, where he held the Council of Troies: After this, returning into Italy with some succours, he drove out the Barbarians, and to procure himself a quiet Life, Crowned Charles the Gros's Emperour, in the year 880. and dyed at the beginning of the year 882. He has writ many Letters concerning the Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs of his time.

The first is Directed to Count Boson; he thanks him for the good Service he had done his Legates with Charles the Emperour, and acquaints him, that he expected those Succours from that Prince with a great deal of Impatience, which he promised him against the Sarazens.

The second to King Lewis, is about the Differences between that Prince and the Emperour Charles the Bald: He tells him, that he cannot hope to make them Friends, till he has heard them both, and Exhorts him in the mean time to think of a Peace.

In the third he advises Jeffry Prince of Salern, that he has received Power from the Emperour to Conclude and Swear the Treaty made with him, and that he will shortly give him a Visit upon that Occasion.

In the fourth, sent to the Clergy and Faithful of the Church of Valva, he condemns a certain Person, who would have seized upon that Church, during the Life of Arnoldus, who was the Bishop of it. He commends them for not being willing to receive him; he forbids them to do it, and threatens them with Excommunication if they should, as also he that undertook to settle him, if he persisted in it.

In the fifth he commands him that he writes to--- which it may be was the Bishop of Naples, to separate himself from the Duke of Naples, who would not submit to the Holy See, and threatens him with Excommunication, if he does not do it.

In the sixth he orders his two Legates, which he had at the Emperours Court at Pavia, to return immediately.

In the seventh he complains of Boson's retaining his Legates, and begs assistance of him against the Sarazens, to prevent the Besieging of Rome, which they threatned.

The eighth is written to Charles the Bald; in it he allows of the Translation of Frotarius, from the Arch-Bishoprick of Bourdeaux to that of Bourges, upon the Testimony and Remonstrances of the Bishops of that Province, having delayed to grant it till he was acquainted with their Sentiments, as he observes in that Letter.

The ninth is Directed to Landulphus Bishop of Capua, to whom he sends word, that the Legates whom he had dispatched to the Emperour, had obtained of him, a Confirmation of all the Privileges anciently belonging to the Church of Rome, and particularly a Power to conclude such a Treaty, as he himself should think best, concerning the Territory of Capua. He informs this Bishop, that he design'd to be in that City shortly, that so he might make preparations to receive him.

In the tenth, he writes to Adelard Bishop of Verona, to come to Rome in December, to assist at the Council which was to be held there; and threatens him with Excommunication in case of a failure.

In the eleventh, he desires the Emperour to pardon Emmenius, and take him into favour, altho he owns him to have been justly Condemned.

In the twelfth, he begs of him to Pardon a Man that had killed another, and who was come to Rome ad limina Apostolorum, to expiate his Crime.

The thirteenth is Directed to the People of Bourges, whom he exhorts to receive Frotarius for their Arch-Bishop, by reason of the Desolation of the Province of Bourdeaux, because the Pagans having cruelly ravaged it, he was now become unserviceable in his first Diocese. In the following Letter, he commands the Bishops of that Province to acknowledge him.

In the fifteenth, he orders the Bishop of Chartres, to restore to his Goods and Offices, the Murderer of whom mention is made in the twelfth Letter, who had been at Rome ad limina, to make Atonement for his fault.

The sixteenth and the four following, are about an Affair wherein Peter Arch-Bishop of Grado was concern'd. It seems two of his Suffragan Bishops had revolted from him; and one Dominicus Abbot of the Monastery of Altino, had got himself to be Elected Bishop of Toricelli in spite of him. The Arch-Bishop of Grado having brought this Affair to Rome, the Pope cites both these Bishops, and the Bishop Elect, to make their Appearance at the Council which he held there; but they failing to obey the first Citation, he was forced to threaten them with Excommunication if they did not come in Person, to a Council which was to meet in February. Then he wrote to two of the the neighbouring Bishops, to see this Sentence put in Execution, in case they did not obey; to the Duke of Venice, to send them to him; to two Bishops called Felix and Peter, that he interdicted them, till such time as they came to his Synod; and that if they fail'd of coming thither, he would certainly Excommunicate them. He blames Dominicus for his Carriage, and Summons him likewise to his Synod under pain of Excommunication; and he returns his thanks to the Duke of Venice for his good Inclinations to the Holy See; requesting him to cause those Bishops to repair to the Synod which was to be Celebrated in February. He directed these Letters to a certain Bishop, whom he desires to Distribute the rest, to those Persons to whom they belong'd, as it appears by the twenty fifth Letter, which is address'd to that Bishop.

In the twenty first, he desires help of the Emperour Charles, against the Insults of the Sarazens; representing to him, the terrible Devastations they made among the Christians.

The twenty second is directed to Count Lambert, whom he severely reproves for not hindering the violent Oppressions of some of his Subjects, and threatens to Excommunicate him if he did not take care to regulate these Disorders for the future.

In the twenty third, he thanks the Emperour Charles the Bald, for the kind Reception he gave the Legates of the Holy See; as also, because he sent Ansegisus and Adalgarius to Rome, with Commissioners to repress the Insolence of those Persons that were troublesome to the Holy See. He informs him, That they could not be Punished according to their deserts, because they were fled to a certain Marquess, and some great Lords, who took them into Protection: he prays the Emperour to find them out, and to Condemn them to Banishment; and humbly entreats him, not to suffer them in his Kingdom. In the following Letter he complains of the Conduct of Ansegisus, whom he accuses of maintaining a secret Correspondence with Count Lambert. He commends the Fidelity of Adalgarius, upon whom he had bestowed a Pall, by way of Recompense.

The greatest part of the following Letters relate to the Wrongs which the Holy See Suffered by the Sarazens and other Enemies of the Church; against all which he begs the Assistance of Charles the Emperour: And Exhorts the Bishops and Princes of Italy, to break the Treaties made with them; and animates them to declare War against them.

The thirty fourth Letter is an answer to Bishop Ansbert, who had Consulted him about the Promotions of Bishops and Abbots. He sends him word, That he must follow as much as he can the Directions of the Canons; nevertheless, he thinks it convenient, he should wait for the coming of the Emperour, that he may Act according to his Will and Pleasure. He says in particular, as to those Persons he had been Consulted about, that an Exile may be favoured without doing any thing contrary to the Canons. That with Permission of the Prince, the Abbot that was put out of a Royal Monastery, might be Re-established, if he hath never been Convicted of any Crime: And that a Murderer, or any Accomplice in such a Crime, ought to be deprived of all Spiritual Authority.

The thirty seventh is a Letter about the Translation of Frotarius Arch-Bishop of Bourdeaux, to the Arch-Bishoprick of Bourges.

The 268th is Directed to Methodius Arch-Bishop of Sclavonia, he comforts him under some Persecutions, which he suffered from a certain Bishop; assuring him, that he had neither Contributed to it, nor Privately Written against him: He Exhorts him to be Zealous for Religion, and promises him Justice against his Enemy.

By the 269th, he begs a speedy Relief of Charles the Emperour against the Sarazens.

In the 270th, he Pronounces Athanasius Bishop of Naples Excommunicate, for not breaking the Treaty made with the Sarazens.

The 271st is to the Arch-Bishop of Ravenna, who had brought Aldericus into his City from the Emperour. He blames his Carriage, and pretends 'tis contrary to his Oath. He promises him, that returning from Naples, he will come to Ravenna, and do Justice to that Church. He enjoins him to Ordain Dominicus Arch-Deacon, Bishop of Fayance, whom he had nominated to that cod.

In the 272d written likewise to the Arch-Bishop of Ravenna, he reproves him for having obliged a married Woman to leave her Husband, and marry her Ravisher; and Accuses him of Disobedience to the Church of Rome: Therefore forbids him Ordaining any, till he had appeared at the Synod to be held at Rome in October.

In the 273d he commands the same Arch-Bishop to dismiss the Clerks belonging to the Bishop of Playfance, that had retired to Ravenna, whom the Arch-Bishop had received without Letters of leave from their own Bishop; and commands him to Absolve the Clerks of Playfance, whom he had Excommunicated. We see by these Letters, that this Arch-Bishop had frequent Contests with Rome. This more plainly appears by the following Letter, which sheweth that this Prelate had Ordained another Person Bishop of Fayance than him whom the Pope had nominated. The Pope by this Letter Excommunicates him, and forbids him taking Possession of this Bishoprick, or exercising any Function, till he had presented himself to the Synod at Rome.

He Cites a second time the Arch-Bishop of Ravenna by Letter 274. intimating to him, That he stands Accused of several Crimes, and chiefly of Perjury.

In the 276th he determines the Affair of one Deus Dedit, an Inhabitant of Ravenna. His Arch-Bishop had Excommunicated him as Convicted of Incest: He appeals to the Holy See, and came to Rome to clear himself; but no Body appearing from the Arch-Bishop, the Pope would not Absolve Deus Dedit, till he had written to the Arch-Bishop to send Accusers and Witnesses to Rome. He sent a Priest and a Deacon with an Accusation in writing: Deus Dedit answer'd, and proved his Marriage to be according to Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws. The Pope and the Synod declar'd him Absolved, and confirmed his Marriage.

In the 277th he writes to Charles the Emperour to send him two Legates, that he might regulate the Wrong and Injustices the Church suffers under his Reign.

The Arch-Bishop of Ravenna not appearing at the Synod, was Excommunicated. The Pope Advises those of Ravenna by Letter 278, and forbids them to Communicate with him.

By the 279th Letter he Congratulates the Emperour Charles his intended Journey into Italy. He exhorts him to Succour the Church of Rome, and to expel Guy out of the Possession of the Lands of the Church.

In 280. he thanks the Bishop Luitwardus for having procured the Emperour's Journey into Italy.

By the 281st he commands the People of Geneva to obey Optandus, whom he had Ordained their Bishop.

In the 282d he prays the Bishops and Counts of Italy to intercede with the Emperour, that Engelberga might come to Rome.

The 283d is directed to the Arch-Bishop of Cologne, touching a Priest long since Excommunicated by Pope Nicholas, for having Communicated with Ingeltrude, and had undergone eleven years Penance; the Pope Absolves and Restores him at the Request of the Arch-Bishop of Cologne. He likewise writes to this Arch-Bishop to Judge concerning the Divorce of Gideon, whose Wife had committed Adultery with her Brother, according to what St. Austin writes on that Matter in his Book of Adulterous Marriages; and what is ordered by Pope Innocent.

In the two following Letters he praises several Lords for their Zeal to the Holy See.

In the 286th he expresses his Joy for the Emperour's coming to Ravenna, and begs him to hasten his Journey.

The 287th is to the King of Bulgaria: He expresses his admiration, that he hath not sent Ambassadors to Rome, and Exhorts him to do it, and acknowledge the Holy See.

In the 288th he reproves the Arch-Bishop of Vienna for favouring the Allies of Boson, and Cites him to Rome.

The 292d is written to the same Arch-Bishop, and blames him for causing Optandus Bishop of Geneva to be apprehended, and Ordaining another in his place. He Cites him a second time to Rome.

In the 293d he complains to the Emperour, that the Marquels Guy had seized on the Goods of the Church of Rome, and refused to do him Justice; desiring him to come in Person and do him right.

By the 294th he Absolves the Bishop of Naples, provided he break the Alliance made with the Sarazens, and strangle the most Guilty of those that are in his hands, and send him the rest.

The 295th is an Answer to Oteran Arch-Bishop of Vienna, who to clear himself, writ to the Pope, That he had Ordained a Bishop for Geneva before the Arrival of Optandus. The Pope answered, That 'twas well known to the World how long that Church had been without a Bishop; and that 'twas for that Reason, and the Necessity of that Church, that he had Ordained Optandus Bishop of that place. That he ought not to object this against him, that he was not of that Church; since he himself was neither a Clerk, nor Instructed nor Baptized in the Church of Vienna, of which he was now Bishop. He Cites him to the Synod at Rome with Adalbart Bishop of Maurienne, who was Accused of having injured the Bishop of Grenoble; 'tis to him that the following Letter is directed.

The 297th is to Michael King of Bulgaria, whom he often Exhorts to send Ambassadors, and submit to the Holy See.

In Letter the 298th, written to the Empress and Luitwardus Bishop of Vercelli, he entreats her to press the Emperour to assist him against the Infidels, and to send Engelberga to Rome.

By Letter the 299th, Directed to Anspert Arch-Bishop of Milan; he Confirms the Privileges of the Church of Milan, and Exhorts him to Labour and Pray for the Church of Rome: Here end the Letters of the XIVth Indiction, and begin those of the XVth, beginning in September 831.

In the 300th Letter, he enjoyns the Arch-Bishop of Ravenna to restore to Dean John all he had taken away from him.

In the 301st, he orders the Clergy of Ravenna to Apprehend Maimbert, whom he had Excommunicated, and send him to him.

By the following, he adviseth his firm Friend to do it with Expedition; he enjoyns the same thing to Duke John, in Letter 303.

The 304th is a Condoling Letter, written to the People of Ravenna for the Death of their Bishop: He Confirms the Election they had made of an Other, and charges them to respect him. He recommends to them the Dukes Deus Dedit and John, together with their Estates.

In Letter the 305th to the Abbot Hugh, he desires him to Exhort King Lewis to come to Rome, and warns him to shun the Communion of Formosus, of John Arch-Bishop of Rouen, Adelard Arch-Bishop of Tours, and Frotarius Arch-Bishop of Bourges.

Letter 306 is Directed to King Charles, whom he entreats to Confirm King Carloman in his good Intentions toward the Roman Church.

In the 307th, he sends to Suppo to meet him at Mount Cenis, and to bring thither to him the Prince's Engelberga, Anspert Arch-Bishop of Milan, Wibodus Bishop of Parma, and some other Persons of Trust.

In 308th, he commends to a Bishop the Care of a Vacant Church, till it be provided of a Pastor.

The following Letters are not set down according to the Order of their Dates.

In Letter the 309th, written to Aldephonsus King of Gallicia, and all the Christians of that Country: he makes the Church of Oviedo a Metropolitan Church, with Authority over the Kingdom of Gallicia. In the next he advises that Prince to have the Church of S. James consecrated by the Spanish Bishops, and desires some Moor-Cavaliers to serve against the Enemies of the Church of Rome.

In the 311th he grants the Communion to some Priests of Salerno, who tho Excommunicated by Pope Nicholas his Predecessor, yet were suffered to Exercise their Functions, on condition they should Fast every Monday and Friday for three years.

The 312th is a Fragment of a Letter written to the King of the Bulgarians, accusing him of Schism, because he Received the Sacrament of such People as the Church of Rome counted Excommunicated.

In the 313th, he Creates Ansegisus his Vicar in France and Germany with Power to Assemble Synods, if need required, and to regulate the Affairs of that Country: He orders him also, to Publish the Decrees of the Holy See, and to refer to him all Affairs of Difficulty or Consequence.

In the 314th, he gives leave to Hincmarus Arch-Bishop of Rheims, to Ordain in the Church of Laon, him that was chosen in the place of his Deposed Nephew; this Letter is Dated on the fifth of January, Indiction IX. that is to say the year 876.

Letter the 315th, Directed to the Bishops and Arch-Bishops of the Kingdom of Lewis of Bavaria; he smartly reproves them, for not hindering their King from Entering into the Kingdom of Charles the Emperour; and he acquaints them, that he hath sent two Legates to Compose the Differences between those Princes, and to Excommunicate him that shall not agree to their Decisions.

He writes the same thing to the Counts of the Kingdom of Bavaria in the following Letter: On the contrary, he praises the Prelates and Counts of the Empire, because they continued faithful to him: and reproves in Letter the 318th, those that had abandon'd him.

Letter 319th is directed to all the Arch-Bishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priests, Judges and People of France and Germany. He gives them to understand, That Gregory Nomenclator and George his Son-in-law, having been Impeached before the Roman Church, and Accused in two Writings, he had Cited them by two Bishops, and by his Secretary, who had delivered them Copies of the Accusations against them; that they had put off their Appearance from day to day, and in the mean time had conspired to Introduce the Sarazens into Rome. That not being able to affect their Designs, and the Day of their Trial approaching, they had by Night opened a Gate of the City, and fled with Bishop Formosus, and some others, that had conspired against the Emperour Charles. That he had sent two Bishops to Cite them, but not finding them; and having put off their Trials to another Day, and sent again without success to seek them, he had assembled a Council, and pronounced against them the following Sentence: That Formosus Bishop of Porto, heretofore sent Ambassadour by Pope Nicholas to the King of Bulgaria, had engaged that Prince to receive no other Bishop sent by the Holy See but himself: Also being Convicted of having done his Endeavours to pass from his Bishoprick to that of Rome; of having quitted his Church; fled out of Rome, and Conspired against Charles the Emperour; should be Excommunicated and Deprived of his Priestly Office, if he did not appear to justify himself within Fifteen days, that is to say, by the Second of May, and that without hopes of Restoration, if he past Twenty days without appearing. That Gregory, Stephen, George, Sergius and Constantine, Authors and Accomplices of the said Conspiracy, and Guilty of divers other Crimes, should be also Excommunicated unless they appeared within Ten days, and be for ever Anathemized, if they do not do it in Fifteen. He adviseth by this Circular Letter all Prelates and Believers not to Communicate with them; and declares those that do so, Excommunicated as well as they.

Letter the 320th is directed to Photius, and written concerning the Addition of the Filioque added to the Creed: Pope John the Eighth disapproves of it.

These Letters are followed by some Fragments of others, written by John the Eighth, gathered out of Gratian.

In the first, taken out of a Letter written to the Bishop of Vannes, he determines, that a Bishop having committed Manslaughter, can never perform Priestly Functions afterwards.

In the Second, out of a Letter written to Rostagnus Arch-Bishop of Arles, That the Sacrament cannot be given to a Person ravished, till she hath quitted her Ravisher.

In the third, cited out of a Letter to the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, he submits to the Judgment of this Metropolitan, an Excommunicated Priest who had been put to Penance by some Bishops of his Province, and advises him to take six Bishops with him to judge of it.

In the fourth he writes to the Arch-Bishop of Cologne, That he cannot grant him the Pall, because in the Letter by which he desired it, he neither spoke according to the Custom of Universal Councils, nor the Decrees of the Popes, and that he had not signed the Letter, nor sent any one to testify the Truth of it by Oath.

Lastly, There is a Fragment of a Constitution concerning the Cardinals, attributed to Pope John the VIIIth; which orders, that they shall be present at least twice a Month in the Churches, to which they are entituled, that they may inform themselves of the demeanour of the Clergy, prevent disorders, and judge of all differences between the Clergy and Laity in Ecclesiastical Affairs; he also commits to their Charge, the care of Monasteries; he likewise commands them to be twice a Week at the Palace, according to the Command of Leo the IVth, to regulate Affairs there. In fine, He grants them half the Revenues and Contribution of the Parishes of Rome, upon Condition that they perform Divine Service there. These Constitutions do not appear to be so ancient as John the VIIIth.

Father Labbe hath made an Addition of some Letters, which he supposes to belong to Pope John the VIIIth: but either they are forged as the three first, or they are Grants of Privileges, which are not of John the VIIIth's, only as the fourth and the sixth; or they are found elsewhere as the fifth, which differs not from Letter 113th, and the seventh, which is a Paper of Instruction, given to the Legates sent to Constantinople, about the Affair of Photius. [These Letters of Pope John's are Extant in Tome IX. of the Councils, with the Fragments.]

After John the VIIIth, the See was held by Marinus, and afterwards by Adrian the IIIrd, they lived but a short time, and did nothing considerable. Stephen the Vth who Succeeded, writ two Letters into the East; one to the Emperour Basilius, and the other to the Oriental Bishops, about the Affair of Photius. There is also a little Letter that bears his Name, to Robert Bishop of Mets, in which 'tis Decided, that a Clerk having lost one Finger, might be Promoted to Holy Orders.

A Fragment of another Letter to Fulke Arch-Bishop of Rheims, in favour of Teutboldus chosen Bishop of Langres; which Commands him to put him in possession of that Bishoprick. I do not mention another in favour of the Church of Narbonne, against the rights of the Church of Tarragon, which is a supposititious Monument full of falsities. [His Epistles are in Tom. IX. of the Councils.]

At the end of this Age, the Church of Rome was troubled by the Election of Formosus Bishop of Ostia, Translated to the Bishoprick of Rome; This Man had been Deposed by Pope John the VIIIth: But being returned under the Papacy of Marinus, he used all arts and interest to obtain the Holy See; but finding himself hated and rudely used by the Romans, he procured the Emperour Arnoldus to come to Rome, who Beheaded several of the Chief of that City, who came to meet him. After his Death, which happened in the year 896, about the fifth or sixth of his Popedom, the Holy See was Disputed between Boniface and Stephen.

This last being an Enemy to Formosus's Memory, dug up his Corps, drest him, and stript him of his Pontifical Habit, and after having cut off his Fingers, threw him into the Tyber; and Declared, that all whom he had Ordained should be Ordained anew; and made this cruel and unreasonable Proceeding be approved of by a Council held at Rome: But Pope Romanus that succeeded him in the year 900, revok'd what his Predecessor had done: And his Papacy, and that of his Successor Theodorus lasting but few Months, John the IX in a Council, Disannulled all that had been done against Formosus, declared all his Ordinations good, Condemned to the Fire the Acts of the Council, held under Stephen the IVth, Excommunicated those that had dug up Formosus's Body, and forbid for the future all such like Proceedings.

These last Popes have written very little: There are two Letters of Formosus's; one to Stilianus about the Affairs of the East, another to the Bishops of England; but the latter which is likewise attributed to Pope Leo the VIth belongs to neither of them, being writ at a Council, supposed to be held the year 903. which neither agrees with the time of Formosus's being Pope, nor with the Reign of King Edward, in whose time this Council is placed. They Attribute to Stephen the VIth, two Letters to the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, but both seem to be Supposititious. As to the Letters of John the IXth, we shall speak of them in the History of the following Age.

C H A P. XVII.

Containing the Ecclesiastical History of the Lives and Martyrologies of the Saints.

THis Age had but few Writers, who attempted to give an account of the Ecclesiastical Affairs of it in General, but had an abundance of Authors, who compos'd the single Lives of several Saints.

Among the Ecclesiastical and Profane Historians of the first sort, which flourish'd in this Age, Sergius. we may reckon Sergius, of whom Photius [Cod. 67] speaks; and assures us, That this Author wrote an History of all things memorable, both in Church and State, from the Time of Copronymus to the 8th Year of Michael Balbus, which was the 828th Year of Jesus Christ. It is evident that he was a Layman and a military Officer. Since he relates also the Actions of the Army, as well as his Thoughts concerning the Disputes, then on Foot, about Religion: We have not this Work. Photius observes, That his Style was clear, elegant and unaffected: He us'd very proper Words and Expressions; that his Composure was very curious and his Method pleasant, easie and Natural; which he judges the best Properties of an Ecclesiastical Historian.

Eginhardus, Secretary to Charles the Great, and founder of the Monastery of Selgenstat upon Eginhardus the Maine, in the Diocese of Mentz, Wrote the Life of Charles the Great, and the Annals [of the most observable Things done in the Reign of King Pepin, Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly] beginning at the Year 741. and ending at 829. [Both these Works are printed together at Cologne, 1521. quarto, at Francfort 1584. in fol. and 1594. in octavo.] We have also some Letters of his [viz. 62 put forth by Du Chesne, in his Appendix, Tom. 2.] a Treatise upon the Cross, and an account of the Translation of the Reliques of S. Marcellinus and S. Peter, which Ratavius and Diendo cunningly conveyed out of the Church of S. Tiburtius, near Rome. [This last Treatise is extant in Surius, June 2d. and the other is quite perished.]

Theganus, a Suffragan of the Bishoprick of Treves, hath written an History of Lewis the Kind [or Godly.] [Pitbaeu hath put it out, with the French Writers of this Age, at Francfort, 1594. p. 291. And Du Chesne in his Collection of the same Writers, Tom. 2.] He flourished from the Year 810. to 840. or thereabouts.

Petrus Siculus, being sent, in 870. by the Emperor Basil to Tibrica, in Armenia, to procure Petrus the exchange of some Prisoners; and there having had some Conferences with the Manichees of that Country, call'd Paulitians, made a Treatise, containing The History of [the Rise, Progress and Downfal of] the Manichees, and the Doctrines which they maintained. This Treatise hath been translated by Raderus [a Jesuit] and Printed in Greek and Latin at Ingolstadt, in 1604. and in Biblioth. Patr. [Tom. 16.] It is dedicated to an Archbishop of Bulgaria. In it he reduces the Errors of the Manichees to six principal Heads, which are these. 1. That there are two Principles, a good one and an evil; the one the Creator and Governour of this World, the other of the World to come. 2. That Jesus Christ was not born of the Virgin. 3. That the Elements in the Sacrament, are not converted into the very Body and Blood of Christ. 4. That they condemn and disgrace the Cross. 5. That they reject the Books of the Old Testament and S. Peter's Epistles. 6. That they account the Ecclesiastical Ministry of Priests and Elders unnecessary. He then relates the Story of Manes and his Sect. All that he says is taken out of the Catechises of S. Cyril of Jerusalem and Epiphanius. He promised a Confutation of these Errors, but hath not done it in that Treatise. F. Sirmondus saw a Confutation of two of these Articles, by several Texts of Scripture, in a MS. in the Vatican Library.

But, of all the Ecclesiastical Authors of this Age, there is none more famous than Anastasi- Anastasius sus, an Abbot and Library-Keeper of the Church of Rome, who flourished under the Pope- Bibliothec- doms of Nicolas I. Adrian II. and John VIII. He was sent by Lewis II. Emperor of Italy, carius, to Basil Emperor of the East [to obtain a Marriage between his Master's Daughter and Basil's Son] and was present at [the last Session of] * the VIII.

Council; where he was of great use to the Pope's Legates, because he understood both the Greek and Latin Tongues well. He hath translated the Acts of this Council, and of the VII. [at Nice] with several other Records of the Greek Church, [which are extant in Tom. 7 and 8 of the Councils;] as also a three-fold Chronology; containing [a Collection of such Ecclesiastical Matters] as are related in] the Chronica of Nicephorus, Patriarch of Constantinople, Georgius Syncellus, and Theophanes, from the Beginning of the World to the Reign of Leo Armenus [put out by Fabrotus, at Paris, 1649. with his own Notes.] A Collection of several Pieces concerning the History of the Monothelites, published by F. Sirmondus [at Paris]

* This Council, which passes for the 8th General Council in Coriolanus's Collection, is rejected both by the Greeks and Romanists, for an unlawful one, being called without the Consent of the Western Emperors, and managed by the Iconolatre, or Image-Worshippers, with Force and Cruelty, against Iconomachi, especially the great Photius, who was deposed from his See of Constantinople, and Ignatius put into it.

in 1620. [and in the Biblioth. Patr. To. 12. p. 831.] The Life of S. John the Alms-giver, Patriarch of Alexandria, mentioned by Sigibert and Trithemius [is not extant] and the Martyrdom of S. Demetrius, published by F. Mabillon, in his Analeſts, Tom. 1. [p. 65.] His Translations have all Prefaces to them, made by him, and very well written: But his most excellent one is that which he hath prefixed to the Version of S. Dionysius the Arcopagite, made by Erigenes, where he speaks of the Scholia which he had translated. He is commonly thought to be the Author of the Popes Lives, which bear the Name of Pope Damasus, but falsely, and they are printed under Anastasius's Name at Mentz, in 1612. [1602.] But 'tis doubtful whether they are all his, and many believe that they are a Compoſure, taken out of several Authors. F. Labbe assures us, That he saw a MS. written in Charles the Great's Time, which contain'd the Lives of the first Popes; which, if it be true, this Work can't be all Anastasius's. I am of Opinion, that the Lives of the first Popes, as far as Damasus, were written by a more ancient Author, who put them out under Damasus's Name: But the latter are Anastasius's, who reviewed them, and put them in that Form they now are in, and concluded them with the Life of Nicholas I. for I take the Lives of the five following Popes to be written by William, who succeeded Anastasius in the Office of Library-keeper, in the Church of Rome. Nevertheless Anastasius might write the Life of Adrian II. for he certainly outliv'd him: And perhaps he lived long enough to write the Lives of the four following Popes. He wrote tolerable good Latin, and was a learned Man for his Time. He was a good Polititian, and studied the Interest of the Church of Rome.

The Anonymus Author of the Liber Synodicus. There remains only the Author of the Treatise, called Liber Synodicus, whose Name is unknown. His Work is, An Abridgment of the first Councils, commonly called, The little Synodical Book: It ends with the Council held by Photius in 877. which is accounted the VIII. General Council, which makes it probable that he lived about the end of the IX. Age. This Work hath been Printed at Strasburg in 1601 [in quarto.] and since is put by F. Labbe into the last Collection of the Councils. It is a very short and plain Abridgment, and contains nothing considerable or extraordinary about the History of the Councils.

Michael Syncellus. The number of the Historians of this Age, which have written the Lives and Panegyricks of the Saints, is very great; The chief of them are these that follow: Michael Syncellus of the Patriarch Nicephorus; and, after his Death, designed for his Place, by the Empress Theodora: But he refused to accept that Dignity. He wrote the Life of S. Dionysius [the Arcopagite] and made a Panegyrick in Honour of the Holy [Archangels and] Angels: In which, after he hath invoked them, and distinguished their several Orders, he speaks of their good Offices, which they perform to Men, and relates several Examples to prove it out of Holy Scripture. Lastly, he makes several Exclamations, by way of Encomium. There is an Hymn at the end of this Discourse, published by F. Combesis [in his Auctuar. Nov. Tom. 1. p. 1525.] and is found in the Biblioth. Patr. The Style of it is lofty, full of great Words and affected Epithers.

Methodius Methodius, prefer'd to the Patriarchate of the Church of Constantinople in 842. is also the Author of S. Dionys's Life, which is extant at the end of the Works of that Father [printed at Antwerp in 1634. Tom. 2. 'Tis also printed alone at Florence, 1516. Paris 1562.] Some Fragments also of two Sermons, printed by Gretzer [in his Tom. 2. de Cruce] are attributed to him: The one is concerning the Benefit of the Death of Christ, and the Reasons why he would dye upon the Cross. The other is against those that are ashamed of the Cross of Christ. To these we may add, The Encomium of S. Agatha, translated into Latin by F. Combesis, in his Biblioth. Conciliar. Patr. and is said to be in MS. in the Library of S. Mark at Venice. Some also attribute to him a Sermon upon S. Simeon; and another upon the Sunday, called Dominica in Ramus [or Palm-Sunday, which is the Sunday before Easter-day] which F. Cambeſis hath printed among the Works of the elder Methodius [who flourished in 290. at Paris in 1644.] although it be very doubtful whether they be so ancient, as we have observed in speaking of the Elder Methodius. He dyed in 847. [in Balsamon's Collection of the Greek Canon we meet with some penitential Canons, attributed to Methodius, but the Learned judge them not to be his.]

Hilduin Hilduin To Methodius we may joyn Hilduin, the Patron of the Fable of S. Dionysius the Arcopagite's coming into France. He was Abbot of S. Medard at Soissons, of S. German and S. Dionys [near Paris] and chief Chaplain to the Emperor Lewis the Godly. He made a Reformation in the last of these Monasteries, in 829. and settled Monks there instead of the Canons, formerly there. He took Lotharius's part against his Father, and was banished into Saxony. But he was again restored, and after his Restauration he wrote his Book of the Arcopagite, by the Command of Lewis the Godly. In it he undertakes to prove, That Dionysius, the Apostle of France, was the Arcopagite: But this Work is full of abominable Falsenesses and gross Forgeries. He proves his Opinion by Records of so small Authority, That his Writing discovers the weakness of the Cause he maintains, and his own inability to do it. This Work was printed at Cologne in 1563. and is put by Surius among the Lives of the Saints [Octob. 9.] with a Letter from Lewis the Godly to him, and his Answer. Hilduin dyed, according to the Opinion of some, in 838. and of others in 842.

David Nicetas, surnamed Paphlago, because he was a Bishop in Paphlagonia, altho' he was also Patriarch of Constantinople, was a great admirer of the Patriarch Ignatius, and wrote a long History of his Life [which is extant, with the Acts of the VIII. Council at Ingolstadt, 1604. quarto. and Tom. 8. of the Councils. p. 1179.] He hath also composed several Panegyrics, in honour of the Apostles and other Saints [viz. S. Mark, S. Mary, S. Gregory the Divine, S. Hyacinthus, Eustatheus, Agapius and Theopistus] printed by F. Cambes in his last continuation of the Biblioth. Patrum [at Paris in 1672.] His Style is elegant and pleasant; his Relations are simple and plain, without being tedious. He often turns his Speech to the Saints; he commends and makes Acclamations in their Honour, according to the Custom of his Time.

Leo the Wise, Emperor of the East, may be reckoned among the Panegyrists of the Saints. He succeeded his Father Basilus in 886. and reigned till 911. He took great pleasure in composing Sermons. Baronius hath published a List of 33. [ad Annum 911. numb. 3.] which are found in a MS. in the Vatican Library, Gretzer hath published 9. printed at Ingolstadt in 1600. and since, F. Cambes hath inserted 10 in the first Tome of his Auctuar. Biblioth. Patrum. Besides these, we have a Discourse upon the Life of S. John Chrysostom, among the Works of that Father [Tom. 8.] of Savil's Edition, and a Sermon upon S. Nicolas [Bishop of Myra] printed at Toulouse in 1644. and some Predictions [viz. 17.] concerning the State of Constantinople, Printed by Codinus [at the end of his Antiquities, at Paris in 1655.] Baronius mentions other Works of Leo, which are in MSS. in the Vatican Library, viz. several Discourses, Moral Precepts, Riddles or mystical Sayings, Constitutions, and [† his Tacticks, or] a Treatise of the manner of Ranging an Army in Battalia. The Sermons printed by F. Cambes are upon the Nativity, Purification and Annuntiation of the Virgin, Palm-Sunday, the Incarnation, the Burial, Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus Christ; upon the Feast of Pentecost and Death of the Virgin, which he calls her Repose, maintaining, That she, as well as others, paid the last Debt to Nature, leaving us in doubt, whether her Body was afterwards re-united to her Soul, or whether she was put into some place to be reserved there to the General Resurrection.

Theophanes, surnamed Cerameus [or the Potter] Bishop of Tauromenium in Sicily, liv'd about the End of the IX. Age. He hath composed several Homilies upon the Gospels and yearly Festivals, which are Printed in Greek and Latin at Paris, in 1644. Gretzer hath put out two upon the Cross. Another Bishop of the same Place, nam'd *Gregory, hath composed several Homilies upon the same Subjects, but they are not yet printed.

Georgius Monachus, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Constantinople, and afterwards Archbishop of Nicomedia, was one of Photius's great Friends. He composed several Homilies upon the Feats of the Virgin, published by F. Cambes, in vol. 1. of his Auctuar. Biblioth. Patrum. They are in a copious Style, and full of Common Places, of little Benefit and tedious.

Nor doth the West furnish us with fewer Historians, who wrote the Lives of the Saints of their Time, than we have seen the Eastern Empire to have done, viz.

Ludgerus, the Scholar of S. Gregory of Utrecht, having spent much Time and Labour in converting the Infidels in England and Swedeland, was made Bishop of Munster in Westphalia, in 802. He wrote the Life of his Master S. Gregory, Bishop of Utrecht, which is published by Brower [at Mentz, 1615.] who hath joyned with it a Relation of the Beginning of S. Benedict's Mission. This Life is in Tom. 2. Sec. Benedict. III. published by F. Mabillon. Surius and Bollandus have published a Letter under Ludgerus's Name, dedicated to Rixfridus Bishop of Utrecht; which contains a Relation of the Life and Miracles of S. Switbert [but it is proved by Cointe, in his Ann. Eccl. Fran. ad ann. 779. n. 31. & 754. n. 78. by many Arguments, not to belong to this Author.] He died in 809. and his Life is written by Alfridus, the third Bishop of Munster.

[Ægil or] Eigil, fourth Abbot of Fulda, governed that Monastery from 818. to 822. He hath written a Relation of the most eminent Actions of his Master S. Sturmio [his Predecessor in the Abbacy of that Monastery:] It is put out by Brower [at Ingolstadt in 1616.] and is also in Tom. 2. Sec. Benedict. III. The Life of S. Ægil is written by a Monk of the same Abby, named Candidus, and published by the same Authors.

Vulfinus Boetius, Bishop of Poitiers, flourished from the Time of Lewis the Godly to the year 830. He wrote the Life of S. Junignus Abbot of Maire, which is extant in Tom. 1. Sec. Benedict. put out by F. Mabillon.

Hermenricus, a Monk of Elwangen, a Monastery in Germany, was chosen Abbot of it in 846. He wrote the Lives of S. Magnus and S. Sola, with a Dialogue about the Foundation of his Monastery. The Life of S. Sola was written about the Time that Rabanus was chosen Bishop of Mentz, about 847. It is dedicated to Rodolphus, a Monk of Fulda, under whom Ermenricus had studied. These two Lives are published by F. Mabillon.

Eulogius, whom some believe to have been chosen Archbishop of Toledo, suffer'd Martyrdom at Corduba in 859. in the Persecution [of the Christians in Spain] by the Saracens. He wrote the Martyrdom of the Christians which suffered for the Faith of Jesus Christ, before him, in that City. This Treatise is entituled, Memoriale Sanctorum. [or, An Account of the Sufferings of the Martyrs of Corduba] and is divided into three Books. Afterward he composed an Apology [or Defence] of the same Martyrs, against those who denyed them that Title and Honour, for 3 Reasons. 1. Because they never did any Miracles, as the ancient Martyrs did. 2. Because they did not suffer variety of Torments, but were put to Death presently. 3. Because those that put them to Death, were not Idolaters, but Mahometans, who worship the true God. He answers these Objections, and continues the History of those Martyrs. These 4 Books are followed by an Exhortation, or Instruction, which he made in Prison, and dedicated to two Virgins, Mary and Flora, who also were Prisoners. [In which he gives all the Christians then in Bonds for Christ's sake, Arguments and Encouragements to suffer constantly, and adds] a Prayer for them to use in their present Condition. He hath also composed a Writing, dedicated to [Willisindus] Bishop of Pampelona, when he sent him some Relicks of the ancient Martyrs of Corduba, which he had desired of him, when he was at Pampelona. In it he speaks of the Persecution of the Christians of Corduba, and sets down the Names of the Martyrs, and the days of their death. He sent his Instruction to Flora, and his Memoir of the Martyrs to his Brother Alvarus, who was then in Banishment in Germany, and wrote two Letters to him about the same matter, which Alvarus answered. Afterward he sent him an Account of the Martyrdom of those two Virgins, as he did also to Baldegosena, Flora's Sister. We have these Letters, with the Works of Eulogius, in the Biblioth. Patr. [Tom. 15. p. 242.] and in the IV. Tome of the Spanish Writers [p. 213.] Ambrosius Moralis also hath printed all together with his own Notes at Complutum in 1554. [which was the first Edition of Eulogius's Works, but Maluenda finds fault with it, because he hath left out several things concerning Mahomet and his Doctrines, in the first and second Books of his Memoir of the Martyrs, which Eulogius had written. Wherefore Poncius Leo put out a more correct Edition at the same place in 1574. but continued Moralis's notes.] Surius also hath printed his Lives of the Martyrs of Corduba.

Alvarus. Alvarus, Brother of Eulogius hath written, besides the Answers to his Brother Eulogius's Letters before-mentioned [which are among Eulogius's Letters] the History of his Brother's Martyrdom [which is prefixed before Eulogius's Works in the Complutensian last Edition, and in the Biblioth. Patr. and Surius March. II. Vossius attributes to this Author two other Treatises, viz. Scintille Patrum, which is a Collection of Moral Sentences out of the Fathers and Indiculus Luminosus, but they are not yet commonly received for his by Learned Men.]

Herricus or Erricus, born at a Village of the same name, viz. Hery, two Leagues from Auxerre, was a Benedictine Monk of the Abby of S. Germans in that City. He had for his Masters Haymo [of Halberstadt] and Lupus of Ferrara, as he himself tells us in the Preface to his Collection of Maxims and Things remarkable, taken out of the Holy Fathers and other ancient Writers, dedicated to Hildebald Bishop of Auxerre, of which we have only the Preface in Tom. 7. of Mabillon's Analeët. Besides this Work, he composed two Books in Prose concerning the Miracles of S. German Bishop of Auxerre, printed by F. Labbe in the first Tome of Biblioth. MSS. Six Books also in Verse, containing the Life of Casarius, undertaken by the order of Lotharius the younger and dedicated to Carolus Calus, printed at Paris [in 1543. Octavo.] with the Poem of Marius Victorinus upon Genesis. He undertook to compose an History of the Bishop of Auxerre, with Rainogalus and Alogius, Canons of that Church. He made also [many] Homilies, of which we have three among the Homilies of Paulus Diac-nus.

Anscharius, a Monk of Corby, the Apostle of Denmark and those Northern Countries, and after made Bishop of Hamburg and Breme, hath written the Life of Willibadus first Bishop of Breme, which was printed at Antwerp in 1642. and in the 2d part of F. Mabillon's Sac. Bened. III. Anscharius went into Denmark in 836. and was made Bishop of Hamburg in 842. and the Bishoprick of Breme was added to it in 849. He died in 865. [Anscharius's Psalter is extant in Cranzius Metrop. I. 1. c. 42. but his Epistles, of which he wrote many, are lost.]

Rudolphus or Rudolphus, a Scholar of Rabanus, a Priest and Monk of Fulda, the Preacher, and Confessor to Lewis King of Germany, passed for a very learned Man for his time. In the Annals of Fulda he hath given him the Title of an excellent Historian and Poet, and of a Man very well vers'd in all humane Sciences. He writ the Lives of Rabanus and S. Lioba, Abbess of Priscofthen, which are in F. Mabillon's Sac. Benediët. and in Surius and Bollandus's Acts of the Lives of the Saints. The last of these Lives was composed out of the Records and Collections of a Priest named Mago, who had conversed with four of the Scholars of S. Lioba [viz.

Agatha, Thecla, Nana, and Eoliba.] This Author died in 865.
Iso, a Monk of S. Gallus, wrote about the year 860. two Books containing the Lives and Miracles of S. Ormarius, Abbot of S. Gallus, which are also put out in Tom. II. Sac. Ben. III. He died in 871.

Alfridus and Orthegrinus, of which the first was Bishop of Munster, and the other a Monk of Werthin, have each of them written the Life of S. Ludgerus the first Bishop of Munster. They are both printed in the Sac. Benediët. Alfridus was the third Bishop of Munster after Ludgerus, succeeding to Jeffrey the Nephew of this Saint in 839. and died in 849. Orthegrinus or Hildegrynus, wrote before him.

Ermentarius, Abbot of Noimontier, wrote an History of the Translation of the Body of S. Philibert, which the Monks of that Abbey were forced to carry into several places, to keep it from the burning of the Normans. 'Tis published by F. Chiffletius, and since by F. Mabillon.

Milo, called Sigebert, a Monk of S. Amandus, hath composed, in Verse, the Life of that Milo, a Saint, and a Treatise of Sobriety, dedicated to King Charles. We have this Life of Amandus, Monk of the Translation of his Relicks, in the Acts of Bollandus. Surius hath published an Homily under his Name upon the Life of Principius Bishop of Soissons. F. Audin hath published a piece, in Verse, of this Author's, which is a Dialogue between the Spring and Winter. [He died in 872. Voss. de Hist. Lat. and is buried in his Monastery.] His Epitaph celebrates him for the Author of his Treatise of Sobriety and Life of Amandus.

Aiminius, of whom we are speaking in this Paragraph, is a different Person from the Author Aiminius, of the History of France. This last was a Monk of S. German de Prez, the other was the Abbot of Fleury. The one wrote at the end of the 9th Age, and the other at the beginning of the 11th. This, of whom we are speaking, hath described the Finding and Translation [of the Body] of S. Vincent, and made two Books upon the Miracles of S. German Bishop of Paris. A Book upon the Translation of the Martyrs S. George the Monk, S. Aurelius and S. Natalia, and two Books of their Miracles. These Works are printed by F. Mabillon in Sac. Benedict. [33 and 4.] and in other Collections [viz. Surius, July, 25. &c.]

We must distinguish the two Abbots as well as the two Aiminius's. The first was a Monk of S. German de Prez [or de Pratis] as well as the first Aiminius, and lived at the same time with him; the other was co-temporary with the second Aiminius, and a Monk of the same Abby of Fleury. This last is the Author of a Poem divided into two Books, containing the History of the Siege of Paris by the Normans, in 886, and 887. This Work is dedicated to Goscelinus (not the Bishop of Paris, but a Deacon of the same name) and hath been printed several times in the Collections of the French Historians. He hath a third Book, which is not yet printed. This Author hath made some Sermons, which are in MS. at S. German de Prez, of which F. Dacherius hath chosen out 5. and printed them in Tom. 9. Spicil. with an Advertisement to the Reader, in which he says, That he made these Sermons at the request of Frotarius Bishop of Poitiers and Fulradus Bishop of Paris, That the Clergy might make use of them to instruct the ignorant Laity. Four of these Sermons are upon Holy Thursday. In them Abbo observes, That this was the day on which Jesus Christ celebrated the Passover with his Disciples, and gave them the sacred Memorials of his Body and Blood; That the Bishops consecrate the Holy Oyl and the Altars, and the Pavements of the Churches are washed, and those Penitents absolved and received to Communion, who had been excommunicated at the beginning of Lent. And upon this last Point it is that he chiefly enlarges in those Sermons, exhorting the Penitents to turn unto God with all their Hearts, that they may receive the benefit of Absolution, to renounce their Sins, and lead a Christian Life for the future. The third is addressed to the Penitents before their Absolution. He comforts them under the delays of Absolution, telling them, That the Bishop can't absolve them till they have performed their Penitance, and shewed a real sorrow for their Sins. Nullus est certe Episcopus, qui possit absolutionem dare, nisi post penitentiam factam, & dignam satisfactionem. He exhorts them earnestly to observe the Lent-Fast. The fourth is directed to the absolved Penitents. He compares the state they were in before Reconciliation to that they are now in, and exhorts them not to make their Repentance of no advantage to them, by relapsing into their Sins. The last Sermon is upon the settlement of the Christian Religion, whose excellency he commends by the price it cost. For the sake of this it was that Jesus Christ died and rose again, that the Apostles laboured and suffered so much, that so many just Men have been martyred, that so many Confessors have given such Examples of Virtue, and dispersed that Light in the World; that so many Men have retreated into Monasteries, founded and establish'd by the piety of the Kings and Princes of the Earth. This gives him an occasion to inveigh against those, that take away the Revenues of Churches and Monasteries. He comforts the Christians that suffered Wrongs, and shews them, That they ought to content themselves with a few worldly Things, and labour for a Celestial Treasure, where these Extortioners, which spoil the Church, the Normans, who plunder and rob to enrich themselves, must expect the Torments of Hell.

Wolfardus or Wolfadus, a Priest and Monk of Hatennede in the Diocese of Eieftat, composed, Wolfadus, about the end of the 9th Age the Life of S. Walpurga, and dedicated it to Erkenwald Bishop of Eieftat [by whose Command he made them] and three Books of Miracles of that Holy Hatennede Woman. He promised a Dialogue concerning that Saint, which we have not. Other of his Books are printed in the Collections of Canisius, Bollandus and F. Mabillon.

Hughaldus [Huebaldus or Hubaldus] the Nephew and Scholar of Milo, a Monk of S. Amandus, flourished in the 9th Age, and was very long-lived. He was accounted a Man of great Learning in his time. He made a Poem of 300 Verses, dedicated to Charles the Bald, in commendation of Baldness, of which almost all the Verses begin with the Letter C. But 'tis not for the sake of this Work [tho' it hath been thought worth the printing at Basil in 1516. and 1546. and at Frankfort in 1624.] that we mention this Author; nor for the sake of his Book of Musick [spoken of by Sigebert] but because he composed the Lives of S. Aldegondes Abbess of Malbod, S. Ristrudres Abbess of Marchienne, and S. Lebwin, a Priest, printed by Surius and Bollandus on May 12. and Mabillon [Sac. Benedict. II.] Sigebert speaks of this Author, and attributes to him the Lives of several other Saints, [in his Book De Script. Cap. 108.]

Alfredus
King of England.

Alfredus, or Elfridus [or Aluredus] King of England, was sent by his Father Ethelwolf, [King of the West Saxons] to Rome, where he was Crowned in the year 872, by Pope Leo IV. He was a great lover of Learning and Learned Men; He Translated several Latin Authors into the Saxon Tongue, and published them in his own name, viz. Bede's History of England, Paulus Orosius's History, S. Gregory's Pastoral, &c. He composed some Laws. The Saxon Translation of Bede's History was Printed at Cambridge in 1644, with his Laws and Prefaces to S. Gregory's Pastoral and P. Orosius. His Laws also are inserted in Spelman's Councils, and in the 9th. Tome of the Councils, p. 582. The 1. commands the payment of Tythes. The 2. Is against those that rob Churches. The other are about Civil matters. This King died in the year 900. Father Collet hath Published his Will [out of Afferius Menevensis.]

Rembertus
Archbishop of Breme.

Rembertus, Arch-bishop of Breme, wrote the Life of his Predecessor Anscharius. Printed at Cologne, with the Lives of the other Bishops of that Church. 'Tis also in the Collections of Bollandus and Father Mabillon. Rembertus was chosen Bishop after the Death of Anshearius, in 865, and died in 888.

Herimbertus,
a
Mount Cassin.

Herimbert, [or Erchempert,] a Monk of Mount Cassin, lived at the end of the 9th. Age; he made a Chronicon, printed at Naples, in 1626, by the care of Caracciolus a Theatin Priest.

Almanus
a Monk of Hautivilliers.

Almanus, a Monk of Hautevilliers in the Diocese of Reims, Compiled at the request of Theudon his Bishop, the Life of S. Memmus the first Bishop of Chalons. Father Mabillon in Tome 2. Analect. hath put out a Letter of that Bishop to him, and his Answer with an Extract of the Register for Burials in the Abby of Hautevilliers; which shew that this Author made the Lamentations of France Ravaged by the Normans, and the Lives of S. Nivard Arch-bishop of Reims, Sindulphus a Recluse and Priest, the Empress S. Helena, and the History of the Translation of her Relicks [from Rome] to the Monastery of Haute-villiers, with several other Works.

Adelinus
Seez.

Adelinus, [or Adelelinus, or Adelmus] succeeded Hildebrand in the Bishoprick of Seez after 877, and govern'd that Church till the Year 910. He wrote the Life of S. Opportuna the Abbess, Sister of Godegrand the first Bishop of Seez. It was published by Surius, Bollandus, in April 22, and by F. Mabillon in Tome 2. Sec. Benedict. III.

Otfredus
Weissenburg.

Otfredus, a Benedictine Monk of the Abby of Weissenburg, and Scholar of Rabanus, Compos'd an History of the Gospel in the Teutonic Tongue, that the People that did not understand the Greek nor Latin, might read and understand the Gospel. He divided this Work into five Books, which contain'd the principal circumstances of the Life of Jesus Christ, taken out of the Four Evangelists, and digested into the order of Time. He Dedicated it to Luthbertus Arch-bishop of Mentz, by a Latin Letter which he used instead of a Preface; it is Printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum; but the Work it self is not yet made Publick. Trithemius makes mention of some other Treatises of this Author, Dedicated to King Lewis, Bishop Solomon, and the monks of S. Gallus. Three Volumes upon the Psalms; a Treatise of the last Judgment; another of the Joys of Heaven, several Letters, and many pieces of Poetry.

Aldrevaldus
a Monk of Fleury.
Afferius
Bishop of Sherburn.

Aldrevaldus [Aldelbertus] and Albertus, a Monk of Fleury lived towards the end of the 9th. Age. He wrote an History of the Translation of S. Benedict and S. Scholastica, and a Book of the Miracles of S. Benedict. These works are in the Library of the Monastery of Fleury.

Afferius, [Menevensis] Bishop of [Sherburn in] England, flourished about 890, and died in 909. He wrote the History of the Acts of Alfredus his King, which was Printed in 1602 at Francfort, with other English Historians; [Bale says he wrote the Annals of England, some Homilies, and some other Works, but we have them not. He is accounted an Author of good Credit.]

Lyons.

We must not forget the Martyrologies which were perfected in this Age. In the beginning of the last Century, venerable Bede took much pains in this matter, and made two Martyrologies, the one in Prose, the other in Verse, but both of them being Imperfect, Florus a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, made several Additions to Bede's Martyrology, in the Age we are speaking of, and put it almost into that form it is at present in, as is observed by Bollandus, who hath published the true Martyrology of Bede, with Florus's Additions, in his 2. Tome of March.

Wandelbert,
a
Prom.

Wandelbert, a Deacon and Monk of Prom, a Monastery in the Diocese of Treves, compos'd about the year 850, a Martyrology, in [Heroick] Verse, taken out of Bede and Florus. Sigebert and Trithemius make mention of him. It has been Printed under the name of Bede at the end of Bede's Ephemerides in the Basil Edition, and afterwards by Molanus at the end of Usuardus's Martyrology. But F. Dacherius hath Printed it more exact and correct in Tem. 3 Spicileg.

Rabanus
of Mentz.

About the same time also Rabanus Compos'd a Martyrology, Published by Canisius, in the VI Tome of his Ecclesiastical Antiquities.

Ado Archbishop of Vienna.

After him Ado, Arch-bishop of Vienna Compos'd a Work of the same nature more exact than any of the former: He modeled it by an ancient Martyrology, which he found at Aquileia, brought thither from Rome, which contain'd the Names, Qualities, and various Torments of the Saints that suffer'd Martyrdom. He hath put at the beginning of his Martyrology, logy a small Tract of the Festivals of the Apostles, in which he writes the History of their Martyrdom. The same Author hath made a short Chronology from the beginning of the World to the Birth of Charles the Simple, the Son of Lewis the Stammerer, which was in 879 of our Account. He divides the duration of the World into six Ages; The 1. is from the Creation of the World to the Flood. The 2. From the Flood to the Birth of Abraham. The 3. From Abraham to David. The 4. From David to the Captivity in Babylon. The 5. From the Captivity to the Birth of our Saviour. And the 6. From the Nativity of Jesus Christ to the end of the World. This Chronology is Printed with the Works of Gregory Bp. of Tours at Paris, in 1512, and 1567, and at Basil 1568, [and by it self at Paris in 1522.] It is also inserted in the Biblioth. Patr. [Tome 16. p. 768.] His Martyrology is Published by Lippomannus in the Lives of the Fathers; and after by Bollandus in his Supplement to Surius, and last of all by Rosweidus, who first Printed the ancient Martyrology which Ado had put before his Works [at Antwerp in 1613, and at Paris in 1645.] There are also two Lives which bear the name of Ado; the one is of Desiderius Arch-bishop of Vienna. put out by Canisius in his Antiquities; and the other is of S. Theodorus an Abbot of the same City, published by F. Mabillon in Tome 1. of his Sec. Benedict. Some think this Author Died in 814. which makes some say, that he added some years to his Chronology; but to me it seems not probable. It is most agreeable to Truth to fix his death a little after 879.

Lastly, Ufuardus a Monk of S. Germans de Prez, (a) hath composed a Martyrology more considerable than any of the former, under the Reign of the Emperor (b) Charles the Bald, to whom he Dedicated it in 870. This Work being much larger, and more perfect than any that were written before upon the same Subject, was much approved and well accepted in all Churches which began to make use of it in their Offices. Some think also that the Church of Rome took it into their Services and used it, before they had one of their own. This Martyrology hath been Printed at Antwerp in 1538t and at Lovain in 1568 [with Molanus's Notes and Additions] and since in several other places [as Antwerp 1583, with Hissel's Censure; but all that was displeasing to the Papists, is left out of this Edition, as Ufher tells us in his Biblioth. Theol. M S.]

To this Author's might have been added Gildas, who made a Kalendar of the Saints, of which Gildas. Bishop Ufher hath Printed the Preface, [in Epist. Heb. Syll. p. 55,] and some other Authors of the IXth Age, which are purposely omitted, as well as some Historical matters of little or no Consequence, which we could not think necessary to put into this Work; for it is not our design to make compleat Annals year by year, but only to explain the most important Matters treated of in this Age, which is the principal and most profitable part of Ecclesiastical History; for in that our particular Enquiry ought not to be after a meer Narration of Matters of Fact, which is of little use, but what concerns the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church, and upon Questions and Works of that nature it is that we have chiefly insisted: That our Reader may have a competent knowledge of them, we shall account it a very great happiness if this Work may be serviceable in any measure to clear the difficult Questions and confirm the important Doctrines of the Christian Religion. But how severe so ever others Censures may be upon it, it will be always some comfort to us that we have laboured in and aimed at so good a Design; and we hope that though our pains may not have the wish'd for Effect among Men, yet it shall be of some real advantage to us with him who knows and rewards the good Intentions as well as the good Actions of Men, according to the words of S. Bernard Ep. 360, Laboravimus, quantum potuimus, & si quo minus impetravimus, quod optavimus, manet tamen fructus Laboris nostri, apud Deum, apud quem nullum bonum irremuneratum est in fine.

(a) A Monk of S. Germans.] Some make him the Abbot of Fulda and others the Abbot of S. Saviours, but it is evident that he was a Monk of S. Germans, by an ancient Manuscript of that Abbey. Some call him Ufuard (b) Charles the Bald] His Book was Dedicated to Charles, some have thought it was to Charles the Great; but Aimanus a Monk of S. Germans, in his Translation of the Martyrs, Gregory, Aurelius, &c. observes, that Ufuard lived in 858, and we find in that Martyrology, the Names of Eulogius and other Martyrs that suffer'd in Spain, in 857. In an ancient Manuscript of this Martyrology which may be thought the Original, we find the Death of Queen Hermentruda set down in the first place, and Charles in the second, which shews that 'twas Written after the year 869, in which the Queen died, and before 875, in which the death of Charles the Bald happened.
